Washington, June 24 — Failure of AFL officials to oppose the vicious Woodrum WPA bill was described by Ralph Hetzel, Jr., CIO unemployment director, as "a betrayal of their membership for the benefit of the building contractors associations."

Hetzel declared that hundreds of thousands of AFL workers "will be thrown out on the streets" if it goes through the Senate without change.

"A gallant and unprecedented fight was made against it by the supporters of the Casey bill," Hetzel said, "but a solid reactionary front of the Republicans and a group of Democrats headed by Congressman Woodrum prevented any real improvements.

SOLD OUT

"The high officials of the AFL have sold out in this fight the interests of their membership for the benefit of the building contractors associations."

"Just as Green has joined the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and the Chamber of Commerce in the Wagner Act fight, so has he in the fight for WPA aligned himself with the interests of reactionary contractors rather than with the interests of his membership."

Pickets—as far as the eye can see—marched last week around the Allis - Chalmers Manufacturing Co. plant at West Allis, Wisc. Six thousand members of United Automobile Workers Local 248 halted operations and won a big victory.

Allis-Chalmers Pact Brings Big Union Gains

WEST ALLIS, Wis., June 24. — The membership of Local 248, United Auto Workers, at a meeting attended by about 5,000 Allis-Chalmers plant employes today had voted to accept the contract agreed upon by the union's bargaining committee and the management. The vote to ratify was 97% to 3%.

The contract itself is a vast improvement over last year's contract and, from the union's standpoint is a 100% improvement over the company's "last and final proposals" which the membership voted to reject a week ago. In addition to the written contract, an oral understanding was made with the company and witnessed by Gov. Heil and U. S. Mediator Carl Gill, which provides for the full protection of the union.

GET PROTECTION

The union had demanded a union shop clause for the purpose of protecting its organization against attack and disruption of anti-union elements in the shops. The union obtained this protection in a different, but for practical purposes no less effective form.

The company agreed that those persons who have been breaking the company's rules and interfering with the union will be severely disciplined and discharged if necessary.

IMPORTANT GAINS

In the written contract itself important gains for which the union has fought for the past five years were obtained.

The new grievance structure provisions give the union's bargaining committee full rights of investigation of complaints and empowers it to act in an advisory capacity to the management. This compares with the company's "final" proposal last week under which these rights would have been completely eliminated.

The company then wanted to eliminate the bargaining committee from functioning in the shop entirely. It wanted to forbid the bargaining committee chairman entrance to the shop. It wanted to allow the bargaining committee only half pay while adjusting grievances.

Under the contract now the chairman is back in the shop, unrestricted. Members of the bargaining committee are paid full time.

LONGER VACATIONS

Under the new contract every man will get at least one day, and in 50 per cent of the cases, two days more vacation than under last year's contract.

Last year the Pittsburgh contract was signed in June and the Boston contract in August, and both were bargained for independently of the West Allis plant. There was no assurance that gains made here would be obtained in the eastern plants.

Under the new agreement, the representatives of the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers who bargained here will bargain for the two eastern plants, and the contract here will not be signed by the union until the terms for the eastern plants are acceptable to the UE. This procedure obtains for the employes of all three plants the full assurance of equality that was the intent of the joint agreement demand.

John T. Jones Gets Post In Maryland

Annapolis, Md., June 24 — John T. Jones, President of District 16 of the United Mine Workers, won public recognition for the CIO in Maryland when Governor O'Conor appointed him this week sole labor member of a commission to study "all practices and conditions affecting the State Industrial Accident Commission."

Governor O'Conor's action came after the Maryland-District of Columbia Industrial Union Council had expressed opposition to passage of an occupational disease bill which will be administered by the Industrial Accident Commission.

TESTIFIED

At hearings on the occupational disease bill presided over by the Governor, Jones charged that the Accident Commission has failed to adequately protect the workers interests. Mr. Jones carefully prepared testimony at that time created a public stir.

Protests by the Baltimore Bar Association that accident commission procedure was so tied up in red tape that it was useless to take cases involving such claims made the Governor decide to appoint the investigating body of which Jones is a member.

Social Workers Urged to Aim For 1940 Victory

BUFFALO, N. Y., June 24. — Reaction is running wild in Congress and in many state legislatures today, and only the hard work of organizing for a progressive victory will prevent it from taking complete power in 1940, John Brophy, CIO director, told the Natl. Conference of Social Work meeting here.

Speaking to a section of the conference, whose annual meeting brought close to 5,000 social workers to this city, Brophy said:

"Reaction is running wild in this country today. We are facing — all of us — no matter how we earn our living—a headlong drive against every progressive measure or every social improvement the people have ever secured.

"The drive is taking place on all fronts. Since 1937, when a profound industrial depression got under way, almost every device has been tried to beat labor back to the days of Hooverism."

Brophy urged his listeners to meet this attack in the way the CIO and progressive labor has been meeting it—by organization and a firm defense of democracy and social progress wherever it is threatened.

"I want you to go out and tell the people that they must organize and work for progress, that they must organize and fight for a solution of their problems if they want a solution," he said.

THE HARD WAY

"No person and no group gets things done by waiting for them. The CIO didn't organize the basic industries by waiting. The CIO was built because people were willing to go out and work for it, to organize, to make sacrifices, to give it their time and their energy.

"Organization, aggressive action, unity will keep our democracy alive and will push it beyond its present bounds. This is the hard way, I know, but there is no other."

Prelude to Victory

Striking members of Local 248, United Automobile Workers, CIO, underwent baptism by tear gas as they picketed the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co. at West Allis, Wisc., their strike ended in a big union victory.

Shipyard Union Wins Big Victory in Maine After 11-Day Fight

BATH, Me., June 24.—An all-day suspension of work at the Bath Iron Works won a "victory of the first magnitude" for the welders of Local 4, Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers, Lucien Koch, regional director for the union in New England, announced today.

The stoppage also affected 400 men in other trades, all of whom returned to work after the settlement with the company.

The victory, Koch said, brings gains not only to the 182 welders concerned, "including the minority who tried to cut their fellow-workers' throats by unsuccessful scabbing," but will benefit all the men in the yard. The company employs 2400 workers.

$150,000 PAY RAISE

The settlement provided: An increase in the annual payroll of $100,000 to $150,000, through a pay increase of about five per cent; reclassification of work reducing the number of rates from 30 to four or five; installation of a $50,000 ventilating system; recognition of seniority rights, and a five per cent bonus to the second and third shifts.

Local 4 welders accepted the settlement at a membership meeting held after every attempt to smash their solidarity had failed and production throughout the yard was being threatened.

The company's offer of settlement was made in a "Code of Bath Iron Works Corporation and its Employes," a one-sided statement of policy concerning the dispute, and not an agreement with the union. The code was drafted by Stanley White, commissioner of conciliation from the U. S. Dept. of Labor, who was sent in at the request of National Union President John Green.

Form Council In Scranton

Scranton, Pa., June 24 — Organization of an Industrial Union Council to bind together all CIO unions in Lackawanna County, one of Pennsylvania's key industrial sectors, was announced here today.

Coal miners, clothing and textile workers, furniture workers, and cleaners and dyers are among the unions affiliated with the new body.

Its president is Garfield Lewis of the UMW, while Lazarus Marcovitz is vice-president, Genieve Patrick second vice-president, William P. Dattit, recording secretary and Harry Welby, financial secretary. Organizing activities will be under the general direction of Joseph Cannon, CIO director in Philadelphia.

WASHINGTON, June 24.—Pretty soon the Ruben Bros. Footwear firm of Waycross, Ga., is going to learn that there's a law on the books called the Fair Labor Standards Act.

The company, a sweatshop which fled New York City for what it expected would be the easier climate of Georgia, has won the dishonor of being the first wage-hour law offender to face second charges. If found guilty in federal district court, the company will be out a handsome pile of cash.

Early in May the company was found guilty of failing to pay the required 25c minimum wage rate, falsifying its records, and failing to pay overtime wages for overtime work. The firm was fined $3,000 and put on 3-year probation for another $12,000, and ordered to make full restitution of the amount due its employes. It didn't.

PROBATION MAY END

As a result, the sweatshopper now faces ending of the probation — which will mean payment of the $12,000.

In addition, it has been charged with six further violations of the wage-hour act, and possibility of $10,000 fines on each count. Thus, the government may collect $75,000 in all from the firm—an expense far greater, leaders of the United Shoe Workers point out, than a union contract with normal wage rates should have cost.

Altogether the CIO shoe union has found, seven corporations in its industry have been convicted on wage-hour violations, and have been forced to pay a total of $23,500 in fines and large amounts in back wages.

LOCAL ASKS $15,000

Meanwhile a USWA local at the Selby Shoe Co. plant in Portsmouth, Ohio, has filed a suit for $15,000 overtime pay due since the company increased the work week to the legal maximum of 42 hours in violation of an exhausting union agreement.

Although a contract providing overtime pay for work over 40 hours did not expire until May, 1939, the company increased the work week from 40 to 42 hours.

Stress Need For More Kindergartens

Washington, June 24—The kindergarten idea, first put forward in Germany long before Hitler and developed in the U. S., has been praised by countless educators, doctors, penologists, sociologists, etc., as the most valuable kind of training in social responsibility for the very young.

But today there are only 600,000 children of pre-school age who can go to kindergarten in the U. S., out of a total of 5,000,000 who should go. The reason always given by state authorities for refusing to set up enough kindergartens is "lack of funds."

SUPPORT FOR BILL

This situation would be met by a bill introduced in Congress for federal aid to states for kindergartens, sponsored in the House by Rep. Caroline O'Day of New York, and in the Senate by Sen. Pepper of Florida. The bill appropriates up to a maximum of $10,000,000 annually, to be given to the states under the supervision of the U. S. Education Office.

CIO Warns of Disaster If Tories Throw Million Men Off WPA

New York WPA workers, fearing starvation conditions if the Congressional Tory bloc succeeds in mangling WPA, demonstrate before Republican party national headquarters. Carrying placards and an effigy of Rep. Woodrum of Virginia, leader in the drive against the work relief program, the WPA workers demanded passage of the Casey-Murray Bill to provide 3,000,000 WPA jobs.

Announce CIO Mass Meeting In Jersey

JERSEY CITY, N. J., June 24. — The CIO launches a streamlined organizing campaign in this domain of Czar Frank Hague on June 27.

Thousands of workers are expected to assemble in Pershing Field to hear leaders of the CIO and Jersey union officials speak unmolested for the first time in what has long been a police-protected sweatshop haven.

Vice-Pres. Philip Murray, Director John Brophy, Pres. Heywood Broun of the American Newspaper Guild and William Carney, head of the state CIO Industrial Union Council, will deliver speeches.

THREE VICTORIES

Three CIO victories have already been rolled up in Hague's Hudson County since the historic U. S. Supreme Court decisions restating workers' rights to freedom of assembly and speech.

At South Kearny, the United Furniture Workers swept through a National Labor Relations Board election at the Decorative Cabinet Co. plant, and won sole bargaining rights for more than 250 employes.

A week earlier the Aluminum Workers of America, also a CIO affiliate, turned a 1938 defeat into an overwhelming 1939 Labor Board victory at the Mellon-dominated Aluminum Co. of America factory at Edgewater. Thousands of workers marched through the streets when announcement was made of the 3-2 majority rolled up by the AWA—a majority which spelled doom for a carefully nurtured company union.

WIN CLOSED SHOP

Meanwhile, the Intl. Fur and Leather Workers Union won a 10 per cent wage boost, the closed shop and vacations with pay through settlement of a 14-week strike at R. Neuman Co.

CIO petitions have been filed for NLRB elections in a number of other local plants since the Hague court decision, it was revealed.

Auto Union Moves To New Office

Detroit, Mich., June 24 — The United Automobile Workers has moved into new international headquarters at 281 West Grand Boulevard, President R J. Thomas announced this week. Former offices were in the Griswold building, in Detroit's Wall Street area.

In addition to President Thomas and Secretary-Treasurer George Addes, the new headquarters will house the union departments for General Motors, Chrysler and Ford, and the publication, education, research and health departments.

REFUSE TO BARGAIN

Akron, O. (FP)—The Goodyear Rubber Co., only big open shop rubber firm, has rejected NLRB Trial Examiner Tilford Dudley's proposal to suspend hearings and start negotiating with the United Rubber Workers in the presence of a government representative.

CIO Asks Reversal Of Apex Decision At Court Hearing

PHILADELPHIA, June 24. — Arguing on the Apex case appeal before the Circuit Court here, Lee Pressman, CIO counsel, and Isadore Katz, counsel for Branch 1 of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, told the court that the Sherman Act was never intended to apply to labor unions and that such decision in the past should be reversed now.

"In some cases," Pressman said, "the Supreme Court intended to strike down unions and their activities, but in others they were fearful that if they did so they would give Congress a reason to exercise its right to legislate, which the court did not intend Congress to have."

NEW LEGISLATION

Asked by Judge Clark if he wanted "us to reverse the U. S. Supreme Court," Pressman replied:

"I see no vital reason why not, in view of the new legislation which puts a different social, economic and industrial aspect on the rights of labor."

Ohio CIO Convention September 29

COLUMBUS, Ohio, June 24—The second annual convention of the Ohio CIO Industrial Union Council will be held at the Neil House hotel, here, September 29-October 1, Ted F. Silvey, secretary-treasurer of the Council announced this week. John Owens, who is CIO regional director in this area, and district president of the United Mine Workers, as well as head of the state CIO Council, will preside at the convention.

Transport Head Raps 'Union-Busting' Law

NEW YORK, June 24.—The Wicks bill, putting New York transit workers under "civil service" and depriving them of hard-won collective bargaining rights was described by Michael Quill, president of the CIO Transport Workers, as "the most insidious and vicious union-busting legislation" to come out of Albany this year.

Pres. Quill's comment came after Gov. Lehman had signed the bill over protests of Mayor LaGuardia, the CIO, and hundreds of AFL unions, American Legion posts, church, civic, fraternal and small businessmen's associations, who helped in the unsuccessful fight against the measure in the N. Y. Assembly.

GAINS IN DANGER

Quill pointed out that the gains of the Transport Workers, who have organized all lines in the city, including wage increases from 10 to 30 per cent, shorter hours, sound pension plans, paid vacations and the like, were endangered by the bill.

"Certainly organized labor will not take this setback lying down," he said. "The transit workers will fight to retain their jobs, seniority and decent working conditions won after many years of struggle, the right to collective bargaining and bona fide union conditions under unification."

Interwoven Signs CIO Agreement

Philadelphia, June 24 — A history-making contract in the men's half-hose industry was announced this week by the American Federation of Hosiery Workers.

Covering 1500 workers in the key unit of the Interwoven Stocking Company, largest plant of its type in the world, the contract "represents a major and strategic advance in the seamless industry," the union stated.

Interwoven, the leading producer of nationally advertised men's half-hose, has a chain of plants in West Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania and Tennessee. The new agreement, covering workers in AFHW Branch 92, Martinsburg, W. Va., was signed by Emil Rieve, AFHW president and William Smith, secretary-treasurer, following its ratification at a mass meeting a few weeks before.

The AFHW said that this contract, along with another at the Phoenix half-hose plant in Milwaukee, establishes union standards in fully 50 per cent of the branded branch of the men's half-hose industry.

Pay Waiting, Men Missing

Winfield, Ala., June 24—Back pay is waiting here for Will Erwin and Coy Griffin, former textile workers at the Alabama Mills, Inc., but the men are missing.

Anyone who knows where they are is asked to get in touch with Mrs. Carry Jones, recording secretary, Local 154, Textile Workers Union of America, Winfield, Ala.

The back pay was awarded in a case before the National Labor Relations Board. All the other workers except Erwin and Griffin have received their checks.

Supports Murray Proposal

WASHINGTON, June 24—Passage of the Murray bill for 3,000,000 WPA jobs was demanded by the CIO in testimony before the Senate Appropriations Sub-Committee here, both as a decent provision for the unemployed and as a substitute for the vicious Woodrum resolution on WPA passed in the House.

The CIO statement, presented by Ralph Hetzel, Jr., unemployment director, characterized the Woodrum measure as "a new low in provision for the unemployed since the Federal government seriously attacked the problem."

LISTS DAMAGE

According to Hetzel's statement, submitted together with testimony by representatives of the United Automobile Workers Labor's Non-Partisan League and several AFL unions, the Woodrum bill, if passed by the Senate, would wreck WPA and sabotage recovery by:

1. Throwing at least 1,000,000 workers off the rolls by Aug. 1, with 4,000,000 dependents;

2. Destroying the WPA construction program by limiting construction projects to $40,000. In another statement, Hetzel pointed to the serious effects this would have on AFL members in the construction trades, and denounced Green for refusing to oppose it;

3. Cutting off all WPA workers who receive Social Security payments, no matter if the payments are as low as $2.00 or $3.00 per week;

4. Throwing all WPA workers who have been on WPA more than 18 months off the rolls;

HITS YOUTH, ARTS

5. Reducing the President's request for $123,000,000 for the Natl. Youth Administration and wiping out the Theatre Project and seriously crippling all the arts projects;

6. Wiping out the hourly wage scales that unions have fought for since the Federal job program began; allocating $125,000,000 of WPA money to PWA, and hitting at remaining aliens on WPA rolls.

"The effect, as closely as we can calculate, of the House resolution would be to throw out of WPA by the first of August over 1,000,000 workers," Hetzel said. "These 1,000,000 workers have

$6 Raises In Fur Pact

Detroit, Mich., June 24—Wage increases averaging $5 to $6 a week and reduction of working hours from 44 to 40 were won by the Detroit Fur Workers Union, Local 38, in a contract signed with Murray's Fur Shop. The local is affiliated to the International Fur Workers Union, CIO.

Formerly an open shop, Murray's signed a closed shop agreement with the local following a one-day strike involving 10 workers. Harry Rothenberg, organizer, said that the union is conducting a campaign to organize other open shops in Detroit.

A Warning To All Of Labor

The CIO has repeatedly warned that the present attempts to destroy the effectiveness of the Wagner labor relations act by amendments are part of a wider campaign directed against all progressive labor legislation.

In supporting and even leading the drive against the Wagner act, AFL leaders have frequently taken occasion to praise the Railway Labor Act.

But now the rail labor organizations are taking alarm at a growing movement by the companies to do to the Railway Labor Act what the anti-union manufacturers and the AFL leaders are trying to do to the Wagner act.

The rail union paper, Labor, describes this campaign as "one of the most vicious attacks ever launched against railway labor" and says that its objective is to destroy the Railway Labor Act by discrediting the adjustment and mediation boards set up under the act.

In fighting to defend the Wagner act, the CIO is protecting not only its own interests but also those of the AFL and rail union memberships. If the Wagner act goes down, it will open a wide breach for the destruction of all other legislation for the protection of labor.

Anti-Alien Bills

More than 60 bills have been introduced in the present Congress for the harrying of alien workers and for the alleged purpose of suppressing alien and subversive influences.

Organized labor is justified by experience in viewing this type of legislation with the deepest suspicion.

In the first place, it knows that anti-alien drives of this character are usually launched in periods of reaction by the same kind of people as are leading the attack on labor and progressive legislation generally.

Secondly, labor knows that its strength is built on the unity and solidarity of all workers, regardless of national extraction; and that one of the favorite tricks of its enemies is to try to divide its ranks by creating antagonism between native and foreign-born, between Negro and white, and by any other divisions it can create.

Finally, labor knows that criminal syndicalism laws and the like have been repeatedly used against union organizers and to break strikes, rather than for the purpose for which they were supposedly passed.

That is why the recent meeting of the CIO Executive Board approved the report of its legislative committee, which pointed out the loose drafting, the unfairness to foreign-born workers, and the general dangers to labor in the various anti-alien and criminal syndicalism bills at present before Congress.

True Americanism calls for the protection of our civil liberties and democratic rights, not the panicky persecution of innocent foreign-born workers which reactionaries advocate to camouflage their attacks on labor.

Telling Them Where To Get Off

Efforts of AFL leaders to split the labor movements of Latin-American countries by reviving the defunct Pan-American Federation of Labor are meeting with a very cold response in those countries.

The Cuban labor movement, for instance, has just neatly told the AFL splitters exactly where to get off.

Upon being sounded out about the proposed revival of the Pan-American Federation, the Confederation of Cuban Workers, representing all of organized labor in that country, has replied:

(1) That it is affiliated with the Confederation of Latin American Workers (at whose formation Pres. John L. Lewis of the CIO was a fraternal delegate), and that this organization includes almost all the labor movements of the Latin-American countries.

(2) That the Pan-American Federation has not met since 1928, and that it is doubtful whether it has a single affiliate outside of the AFL.

(3) That the Cuban labor movement prefers industrial unionism to craft unionism.

(4) That only the reactionary and Fascist press applauds the AFL efforts to revive a dead movement for the purpose of dividing the existing solidarity of Latin-American labor.

The successes of the CIO have inspired labor to unite and advance in nearly every country to the South. And so far as labor is concerned in these countries, the AFL leaders who try to split their Confederation can go jump in either the Atlantic or the Pacific ocean.

The Wrecker

Looking Ahead

By LEN DE CAUX

The CIO Fi_ht for Recovery

It will be recalled that Hannah took pleasure in "a-pouring water on a drowning man."

The House of Representatives, in its WPA bill, has just prescribed similar treatment for America's drowning unemployed.

In response to the cries for help of the unemployed, the House has voted to add to their misery by:

(1) Decreeing that between a million and 1,200,000 shall be laid off WPA jobs within the next few months, without any other provision being made for them.

(2) Voting to restrict the size of WPA building projects.

(3) Making ineligible for WPA work all who receive any kind of social security benefits, even though these may be as low as $2 or $3 a week.

(4) Throwing off WPA those who have been on it more than 18 months.

(5) Discriminating against aliens, even though they may have taken out first papers, by denying them WPA work.

(6) Threatening the union wage structure, by breaking down the whole principle of the prevailing wage.

(7) Discontinuing the theatre projects which have given employment to unemployed actors, stagehands and other theatre workers.

Not Too Late

It is not too late, however, to defeat the virtual destruction of the WPA program which has been voted by the House.

The Senate has still to act on the subject, and it has before it the Murray bill, supported by the CIO, which would provide a minimum of 3,000,000 WPA jobs and insure more adequate wages and conditions for the unemployed.

If the full measure of the wrong which the House plans to do to the unemployed is widely realized, and if sufficient cries of outrage reach the Senate, it is still possible to undo this wrong.

AFL Leaders' Role

It is one of the most shocking episodes in American history that a House of supposed representatives of the people should not only advance no program to cope with the continuing unemployment, but instead should occupy itself with trying to deprive the jobless of even such meager relief as has been accorded them to date.

There is also food for thought in the fact that the only organized effort on behalf of the unemployed has come from the CIO and organizations of the unemployed themselves.

The role of the AFL leadership in this situation is particularly worthy of note. It will explain one of the many reasons why the CIO has risen to its present strength, in revolt against this leadership.

The AFL leaders have failed to lift even a little finger on behalf of the unemployed and against the virtual destruction of WPA planned by the House.

The only time that Pres. Wm. Green of the AFL raised his voice was to endorse the proposal to destroy the WPA construction program. He did this, despite the fact that this proposal will throw out of work thousands of AFL building mechanics.

The hundreds of thousands of workers of all kinds who will be thrown off WPA by the House bill include many members of the AFL. Yet their supposed leaders have done nothing to oppose this vicious bill. It has been left to the CIO alone to carry on the fight for all of labor.

The CIO Program

While Congress has occupied itself with relieving the rich of taxation and the poor of jobs, the CIO is the only organized voice raised on behalf of a constructive program to cope with the prevailing unemployment.

The CIO program approaches the problem from several directions.

In the first place, it calls for the preservation, improvement and expansion of WPA, PWA and other existing projects to provide work for the unemployed.

It demands reasonable pensions for the aged, on the basis of $60 a month at 60, and an expanded program for the relief and training of young people.

These proposals are a measure of justice for the aged and the young, which has long been overdue. But more than that, they are designed to relieve unemployment by keeping young people from competing for jobs as long as possible, and by removing older people from the labor market when they are entitled to retire on a decent pension.

The CIO program also calls for shorter hours and more purchasing power, through the better conditions won by organization.

And finally, the CIO demands that the government assume its responsibility for providing constructive work at decent wages for all the unemployed, in a far wider sense than has yet been attempted.

Engineers Win Pact

Detroit, June 24 — The Society of Designing Engineers, affiliated with the CIO Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians had won today a contract with the Detroit Lubricator Co.

Signed in conjunction with another contract gained by the United Automobile Workers, the agreement makes the FAECT-SDE sole collective bargaining agency for engineering employes of the company.

Manufacturers Admit Support for AFL Bill

Act Saved Millions Of Dollars

By C. W. FOWLER

Washington, June 24—Wide gains in collective bargaining in previously unorganized industries and savings of millions of dollars to the American public are shown in two reports issued by the National Labor Relations Board.

Both reports sharply disprove charges by anti-union industrialists and the AFL leadership that the Board, and consequently the Wagner Act, have failed and should be abolished or drastically changed.

On organization, the Board's report points out that the greatest gains have been in the mass production industries where there was "little or no collective bargaining" before the Wagner Act was passed.

These industries, now organized by the CIO, show an astonishing record of growth in number of members enrolled in unions and in union contracts won, prepared by the NLRB research department, headed by David Saposs, declares the report.

STEEL, AUTOS, ETC.

Citing steel, the Board report lists 15 small steel concerns under contract with the Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers in 1933, and 565 in 1938 under contract with the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, covering 48 states and Canada.

NEW FIELDS

The report also shows contracts in new fields where union agreements were previously unknown, such as cannery, aluminum, cement, petroleum, etc. Even in industries where unions were solidly established before passage of the act, the Board found many gains, citing clothing, coal, maritime, as examples.

This progress was not confined to CIO unions, the report points out, since such AFL organizations as the Machinists and Typographical Union have made substantial progress since the Wagner Act became effective.

Confining its survey only to those workers who have been directly concerned with the Board, another report shows that a "conservative minimum" of $33,400,000 has been saved to the public through the operation of the Board during 1938.

This figure, the report says, "does not take into account the indirect service of the Board to the millions of workers, never involved in any Board case, who benefited from the rights guaranteed under the act."

It is confined to the workers involved in strikes that would have taken place unless the Board had intervened, and takes in both wage losses and losses to employers. Offset against this report gives the cost of running the Board for the same year, $2,700,000.

"Ths is a conservative monetary evaluation of the work of the Board," the report concludes, "and should be weighed along with other considerations of its tangible and intangible contributions to economic justice and industrial democracy in any description of the results of its operations."

As Predicted:

Tories Open Attack On Rail Labor Act

CHICAGO, June 24.—Taking their cue from AFL-supported attacks on the Wagner Act, anti-union railroad managements have launched a campaign against the Railway Labor Act.

Leader of the newest battle on organized labor is the Santa Fe Railroad, which midst a flare of newspaper publicity, laid down a barrage against the National Adjustment Board—described as the supreme court of railway labor relations. Created by the Railway Labor Act, the Board adjudicates disputes which cannot be settled by rail managements and representatives of the railway brotherhoods.

Though the rail unions have lost many decisions before the Board, they have given it loyal support as an instrument for maintaining peace in the transportation industry.

LIKE FIGHT ON WAGNER ACT

"It is regarded as especially significant that the railroads' attempt to destroy the Adjustment Board and discredit the Mediation Board comes at the same time as the attack on the Wagner Labor Relations Act by the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, and other interests intent on crippling labor unions, and, incidentally, discrediting the present national administration," declares the brotherhoods' official organ, "Labor".

The paper warns the rail managements that unless they wish to see present harmonious relationships smashed by the actions of propagandists and "labor relations advisors," it would be well to "check up on the situation before it is too late."

PREVIOUSLY PREDICTED

This new development in the anti-labor fight was predicted at Wagner Act amendment hearings several weeks ago by William Leiserson, former head of the National Mediation Board and now a member of the National Labor Relations Board.

The veteran labor expert warned—as CIO leaders had done previously—that the Wagner Act, the Railway Labor Act and the Norris-LaGuardia Anti-Injunction Act are so closely-linked that an attack on one will soon become a war on all. Realization of this fact on the part of thousands of AFL workers has seriously crippled the efforts of the federation's top leaders to join with the NAM and the Chamber of Commerce in fighting the Wagner Act.

Wake Up!—Mailers Local Tells Green

Detroit, June 24.—A sharp reminder to Wm. Green that the AFL could use its time better in promoting unity of the workers than in attacking the Wagner Act and trying to "bedevil the CIO" was sent by the members of Local 40 of the Mailers Union here.

The reminder went to Green in response to his circular letter urging support for the Green-Walsh-Chamber of Commerce amendments to the Act. "Any attempts to revise the NLRA can only lead to the emasculation of the act by subversive and reactionary elements," the local told Green.

"Union labor should not seek to tamper with this act just to hinder another labor organization. What is most important is that union labor organize the unorganized workers."

Five More AFL Locals Rap Amendments

San Francisco, June 24—Five more AFL locals have gone on record opposing changes in the Wagner Act. They are the San Francisco millmen and auto mechanics, the Sacramento teachers, the Fresno hod carriers and the San Rafael carpenters.

NAM Tells Of Distrust For Unions

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

Washington, June 24.—Gall was divided in three parts — all of them anti-labor — before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, hearing testimony on amendments to the Wagner Act.

Appearing in behalf of the National Association of Manufacturers, which he serves as general counsel, John C. Gall indicated in the course of a 114-page statement that his sympathies and those of the reactionary business group are behind a three-point program:

1. Supporting the Burke, Ellender and Walsh amendments —the last-named sponsored by the American Federation of Labor's top leadership.

2. Ending labor's rights to win the closed shop and the check-off.

3. Restricting labor's right to strike.

IN HEARTY ACCORD

While claiming not to endorse any of the pending bills "in their entirety," Gall put the NAM on record as being "in hearty accord with most of the provisions of the Walsh, Burke and Ellender bills."

Senators Burke and Taft, both of them admitted foes of the Wagner Act and the Labor Board, resembling two robins watching their nestling learn to fly, listened attentively as the suave employers' representative — flanked by two assistant counsel and a sizeable staff—hummed his Tory story into the record.

After reciting a lengthy list of alleged grievances against administration of the Act, Gall argued that his suggestions would aid both employers and workers.

WHAT THEY WANT

How Labor's Magna Charta would look when the NAM got through with it was amply indicated by Gall's list of desirable amendments, which included proposals for:

1. A re-written preamble.
2. Revised definition of "employes" and "current labor disputes," obviously designed to weaken workers' standing before the NLRB.
3. Elimination of the closed shop and the check off.
4. Restrictions on the right to strike, and with-holding of strike benefits from workers engaged in certain forbidden types of disputes.

END MAJORITY RULE

5. Elimination of the majority rule provision, and permission for employers to petition for elections —both calculated to restrict the rights of majority unions.
6. Amending procedure to force unions to bear the expense of conducting suits before the Labor Board, with the Board being placed entirely in a judicial position, with no authority to initiate action against Act offenders.

Perturbed because the NLRB is given wide powers of discretion, Gall demanded taking power out of the Board's hands—in order, he explained, to protect workers if at some future time a hostile Board were in power!

LEAGUE VICTORY

Cincinnati. — Decision of local voters to retain their proportional representation system, despite a furious attack by reactionaries, was hailed as a victory by Labor's Non-Partisan League.

This is the evidence, in pictorial form, showing how the Natl. Labor Relations Board has conducted its cases. Put out by the American Assn. for Economic Freedom, and sponsored by prominent churchmen, educators and civic leaders, the chart once again contradicts the old fabrications of anti-union employers and AFL leaders about Labor Board "unfairness", "partiality to the CIO", etc.

CIO Asks No Cuts In WPA

some 4,000,000 dependent on them.

"The blow that this one bill alone would have, therefore, upon our economy is one which the responsible members of Congress must consider profoundly. We believe that approval of such action would be a terrible mistake. The way to avoid such a mistake is by the passage of Sen. Murray's bill in place of the House resolution."

PRAISES MURRAY BILL

The Murray bill, introduced in the House by Rep. Casey of Mass., and in the Senate by Sen. Murray of Montana, would have none of these vicious defects, Hetzel pointed out. He described it a "decent, honest provision for the unemployed, though an extremely modest one."

It would provide for 3,000,000 WPA jobs for the coming fiscal year, he explained, and would maintain that level until there are less than 3,000,000 eligible workers.

CITES BOARD ACTION

Hetzel cited the action of the CIO Executive Board in its meeting here last week in endorsing the Murray bill as the minimum necessary to prevent mass starvation and economic disaster in many parts of the country. Each Board member, he said, was polled on possibilities of employment in the industry organized by his union, which included all major industries except construction. "The opinion was nearly unanimous that there was no indication of an improvement substantial enough to absorb any cut in WPA," he reported.

Jacob Baker, president of the United Federal Workers added the voice of his organization to the wave of union and progressive protest against the Woodrum Bill. "The WPA has never had an opportunity to operate under a satisfactory law," Baker said. "We urge the Senate to incorporate the provisions of the Murray Act as the Murray bill would provide for a practical and workable program of public works."

TESTIFIES FOR MIDWEST

Testifying for the United Automobile Workers, George Edwards, union welfare director, told the Senate sub-committee holding hearings on the Murray bill that the entire midwest, where the auto workers were organized, would suffer a sharp economic and social setback if the Woodrum bill went through.

"The present bill, which nominally continues WPA, as in the eyes of labor a stab in the back to an American work relief program," Edwards said. "It will mean the destruction of wage standards not only for work relief but for private industry.

"It will mean sentencing hundreds of thousands of workers to the dole and it will mean all of the tremendous social unrest which was occasioned by inadequate relief and soup lines in the 1932 depression days."

LEAGUE SPEAKS

Speaking for Labor's Non-Partisan League, Eli Oliver, executive-vice-president, declared that the Woodrum bill would "return America to the dole with a vengeance," and cited League membership of AFL, CIO and Railroad Brotherhood unions as supporting the Murray bill.

A number of AFL groups from unions of actors, stagehands and other professional organizations testified for the Murray bill and against the Woodrum measure. One witness asked Green why the leadership of the AFL couldn't help AFL theatrical and other members as the CIO has done. Green had no answer.

Protect Wagner Act, Join A Union, Priest Tells Workers

WASHINGTON, June 24.—It is the duty of all Catholics both to join and help build the trade union movement, and to take part in the defense of the Wagner Act, the Rev. John P. Monaghan told listeners on the Catholic Hour network program this week.

Pointing to the number of workers still unorganized, Father Monaghan urged his listeners to join unions so that labor can become, as it should be "one of the most vital organs in a democratic social order."

The employers are organized, he pointed out, and while their hostility to trade unions has kept many millions of workers from organizing for their protection, the Wagner Act as it is now written offers an opportunity to the workers to secure their "natural rights" under the protection of law.

"The company-dominated union, the so-called independent union, labor spies, the discharge and the blacklist, are still too frequently the American industrialist's answer to man's fundamental right to organize," he said.

"To offset this bias against labor, the Wagner Act made this moral right to organize a legal right. This is the only purpose of the act; namely to give labor an opportunity to organize. Very few of the objections against this act have any validity because they accuse it of failing to do what it was never intended to do.

"Since the law is designed to protect the natural right to organize and since, as Leo XIII insists, 'The government must protect natural rights, not destroy them,' Catholics should rise to the defense of the law as an essential use of the government power."

NO FAIRER SHARE

Only through building strong unions can the workers hope to equalize the present inequalities in the distribution of national income, and thus contribute to the successful functioning of democracy, Father Monaghan said.

"The workers of the nation can expect no fairer share of the products of our national resources and services, other than by organizing into unions," he said. "By unionism in the past we obtained political security and independence. Only through trade unionism will economic security come to the workers."

Michigan CIO Meets Thursday

DETROIT, Mich., June 24—Adolph Germer, president of the Michigan CIO Industrial Union Council, announced this week that the annual convention of the State Council will be held in Grand Rapids, June 29 to July 1.

Furniture Was A Bargain For CIO; Company Union Records Came Free

Cumberland, Md., June 24.—A rare story of how documents and letters in the files of a union-smashing outfit which set up shop in this town some months ago fell quite legitimately into the hands of a CIO union was told here today.

About a year ago, amidst much fanfare from the Cumberland press and radio station, an organization known as the "American Federation of Justice" began telling the citizens that it was enrolling "thousands of members" among the workers in the textile, rubber, coal mining and other local industries.

SUSPECTED TIE-UP

Suspecting that the sudden advent of the "Federation" had something to do with the fact that a contract between the Textile Workers Organizing Committee and the Celanese Corporation was due to expire soon, and that the TWOC was seeking an improved agreement, the Voice of Labor, weekly labor paper which revealed the story, decided to do a little investigating.

When it discovered that "the officers of the outfit were company dicks and that application blanks were being none too secretly peddled in the Celanese plant by some foremen," the paper sent a reporter to the FJ office in the Jenvey building to see what he could find out.

Under the pretense of making inquiries about joining, the reporter asked some questions and while they were being answered he noticed a file on the desk containing the signed applications of the Celanese Employes Association, a company union formerly maintained in the plant.

ISSUED CHALLENGE

Convinced by this and other matters it uncovered, the paper began warning Cumberland workers to beware of the outfit. It printed challenges to the backers of the mysterious organization to come forward and identify themselves, and asked how the files of the Celanese company union came to be in the FJ office. No answers were made.

Some weeks later an evangelist known as Dan McNally came to town and set up a publication known as The Searchlight, which began attacking the CIO and its leaders, working hand in hand with the "Federation."

In addition to his attacks on unions through the Searchlight and in "sermons," Brother McNally also talked over the radio. It was in one of these talks that libelous statements were made against John T. Jones, district president of the United Mine Workers, for which the radio station was later sued. Among other things, McNally charged Jones with being a Communist.

Jones just recently received a public apology and $750 damages from the radio station in a settlement made out of court after a trial had been set.

EX-CONVICT SKIPPED TOWN

But long before this, "Brother" McNally, who had been exposed during an investigation made by union counsel, as having been convicted of criminal libel in Los Angeles in 1935, had disappeared. As for the "Federation of Justice," little more was heard about it.

Weeks passed and as CIO union activity continued to increase, the Western Maryland CIO Industrial Union Council decided to open an office. Needing some furniture, the Council officers went to look at some pieces they heard the management of the Jenvey building had for sale cheap.

They found that the furniture had formerly belonged to the Federation of Justice, and had been taken for non-payment of rent.

RECORDS IN DRAWERS

Since it suited their needs, they bought it, and when it was carted up to the CIO office, they discovered that the records of the former union-smashing Federation had not been removed fom the drawers.

In addition to unpaid rent, telephone and other bills, a list of members, which the Federation had claimed ran into thousands, was found.

It contained exactly 23 names, including those of the backers.

Other much more damaging material was also found which the officers promise to release later with documentary evidence and names.

BE ON GUARD!

Look for the union label of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America when buying men's and boys' clothing, overalls, shirts, undergarments, neckties, lumber jackets, gloves, and all other kinds of men's wearing apparel.

The Amalgamated Label is your guarantee that the articles you buy are of the best workmanship and produced under one hundred percent union conditions by members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America.

By insisting on the Amalgamated Label you will help to guard against a return of sweatshop conditions to the industry. By helping the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America you help the labor movement generally.

Ask for the Amalgamated label on each part of the suit, coat, pants and vest. There are different Amalgamated labels for coats, pants, vests, shirts and undergarments, work clothes, neckwear and gloves.

Eliminating Slums—And Saving Money!

A typical Toledo, Ohio, slum section is shown at left; below is a corner of the Brand Whitlock housing development, built with government funds. The city saves $11,746 annually through the elimination of the slum housing, Donald Robinson, director of the Toledo Housing Authority, estimated recently. New homes and healthful surroundings have chopped down the amount needed for police, fire and health protection in the area where the Brand Whitlock homes stand.

New Homes for Old

A department dealing with the need for better housing and how to obtain it, conducted by the CIO Committee on Housing.

By THOMAS HUMPHRIES

Half the fight for an expanded low-rent housing program has been won.

The Senate has already passed, by a vote of 3 to 1, Senator Wagner's bill authorizing the USHA to make an additional $800,000,000 in loans and an additional $45,000,000 in annual contributions to bring rents down.

A companion bill, H. R. 2888, introduced by Representative Steagall, is now in the hands of the House Banking and Currency Committee. It is hoped that the friends of low-rent housing and slum clearance will exert enough pressure upon their Representatives to insure favorable action by the Banking and Currency Committee and a favorable vote on the House floor.

A HOUSING CENSUS

One of the obstacles in the path of a genuine rehousing program is the lack of essential information about the homes in which America lives.

There is insufficient information on hand about the extent of bad housing in general. There is an exceptional dearth of information about farm and rural housing.

Accordingly, Senator Wagner has introduced a bill (S. 2240) which would provide for a national housing census in 1940. This bill has the backing not only of labor, but of the National Association of Real Estate Boards and the B. S. Conference of Mayors also.

In many other countries housing surveys are always made in connection with a national census. And in practically every case the result of these surveys has been to bring housing problems more forcibly to the attention of the people and thus to give a forceful impetus to low-rent, public housing.

RURAL HOUSING

At times reactionary anti-housing interests have tried to incite the farmers against the national slum clearance program.

"Why should you pay taxes," they have shouted, "so that the Government should help the cities get rid of their slums? The USHA isn't helping you to improve your farm houses, is it?"

Today, it seems likely that the USHA program will be extended to the farmers as well as the city-dwellers.

The Senate has already approved an amendment to the United States Housing Act which would authorize the granting of USHA loans and subsidies to local housing authorities that would rent or sell homes to low-income farm families.

If this amendment is also approved by the House, the USHA and the Department of Agriculture will cooperate in working out the details of a public housing program for farm families.

PREDICT TWO RESULTS

Although it might be quite a few months before any concrete farm housing program could be developed, two results of such a program can be predicted even now.

1. First of all, it will enable a good deal of experimentation with prefabrication techniques. Experience has proved that it is easier to use certain mass production techniques on farm housing.

2. Second, it will provide a working basis in many communities for farmer-labor unity. With both farmer and worker suffering from bad housing, and with the means available to provide better homes for both, joint action will inevitably result.

Insurance Union Wins 7th Poll

New York, June 24—The seventh in an unbroken series of election victories scored by the Industrial Insurance Agents Union here and in other cities throughout the country was won last week when employes of the Unity Life & Accident Insurance Association voted two-to-one for the CIO union.

The local which is affiliated to the United Office & Professional Workers, won by a vote of 76 to 37. Negotiations for a union contract with Unity start soon, the UOPW announced.

The union also announced that it recently signed its first nationwide contract with a major insurance company, the Sun Life Insurance Company of America.

Walter Hardin — A Leader In Negroes' Fight For Justice

By SWANSON C. SHIELDS

DETROIT, June 24.—Kidnapped and flogged, clubbed on the picket line, threatened with "bodily violence" a score of times and victim of other anti-labor uprisings . . .

That may read like a page from a fiction thriller but to Walter T. Hardin, outstanding Negro CIO leader in Michigan, it's all in a day's work.

Despite the blackjacks, the horsehide whip and other foul weapons turned on Hardin by the union-haters, the veteran Negro leader has not been silenced. Today he stands out as one of the gamest fighters for labor's cause in Michigan, his name an inspiration to both his colored and white brothers.

His courage in refusing to be bullied by vigilante mobs symbolizes the driving spirit of the CIO in this state.

Always a staunch supporter of industrial unionism, Hardin early deserted Homer Martin when the latter started his "union-busting" tactics. Hardin had been an appointee of Martin. One of the first steps of the new UAW-CIO president, R. J. Thomas, when he took office was to appoint Hardin General Negro Organizer.

WALTER HARDIN

Wheeling into action his first day back on the firing line, Hardin launched a vigorous drive among the more than 15,000 Negro automobile workers in Michigan.

AFL MISTREATED NEGROES

Martin's decision to leave the CIO and re-enter the AFL spelled his defeat among the Negro workers, Hardin reports.

"The overwhelming majority of Negro unionists are solidly behind the CIO today, because the CIO has given a new spirit of racial equality to the colored race," he points out.

"The Negro was never given democratic rights in the AFL. Green, Woll and their crowd discriminated against the Negroes so notoriously that Jim-Crowism became as widespread in the AFL as below the Dixie Line."

Smiling, Hardin added:

"For Martin to invite the Negroes into the AFL is tantamount for Hoover or Girdler to ask the support of the CIO in 1940."

IN BONDAGE AT FORD

What about Ford?

"Negro Ford workers, like their white brothers, are crying for unionism. They have been held in bondage by Ford terrorism for many years but today they are throwing away the yoke of Fordism and want to enjoy the protection offered by the CIO."

KIDNAPPED IN '31

Hardin had his first baptism in anti-labor violence in 1931 when he was kidnapped, taken to a desolate park outside Pontiac, undressed and then brutally whipped and forced to stagger 10 miles back into the city without shoes or stockings—in freezing weather.

His crime: Fighting starvation among Pontiac's unemployed.

TWO IN ASYLUM

Two other labor leaders, kidnapped and flogged along with Hardin, were clubbed so viciously and their vital organs crushed so violently that they went insane shortly afterwards. Today they are inmates in a State asylum, a living testimonial of the industrial terror that once stalked Michigan.

But the hightlight of this story is that the perpetrators of the bloody crime were never brought to justice. They were identified but a sympathetic judge gave them only words of praise. Among the vigilantes was the personnel director of a big auto plant here and the owner of a large foundry—both of them outspoken labor foes.

But Hardin's greatest thrill came when he personally watched the two "industrial floggers" sign UAW-CIO contracts two years ago.

Cuban Labor Tells AFL To Quit Dual Union Efforts In Latin America

WASHINGTON, June 24.—An AFL attempt to muscle into the Pan-American situation, with the help of discredited labor leaders and semi-fascists, has been slapped behind the ears by the militant Cuban labor movement.

The federation has been acting under a resolution passed by the last AFL convention, aimed at restoring the 9-years defunct Pan-American Federation of Labor and competing with the Latin American Federation of Workers, composed of the organized labor movements throughout Central and South America.

Attempting to sound out sentiment south of the Rio Grande, the AFL leaders received a letter from the Cuban workers pointing out that:

1. The AFL message had been sent to an organization which expired in March, 1935.

2. The last meeting of the Pan-American Federation was scheduled for 1930, but was opposed by the leadership of the AFL and its cohorts; and interest in a new meeting arose only after formation of the new bona-fide organization.

3. Cuba's labor movement is built on an industrial union basis, rather than the craft structure which the AFL is seeking to foster.

4. Reactionaries throughout the Latin Americas are hailing the AFL's moves as a blow at labor unity.

FASCISTS ARE PLEASED

In one of Cuba's most conservative papers, it is explained, the Green-Woll interest in splitting the labor movements of the Latin countries has won commendation. The Cuban workers expressed surprise that the AFL has resorted to red-baiting against the Latin American labor movements, rather than fighting the imperialist interests which are fighting Pres. Roosevelt's good neighbor policy.

The letter, signed by Sec.-Gen. Lazaro Pena and Sec. Jan Arevalo, concluded:

"Our organization cannot consent to the considerations expressed in your circular letter for the revival at this time of the Pan-American Labor Federation, which we believe to be practically dead in all the countries of Latin America, and intended now only to divide the workers and please the enemies of labor unity; that is, to serve the interests of totalitarian reaction."

Leon Renteria, director of the Cuban labor movement who passed through Washington recently pointed out that "in many aspects" the Cuban workers "take a position similar to that of the CIO—that is to say, we struggled for the protection of the rights of labor and the constant betterment of their moral and material conditions."

Ask Bridges Hearings Be Open to Public

SAN FRANCISCO, June 24.—Formation of a Harry Bridges Defense Committee, aimed at winning public support for the CIO west coast director in his coming battle against deportation, was announced here today by prominent labor and liberal figures.

Demands that the immigration division hearings be open to the public have been filed with the Dept. of Labor in Washington, E. E. Ward, vice-president of the California State Industrial Union Council and executive-secretary of the new group, revealed.

Pointing out that the committee wishes to change the usual procedure in immigration hearings, the statement asserted that "this is not just an ordinary deportation case.

VITAL INFORMATION

"The whole country will demand to know what goes on here. If this vital information is withheld from the public, there will be no way of bringing certain shrinking, sinister figures into the glare of full publicity. We want to drag such men as Larry Pat Morton Doyle out from behind closed doors, and let him array his paid and terrorized 'witnesses' before a public tribunal.

"We want our chance to prove, as we will prove, that Mr. Doyle, an entirely unofficial person, educated to the law but unable to practice in California, is the man responsible for the prosecution case against Bridges—and not any government official."

550 Benefit In Bakery Pact

Providence, R. I., June 24—New contracts covering 550 workers in six greater Providence bakeries provided for guarantees of 40-hour work weeks for regular employes and vacations with pay.

Michael F. Widman, Jr., New England regional director for the CIO; Joseph Mayo, director in Rhode Island, and Liam Donlon, field representative, negotiated the agreements.

Successful conclusions of the negotiations by Local 84, United Bakery Workers, will spur organization of other bakeries throughout the state, Mayo predicted in announcing a new organizing drive.

Elect Mooney To Shipyard Union Rolls

Camden, N. J., June 24—Tom Mooney was voted an honorary life membership in Local 1, Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, after he addressed the executive board and all the members of the union who could squeeze into the packed hall.

Mooney's unscheduled talk was made during a surprise visit to Local 1, upon the invitation of National President John Green. Local President William C. Pommerer presided and presented the membership book to Mooney.

Baltimore CIO Asks Probe Of Anti-Semitic Attack

BALTIMORE, June 24.—Thorough investigation of an attack on 14-year-old Melvin Bridges, Jewish school boy, by a group of 40 others who inked a swastika on his forehead and scratched the letter "H" on his neck, was demanded today by Pres. Patrick Whalen of the Baltimore Industrial Union Council.

The CIO local leader charged that "certain people in the city educational system are aiding and abetting the growth of anti-Semitism," demanding that the situation "be invesitgated and the facts put squarely before the public."

"The CIO is diametrically opposed to racial and religious bigotry," Whalen said. "An attack on any national or religious group is an attack against the nation and the democratic principles on which it was founded.

"This deplorable incident is obviously a direct result of the anti-Semitic propaganda fostered by such fascist organizations as the Nazi Bund and the Silver Shirts and by such individuals as Gen. Moseley."

Ask Ouster of Cop Linked to Fascist Spies, Foes of Labor

LOS ANGELES, June 24. — Immediate ousting of Police Chief William 'Red' Hynes, longtime foe of unionism and accused in the current issue of Ken Magazine of being an ally of Japanese and Fascist spies, was demanded today by the Los Angeles CIO Industrial Union Council.

"Japanese agents," John L. Spivak wrote, "operating out of espionage headquarters established in three hotels in Los Angeles and San Francisco, are secretly caching arms, oil, gasoline and short wave radio parts just south of the American border."

Hines denied the charges, but his predecessor as head of the city's police force—James E. Davis, now employed by the Douglas Aircraft Corp.—admitted he contacted Japanese consular officials, though claiming he handed out only "public information."

RECEIVED $7,393

In its petition to Mayor Fletcher Bowron, labor-supported progressive, the CIO council charged that Hynes had been paid $50 a day by the Los Angeles Railway Co. to help break a strike in 1934 and that he received a total of $7393 for these services.

The chief's action in taking a leave of absence during his anti-strike services was "merely a fiction and a fraud," the council asserted.

LOTS OF TEAR GAS

"Actually, in his capacity of private citizen he continued to direct strikebreaking activities of the 'red squad' which was an arm of the city government, and that the Los Angeles Railway placed at his disposal $1717 worth of tear gas.

"This tear gas, incidentally, was obtained in violation of a California statute which requires that persons or corporations purchasing tear gas must obtain a permit from the state division of criminal identification and investigation. Records reveal no such permit was obtained by the Los Angeles Railway."

The letter was signed by Philip Connelly, state CIO president and secretary of the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council.

Discuss Chicago Meeting

Harvester's Fake Unions On Trial

Chicago, June 24.—Intl. Harvester's company union empire, a pre-War relic, went on trial for its life at a National Labor Relations Board hearing today.

Charged with violation of the Wagner Act on three counts, the company faces possible NLRB demolition of its elaborate "association" machine in six mid-west plants. Organization and financing of company unions, entering into illegal contracts and discrimination against the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee of the CIO are charged against the firm in the Board's complaint.

Leaders of the FEWOC, which now holds a contract at the IHC tractor plant in Chicago, have mapped plans for an intensive organizing campaign throughout the company system.

Ask U. S. Aid To Stop Labor Law Breakers

New York, June 24 — Emil Rieve, president of the Textile Workers Union of America, requested the U. S. Department of Labor this week, to use its good office with President Roosevelt in obtaining an executive order forbidding the granting of government contracts to violators of federal law.

In a letter to Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, Rieve charged that concerns defying the National Labor Relations Act are among the largest beneficiaries of public contracts in the textile industry.

He expressed the conviction that President Roosevelt has the power, by executive order, to instruct various government departments to withhold contracts from the violators of federal law.

Maritime Union Meets In New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS, July 3. — The National Maritime Union, an organization with a membership of 50,000 seamen on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, starts its second convention here today.

About 200 delegates from 21 ports and from NMU ships will attend. In addition, various marine unions on both the east and west coasts will send fraternal delegates.

The first convention of the union was held in New York in July, 1937, just eight weeks after its formation, at which time it had a membership of some 35,000 seamen.

A number of outstanding trade union leaders have been invited to address the two-week convention which will be held in Jerusalem Temple.

TO STRENGTHEN UNION

Chief problems to be taken up at the convention include reorganization of the tanker lines, strengthening of the constitution, unity and preparations for renewal of the passenger and freight agreement expiring on September 30th.

Officials said that the question of unity would be the most pressing faced by the convention. Jerome King, also known as Jerome Medeiros, former secretary-treasurer of the NMU, was expelled recently after a trial before the membership, on charges of conspiring with the shipowners and with the AFL to disrupt the union.

ACCUSE FIRM

Following his exposure, the union accused the Lykes Brothers Steamship Company of an attempt to "take the Gulf ports out of the union."

Joseph Curran, NMU president, who went to New Orleans to prepare for the convention, said he was barred from the union hall by a squad of goons armed with baseball bats and short chains. When another hall was obtained, a squad armed with baseball bats again broke in. Curran was arrested, but later released.

Over-rules House Formula

Washington, June 30—Hope for continuation of WPA on a New Deal basis rose sharply today, following action by the U. S. Senate in brushing away a dozen of the crippling amendments which a Tory-dominated House of Representatives had written into the work-relief bill.

Working far into the night, the Senate restored prevailing wage rate provisions for WPA pay scales, modified the Republican - conservative Democrat plan to slough off thousands of workers from work relief projects, and made provision for continuation of the federal arts and theatre projects.

Fate of the nation's jobless millions will not be definitely known, however, until a conference committee composed of House and Senate members work out a compromise between the sharply - conflicting WPA bills approved by the two branches of Congress.

Continued labor protest against a starvation program for the unemployed will be necessary to insure passage of a satisfactory bill, CIO leaders said.

Die Casters Win Contract For 3 Plants

Toledo, Ohio, July 1 — A national contract covering 3,250 workers in plants of the Doehler Die Casting Company in Batavia, N. Y., Pottstown, Pa., and here, was announced this week by the National Association of Die Casting Workers, CIO.

Hailing the new contract as an important step toward a national agreement with the entire die casting industry, the union pointed out that it gives the workers the highest minimum hourly rate so far set in the industry.

Broun To Run For Congress

Stamford, Conn., July 1—Pres. Heywood Broun of the American Newspaper Guild will run for Congress in 1940.

The noted columnist, a strong supporter of the New Deal, announced he will seek the Democratic nomination from the district which includes Fairfield County, in which Stamford is located. Resident in the area are a large number of CIO workers.

Build CIO in Jersey

Part of the crowd of 8,000 workers who urned out in Pershing Field, Jersey City, for the mass meeting which launched the CIO's organizing drive in Hague-town. They heard half a dozen union leaders predict speedy action in ridding the city of its sweatshop menace.

Msgr. Ryan Hails Wagner Act

WASHINGTON, July 1 — "I regard the National Labor Relations Act as the most important piece of legislation not only for labor but for democracy," Msgr. John A. Ryan of Catholic University told the House Labor Committee.

"I have read Mr. Green's statement before the committee on various amendments, and they left me rather unconvinced about the necessity of the amendments he proposes," the distinguished Catholic liberal declared.

Southern Workers Live Below U. S. Standards, Rieve Tells Pay Board

ATLANTA, Ga., July 1.—Southern textile workers are underpaid, even in terms of standards for their respective states, Emil Rieve, president of the Textile Workers Union of America, CIO, said at a hearing held here this week under the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Rieve urged immediate adoption of the recommendation for a 32½c an hour minimum for the textile industry.

Declaring that he represented 274,000 workers under agreement and an additional 100,000 who have signed union membership cards, Rieve pointed out that a comparison of average hourly earnings of all manufacturing employes in eight southern states indicates that the textile worker receives less than the average employe in each of them.

34.8c IN ALABAMA

In Alabama the textile worker receives an average of 34.8c an hour, the union president said, while the average for all other employes is 55c an hour. In Texas, textile workers are paid 29.5c an hour less than all other manufacturing employes; in Tennessee, 9c less; in Virginia, 13.6c less; Mississippi, 8.5c less; North Carolina, 7.9 cents less and in South Carolina, 3.2c an hour less.

The average median annual taxable wage reported to the Social Security Board for 1937, for workers in the textile states, Rieve continued, was $723 a year for the country, while the median wage for North Carolina was only $465; South Carolina, $399; Georgia, $381 and Alabama, $458.

LOWEST AVERAGE

"The textile industry is the only large industry which pays average hourly earnings of less than 50 cents," Rieve declared.

"Low earnings cannot provide an adequate income to maintain the southern textile worker. He needs $1,260.62 to maintain his family on an emergency level. The apparent living standards of the textile workers are much below these standards.

"If a textile worker were employed 50 weeks per year, he would require $17.37 per week to maintain an emergency level budget and $24.24 per week to have a maintenance level budget. The proposed minimum will yield him only $13 a week.

Head New Agencies

John Carmody (left), appointed by Pres. Roosevelt to head the new consolidated federal works agency, and Jesse Jones, who has been named to administer the federal loan agency. Carmody, for the past two years head of the Rural Electrification Administration, has a reputation as a staunch New Dealer.

Green's Unpopularity Growing by Leaps And Bounds in Canada

TORONTO, Ont., July 1.—Objections to the suspension of the CIO unions are expected to feature the sessions of the 55th annual convention of the Trades and Labor Congress being held in London, Ontario, September 18.

For the first time since 1935, when the CIO was established, its affiliated unions will not be represented because of their suspension by the Congress executive council last January.

The suspension will undoubtedly be one of the major questions discussed at the parley when the executive council will ask the exclusively AFL and federal local delegates to endorse the ouster of the CIO unions.

KEEN INTEREST

Congress affiliates throughout the nation are already discussing the coming conclave and many resolutions demanding unity and urging pressure upon the AFL leaders for peace with the CIO are being prepared for submission to the convention.

Suspension of the CIO unions was not popular as evidenced by the vote of the Congress' last convention, attended by 625 delegates, who voted unanimously to retain the CIO unions and urged a meeting with AFL stalwarts to keep Congress ranks intact.

MAY REBUKE COUNCIL

It is not imposisble that the executive council's decision to suspend the CIO unions might be over-ruled by the convention. According to the pro-unity spirit of the average unionist, it is possible that the delegates will insist that the status quo be maintained.

CIO Local Urges Rail Legislation

Wilmerding, Pa. — July 1 — Workers at the Westinghouse Air Brake plant, members of Local 610 of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, have requested all Pennsylvania Senators and Congressmen and President Roosevelt to support them in a request for Government aid in reorganization of the nation's railroads.

They request that Congress consider favorably plans to lend Federal money to the railroads to "purchase and replace equipment and thereby stimulate industrial production, increase employment and bring benefit to workers, management and stockholders."

CIO Dental Technicians Win Strike

New York, July 1 — A seven-week strike of all employes of the Zuckerman & Lefkowitz Dental Laboratory ended today when the company signed a two-year closed shop contract with the Dental Technicians Equity. The organization is affiliated with the CIO Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians.

The five employes will receive salary increases totaling $1,800 a year, together with a guaranteed 52-week working year, a one-week vacation, seven holidays with pay and the five-day week.

A. Glass, union organizer, predicted that the victory would "open the way to 100% unionization of Harlem dental laboratories."

Steel Union Holds District Confab

High Bridge, N. J., July 1 — Lodges of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in the Reading district held their fourth convention here at the Villa auditorium. About 150 delegates and more than 100 spectators attended.

Joseph Cannon, CIO regional director, David J. McDonald, national SWOC secretary-treasurer, Garfield Lewis, CIO representative, and Edward McCrone were among the speakers.

Sherman Act Net Entwines Union Of Fishermen

PORTLAND, Ore., July 1. — A permanent injunction forbidding the Pacific Coast Fishermen's Union, CIO, from trying to get a closed shop agreement with the Columbia River Packers' Association, was termed by union officials here an "astounding" decision which threatens the life of the PCFU and other unions.

Federal Judge Claude McCulloch, in granting the permanent injunction against the fishermen's union declared that the closed shop provision in the contract with the packers gave the union a monopoly and was therefore in violation of the anti-trust laws. He assesed the union $1,800 for damages.

Under the closed shop provision, the packers have up to now agreed each year to buy fish only from members of the union, composed of some 1500 fishermen who catch salmon and tuna off the coast of Oregon, Washington, Alaska and California. The union agreed in return to sell their fish only to the Columbia River Packers' Assn.

LOOPHOLE FOR BOSSES

Judge McColloch's injunction, however, does not restrain the "monopoly" the packers have had on the purchase of the fish, but deals only with the union's "monopoly", and will enable the packers to "drive standards down by the simple procedure of dealing only with fishermen who will take starvation prices," the union charges.

The union won an agreement with the packers a short time ago after affiliates of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific refused to sail two Alaska ships, the Memmon and the William L. Thompson, unless the packers agreed to bargain collectively. Since then the Association has been stalling pending the issuing of the injunction.

UNION WILL APPEAL

Ben Anderson, attorney for the union, said the decision would be appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court if necessary. It was also pointed out that the case against the fishermen was in line with the attack on the Federation of Hosiery Workers through the Apex case, where the union was assessed $700,000 damages by a misapplication of the anti-trust laws, which were passed to curb Big Business monopolies, and were never intended to apply to unions.

California CIO to Meet August 25

SAN FRANCISCO, July 1. — California's lusty CIO Industrial Union Council will hold its annual convention here August 25-27, Sec.-Treas. Louis Goldblatt announced today.

Official call to the meeting will be issued this week under the name of Pres. Philip Connelly and Goldblatt. Members of the state CIO executive board will meet the day before the convention gets under way.

Meanwhile local union officials, elated at the decision of the executive board to hold the CIO national convention in this city on October 10, have already begun preparations for what they describe as "the peak event of labor's year."

CIO Forms Council In Coal Area

Shamokin, Pa., July 1 — CIO union in this area today launched the Northumberland County Industrial Union Council and elected John F. Oshinsky of the United Mine Workers as president. H. F. Kellegher of the painters' union was named secretary.

The new council, made up of miners, clothing and textile workers, building trades employes and others, has already swung into action, Joseph Cannon, CIO director in Philadelphia announced.

It has asked a thorough probe of AFL craft union activities on a WPA project in near-by Locust Gap, where union initiation fees of $150 and dues of $6 a month have been demanded before workers are permitted to go on the government-financed project.

"The Council is determined to permit no continuation of union racketeering in Northumberland County," Cannon warned.

Demand Steel Firm Sign Contract

Sydney, Nova Scotia, July 1— Big profits for shareholders — little consideration for the workers is a condition at the Dominion Steel and Coal Company's steel plant that the workers are determined to smash.

Executive officers of the Sydney local of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee have emphasized this challenge in a statement issued following unsuccessful negotiations with the corporation for higher wages and improved working conditions.

File Protest On Coercion During Poll

Portland, Ore., — A protest against the election held at the Plylock plant was filed with the Labor Board by the Plywood & Veneer Workers local here today on the ground that the company intimidated employees during the voting.

The local, affiliated with the International Woodworkers of America, CIO, which was defeated 237 to 204 by an AFL union, pointed out in exceptions filed with the Board that company representatives electioneered at the polls, thus intimidating the workers, and that the business agent for the AFL-chartered union, backed by the company was allowed to stand at the polls while no IWA official was allowed near.

JERSEY CITY, N. J., July 1. — Eight thousand workers in Pershing Square here, right in the heart of Hague-land, heard John Brophy, Heywood Broun, Michael Quill, William Carney and other CIO leaders tell them that the CIO victory over the Czar of the Jersey meadows was a triumph not only for the labor movement but for the entire American people.

"Labor has won no more important victory in the U. S. than this victory over the forces of reaction and fascism in Jersey City," Brophy said. "Through its mouthpiece Hague, reaction told labor that it must not organize in Jersey, that it must accept whatever conditions and whatever wages reaction chose to offer, without complaint and without trying to better them.

USED TO BE

"Mayor Hague — who used to be the law but isn't any more — lost his fight against the CIO. Far more powerful and more sinister forces lost with him. The great anti-union corporations, the powerful labor-hating captains of finance were the forces behind Hague."

Immediate results of the victory over Hagueism were seen in CIO gains in the aluminum plant at Edgewater, in a victory by the United Furniture Workers at South Kearney, and a wage boost for CIO Fur and Leather Workers, Brophy declared. These gains were made in less than three weeks of the U. S. Supreme Court decision, Brophy pointed out, and more could be expected in the very near future.

OPENING GUN

The mass meeting, described by Leonard Goldsmith, CIO Council secretary, as "the opening gun in a drive on un-American wages and working conditions" in Jersey City plants, was in sharp contrast to a meeting a year ago when Hague organized hoodlums mobbed the speakers and ran a Congressman out of the city.

Sixty police were on hand, but the 400 CIO ushers were enough to handle any possible disturbance. William Carney, CIO regional director in New Jersey, thanked the police for their "cooperation," and pledged the CIO to renewed efforts to bring organization and decent living conditions to the industrial workers of the area.

Mike Quill, president of the CIO Transport Workers Union, described Jersey City as one of the last strongholds of the anti-union employer, and compared the CIO victory here with earlier workers' triumps in Homestead, Pa., and Harlan County, Ky.

Both Quill and Heywood Broun, president of the American Newspaper Guild, called on the crowd to give their full support to New Deal policies and received their answer in a roar of applause.

GREATEST TASK

District 50 Wins Strike In Jersey Plant

JERSEY CITY, July 1 (FP) — District 50 of the United Mine Workers won a 4-day strike at the Joubert perfumery plant here, the second CIO victory since the U. S. Supreme Court decision against Mayor Frank Hague.

The walkout of the plant's 60 workers forced the company to rehire a shop steward fired for union activity. The firm is operating under a closed shop agreement.

Labor Protest Heeded In Senate WPA Vote

Pres. Heywood Broun of the American Newspaper Guild, addresses CIO Jersey City meeting. Other union officials are seated on the platform.

Washington, June 30.—Responding to protests from every section of the country, the Senate today had sent to joint conference committee a WPA bill eliminating most of the worst features of the measure passed by the House at a rough-and-tumble session last week.

WPA's activities will be brought to a full stop unless funds are appropriated before July 1, beginning of the new government fiscal year. If the bill is not through the Congressional mill by that time, the House Appropriations Committee is expected to sponsor a resolution providing WPA funds for a month until an exact formula for the full appropriation has been decided upon.

The false economy cry which dominated the House of Representatives' "debate" on the work relief measure last week was missing in the Senate.

54-0 VOTE

The Senators labored over the terms of appropriations bill until late in the night, and it was after 1 A. M. before the 54-0 vote passing the liberalized measure had been taken.

Effectiveness of the nation's angry protest against the Representatives' attack on WPA was demonstrated in the Senate, as one after another the results of the House anti-WPA hurricane were cleared away.

RESTORE PREVAILING PAY

Thanks to the Senate action, the full $1,477,000,000 requested by Pres. Roosevelt was rewritten into the bill, while labor criticism against removing the "prevailing wage" provisions of the WPA statute met with favorable action.

Federal arts projects, faced with the possibility of being dependent on local sponsorship, were given full federal financing, and the theatre project, butt of the Tories' angriest attacks, was saved from the extinction demanded by the House anti-WPA bloc.

Clauses modifying the enforced rotation of WPA employes on the payroll also won Senate approval, and the crippling limitation of $40,000 to any project was lifted to a more satisfactory $75,000.

BOOST FUNDS

The Farm Security Administration was given $123,000,000 appropriation boost, National Youth Administration received an extra $23,000,000 and the appropriation for the Public Health Service Administration was doubled.

Thus the measure, while not meeting the 3,000,000 job proposal of the CIO-supported Casey-Murray bills, nevertheless registered a sharp improvement over the "soak the poor" action in the House.

Miss Lewis Hails Gains In S. America

New York, July 1—Miss Kathryn Lewis, daughter of the CIO president, returned from a four-month trip to South America pleased with the progress of democratic forces in Latin America.

Miss Lewis was a member of the American delegation to the Congress of Democracies at Montevideo, Uruguay, and then visited the capitals of a number of other republics in the southern continent.

HAVE HARD TASKS

"I have to take my hat off to the democratic forces in South America," Miss Lewis told ship news reporters here. "They have a much harder road than we have, but their persistence is amazing.

"I found Chile and Columbia the most advanced republics from the labor point of view," she continued. "The labor movement is fairly well organized in Argentina, but it is concentrated in Buenos Aires."

Miss Lewis discussed problems of the labor movement with leading figures in Uruguay, Brazil, Argentina, Paraguay, Chile, Bolivia, Colombia and Ecuador.

Expose Spy Activities

New York, July 1—Activities of under-cover agents exposed recently by the National Maritime Union are described in a 47-page pamphlet called "Labor Spies in the NMU," released this week by the union.

The pamphlet accuses shipowners of spending thousands of dollars to prevent the building of a strong union.

NEW YORK, July 1. (FP)—Capt. Alexander Zafiros of the Standard Oil tanker Walter Jennings, who shanghaied his crew by diverting his ship from a coastwise to a foreign run to dodge a CIO strike, has been found guilty of incompetence and misconduct by an inquiry board of the U. S. Bureau of Marine Inspection & Navigation.

Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union, who will preside at the union's convention, which opens in New Orleans on July 3.

The board has ordered his license suspended for six months, and it is almost certain that the order will be upheld by the government agency's review board in Washington.

The case is the first in the history of the country's merchant marine in which a captain's license has been suspended on charges made by his crew.

The tanker was bound from New York to Corpus Christi, Tex., on April 18 when the Natl. Maritime Union called a strike against Standard Oil and three other companies. If the tanker had proceeded to the Texas port the crew—all NMU members—would have struck and the ship would have been tied up.

To avoid this, Zafiros illegally forced the crew to transfer the ship's articles from coastwise to foreign, and sailed the ship to Cartagena, Colombia. Changes in the ship's papers from a domestic to a foreign port are possible only in the presence of a U. S. shipping commissioner.

Lumbermen Sign 22 New Agreements

Seattle, Wash., July 1—Agreements covering 22 logging operations and affecting 1,250 workers weere announced this week by the International Woodworkers of America, CIO. The contracts were signed by Local 2-90 of the IWA with three major operators and 19 smaller companies.

Merrill & Ring, Bloedel-Donovan and the Crescent Logging Company, the three major firms, agreed to recognize the IWA as sole bargaining agent for all their employes, to pay the prevailing union wage scale, and to grant jurisdiction over all new construction and repair work.

The agreement between the IWA and the 19 smaller logging operators give the employes the prevailing IWA wage scale, union hiring and other features, the union announced.

Four Oil Firms' Products Still on Unfair List

NEW YORK, July 1.—Products of four oil companies are still on the unfair list of the National Maritime Union, although a strike conducted against the oil tankers owned by the companies has been called off to forestall formation of a company union.

The NMU is asking all trade unionists to refuse to buy gasoline, oil, medicine, animal spray, cosmetics and insecticides put out by the Standard Oil of New Jersey, Standard Oil of New York, Tidewater Associated Oil Co., and the C. D. Mallory Shipping Co.

The companies will not be taken off the unfair list, the NMU declared, "until full union crews are back on the ships and under contract". An eight-weeks' strike against the companies was called off when the union learned that the Standard Oil of New Jersey was forming an Esso Tanker Men's Association and had petitioned the National Labor Relations Board for an election.

On the March

In Jersey City last week 8,000 people turned out to hear CIO leaders bring the message of industrial organization to the workers of their city.

Mayor Hague, who once swore he would keep the CIO out of Jersey City, was powerless to prevent this orderly and enthusiastic open-air meeting.

CIO organizers were once run out of Jersey City. But now they are on the job there daily, helping the workers to win their union rights and the improved conditions that come with collective bargaining.

What has happened in Jersey City is symbolic of what is happening in many another city and industry.

After the first wave of sweeping successes of the CIO, all the forces of reaction combined in an attempt to stop the advance of unionism. Taking advantage of depression and unemployment, they tried to build a wall around certain cities and industries to keep out collective bargaining.

On the political field, at the same time, they launched a drive to starve labor into submission by destroying WPA, and to destroy labor's rights by amending the Wagner labor relations act.

But labor has known how to defend itself against these attacks. It has consolidated all the positions won in the first period of advance. And now reports reaching CIO headquarters of elections and new contracts won in many industries, and of new territory opened to union organization, show that labor is on the march forward again.

The recent industrial advances of labor are reflected politically in increased resistance to the destruction of WPA and the Wagner Act. Many of the worst features of the vicious Woodrum WPA bill have been modified in the Senate, due to the strength of labor's protest. And the enemies of the Wagner Act show increasing signs of fearing labor's wrath.

Labor and liberalism have many stiff battles ahead against determined enemies. But as the CIO pushes forward in its basic work of union organization, it can look forward to increased political strength to defeat reaction and to advance the whole cause of progress and democracy.

With a Hop, a Skip and a Jump

Homer Martin was a tragedy for the automobile workers when he headed their union. But now his antics have for them all the elements of a farce.

Like "fidgety Phil who couldn't sit still," Homer was a perpetual source of embarrassment to his union. Flighty, vain and irresponsible, he couldn't be pinned down to any consistent policy for more than two minutes at a time.

As a hop, skip and jump champion he seemed to have found the secret of perpetual motion. He could change his mind five times in the twinkling of an eye. And with a hop, a skip and a jump he could be off in a dozen different directions before you could say Howdy-do.

When the United Automobile Workers Union finally decided that enough was enough, the AFL rushed in to adopt this problem child. The results have been amusing, to say the least, for all those who are now out of his reach.

Homer's first feat in his new home was to upset half the craft unions of the AFL by claiming that he had the industrial jurisdiction which the AFL has carefully and consistently denied to the auto workers.

His unsuccessful attempt to scab on the Briggs strikers might have been forgiven by the AFL leaders. But since then he has continued to pile failure on failure, in his own inimitable fashion.

Homer's latest exploit in Flint seems to have been too much even for the AFL. There he called an alleged "strike" late one night, without consulting his executive board or local officials, and then chartered a plane and flew off to Kansas City, to get away from the miserable fiasco which resulted.

So now William Green, Matthew Woll and the other dictators of the AFL are trampling all over Homer's "autonomy" and trying to devise some straitjacket for his elusive personality.

The few automobile workers who followed Homer's erratic footsteps out of the CIO have nearly all returned to the CIO union by now.

Homer himself is up in the air again, and where he will next land nobody can predict. But meanwhile we can all enjoy the fun of the butterfly chase into which he has led the AFL leaders, who were foolish enough to imagine they could use him to break the automobile workers' union of the CIO.

Mutiny In The AFL

"'Twas mutiny, mutiny," roared Captain Green.

His face grew red. His voice quavered with emotion. And as he pounded the table, the Senators could almost hear the thud of the cat o'nine tails on the back of mutinous sailors.

Green's tale of "mutiny" was about CIO seamen, he said, who sat down on the job. His emotion was directed against the Labor Board, which he claimed had refused an AFL request for an election; had approved the "mutiny," and had disregarded an AFL contract.

It was a good story, and the Senators were duly impressed.

General Counsel Charles Fahy of the Labor Board, however, has since pointed out some flaws in Green's stirring tale of the sea.

With rather prosaic devotion to fact, Fahy produced the records of the case to show that the AFL never asked for an election; that the Board did not invalidate any contract; and finally that the men who sat-down were AFL members, who "mutinied" (to use Green's word), for the purpose of forcing CIO seamen into their outfit.

Fact vs. Fiction

Green's "mutiny" is but one chapter in a whole volume of fiction which he and his First Mate, Lawyer Joe Padway, have presented to both Senate and House committees in the guise of testimony against the Wagner Labor Relations Act.

Fahy's answering testimony is a devastating victory for fact over fiction.

Every case cited by the AFL representatives in their attempts to discredit the Labor Board, to prove pro-CIO bias, etc., was checked by the actual records. The results show that the AFL leaders' testimony was a compound of distortions, misrepresentations and downright lies.

Fahy achieved a masterpiece of understatement when he politely confined himself to stating that the records showed the AFL charges to be "without foundation."

Just Not So

Following are a few samples of AFL assertions as checked against the facts:

Green repeatedly stated that the Board had set aside an AFL contract with the Tennessee Copper Co.

"The fact is that no contract was involved and none was set aside," Fahy pointed out.

Both Green and Padway testified that the Board had set aside contracts in the Peninsular & Occidental and Waterman Steamship Company cases.

"In none of these cases was a contract invalidated," Fahy replied.

In the Consolidated Edison case, the AFL representatives based many of their arguments before the committees on the assertion that the Supreme Court had questioned the Board's jurisdiction over such companies and had denied it the power to set aside collusive contracts.

Fahy showed that the Supreme Court had done nothing of the sort.

If the Court had upheld Padway's contention that the Board was without jurisdiction in this case, Fahy declared, "it would have denied the protection of the Act to thousands of employes throughout the United States."

Unions of Employer's Choice

Padway was frank in one respect in his testimony against the Wagner Act. He expressed his belief that employers should have the right to tell their employes which union they want them to belong to.

The implications of this AFL company-union attitude were pointed out by Fahy in describing the Consolidated Edison case.

In this case, the company actively favored the AFL against the CIO union; announced that it would deal only with the AFL and would refuse to bargain with any other union; paid the wages of employes devoting full time to organizing for the AFL; and had department heads and foremen coerce employes into joining the AFL union.

In fighting this case for the AFL, Padway argued that such acts on the part of an employer did not constitute "interference or coercion" of employes.

"The Supreme Court disagreed with Mr. Padway, and it is fortunate for labor's right of self-organization that it did so," Fahy said.

He pointed out that Padway in this respect was "seeking a precedent destructive of employe freedom in the selection of representatives," and that all labor would have suffered if he had been successful.

Real Grounds for "Mutiny"

Green, Padway and the other AFL representatives who have testified against the present Wagner Act, have been convicted of an outrageous fraud perpetrated against labor and the public.

It is unfortunate that the testimony before the Senate and House committees is so lengthy and so technical that little of it gets into the papers, and few have the time to give it serious study.

For if the AFL membership could be fully posted on what Green and his tory friends are actually trying to do to the act which protects labor's rights, Green would confront such a real "mutiny" in his own ranks as all his cat-o'nine-tails threats of suspension and expulsion would fail to quell.

'Clearing House' For Fake Unions Bared by U. S.

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, July 1.—A flash-back to the days of industrial feudalism prior to enactment of the Wagner Act was thrown on the national screen today with the publication by the Senate Civil Liberties Committee of hitherto-unpublished documents.

How a "Special Conference Committee" composed of personnel directors of an even dozen of the nation's blue-ribbon corporations met regularly in New York to co-ordinate their anti-union campaign was revealed in one of the exhibits printed by the committee.

The other contains minutes of meetings of branch personnel directors of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., during which all phases of building the "big happy family" spirit among the company's employes was discussed in minute detail.

BIG FIRMS REPRESENTED

Represented on the Special Conference Committee were such corporations as American Tel & Tel, Bethlehem Steel, DuPont, Goodyear Tire & Rubber, Intl. Harvester and the Irving Trust Co., one of the banks high in the Morgan industrial empire.

The point of view of the committee was expressed by J. M. Larkin of Bethlehem Steel, who declared in 1934:

"Labor policies like other primary rules for the government of corporations are and must be determined by the chief executives."

Though the industrial fat boys insisted in public that their employe representation plans represented collective bargaining in its highest form, a memo in the Special Conference Committee's files revealed that the company-dominated union system "is not set up to carry on collective bargaining. It is set up to make collective bargaining unecessary."

PRESSURED LABOR DEPT.

In 1935, when the Department of Labor prepared a report describing the employe representation plans as company unions, the embattled business representatives threatened to withhold all industrial statistics from the Department unless the report was changed.

Shortly afterwards, Larkin rejoiced that "the tenor of the report is quite changed", and that changes have taken "much of the sting" out of it.

At one time E. S. Cowdrick, front man for the group, was asked to find out about the Sentinels of the Republic, an alleged patriotic organization.

LIKED BLACK LEGION

From H. W. Anderson of General Motors, he received this reply:

"With reference to your letter of June 1 regarding the Sentinels of the Republic, I never heard of the organization. Maybe you could use a little Black Legion down in your country. It might help."

That the Goodyear Industrial Assembly, fancy name for the company union, was controlled lock, stock and barrel was indicated by the minutes of the management officials' meetings. Considerable time was allotted to a discussion of how much extra pay the company stooges should be given, and general alarm was expressed at the amounts being asked by the Assembly leaders for their services to Goodyear.

action is already preparing for a showdown, and has already made some progress particularly in the states where tory Republicans were returned to power and in the Federal Congress, which has "not accomplished one constructive act of benefit to the American people."

"Reaction won't stop at repealing the New Deal," he continued. "The reactionary corporations back of the tory politicians will want to go the whole hog to fascism. They will try, as they are already trying to do, to make the U. S. another fascist dictatorship."

Senators Embarrass Auto Boss

Washington, July 1. — The streamlined anti-union machinery of the Automobile Manufacturers Association grated from high into reverse under questioning by Sen. Ellender of Louisiana at Senate Labor Committee hearings on Wagner Act amendments.

One general question, followed by a series of more detailed inquiries, sufficed to force William J. Cronin, secretary of the employers' group, to start moving backwards fast. The question:

"You are familiar with the hearings held before the Senate Civil Liberties Committee, are you not?"

THREE ADMISSIONS

In short order, Cronin was forced to admit:

1. That he prefers the term "confidential investigators" to the word "spies".
2. That as an officer of the Association, he didn't know it hired spies.
3. That he felt "confidential investigators" are not hired to wreck unions, despite evidence to the contrary.

Asked whether he thought spies are "conductive to real unionization, collective bargaining," Cronin tried to extricate himself with: "Well, that calls for conjecture, Senator, which I would not care to indulge in."

BLAMES GENERAL MOTORS

Ellender sharply rebuked the auto boss representative when he tried to give the impression that the National Labor Relations Board was largely responsible for the 1937 strikes in the industry.

Citing General Motors' $1,000,000 labor spy bill, its opposition in the courts to the Labor Board and its efforts to hold down legitimate unions, Ellender said:

"I am just wondering if all of these strikes would have happened if General Motors had simply tried to join hands and help work out the problems under the provisions of the Act."

AFL Heads 'Misinformed' Or Distorting Facts, Labor Board Charges

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, July 1. — Charges of pro-CIO bias endlessly repeated by AFL leaders against the National Labor Relations Board were again blasted in a long, thoroughly documented analysis of cases presented by Charles Fahy, Board counsel, to House and Senate labor Committees which are holding hearings on Wagner Act amendments here.

Such charges, made in AFL testimony, played up in the commercial press and aired on the radio, have been the main basis of the vicious attacks on the Board and on the Wagner Act launched by AFL leaders in collaboration with agents of the Natl. Manufacturers Assn., the Chamber of Commerce, and other reactionary groups.

MISINFORMED

Now Fahy's detailed analysis of all the cases cited in evidence by AFL officials proves conclusively that Pres. Green, AFL Counsel Padway, and others were either misinformed or have been deliberately distorting the facts to try to build up a case for their crippling amendments.

Green, for example, is found to have been "misinformed" in testifying on the Tennessee Copper Case, when he complained that the Board set aside an AFL contract. No contract was involved in the case, Fahy shows, and obviously could not be set aside.

In fact, the Board favored an AFL claim for an "appropriate unit" involving three plants, as against a CIO contention for separate units. "A strange beginning if the Board were approaching this case with a bias in favor of the CIO," Fahy declares.

What was involved in the Tennessee case, as in a number of others, was employer interference with the workers' free choice of a union. As the Board records in these cases show, there was employer interference and coercion, particularly at election times — and yet the AFL leaders, because their unions were favored by the bosses, not only try to smear the Board for doing its duty but want to change the Act to remove the very word "interference."

COLLUSIVE CONTRACTS

The same AFL misinformation and distortion is shown in its objections to a number of cases where the Board set aside Collusive contracts, notably in the Consolidated Edison case, Fahy's testimony makes clear.

In this case, the company openly told the workers it wanted them to join the AFL union, gave the AFL money and other help, forced thousands of workers into the AFL, and finally signed a phoney contract — all with one purpose, to keep out the CIO.

The evidence is so strong in this case even Padway, AFL counsel, had to admit that it smelled, saying in his anti-Wagner Act testimony that the acts of the company if "performed in favor of an unaffiliated plant organization would bring it within the classification of a company union."

In other words, as Fahy's brief indicates, company unionism is apparently all right with Padway and Green so long as it is carried out in behalf of the AFL. It is only bad when carried out in behalf of an "unaffiliated plant organization."

REMEDY OF LAW

"Surely questions concerning collusive or dishonest contracts should not be excluded from the orderly processes of the law and left only to the remedy of the strife the act is designed to ameliorate," Fahy concludes.

Turning to the question of "appropriate unit," another of the pegs on which the AFL leaders the Board and the act, Fahy have tried to hang a case against points out that the Board has ruled against the AFL's claim in only 19 out of 100 such cases. In seven of these 19 the craft union had no members at all.

In seven others the so-called craft unit was in fact a non-craft unit, "and in accordance with Mr. Padway's testimony there would be no justification for establishing a so-called craft unit in such a case." Of the remaining five, the AFL had no objection to four, and in the fifth the Board again found clear evidence of employer domination in the workers' alleged choice of a craft unit.

LONGSHORE CASE

Commenting on AFL objections to certification of the CIO Intl. Longshoremen and Warehousemen on a coastwide basis, Fahy points out that of the 12,860 workers involved, 9,557 belonged to the CIO. Contracts had been negotiated for years on a coastwide basis, employers were organized in the same way, and the presence of small AFL locals in a few ports could not be reasonably allowed to break up this method.

"There was much bloodshed on the Pacific Coast in the struggle of the longshoremen to gain what they considered decent terms of employment and the right of coastwide bargaining, prior to the decision of the Board," Fahy says. "There has been none since."

OTHER AFL DUDS

Other AFL leadership charges against the Board and the act are similarly analyzed in Fahy's brief, and similarly found to be duds. These include unfounded assertions of excessive delay on AFL cases, slanderous statements that Trial Examiners are biased against the AFL, and the like — all of them based on misinformation and distortion.

In calm, legal language, Fahy winds up his brief in rebuttal of AFL "charges" by saying: "Mr. Padway has not stated dispassionately and accurately the facts of the cases on the basis of which he urges Congress to remodel the law. He seeks to make out a case by distortion and inaccuracy."

Times Square Pickets

Members of the CIO Cleaners and Dyers Union, CIO affiliate, give crowds in New York's Times Square a show for which they didn't have to buy a ticket. Fighting an anti-union chain of stores, the pickets released 500 balloons in the theatre area calling attention to their battle.

Two More AFL Locals in Buffalo Defend Act

Buffalo, N. Y., July 1 — Two more AFL unions have joined the joint committee of local labor organizations opposed to amending the Wagner Act.

Facing Extinction:

The WPA Federal Theatre Project Provides Jobs For Thousands, Entertainment For Millions

Possibility of sudden death faces the Federal Theatre Project if the Congress Tory bloc has its way. Is the project a giant "boondoggle", as the reactionaries claim—or is it a provider of work and bread to jobless professional actors, a form of entertainment for those who have seldom been able to attend a professional play, and a contributor to American dramatic art? This article will tell you some things you "never knew 'til now."

Helped To Save Theatre

Like all the rest of the emergency work projects, it was intended primarily to provide employment for those in need and capable of working.

It has gone far beyond this —it has become a revitalizing force in the American theatre.

It is part of a larger paradox that only future historians will be able to appreciate fully. Our whole national civilization was dying of stagnation at the depth of the depression. We could not build.

Our schools and hospitals were closing, our sewer systems were falling into dangerous disrepair; our workless masses could not dig sewers nor build roads, our jobless teachers could not teach — we stood helpless, paralyzed, despairing, defeated.

Or so it seemed.

A CREATIVE FLOOD

Yet instantly, when a new channel of effort was provided by the Federal government in the form of public work, the energies of the nation poured out in a gigantic flood, creating roads, bridges, schools, hospitals, sewers, dams, airports—the greatest construction program the world has ever known.

But who could have guessed that the artistic energies of the nation, released into these same channels of public projects, would create a renaissance of art in America? It was believed that actors and painters and musicians, like other workers, should have a chance to work for wages on which to live and support their families. It was believed that these cultural projects had a social value—that plays and pictures and music are public benefits as truly as roads and water-mains and schools.

But no one could have dreamed that the cultural forces released from stagnation and given scope in the work program would become a dazzling fountain of orginal creation in the world of art.

THEATRE'S TROUBLES

The theatre had its own history, its own troubles, apart from the depression. The "road" had almost vanished, and large sections of the nation, far from Broadway, had no chance to see the best plays. High prices were transforming the theatre into a luxury for the well-to-do. Many millions of people were excluded by sheer poverty from enjoyment of the theatre.

The depression struck a paralyzing blow at what had become to so perilous an extent a luxury-trade. Actors, technicians, directors, stagehands, ambitious young playwrights seeking their chance—these came on the relief rolls along with all the other desperately needy unemployed.

Organized as theatre units in every city in which they were found unemployed in large numbers—New York, Chicago, Boston and Los Angeles—they began under the CWA and FERA to carry theatrical entertainment to the people of America. Expanded under the WPA as the Federal Theatre Project, they spread into all the smaller towns in which theatrical folk were unemployed and in need.

VAST NEW AUDIENCES

They gave free theatrical and operatic performances in State hospitals, orphanages and other institutions, in CCC camps, in public parks. They brought the theatre to a vast American audience which had been growing up with little or no opportunity to enjoy the stage and the opera. They were so much acclaimed that they set up regular theatres in the larger cities, where a small admission fee — well under Broadway prices — is charged.

At first they contented themselves with producing popular American plays of recent years, and the classics of the stage — Shakespeare, Ibsen, Wilde, Shaw, Euripides, Gilbert & Sullivan. The new audience that was found among the masses of the people are eager for these plays. Audiences accustomed only to the movies find in actual drama an interest that the movies have never been able to create.

GREAT CONTRIBUTIONS

Finally the Federal Theatre developed new techniques, made original contributions to theatrical and dramatic methods.

This was done most signally in

Appeals

Miss Tallulah Bankhead, noted actress, daughter of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and niece of an Alabama senator, who appealed to Congress to save the Federal Theatre Project.

Introduced Original Ideas

"The Living Newspaper," a method which by simple devices makes possible a vivid dramatic presentation of social and economic problems and of historical events. "Triple-A Ploughed Under" exhibited the plight of the farmer. "Power" set forth the problem of our public utilities. "One Third of a Nation" dramatized our housing problem.

AT THE FAIRS

"Living Newspaper" plays are being presented as part of the WPA exhibit at the San Francisco Fair, and the Federal Theatre will give some of its characteristic productions at the New York World's Fair.

Many Federal Theatre plays have been among the great "hits" of successive seasons on Broadway. And for the first time in stage history the same play opened simultaneously on different stages when Sinclair Lewis' "It Can't Happen Here" was presented in 21 theatres in 18 cities.

Negro productions of two famous stage classics — Shakespeare's "Macbeth" and Gilbert and Sullivan's "Mikado" have attracted great enthusiasm by their immense gusto, color and dash.

Labor unions are among the various organizations active in supporting these Federal Theatre productions. Many Federal Theatre parties have been arranged by local unions in the larger cities, particularly in New York City.

The sixty producing units of the Federal Theatre, operating in 41 cities of 21 states, have given employment to over 15,000 workers in the past three and a half years. Aggregate audiences of over 30,000,000 persons have attended the performances.

A foundation, far more secure than could have been anticipated, has been laid for a permanent National Theatre in the United States.

Senate Needs Plea for WPA

sponsible for the failure of the Senate to take a record vote on the Murray amendments. The Montana Senator offered the amendments just about nine o'clock, eastern standard time, but a majority of the Senators were clustered around a radio in one of the ante-rooms.

As a result, not enough Senators were on the floor during the period of the fight broadcast to ask for a record vote on the Murray bill.

Ask Protection Of Civil Rights In Illinois City

Springfield, Ill., July 1. — A request that U. S. Government law enforcement machinery step into National City, Ill., and investigate continued violation of civil liberties was made by CIO Regional Director Ray Emundson on behalf of Packinghouse Workers locals there.

In a telegram to Attorney General Frank Murphy, Edmundson said: "At National City, Illinois, where Armour and Swift companies have plants located, our organizers and members are being denied their civil rights. Members and organizers are being intimidated and coerced. Organizer Vernon Ford was arrested and thrown in jail for distributing handbills calling attention to radio broadcasts."

Similar telegrams were sent to Senator LaFollette, Chairman J. Warren Madden of the National Labor Relations Board and John Cassidy, Attorney General of Illinois.

Meet the Burkes— 100% Anti-Union

WASHINGTON, July 1.—Opposition to unionism seems to flourish in the Burke family just like weeds in your favorite flower patch.

Last week, daughter Barbara was married to Lewis Lind of Cleveland, whose papa had been approvingly quoted by the Senator some time ago as an "authority" on why the Wagner Act should be amended.

This week, it appears that Mrs. Burke, unwilling to be outclassed by the rest of the family, is testing her spurs as a fighter against labor in her own rights.

WANTED OPEN SHOPPER

As president of the Congressional Clubs, whose membership is composed of wives and daughters of national legislators, Mrs. Burke is reported to have put up a valiant battle to throw a $30,000 clubhouse remodeling job into the hands of an open shop building contractor who undercuts the building trades' unions' pay scale.

Members of the club's board of directors tossed Mrs. Burke's plea out the window, however, and awarded the work to a contractor who pays the union wage rate.

In London, Too!

London wives and mothers picket during rent strikes which won reductions in housing costs and brought promises of needed repairs. More than 200 families joined the demonstration in the city's East End.

Hearst Tries Rand Methods; Shrugs At Anti-Semitism

CHICAGO, July 1.—The fight against the Newspaper Guild strike for job security on the Chicago Hearst strike took a new tack today, as the management and its stooge unions capped an anti-Semitic campaign with an unsuccessful attempt to use James Rand's Mohawk Valley plan of strikebreaking.

A new whispering campaign against the strike leaders was promptly rebutted in the fourth issue of the Guild Hearst Strike News, tabloid paper. One hundred thousand copies of the publication, which is crammed with advertising from Chicago business houses, have been distributed.

Since the strike started some 30 weeks ago, the Herald & Examiner and the Evening American have lost a total of 4,087,564 lines of advertising, Guild leaders said, and an estimated ad revenue of $1,635,025.

REFUSES TO REPLY

In New York, meanwhile, J. V. Connolly, general manager of all Hearst newspapers in the United States, found charges of anti-Semitism preferred by the Guild against the Hearst management "not worth the dignity" of his formal reply.

The charges were levelled by the Guild following appearance of a scurrilous poem in a company union paper in Chicago. The poem, signed by "F. T.", the initials used by the Rev. Irwin St. John Tucker, a Hearst strikebreaker, denounced four Jewish strike leaders and a striking Jewish office boy.

A "LOCAL" MATTER!

Connolly told Federated Press, labor news service, that he had not seen the poem, saying that the matter was purely "local" and in the hands of J. J. Gortatowski —who is Jewish—in Chicago.

Guild spokesmen pointed out that Connolly had personally intervened in the strike situation some time ago and that he had sent Gortatowski, assistant general manager, to Chicago as his representative.

War 'Security' In Auto Pacts

Philadelphia, July 1 — Wartime job security clauses have been written into three contracts signed by the CIO United Automobile Workers in this city, Al Zankl, UAW representative, revealed today.

Call Strike For Pact In Watch Shops

New York, July 1 — Four hundred fifty CIO members walked out on strike against eight watch and watch case shops here after the employers' association broke off contract negotiations with their union, Watch & Watch Case Workers Local Industrial Union 47.

Workers in several other plants are expected to go out in a few days unless their demands for wage increases and the closed shop are granted. Morris Stillman, strike chairman, said the eight affected firms had been completely shut down. Scabs heading for one of the struck shops were stopped by a militant union picket line.

Describe CIO To Students

Blue Ridge, N. C., July 1 — CIO unionism was explained to the 430 delegates who attended the Student Christian Conference held here recently, by Miss Lucy Mason, public relations representative of the Textile Workers Union of America, and Myles Horton, former organizer for CIO textile union, and head of the Highlander Folk School.

The lag in political democracy in the South is closely connected with the rights of southern workers to bargaining collectively, Miss Mason told the conference. Mrs. Zilphia Horton, also of the Highlander Folk School, led the singing, teaching the conference some labor songs.

Union Wins Victory In Wall Street

New York, July 1 — (FP) — The New York Clearing House Assn., representing 19 of the city's biggest banks and 55 other commercial and industrial banking houses, has agreed to remain closed on Saturdays during July and August, following signature by Gov. Lehman of the CIO-sponsored Quinn bill.

The bill, which was backed by the Financial Employes Organizing Committee, permits the closing of banks on Saturday during the two summer months but does not make it mandatory. The Stock and Curb Exchanges, as well as banks throughout the rest of the state, are expected to inaugurate the Saturday summer closings.

Jerome Shore, organizer for the union, said passage of the bill is a "great victory" and marks the "beginning of a new era in the financial centers of the country. For the first time financial workers have had a say in the policies of their respective organization."

Indiana CIO To Support Liberals in '40

EVANSVILLE, Ind., July 1.—Close to 500 delegates at the CIO Industrial Union Council convention here cheered reports of union progress, pledged new organizing effort throughout the state, and voted unanimous support for progressive candidates in the crucial 1940 elections.

James Pascoe, Ft. Wayne member of the Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, was elected president and John Bartee, Indianapolis Auto Worker, vice-president of the Council for the coming year.

URGE LEAGUE SUPPORT

Gassaway urged the delegates to support and work for Labor's Non Partisan League, describing it as "an organization of laboring people to perpetuate in office men who are friendly to labor."

Describing the CIO and the role of the UMWA in building it, he declared: "We have pioneered a modern labor movement, one which embraces all types of workers. Never before have wages been maintained during a depression at such high levels as they have during the past two years. The CIO is alone responsible for this."

Director Brophy urged national control of basic industries, declaring "such control would force these industries to increase production on a national plan, controlling costs and raising the wage level. This may sound radical, but it is essential to social well-being."

E. L. Oliver, executive head of Labor's Non-Partisan League, warned delegates that there was no hope for labor in the Republican party, and evplained the drive for progressive political organization now being carried on by the League.

CAREY, DALRYMPLE SPEAK

James B. Carey, secretary of the CIO and president of the Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, traced the growth of the CIO which, he said, "organized more men in six months than the AFL was able to organize in 50 years."

Sherman Dalrymple, United Rubber Workers head, also spoke of the role of the CIO in organizing previously unorganized industries and predicted new, militant organizing drives for the immediate future.

Speaking for the Federal Social Security Board, H. L. McCarthy, Indiana representative, outlined the work already accomplished towards security for the nation's jobless, aged and sick and called for labor support for the Board and the New Deal in their efforts to "lift our people from the mire of want and destitution to dry land where individuals can better plan their own security."

Name Mooney To Board At Commonwealth

Mena, Ark., July 1 — Among the new members added recently to the non-resident board of Commonwealth College, labor school here, is Tom Mooney, America's most famous political prisoner for 22 years.

Other new members include two officials of the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers, CIO,—J. Austin Beasley and Horace Bryan—and two farm union officials — George Harris, vice-president of the Alabama Farmers Union and Gordon McIntyre, secretary-treasurer, Louisiana Farmers Union.

Workers School Plans 13th Session

New York, July 1 — Industrial and agricultural workers from the South are being enrolled for the 13th consecutive session of the Southern Summer School for Workers, which will be held at the Asheville Normal School, Asheville, N. C., July 18 to August 30.

Week-end institutes for the benefit of special groups of workers will also be held in addition to the regular course. One of these will be a conference on August 5-6, sponsored by the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, under the direction of Lawrence Rogin, AFHW educational directory, working with the school faculty.

SCHOLARSHIPS AVAILABLE

Men and women who have worked at least two years in southern industry and agriculture are eligible if they are recommended by their unions, have at least sixth grade schooling and have a keen interest in preparing themselves for further usefulness in the labor movement.

A number of scholarships are available for applicants meeting the requirements, covering tuition and all expenses at the school. Workers interested are requested to write to the director of the school at 427 West 59th St., New York City.

Union Leaders Ask Continuance Of Gotham Workers' Classes

New York, July 1 — Fifteen prominent leaders of labor have joined to protest a local WPA decree which they fear may cripple the workers' education program in New York City.

Their attack was based on a decision of WPA Administrator Lieut. Col. Brehon Somervell to reorganize the workers education program sponsored by the work relief agency.

HILLMAN, RIEVE, HAYWOOD

Signing the statement were CIO Vice-Pres. Sidney Hillman, Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union, Pres. Allan S. Haywod of the New York State Industrial Union Council and representatives of garment and hat workers unions.

The WPA officials, they said, "have decided to do away with a workers' education program. They maintain that such specialized services are not necessary, that workers should seek education through the agencies of a general adult education program and not in union centers, that organized labor is to have no advisory voice in such an education program.

"We assert that workers have a right to workers' education," that statement continued, "particularly in times like these. It is our belief that labor must have a voice in determining how adult workers are to secure essential educational opportunities."

WPA has been running hundreds of classes in union offices throughout the city, but if the new ruling becomes effective, this phase of the program will be completely eliminated.

San Francisco Port Lockout Ends; Seen As 'Rehearsal'

By MIRIAM ALLEN DEFORD

SAN FRANCISCO, July 1.—A dress rehearsal for September is the way the lockout which closed the port of San Francisco for 10 days is being described here.

The shutdown followed the refusal of 10 members of the CIO ship clerks union to be shifted from a daily pay basis to a monthly salary—in effect forcing them to work several extra hours with no increase in income.

Pres. Harry Bridges of the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union criticized the lockout in a sharp statement, pointing out that the dispute could easily have been avoided if the companies had so desired.

If the week-old dispute had not been settled shortly, the ILWU was considering declaring "hot" all cargo diverted from the port, establishing picket lines at all piers — which would extend the tie-up to include warehousemen.

What began as an attempt by the American - Hawaiian Co. to force ten cargo checkers from a preferred daily to a monthly status—making them work 190 hours to earn the $160 they now earn at a dollar an hour—might have developed from a mere rehearsal of the contract-opening next September to an immediate showdown between the maritime unions and the employers on the entire Coast.

'TERMINAL CLUB'

The present negotiations are complicated by the Terminal Club situation. The Terminal Club, designated by Bridges as "a company union within a union," is a company-blessed association made up of ship clerks, which it is charged is trying to dominate the CIO union and is playing into the employers' hands in the present employers' effort at disruption.

Union leaders, including Bridges, also claim that the employers "are trying to arbitrate the maritime unions out of existence. The unions face a bill of $30,000 to $40,000 monthly on the Coast as arbitration costs."

BRIDGES
West Coast unionists are fighting efforts of reactionaries to bar the public and newspaper men from deportation hearings scheduled this month for Harry Bridges, above, head of the CIO Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union.

HIGH COSTS

Ed Whelan, San Francisco vice-president of the Ship Clerks, added:

"Blanket arbitration, demanded by the employers, would eliminate the machinery provided in our agreement for the dissolving of grievances through the joint Labor Relations Committee, and instead would provide for a permanent arbitrator to be called in on every complaint of either party. Under this proposal our union alone would probably have to spend at least $1000 a month for arbitration proceedings."

The delicacy of the maintenance of peace on the waterfront is indicated not only by the present situation, and by the employers' overt announcement that they will fight reopening of the contracts—which will involve demands for a six-hour day, sling-load changes, and observation of picket lines against ships of aggressor nations—but also by the hullabaloo with which the bosses and their yes-men are greeting the demand for open hearings in the Bridges deportation case.

ANSWER SLANDERS

Threats that the hearings would be broken up by "CIO guns and agitators" if they were held in San Francisco instead of on Angel Island, and were thrown open to the public or even to the press are ridiculed by the workers. The San Francisco Industrial Union Council has denounced "star chamber methods" as a denial of "American principles of justice," and the committee to defend Bridges is receiving financial aid from all the CIO unions, including $2000 from Bridges' own union, the ILWU.

The real animus behind the fear of public hearings is the dread on the part of the anti-Bridges witnesses of having their past records openly exposed, especially in the case of those connected with the labor movement. They and their backers do not want to be put on the stand in the presence of union members and newspaper writers.

CHICAGO, July 1. — Thousands of workers will give CIO Pres. John L. Lewis an enthusiastic reception when he arrives in the Windy City July 16 to address the special national conference called by the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee.

All CIO unions in the city have started to work on plans to jam the huge Chicago Stadium for the Lewis meeting, according to reports at a meeting of the coordinating committee of union officials.

The PWOC confab is being called to discuss future action against Armour & Co. and other meat packers who have refused to sign union agreements.

PARADES PLANNED

Automobile parades to the Stadium will come from the stock yards and other packing centers, from the steel areas in the southern part of the city, and from other industrial and mining regions in nearby Indiana and Wisconsin. Special trains from some distant packinghouse centers will help swell the crowd at the meeting.

NEED FOR COUNCIL

"All of us agree that an industrial union council is needed in Chicago," Scholle told local CIO leaders, "and all of us also agree that we want every CIO union in Chicago represented in such a council."

Assignment of Scholle to this mid-west industrial capital, together with the Lewis visit, are providing enthusiasm and impetus for a sweeping organizing drive.

Meet With CIO, Chicago Council Tells Armour

CHICAGO, July 1. — Armour & Co., big meat packing firm, received a plea from the labor committee of the Chicago City Council to meet with leaders of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee "in order to avert a major industrial dispute."

The request was made after Don Harris and Henry Johnson, PWOC officials, had described to the committee Armour's stubborn refusal to negotiate a contract and warned that the workers are losing their patience because of the company's stalling.

PLAN PICNIC

Terre Haute, Ind., July 1—The twenty-third annual miners' picnic sponsored by the various local unions of the United Mine Workers in this district will be held here Friday, Saturday and Sunday, August 11-13. Otho Brown was elected general chairman of the picnic committee.

California Legislature Ends Tory Session

SACRAMENTO, Calif., July 1. (FP)—The 53rd California legislature has ended one of the most reactionary sessions in its history.

It turned down every labor and liberal bill and every "must" on Gov. Culbert Olson's program including compulsory health insurance, a little Wagner Act, a wage-hour bill for those not covered by the federal act, restrictions against lobbying (the floor is over-run by lobbyists), election reform, and repeal of the criminal syndicalism law.

CUT RELIEF SUM

The legislature cut the Governor's relief appropriation to less than half and tied it up so he cannot use it for a production-for-use program. About the only good measures it adopted were regulation of small money-lenders, — outlawing loan sharks — and an increase of unemployment insurance benefits.

Olson said the fight has "just started."

"Temporary setbacks suffered by the progressive movement from the hands of the most reactionary legislature in several decades should not discourage or dishearten liberals of the state. The fight to return the government to the people is going on," the liberal state executive predicted.

A special session and an election purge of reactionary legislators is expected.

Harvester Spending $150,000 to Defend Stooge Unions

CHICAGO, July 11.—Company unions make expensive toys in this Wagner Act era, the Intl. Harvester Co., giant farm implement manufacturer, is learning to its sorrow.

IHC will spend at least $150,000 to defend its multi-named employe representation plans operating in six plants, leaders of the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee have estimated — though Ben Meyers, union attorney thinks that that figure is, if anything, "too conservative."

The estimate of the company's expenses is based on the fact that it has retained the corporation law firm of Pope and Ballard, which will receive about $1,000 a day for the use of five lawyers. Cost of the transcript will cost about $200 a day, while expenses of executives, traveling costs and other incidentals should bring the total bill to the $150,000 mark.

Gerald Fielde, FEWOC secretary-treasurer, estimated that the sum would provide a $25 weekly wage for each of the 5,000 employes at the company's McCormick tractor works.

"Nothing could more effectively expose the vicious anti-labor policy of the company," he said, "than this willingness to spend more than an eighth of a million dollars in trying to maintain fake unions whose purpose is to keep wages down and company profits up."

IHC Torture Chamber Revealed

Chicago, July 1 — Behind the boasts of the International Harvester Company that its bosses and workers are "one big happy family" lies a story of brutal intimidation and lawbreaking, now being exposed at a hearing being conducted here by the National Labor Relations Board on charges brought against the company by the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee.

Testimony was given by worker after worker acusing the company of vicious anti-union activities ranging from dismissals for joining the CIO union to beatings by company goons.

LOST FIRST ROUNDS

It lost its first fight when the Labor Board ruled against its appeal to have six separate hearings instead of the consolidated case out of which will come one decision covering its six plants.

During the testimony given at the hearing, a worker from the West Pullman Works, told about a "torture chamber" at the plant where he was taken by a foreman who tried to make him join the company union. When he refused, he declared that the foreman smashed him in the face with his fist saying "I'll make you join."

Another worker also told of being taken to the "torture chamber" but as he was as big as the foreman, he was not struck when he refused to join the stooge union. On one occasion 25 out of the 50 workers in the chain department were fired for belonging to the CIO.

$1,000 FINE

Holyoke, Mass., July 1—A $1,000 fine was tagged on to the Sussex Hat Mills here following conviction on charges of failing to keep wage payment records as required by the Federal Fair Labor Standards Act.

CIO Members Help AFL Fight Struck Dairy

BALTIMORE, July 1.—CIO consumers are doing their bit to help an AFL milk wagon drivers union win an important strike.

When the AFL local called a strike against the Cloverland Milk Co., it threw a picket line around the Alderney Restaurant, one of the company's largest milk buyers. The restaurant is largely patronized by the 4,400 employes of the Social Security Board, which has offices in the same building.

Local 17 of the United Federal Workers, CIO, sent a committee to the restaurant manager urging that he discontinue buying the unfair milk. Met with a refusal, the UFW local has urged all its members here to support the AFL strike by ceasing to patronize the restaurant.

CIO WINS POLL

Gloucester, N. J. — An election to determine collective bargaining rights among the workers of the Hinde & Dauch Paper Mill here was won by the CIO, which defeated an AFL union 168 to 126. Two years ago the CIO lost an election in the plant to a company union by six votes.

Hose Union Wins Honor

Philadelphia, July 8—In honor of its long history of militant organization, the Textile Workers Union of America, youngest and one of the largest of the CIO nationals, has issued its Charter Number 1 to the American Federation of Hosiery Workers.

The charter, accepted at a meeting of the AFHW national executive board held here, formally brings the Hosiery Federation within the giant CIO textile union.

Taking 'Trib' for Ride

The Chicago Tribune, perhaps the nation's most unpopular paper, was taken for an unusual ride by members of the Chicago Artists Union, CIO affiliate, who got fed up with the paper's criticism of all modern art. An effigy of Eleanor Jewett, Trib critic, is shown getting the razz from Windy City artists.

Tire Makers Win First Union Shop Pact

AKRON, Ohio, July 8.—The first union shop contract in the tire and tube industry has been signed by the United Rubber Workers with the Denman Cord Tire & Rubber Co., Warren, Ohio, URW President S. H. Dalrymple announced this week.

A clause in the contract provides that "all employes covered by this agreement who have at any time signed an application card for membership, or who have at any time been a member of the union, shall as a condition of employment with the company, immediately establish and maintain a good standing membership in the union, and remain in good standing during the term of this agreement."

TWO MONTHS TO JOIN

New employes must become members of the union within two months after the start to work. The contract also provides for plant-wide seniority and paid vacations, Dalrymple said.

WASHINGTON, July 8 — CIO Pres. John L. Lewis charged today that the new WPA bill, which will sharply curtail WPA employment, is a "terrible blow" aimed at millions of "helpless men and women."

"This blow will be profoundly resented by all of labor," Lewis warned. Labor has not forgotten the Democrats' 1936 campaign pledge that work at prevailing wages should be provided for all the nation's jobless, he added, criticizing the relief measure as a "clear repudiation of that platform pledge."

In addition to forcing a million unemployed workers off the WPA payroll, Lewis said the bill:

1. Discriminates against a "number of groups of our citizens.

2. Introduces a "starvation period" for those who have been on WPA for more than 18 months.

3. "Openly slaps labor" by wiping out the prevailing hourly wage rate on WPA.

The bill, considered the worst work relief measure passed since 1933, contains most of the provisions writen into it by conservative Democrats and Republicans in the House of Representatives. Though the Senate toned down the worst of the anti-labor clauses, a joint House-Senate conference committee leaned to the House version.

WIN CONTRACT

Garfield, N. J.—United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers Local 423 signed a contract with the Presto Lock Co. covering 250 workers. Two years ago the company moved here from Brooklyn in an effort to avoid dealing with the same local.

CIO Salmon Workers Get Big Pay Boost

Seattle, Wash., July 8 — Wage gains of 12 to 14 per cent were won for the resident Alaska salmon workers in negotiations concluded here between the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers, CIO, and employers in the canned salmon industry.

Workers employed by the hour and by the month benefitted by the agreement under which workers will earn minimum wages of $160 to $180 a month. Those employed by the month are guaranteed two months' work.

Similar wage increases for those shipping to Alaska from Seattle, Portland and San Francisco were provided in an agreement made with the canned salmon industry last month.

An industry-wide agreement, covering about 7,000 workers has now been won by the CIO cannery union in the canned salmon industry, with the exception of a few independent packers in Alaska, who balked against accepting the agreement covering Alaska residents.

Clothing Workers Pave Way For Two More Years of Peace

New York, July 8—Two more years of industrial peace in the New York men's clothing industry —which has not seen a strike since 1921—were assured today as the Amalgamated Clothing Workers signed a new agreement covering some 40,000 workers.

The contract, which makes no changes in wages and hours, provides for continuance of the system of arbitration which has been functioning for 18 years and made the industry—once one of the most striketorn in the city—a model in employer-employe relations.

EXAMPLE OF DEMOCRACY

Spokesmen for the ACWA and the New York Clothing Manufacturers' Exchange described the agreement as "a living example of how democracy in industry works."

Pres. Sidney Hillman of the ACWA promised the manufacturers that the union would continue its work of policing wage rates throughout the nation in order to stabilize conditions for the entire industry.

"I can assure you," Hillman told the employers, "that no manufacturer will pay less than you now do for comparable grades of work.

"We intend to bring in complete stability as far as wage rates are concerned, and we feel this effort wil benefit not only manufacturers but even retailers, for they will be assured that their competitors cannot obtain any advantage at the expense of labor."

BAN JUNGLE LAWS

In another statement, made jointly with Morris Friedman, official of the New York Clothing Manufacturers Exchange, Hillman said that the peaceful relations of the last few years prove that "the laws of the jungle need not dominate employer-employe relations.

"It proves that, wherever there are fair-minded employers and disciplined workers, there can be recourse to reason and understanding in the settlement of any differences that may arise."

Canadian Unions Rebuke AFL Splitters

Convention May Over-Rule Ouster Of CIO Unions

OTTAWA, Ont., July 8. — When the 55th convention of the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada meets Sept. 18 in London, Ontario, one of the main points on the parley's agenda will be Congress' attitude to the suspension of CIO unions by the executive council last January.

A considerable number of affiliated unions throughout the nation are preparing to send delegates who will vote to reject the executive council's suspension of the industrial unions.

For the first time since the CIO was organized, its affiliated unions will not be represented at the convention which is expected to cut attendance to almost half.

The Congress is composed of AFL and CIO unions and is the largest trade union group in the country. The CIO unions were formally suspended from the Congress last January but this order was never put into effect in the central labor bodies.

VOTED FOR UNITY

For the past three years every annual convention of the Congress has voted to maintain unity in its ranks. This year's meeting, in view of the executive council's action, is expected to have important consequences for the labor movement.

AFL splitting tactics have been sharply criticized by Canadian city labor bodies.

REBUKED HINES

Because its representative, Lewis G. Hines, was publicly rebuked here last year for attacking the CIO, the AFL executive council is not sending a guest speaker to address the annual Labor Day rally of the Toronto District Labor Council, largest central labor body in Canada.

In his address last year, Hines viciously attacked the CIO despite warnings from local leaders that the rally was under joint auspices of AFL and CIO unions.

As a result, Secretary J. W. Buckley of the Toronto council issued a statement rebuking the AFL spokesman and said in future no speaker will be permitted to attack labor unity from a Labor Day platform.

Acquit Oil Union Leader

Tulsa, Okla., July 8 — After deliberating for 27 hours, a county jury decided that Jack Hays, Oil Workers strike leader, was not guilty of inciting to riot in the Mid-Continent Oil Co. strike.

This is the second set-back D-X gasoline makers have received in their effort to beat the Oil Workers International Union. Last month 93 strikers were acquitted of charges of unlawful assembly.

The only witness to testify that a riot developed at the Mid-Continent plant was a policeman who threw teargas at strikers and their families.

Liberals Condemn Alien Bills

New York, July 8—Leaders in religion, labor, education, civic affairs and the professions have joined in an open letter to all U. S. Senators protesting against the current crop of "anti-alien" bills that are in reality aimed at the rights of citizens and of labor and progressive groups.

The letter referred particularly to the Dempsey Deportation bill, which provides for mandatory exile of non-citizen members of religious, labor or fraternal organizations that support legislation calling for "any change in the American form of government," which would exclude them from almost every kind of organization in the country.

GAG CITIZENS

The McCormack rider to the espionage bill is also specifically discussed, the letter pointing out that while it makes "advocacy of overthrow of the government," a felony, this can be, and has many times been used, as a weapon against strikers.

The letter urges the Senators to vote against these and other gag bills "to ward off the dangerous, undemocratic ideas contained in this and similar legislation now before the U. S. Senate."

Rubber Workers Win Wage Award In Canada

KITCHENER, Ont., July 8.—Eleven hundred employes of the Dominion Tire and Merchants Rubber companies were awarded a 1½-cent an hour increase in wages by a federal arbitration board, established after a strike in the two plants last March.

The award will mean an added $170,000 in the pay envelopes of the employes and is retroactive to March 10, the day the workers returned to work.

The pay raise was unanimously accepted at the meeting of locals 67 and 80 of the United Rubber Workers' Union. The company originally agreed to abide by the decision of the arbitration board.

"We consider the award a decided gain," said Joseph Mackenzie, international representative of the URW, "particularly since there was an attempt at wage slashing in the organized plants and actual pay cuts in unorganized rubber factories."

STRUCK FOR PACT

The strike was called for a written contract, regulation of hours of work, seniority system of employment and a five cents an hour wage increase. The company agreed to all the demands but the last which was referred to the arbitration board appointed by the federal government.

Prof. Norman A. Mackenzie of the University of Toronto was chairman of the board, J. L. Cohen, K. C. represented the union and General Manager J. A. Martin, the companies.

Demand American Standards

Wage-Hour Administration officials hold hearings in Atlanta, Ga., and receive labor demands that the 32½c minimum wage recommended by the textile industry committee be accepted. Embattled sweatshoppers are urging that a low wage be set for the southern workers.

Metal Miners Push Fight On Silicosis

Vancouver, B. C., July 8—The CIO Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union's campaign for amendments to British Columbia silicosis laws has won the promise from Hon. G. S. Pearson, minister of labor, that a province-wide meeting will be called some time before the next session of the legislature to discuss causes of silicosis, its prevention and the payment of adequate compensation to silicotic victims.

The union this month marked a year of organizing activity which has resulted in establishment of new locals in several hardrock mining camps and great inroads into Trail and Kimberley, the stronghold of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company, the biggest enterprise of its kind in the industry.

REPORT STEADY GROWTH

Well-functioning locals are reported in Bralerne, Pioneer, Ymir, Zehallos, Atlin and Vancouver, and all report a steady growth in membership.

The union has become a constructive force in the community as evidenced by its campaign in Atlin for the raising of funds to build an addition to the local hospital and rebuilding of the Community Hall.

Its campaign in Trail is directed toward obtaining a majority of the Consolidated employes to seek an election in the mine and smelter to vote for a union of their choice. Despite opposition from the corporation the union expects to reach its objective shortly.

Martin Rump In Trouble, Thomas Says

Grand Rapids, July 8—The rapid disintegration of Homer Martin's rump union was reported to the Michigan Industrial Council convention by Pres. R. J. Thomas of the United Automobile Workers, CIO.

"I have recently been contacted by a half dozen leaders of the UAW-AFL," he said. "They want to come over to the UAW-CIO. Some of those who sat in a meeting presided over by Matthew Woll said they were dissatisfied with the terms he offered the Martin union."

Woll's advice, according to Thomas' informants, was not to try to organize the unorganized, but to concentrate on trying to disrupt and split the UAW-CIO.

Order Polls In 33 Lettuce PackingSheds

Washington, July 8 — Lettuce workers employed in the packing sheds of 33 companies in the Imperial Valley district of California and at Somerton, Arizona, will vote on the union they desire to represent them at a secret ballot election, the National Labor Relations Board announced this week. Date for the election will be set later.

Charges Blacklist, Sues For Damages

CHICAGO, July 8. — Francis J. Swartz, a member of the CIO Textile Workers Union of America, brought suit for $50,000 today against the Lacon Woolen Mills.

Swartz complained that he had been blacklisted by the firm because of union organizing activities, and that since his discharge in 1937 he has been fired three more times—each time, according to the complaint, because of pressure brought by Lacon executives.

Hosiery Workers Win In South

Philadelphia, July 8 — Another victory in the South was announced this week by the American Federation of Hosiery Workers which won by a vote of 226 to 40, an election conducted by the Natl. Labor Relations Board among the workers at the Vance Hosiery Mills, Kernersville, N. C.

The Vance mill is associated with the May Hosiery Co., Burlington, N. C. A five-year contract with the Real Silk Hosiery Mills of Dalton, Ga. was recently won by the AFHW.

Michigan CIO, Disrupters Out, Sets New Goals

By RALPH H. MARLATT

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., July 8—A new era in labor organization was ushered into Michigan last week with the holding of the second annual convention of the Michigan State Industrial Union Council.

Some 257 delegates representing over 300,000 Michigan workers deliberated the course future organization would take under the banner of the CIO in Michigan.

The convention was marked by complete harmony in contrast to the wild efforts to sabotage last year's meeting. As pointed out by Adolph Germer, president of the council, in his report, "Martin's attempts to wreck the auto workers' union and the CIO ended in failure and instead he, the wrecker, was wrecked."

Richard T. Leonard, retiring secretary-treasurer pointed out the need for continued vigilance on the part of labor in the political field. Leonard explained how much reactionary legislation in Michigan was defeated during the past year directly due to the efforts of the CIO.

Following an address by E. L. Oliver, vice president of Labor's Non-Partisan League, the political action and legislative committee enlarged upon Leonard's report by urging:

1. The calling of a state convention of Labor's Non-Partisan League.

2. All locals to affiliate with regional LNPL bodies.

3. All locals to set up political action committees; break down membership files into wards and precincts for use by the League; carry on a constant campaign for

Start CIO Drive In Canal Zone

WASHINGTON, July 8. — Formation of a Panama Canal Zone Workers Organizing Committee was announced today by CIO Director John Brophy.

H. A. Stoudt of the National Maritime Union, who has been organizing in the Panama Canal Zone for some time, was named chairman of the new CIO committee. Stoudt is a former employe of the Panama Steamship line.

The other officers of the Committee are all employed in the Canal Zone. They include L. Moore, named secretary; A. W. McEwen, vice-chairman; Noel Austin and Santiago Agnew.

Temporary headquarters of the Committee will be at Cristobal, in the Canal Zone.

LOCALS SET UP

The Committee will concentrate on organizing unorganized workers in the Canal Zone, of whom it is estimated there are about 20,000. Locals of several thousand members have already been established.

The CIO organization in the Canal Zone is expected to form an important link in the proposed national federation of maritime workers which existing maritime unions have set as their goal.

In a letter addressed to Mr. Stoudt, announcing that the application for CIO affiliation of the PCZWOC had been approved, Director Brophy declared:

PURPOSE OF COMMITTEE

"The purpose of the Committee will be to act as an executive body with power to direct the work of organizing the workers employed in the Panama Canal Zone.

"The object of the organization will be in accordance with Article II, Section I of the CIO constitution, which says: 'To bring about the effective organization of the working men and women . . . regardless of race, creed, color or nationality, and to unite them for common action into labor unions for their mutual aid and protection.'

"In addition, it shall also be governed by the general program and policy of the CIO as outlined in its constitution and official declarations."

Form Group to Protect U. S. Wage-Hour Law

WASHINGTON, July 8. — Alarmed at attempts to destroy the wage-hour law, The Emergency Committee for Preserving the Fair Labor Standards Act this week asked all Congressmen for their opinion on current attempts to kill the law by amendment.

The group sent a statement of its purpose to all members of Congress, which charged: "The same powerful lobbyists who continuously fought the bill before its enactment into law last year are now seeking to make new alliances and obtain support in attempting, under the guise of 'clarifying' amendments, to exclude members of sweated industries, and to destroy the very foundations of the Act."

SEE PLAN TO HURT LAW

The proposed resolution calling for a special investigation of the Wages and Hours Administration is another plan to undo the law, the committee warned.

Representatives of church and consumer groups, AFL, CIO and railroad unions formed the committee to "help organize effective resistance to a concerted attempt by the original enemies of the Fair Labor Standards Act to destroy the Act, under pretense of trying to improve it."

Jobless Furriers Get Benefits

New York, July 8 — Unemployed furriers here received $10,000 last week from the special unemployment reserve fund created by agreement between the Employers Association and the union, the Furriers Joint Council of the International Fur Workers, announced this week.

This brings the total paid out of the fund during the last few months to more than $100,000, the council stated.

An additional payment of several thousands dollars is expected for the coming week.

Demonstrations Follow Congress WPA Slashes

WASHINGTON, July 8—Strenuous protests and a series of work stoppages in a dozen major cities today constituted the answer of American workers to the WPA slash bill passed by Congress late last week.

The bill, described as the answer to a Tory's dream, came out of the Congressional hopper just a few hours before midnight on June 30, end of the government's fiscal year.

CIO Pres. John L. Lewis, warning that the job-slashing blow against helpless men and women" will be "profoundly resented by all labor," predicted the entire nation would suffer as a result of the WPA joyride taken by conservative Democrats and Republicans.

"The total effect of this bill upon the economic situation cannot help but be depressive. There are grounds for the fear that such a terrible cut in WPA jobs and in wage rates will touch off a definite downward movement," he said.

Provisions of the new appropriations bill stand out in sharp and unfavorable contrast with the Casey-Murray bill, which had the support of the CIO and large numbers of AFL unions and progressive organizations.

CUTS NUMBER OF JOBS

Allotting a total of $1,755,600,000 for the government's relief program, Congress provided less than a billion and a half dollars for the WPA. This, it has been estimated, is enough to keep only two million people on WPA—a cut of close to a million.

The Federal Theatres Project, employing thousands and entertaining millions of people, was wiped out completely.

Art, history, music and writing projects had their appropriation cut almos to one-third, forecasting sharp curtailment of these activities.

All workers who have been on WPA for 18 months will be auto-

Lewis' Statement On WPA Slash

WASHINGTON, July 8. — The following statement on the WPA cut was released by President John L. Lewis of the Congress of Industrial Organizations:

"The helpless men and women who are unemployed have suffered a terrible blow in the passage of the 1940 WPA appropriation. This blow will be profoundly resented by all of labor.

"Labor does not forget that in 1936 the Democratic platform promised work for the unemployed. That platform stated: 'We believe that unemployment is a national problem, and that it is an inescapable obligation of our Government to meet it in a national way . . . When business fails to supply . . . employment, we believe that work at prevailing wages should be provided in cooperation with State and local governments on useful public projects, to the end that the national wealth may be increased, the skill and energy of the worker may be utilized, his morale maintained, and the unemployed assured the opportunity to earn the necessities of life.'

REPUDIATES PLATFORM

"The relief bill which was passed is a clear repudiation of that platform pledge. The measure will throw out of WPA employment a million WPA workers in the fiscal year. Five hundred thousand of these will be thrown out by the end of July. This happens at a time when there are at least eleven to twelve million employable unemployed.

"The bill seriously discriminates against a number of groups of our citizens, especially the artists, musicians and theatrical workers.

"The bill introduces a starvation period for those who have been on the WPA for more than 18 months. This is one of the most vicious provisions that has ever been imposed by a democratic government. We believe that the citizens of this country will deeply resent this provision when they realize its effect.

'OPENLY SLAPS LABOR'

"The measure openly slaps labor by wiping out the prevailing hourly rate on WPA. It further carries a device by which the present meager and inadequate monthly security wage will be severely cut all through the industrial areas.

"The total effect of this bill upon the economic situation cannot help but be depressive. There are grounds for the fear that such a terrible cut in WPA jobs and in wage rates will touch off a definite downward movement."

Five CIO Affiliates To Meet

Washington, July 8 — Five CIO conventions will be held during the months of July and August, in addition to the National Maritime Union convention which opened July 3 in New Orleans.

The American Newspaper Guild will meet in San Francisco, July 31 to August 4 for its sixth annual convention, and on August 7, the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, one of the oldest international unions in the CIO, will meet in Denver, Colorado.

Three CIO State Councils have scheduled conventions during the month of August. On August 21, the West Virginia Industrial Union Council convenes in Huntington, and on August 25, two state groups meet: the joint Iowa-Nebraska CIO Council in Omaha, and the California Council, in San Francisco.

Marine Union Convention Raps Spies

New Orleans, La., July 8.—Elected by the crews in ships' forecastles and gloryholes and from the union's 37 branches in Atlantic, Gulf and Great Lakes ports, delegates to the second convention of the National Maritime Union, representing a cross-section of the union's 50,000 membership, are taking steps to unify their organization on a national basis.

Plagued with spies who have been attempting to disrupt the union for months, the seamen are going ahead in an orderly and disciplined manner with the important matters before them, and have succeeded in discrediting a small group which appeared at the convention with the intent of splitting the union.

BROPHY SPEAKS

John Brophy, CIO director, who arrived by plane to address the convention told the delegates that "the anti-union team you've been up against—employers, tory politicians, police and spies — is a familiar combination. It has been used against labor ever since labor began to organize."

Joseph Curran, NMU president, threw confusion into a small group of suspended union members who were accused of acting as agents for the shipowners, when he took the microphone and announced

Our No. 1 Problem

Congress has again tried to dodge the No. 1 problem confronting the United States.

Between 11 and 12 million Americans are unemployed. Their plight affects millions more. It is a growing misery that feeds upon itself and keeps the whole nation in depression.

The Democratic party now in power promised constructive work at prevailing wages for the unemployed. The WPA program was a step, though still an inadequate one, in this direction.

But the present Congress has not carried on until the job was done. It has not adopted a single measure to put the unemployed to work.

On the contrary, tory Democrats, repudiating their party's pledge, have joined with tory Republicans in passing a bill which will throw a million unemployed off WPA jobs.

The organized protest of progressive labor, as represented and mobilized by the CIO, prevented an even worse blow being inflicted on the unemployed. The AFL national leadership, on the other hand, did not lift a finger in defense of WPA, and the CIO had to bear the brunt of the fight. This fight will be continued by the CIO, in Congress and out, to prevent the cutting of the meager WPA wages and to prevent layoffs wherever possible.

Experience with the present Congress will make labor more exacting in its demands on those who look for labor and progressive votes in coming elections.

It will want to know what every candidate is going to do about America's No. 1 problem—unemployment.

It is the workers who suffer most from continuing unemployment. And if constructive steps are to be taken to cope with it, the workers will have to organize politically as well as industrially to see that they are placed in effect.

Industrial Peace

The peaceful achievements of the CIO have never received as much attention as have its dramatic struggles for union rights.

Yet peaceful progress is the normal course of unionism. Struggles occur when collective bargaining is refused by employers or when they seek to smash the unions of their workers.

The men's clothing industry in New York City used to be one of the most chaotic in the country. But peace, order and progress have reigned since collective bargaining was finally and fully accepted by the employers.

Eighteen years of peaceful labor relations have just been celebrated with the signing of a new two-year agreement covering 40,000 members of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers in the New York market.

Both employer and union representatives issued a joint statement pointing out that "the laws of the jungle need not dominate employer-employe relations."

Other employers who are still fighting unions "with tooth and claw," might compare notes with the New York clothing manufacturers. The way to peace and industrial progress, they will find, is through union recognition and full acceptance of collective bargaining.

CIO From Coast To Coast

The Panama Canal is the sea link between the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts of the United States.

The workers in the Canal Zone are by the same token an important link in the unity of all American organized maritime workers which is the goal of the CIO.

CIO organization has been quietly under way for some time in the Canal Zone, and locals of several thousands of members have been established.

The chartering of a Panama Canal Zone Workers Organizing Committee last week, however, puts the CIO officially on the map there and will centralize and stimulate organizing activity among the Zone's 20,000 unorganized workers.

Existing CIO unions, from Alaska to Florida, from the east coast of Canada to the Hawaiian Islands in the west, will all wish the best of luck to the CIO pioneers in the Panama Canal Zone.

Not What The Doctor Ordered

Looking Ahead

By LEN DE CAUX

A Starvation Program

"HUNGRY Reliefers Storm Surplus Food Depot Here; Blind and Aged Needy Also in Dire Straits."

So read a headline in the Washington News a few days after Congress had adopted the Woodrum Hunger and Misery Bill.

The papers the same day carried news items about 200,000 unemployed being cut off WPA for July, as a first instalment of the starvation program voted by Congress.

Yet the attack of Congress on WPA is a man-made calamity more devastating in its effects on more American homes than any number of floods or hurricanes.

But the cruelest feature of the WPA calamity is that it was deliberately willed by the very people who were pledged to have the government provide work for the unemployed.

A Broken Pledge

The 1936 Democratic platform on which most of the present members of Congress were elected declared that unemployment was a national problem, and that "it is an inescapable obligation of our government to meet it in a national way."

"Where business fails to supply . . . employment," it continued, "we believe that work at prevailing wages should be provided in cooperation with state and local governments on useful public projects, to the end that the national wealth may be increased, the skill and energy of the worker may be utilized, his morale maintained, and the unemployed assured the opportunity to earn the necessities of life."

Yet despite this platform pledge, the Democratic majority joined with tory Republicans in adopting a WPA appropriation bill which will deny work to a million WPA workers in the coming fiscal year.

The bill also specifically denies "the opportunity to earn the necessities of life" to unemployed artists, musicians and theatrical workers by discontinuing the federal theatre projects.

It introduces a "starvation period," as John L. Lewis describes it, for those who have been on WPA for more than 18 months.

Finally, the platform pledge about "prevailing wages" also goes by the board, with provisions for cutting the meager monthly security wage and for wiping out the prevailing hourly rate on WPA.

Although the Senate responded to labor pressure by voting down some of the worst features of the Woodrum bill adopted by the House, the joint bill which came from conference and was finally adopted by Congress is little better than the original Woodrum bill.

What the Voters Want

The members of Congress who voted for the above starvation program will say that they did so in response to a demand from the voters for "economy" at the expense of the unemployed.

But don't let them kid you.

The voters in 1936 showed overwhelming approval of Democratic promises of an adequate WPA program. The Democrats who voted to slash WPA are therefore repudiating their party's platform pledge.

As for the Republicans who may claim their election signifies disapproval of the administration's unemployment program, let them look back to their own election campaigns.

Dissatisfaction there was, and still is, with the WPA program. But this dissatisfaction is due to its low wages and other inadequacies, and to the fact that the unemployed would much prefer private employment at higher wages.

Such discontent was taken advantage of by tory demagogues in the last elections. They implied that their election would bring the unemployed work in private industry at decent wages intead of WPA jobs.

But now the tories of both parties have voted to throw a million unemployed off WPA jobs at a time when they have no chance of getting private employment.

There is much political work yet to be done to convince the members of Congress that the voters gave them no mandate to starve the unemployed; and that they still want the government to live up to its "inescapable obligation" to provide work at prevailing wages for all who need it.

that he had records in his pocket giving "names, dates and places" which he would read.

"I intend to read this record," he said. "It probably explains the hiring of goons to beat up members. I think it is time the membership of the union decided how long it is going to permit this small clique of saboteurs to keep on trying to wreck this union."

At an earlier session, William Standard, NMU attorney, asked for a complete investigation of the U. S. Maritime Commission, which he said would show "wholesale collusion" between the Commission and the steamship operators.

OVATION FOR THOMAS

The highlight of Thursday's meeting was the great ovation given to President R. J. Thomas of the UAW-CIO. It was a spontaneous demonstration which acknowledged the complete victory of the present administration of the auto workers' union over the selfish interests which made so great an attempt to wreck the union.

President Thomas spoke briefly on the gains made by the union since the Cleveland convention, asserting that the workers in Michigan had definitely declared themselves in favor of the CIO and that they would march together to greater victories for labor under the banner of the CIO.

BROPHY SPEAKS

John Brophy, director of organization for the CIO, was the featured speaker on Friday. Brophy pointed out that never before in the history of the labor movement had the working men and women made such forward steps as they have since the inception of the CIO.

"The strength of the CIO," said Brophy, "is a bulwark against the rise of fascism and Nazism in this country."

Len De Caux, publicity director of the CIO and editor of The CIO NEWS, talked on the importance of a labor press. De Caux traced the manner in which the birth and rise of the CIO has been treated by the daily papers in their attempts to influence the public against the organization.

He urged the delegates to work toward the establishment of contacts with each other and with the national organization that would eventually lead to the setting up of a daily labor press in this country.

Upon recommendation of the publicity committee, the convention adopted a resolution that called for the publishing of a Michigan edition of The CIO NEWS.

PASS MANY RESOLUTIONS

The convention passed many resolutions, including the setting up of a state-wide union label committee for the purpose of educating members of the importance of looking for the union label; a resolution on peace and democracy which pledges the council's support of the CIO national program; resolution on labor unity; a resolution supporting the CIO program for old age relief which calls for $60 a month at 60.

One important resolution dealt with the efforts of the Newspaper Guild to organize the employes of the daily papers. The resolution called for union members, when dealing with reporters and newspaper photographers to demand the union card.

OFFICERS ELECTED

Adolph Germer was re-elected president of the Council by acclamation. John Gibson, Local 83, United Dairy Workers, is the new secretary-treasurer.

Plan CIO News Edition For Michigan

Grand Rapids, July 8—A Michigan edition of The CIO NEWS is to be published, following action of the annual convention of the State Industrial Union Council, representing all CIO unions in Michigan.

The need for a state CIO press was emphasized by Pres. Adolph Germer, by Len De Caux, CIO publicity director, and by other speakers who addressed the convention.

Supports Act

Leaders of Trainmen, New York Typo Union Laud Wagner Act

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, July 8.—Leaders from an AFL affiliate, from the railroad brotherhoods, and from religious organizations joined here this week in defending the Wagner Act at Congressional hearings on proposed amendments.

All three, Byrl Whitney of the Railroad Trainmen, Elmer Brown of the Big Six Typographical Union in New York, and the Rev. Wm. B. Waltmire of the Religion and Labor Foundation—urged that no amendments be passed, and condemned efforts of big business agents and AFL top officials to destroy the Act.

"ABUNDANTLY CLEAR"

"It is abundantly clear that the purpose which motivates most of these amendments is to destroy honest, legitimate collective bargaining in America," Whitney declared in the course of his testimony, during which he analyzed the proposals backed by the AFL in Sen. Walsh's bill and those put forward by Sens. Burke, Holman and other enemies of the act.

Whitney's testimony, made in the name of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, was a long and careful study of the proposed changes, took up the claims of the AFL leaders and demolished them one by one, neatly and effectively. For example, on the question of employes' right of "free speech" in regard to union matters, Whitney declared:

"S. 1,000 now proposes to go backwards and to re-take from labor some of the legal rights this act has established, by permitting employers to intefere in the right of workers freely to choose their own representatives and by legalizing and thereby encouraging employers to 'express opinions' with respect to labor's free choice to organize. This is a legalization and glorification of the odious undemocratic, dishonest company union, by which the employer sits on both sides of a conference committee."

CITES GIRDLER

Speaking on the general desire of anti-union employers to emasculate the act by amendment, since they did not dare come out for open repeal, he quoted Tom Girdler to show the satisfaction labor-haters feel with the proposed charges, including those backed by the AFL.

"If you have to make a bad law into a good law by emasculating it, then you'd better emasculate it," Whitney quoted Girdler as saying, using this as an example of the anti-union employer's point of view.

"Organized labor has increased its membership from 4,000,000 to 8,000,000 largely as a result of federal legislation that has restricted employers' opportunities to crush labor unions," Whitney continued. "There is a feverish desire to destroy the Natl. Labor Relations Act, which has thwarted the efforts of those who historically have striven to crush union labor."

Whitney concluded with a powerful plea to the Senate Committee to leave the act as it now stands, saying: "In the name of industrial peace and democratic freedom of American workers, and with all of the emphasis at my command, I urge your committee to reject all of the proposed amendments to the Natl. Labor Relations Act."

Brown referred in his testimony to the editorial stand against amendments taken by the May, 1939, issue of the Typographical Journal, efficient organ of the ITU, which praised the act and the Board and declared that it was "moronic for alleged labor leaders' to press for destructive changes in the act.

AFL VENOM

"There is great significance in the fact that the Supreme Court has upheld the Board's decisions in all important cases and on all vital points. Therefore those who would defeat the purposes of the act are resorting to amendment. It is moronic for alleged labor 'leaders' to join the employer campaign for amendment," the editorial Brown referred to said.

"In the venom of AFL opposition is the poison which blinds its 'leaders' to the fact that approximately 10 per cent of the elections to determine representation resulted in victory for independent unions not affiliated to either the AFL or the CIO."

Brown added that he was glad to note that the CIO had organized millions of previously unorganized workers, since such growth in the labor movement added strength to the general fabric of collective bargaining.

The Rev. Waltmire's testimony, delivered earlier in the week, urged that no amendments be passed at the present time, and suggested a minimum of two years' study of the working of the act and of the Board by an impartial commission to be appointed by President Rosevelt.

"We contend it (the act) is the greatest piece of social legislation of this country," Waltmire said.

Rail Union Head Raps 'Witch-Hunting' Probe

WASHINGTON, July 8 — Sharp protest against the proposed witch-hunting investigation of the Natl. Labor Relations Board, and a demand that Congressmen vote it down, was sent to all Representatives here by Pres. A. F. Whitney in the name of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

"Testimony given to the Senate Committee on Education and Labor and to the House Labor Committee proves beyond question that the National Labor Relations Board has done a very good job in spite of the enormous obstacles placed in its path by labor-hating employers," Whitney wrote.

WITCH HUNT

"There is no doubt in my mind that the proposed investigation is intended primarily as a 'witch-hunt' to embarrass the Board and further aggravate employer-employe relations.

"If the House of Representatives indulges in these antics it can rightly be condemned for prostituting the processes of democratic government."

Hearings on the proposed resolution, offered by anti-New Deal Rep. Smith of Va., who is also author of a viciously anti-labor alien gag bill, brought out some interesting angles of further AFL collusion with the enemies of the Wagner Act and of collective bargaining.

TORY-AFL LINEUP

Rep. Ham Fish, N. Y. Republican and veteran House reactionary, said that he had talked to Pres. Green of the AFL and that Green had said he was in favor of the proposed Board probe. Rep. Cox of Georgia, long an enemy of the AFL but now friendly with its top leaders because of his rabid hatred of the CIO, also testified that he believed the AFL would approve.

Cox added, when reminded of the hearings on amendments now going on in the House, that he wasn't interested in the evidence, only in the amendments.

Plan Auction to Help Strike

Beniamino Bufano, sculptor, receives congratulations and thanks from Charles Ervine, executive secretary of the San Francisco-Oakland Newspaper Guild, for his donation of a bust of Fremont Older, late West Coast liberal and newspaper editor. The work, done in bronze, will be auctioned off, with the proceeds going to help the Guild's strike against Hearst in Chicago.

District 50 Wins Providence Pact

Providence, R. I., July 8 — An agreement with the East Providence tar and chemical division of the Koppers Company was announced this week by Joseph Mayo, CIO regional director in Rhode Island

A new local formed at the plant will be chartered by District 50, United Mine Workers, Mayo said. It will be the first UMW charter granted in the state.

Analysis Of New WPA Bill

By RALPH HETZEL
CIO Unemployment Director

The WPA bill is the most open attack which has been made upon labor and the unemployed in this country. This is made clear by an analysis of the various features of the bill.

Appropriation

The total amount appropriated for WPA for the 12 months beginning July 1, 1939 is $1,477,000,000. It is the full amount requested by the President. This is $773,000,000 less than was appropriated for the WPA last year for a similar period.

The CIO asked for $2,250,000,000, the amount provided for in the Casey-Murray Bill.

The bill requires the WPA to spread this money over its total needs for the 12 months.

Number of Jobs

Last year the WPA provided an average of about 3,000,000 jobs. Under this new bill an average of only 2,000,000 jobs will be provided.

There are now about 2,600,000 on the WPA. During July the WPA will be cut 200,000. Such cuts will continue to approximately 1,500,000 jobs by next Spring.

Rates of Pay

The prevailing hourly rate is wiped out by the new bill. Beginning July 1, all WPA workers will be required to work 130 hours a month for their present monthly security wage. This means cuts up to 50% in the present hourly wage rates. This destruction of the prevailing hourly rate was strongly protested to the Congress by President Lewis and CIO representatives.

CUTS NORTHERN WAGES

On August 31st the monthly security wages will be changed so that there will a difference no greater than that justified by the cost of living between the monthly security wages for the same grade of work in the various parts of the country. This will mean in fact that the monthly wage rates in the Northern industrial areas will be severely reduced, while in the South, the monthly rate will be raised.

The CIO has always stood for the raising of the monthly rates in the South but cuts in the already inadequate monthly rates in the North will bring terrible hardship. It is predicted in Washington that such cuts will run as high as $20 or more in the monthly rate in the big cities.

The provisions on wages and hours follows:

"The Commissioner shall fix a monthly earning schedule for persons engaged upon work projects . . . which shall not substantially affect the current national average labor cost per person of the Work Projects Administration. After August 31, 1939, such monthly earning schedule shall not be varied for workers of the same type in different geographical areas to any greater extent than may be justified by differences in the cost of living. The Commissioner shall require that the hours of work for all persons engaged upon work projects shall (1) be one hundred and thirty hours per month except that the Commissioner, in his discretion, may require a lesser number of hours of work per month in the case of relief workers with no dependents and the earnings of such workers shall be correspondingly reduced, and (2) not exceed eight hours in any day and shall not exceed forty hours in any week.

"The Commissioner may authorize exemptions from the above limitations of monthly earnings and hours of work to protect work already done on a project; to permit making up lost time; in the case of emergency involving the public welfare and in the case of supervisory personnel employed on work projects."

Projects

The new bill handicaps the establishment of projects greatly. It provides that there can be no building construction projects on the WPA of which the WPA contribution is greater than $52,000. This applies only to buildings but will serve to stop a large number of extensive projects now under way. Some of these projects are the most useful ones being carried on by the WPA.

WHITE COLLAR PROJECTS

The white collar projects suffered most under this WPA bill. The theatre project is wiped out completely. All other Federal projects, which include the arts, musicians and writers projects, must be established under local sponsorship. It may be possible to save a good many of such projects but they will be severely handicapped by the necessity of State sponsorship.

Furthermore on the first of January, 1940, each State must provide an average sponsorship contribution for projects of 25%. This will increase the difficulty of getting projects sponsored locally.

TYPES OF PROJECTS

The list of projects which may be established by the WPA is approximately the same as last year and is as follows:

"Highways, roads, and streets; public buildings; parks, and other recreational facilities, including buildings therein; public utilities; electric transmission and distribution lines or systems to serve persons in rural areas, including projects sponsored by and for the benefit of non-profit and cooperative associations; sewer systems, water supply, and purification systems; airports and other transportation facilities; flood control; drainage; irrigation; conservation, including projects sponsored by conservation districts and other bodies duly organized under State law for soil erosion control and conservation, preference being given to projects which will contribute to the rehabilitation of individuals and an increase in the national income; eradication of insect, plant, and fungus pests; the production of lime and marl for fertilizing soil for distribution to farmers under such conditions as may be determined by the sponsors of such projects under the provisions of State law; educational, professional, clerical, cultural, recreational, production, and service projects, including training for domestic service, aid to self-help and cooperative associations for the benefit of needy persons, and miscellaneous projects."

Eligibility

Nobody may be employed on the WPA unless he has been certified as in need by a local welfare agency or by the WPA. There is no provision for uncertified, non-relief workers. Preference in employment is to be given "on the basis of relative need." Nobody knows yet exactly what that means.

No alien is to be given employment or continued in employment on any of the projects.

Everybody on the relief rolls or on WPA will have their status reinvestigated by the WPA at least once every six months.

Private Employment

No person on the WPA or eligbile to the WPA who refuses a bona fide offer of private employment "under reasonable working conditions which pays the prevailing wage for such work in the community where he resides and who is capable of performing such work shall be employed or retained in employment on work projects . . . . Any person who takes such private employment shall at the expiration thereof be entitled to immediate resumption of his previous employment status with the WPA if he is still in need and if he has lost the private employment through no fault of his own and if he has first drawn all the benefits of unemployment compensation that shall have accrued to him during his term in private employment and which are available to him."

The Woodrum Lay-Off

"There shall be removed from employment on Work Projects Administration projects all relief workers, excepting veterans, who have been continuously employed on such projects for more than eighteen months, and any relief worker so removed shall be ineligible to be restored to employment on such projects until after (a) the expiration of thirty days after the date of his removal, and (b) recertification of his eligibility for restoration to employment on such projects."

This means that a person may only be eligible after 30 days; it does not mean that he will be reassigned to a project. It may take months before there is another opening for such an eligible person. This provision is one of the most outrageous parts of the bill. It will bring great misery to the unemployed and disintegration to the operation of the projects.

Unionism

The bill contains the same provision with regard to discrimination as it had last year, which is:

"Any person . . . who knowingly, by means of any fraud, force, threat, intimidation, or boycott, or discrimination on account of race, religion, political affiliation, or membership in a labor organization, deprives any person of any of the benefits to which he may be entitled under any such (WPA) appropriation, or attempts so to do, or assists in so doing, shall be deemed guilty of a misdeameanor and fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned more than one year, or both."

Administration

From an administrative point of view the bill is an almost impossible one to operate. The WPA will be forced to cut almost one-third of its present supervisory and administrative staff and at the same time increase its supervisory duties. On July 15th there will probably be fired somewhere between 10 and 12 thousand administrative employes.

Copies of Bill

The CIO will provide copies of the bill to all its affiliates and will make available extra copies for any who wish to send for them. In addition extra copies of this statement will be obtainable by writing to the national CIO office.

A New Program

The CIO is now at work on a new program to fight the vicious effects of the 1940 WPA Appropriation.

Your WPA Job

By Ralph Hetzel
CIO UNEMPLOYMENT DIRECTOR

A New Wage Emergency

One of the most far-reaching and destructive provisions of the reactionary WPA Appropriations Bill that has just been passed is the one dealing with the wages to be paid on the projects. It is a simple provision and quite clear—there is nothing subtle about destruction.

It abolishes the prevailing wage principle and establishes on July 1 a working month of 130 hours for all project workers at the same security wage. This means, of course, a severe cut in the hourly rate for almost every project worker. Workers, both those on WPA and those in private industry, do not have to be told what happens to wages in general when there is a serious cut in the wage rates paid to millions of workers.

NEW KIND OF LAW

This is the first time in our history, as far as our knowledge extends, when a law has been written deliberately to destroy the prevailing hourly rate principle.

But Congress was not content wth destroying the wage rate structure built up through years of union action and struggle. After August 31 the security wages on the WPA will be determined according to a formula. Here it is: "After August 31, 1939, such monthly earning schedule shall not be varied for workers of the same type in different geographical areas to any great extent than may be justified by differences in the cost of living." This might mean an unexpected windfall to the project workers in the South and other areas where they have been getting $30 a month and less. We are and have always been unalterably opposed to the extent of the present differentials and would be the first to cheer such enlightened recognition of the problem.

TRICK IN FORMULA

But from all indications the formula given above will be used to lessen the great differentials by lowering the security wages in the industrial areas of the North and East. The differences in the cost of living, as far as can be determined, will not justify at the most more than a 10% differential. Therefore the wage cut will be very severe.

When this severe wage cut for a great percentage of the WPA workers is divided by the longer hours one can see what a tremendous body-blow has been dealt to the WPA workers and to the wage structure in general.

The CIO fought this provision bitterly in Congress and was a powerful influence in getting the Senate to put back the prevailing wage principle and liberalize the differential formula before the bill went to the conference room to be quietly smothered. The CIO will continue to fight for the most liberal interpretation and administration of this bill before Congress and the WPA administration.

GREEN STAYS SILENT

William Green has kept his mouth tightly shut throughout the whole struggle and has allowed this vicious blow to be struck at the wage structure of the country and at the building trades workers in particular without raising his little finger. Since the bill has been passed his silence has been thunderous.

President Lewis has issued a statement strongly condemning the short-sighted and brutal treatment of the unemployed. He said in part: "The helpless men and women who are unemployed have suffered a terrible blow in the passage of the 1940 WPA appropriation. This blow will be profoundly resented by all of labor . . ."

matically dropped from the rolls for 30 days—after which they will again be eligible if they can receive certification for work.

The prevailing wage rate for WPA work—written into previous relief bills as a protection for organized labor against wholesale pay chiselling—was abolished.

In the future practically all WPA employes will have to work 130 hours a month for the same wage they have been receiving for a considerably smaller amount of work.

A limit of $52,000 was set for WPA expenditures on any non-Federal building project—more than the House had originally permitted, but far less than the $75,000 asked by the Senate.

Immediate effect of the bill was an order from WPA headquarters for a cut of 200,000 persons in the WPA payroll.

BE ON GUARD!

Look for the union label of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America when buying men's and boys' clothing, overalls, shirts, undergarments, neckties, lumber jackets, gloves, and all other kinds of men's wearing apparel.

The Amalgamated Label is your guarantee that the articles you buy are of the best workmanship and produced under one hundred percent union conditions by members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America.

By insisting on the Amalgamated Label you will help to guard against a return of sweatshop conditions to the industry. By helping the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America you help the labor movement generally.

Ask for the Amalgamated label on each part of the suit, coat, pants and vest. There are different Amalgamated labels for coats, pants, vests, shirts and undergarments, work clothes, neckwear and gloves.

"Get Together!"

A True Story

About the CIO Agricultural Workers Union

By LILLIAN GILKES

"Grandfather clock says, Take-yore-time, take-yore-time; alarm clock says Get together, get together! . . . That's what I'm tellin' 'em, Mister. And now I got to see the Governor!"

His Excellency's Secretary shot another look at the face before him, the same color as the burned-out Arkansas earth, having decided it was the face and the voice, both, of a trouble maker.

"Lady, who are you?"

"Just a ole sharecropper you never heard of. I'm organizin' in the union. And presy-dent of a Local back yonder in my county. It's the CIO, you know. I come all the way over here to Little Rock, hitch-hikin', to git to see the Gov'nor. And I aint a-goin' home till I do!"

The Secretary flattened himself against the door, barring the way, and tried another tactic. It didn't work. "No sir - -" the woman said, with dignity, "I aint a-tellin' my business to nobody but the one it's intended for." She shut her mouth on that, and took a seat by the door. "I'm gonna set right here!"

"Nobody sees the Governor without an appointment." — He thought he might have to call one of the plainclothes men to put her out.

Invitation

"Now, listen here. I shuck hands with Gov'nor Bailey at a speakin' one time, it was during the campaign. Me and him had a little talk. He says, any time I got some'n's botherin' me 'bout the union — never mind writin' it in no letter — to come on over here and tell it to him. Now I'm here. And I sure don't think he's no liar!"

"Well, m'am - -" The dauntless manner of the Secretary cracked partially, he went through the door. In a moment he was back, and announced, "The Governor will see you."

Myrtle Heftner just had time to glance in the mirror and give the old brown knitted cap on her head a jerk and a twist, prettying up, before she was steered through the door marked "Private" in the Governor's Mansion. Her blue eyes looked keen and young and very bright, in her wrinkled face.

The Governor shook hands. He did not remember her. He smiled. Myrtle joked about the secretary, and reminisced about the changes that had come to Arkansas since "Ole Futrell" was kicked out for a New Deal governor. "The time you had them 'laws' arrested for tryin' to break up our meetin' — cost 'em three hundred and fifty dollars apiece, and three days in jail — them high sheriffs, that musta pinched 'em pretty bad!" She laughed, and plunged into her business.

'Them Mexicans'

"Them Mexicans. Planters 's branging' 'em in from Texas, to pick cotton for thirty cents a hundred. Now we unions aint a-goin' to stand for such as that."

The Governor asked, "Have you reported it to the Labor Board, downstairs?"

"Sure did. I talked to the governor. And one or two others. Them folks acted mighty nice! Said they'd look into it. But I aint quittin' on that. I want you to know, too! What-all's a-goin' on."

"Isn't a thing I can do about it, Mrs. Heftner. I can't deport 'em. I haven't got any legal authority to do that - -."

The Governor looked thoughtful. And said after a minute, "I tell you what you do. You go over there and organize those folks. And I'll see that you have protection."

"I'll sure do that thing!"

As she started away he called after her from his big desk, "Well, come back and see me, Mrs. Heftner. I'll tell my secretary — you're not a foreign agitator. He'll know you next time!"

Living in Tents

There were six hundred Mexicans living in tents, and every morning before the sky grew light the trucks roared up to take them off to work on the plantations. Their camp was over in the Bottom, a long hike from the Heftner's shack — a good two miles. Myrtle waited till dusk, when the Mexicans would be coming back from the fields, hungry and tired, anxious for music and to sing their songs under the heavy stars.

"Howdy" she said, standing amidst a bunch of playing, peeping children, flop-eared hound dogs and scratching hcickens not yet gone to roost. The women were busy over the fires. Dark shapes of men moved up closer, watchful-eyed. "I wanta see your leader - -". She spoke to the man nearest.

He understood English, and in silence led her through the jungle of rotten tents with flaps pinned back to let in more of the cooling evening air. Before one he stopped, and she went forward into the zone of hot lamplight.

"Now we had our cotton choppin' strike last March. We dont want to have no trouble. But we're gittin' a dollar a day. We-uns don't aim for you-all to come in here'n pick cotton for no thirty cents a hundred!"

'We Union'

The Mexican leader was a big swarthy-faced peon, with shiny black hair like an Indian. "Me too, Sister" he exclaimed. "You get dollar a day. We want dollar too!" He told how it was. "We didn't know. Boss say, come pick cotton, Arkansas. Much money. He lie like hell!" He pulled his face down in a scowl of disgust. "We union, you bet. Our country, everybody in union. Except landlords—!"

The Mexican laughed loudly, remembering the landlords. Then thrusting a hand in his shirt front as if to scratch himself, pulled out a card printed in Spanish. "Kids, too. Look!" He hollered something, "Ola, chiquillo!" A boy in ragged britches, and a sparrowy little girl with glass beads in her ears, a string of beads around her neck, came out from a corner and held up union cards for the stranger woman to see. Soon, more and more kids from all over the camp multiplied by magic underneath the tent canvas, clamored round to show their cards, their scrubby little faces serious with pride.

"Sister, don't I know you?" The Mexican man peered closer at Myrtle's face in the sour lamplight. "Didn't I see you, summertime—big convention, Muskogee?"

"Why, sure, sure! I remember you!"

They laughted together and clasped hands, and were full of mirth because they had both been delegates to the Muskogee Convention and now it was such a queer coincidence to meet again in these circumstances.

"We'll be right with you," the Arkansas woman said. "But now, les' git it planned. You-uns throw down your pick sacks, on the ground. And that'll be the signal. And all of us from locals 'round here's 'll come a-runnin' and git on the picket line—"

"You eat with me, Sister," the Mexican said . . . She accepted the invitation.

"We make plan now. Tomorrow—we have big victory!"

And they did.

Several CIO Unions Plan Sessions at 'Model Camp'

Pittsburgh, July 7. — Steel workers throughout the nation, together with members of several other CIO unions, are again preparing for a summer vacation at the Summer Camp and Training School in the hills of Western Pennsylvania.

This is the second year for the camp, and this year the site will be about 30 miles west of Pittsburgh, near Frankfort Springs—a large acreage developed by the federal government as a model camp.

Organizations participating in the camp this year, in addition to the SWOC, include the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Aluminum Workers, United Rubber Workers, United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, District 50 of the United Mine Workers and the Federation of Flat Glass Workers.

The weekly fee is ten dollars, and the fee includes room and board and all camp activities. Prominent leaders in the labor movement, college professors and nationally-known speakers, have been invited to attend.

The camp idea, conceived and developed by the steel union in the summer of 1938, is believed to be one of the first attempts of its kind in labor union history. The camp proved to be such a success that the idea has been enlarged upon this year and other national CIO unions desired to take part.

A schedule has already been arranged in order that each union will have the camp to itself for a designated period of one or more weeks. The SWOC period will be from July 2 to July 16; Aug. 13 to Aug. 20 and the week of Aug 27.

WORK AND PLAY

A program of activities has been arranged to allow a few hours each day for union training work, and the rest of the day for recreation.

The camp takes in an area of 150 acres, with 50 screened log cabins for the campers, a screened dining hall, sanitary plumbing, showers, porches, lockers, steel single beds, safe drinking water, nearly two miles of lake front, baseball fields and boats.

112 CAMPERS WEEKLY

Each week the camp will accommodate 112 union members, and the set-up is divided into four units. Each unit has six modern log cabins that will house four persons each. Office buildings and a hospital are situated right on the camp site.

The mornings during camp period will be used for union training work, to discuss the two vital union problems — relations with management, and building the union. Staff members and national officers, will conduct the sessions.

The afternoons will be free for recreation—swimming, boating, hikes, ball games. The evenings will be devoted to social activities — movies, dancing, camp fires.

UNION WON VACATIONS

According to statistics of the United States Department of Labor, 640,278 employes in the iron and steel industry enjoyed paid vacations last summer. The American Iron and Steel Institute estimates that vacation pay averages $40 a week for each employe.

Thus it will be seen what the steel union has meant to steel workers on the single item of vacations alone.

While most of the larger steel corporations are forced by the nature of their operations to stagger vacations throughout the summer, many smaller steel concerns are planning to do what they did last summer—to shut down their mills for a week and let all employes have vacations at the same time.

U. S. Employment Service Bans Strikebreaking

Washington, July 8 — State employment services affiliated with the U. S. employment service have been ordered to prohibit the providing of workers for establishments engaged in labor disputes, it was announced here.

The order was issued by the U. S. agency after several unions complained that the state agencies were being used to recruit strike-breakers, notably in California agricultural labor disputes.

If state agencies fail to comply with the order, it was indicated, the federal agency will curtail the federal contributions.

Indiana Agreement

Indianapolis, Ind., July 8—CIO officials and the Indiana State Employment Service have reached an agreement aimed to prevent the government agency from sending strikebreakers to fill union men's jobs.

The Employment Service stipulated that it was "contrary" to its policy to refer workers to an employer involved in a strike or lockout. To prevent this situation from happening without the Service's knowledge, the CIO Industrial Union Council will notify offices of the Employment Service of the facts concerning existing or anticipated labor disputes.

Upon receipt of such notification, the Service will stop sending job applicants to the struck firms until the Industrial Union Council has notified the state agency of the end of the dispute.

Auto Union Strike Shuts 5 GM Plants

DETROIT, July 7.—Five General Motors plants were closed today by a strike of the United Automobile Workers, CIO, aimed at winning a supplementary agreement to cover tool and die makers, engineering and maintenance workers.

The walkout, coming right at the peak of the tool and die making season, climaxed two years of effort by the UAW to win the contract without resorting to shutting the plants. Factories affected were: Fisher Body 23, largest tool and die plant in the world; Chevorlet Gear and Axle; Chevrolet experimental factory; Fisher Body plant at Pontiac, and Fisher Body 21.

UAW demands, worked out at a parley in Detroit on June 25, call for the union label on tool and die work, to prevent job snatching by sweatshop "alley" firms; 10c-an-hour wage increases; overtime rates for Saturdays, Sundays and holidays; uniform hiring rates and standard apprenticeship set-ups in all GM plants.

Close to 4,000 skilled workers took part in the strike, which, if it continues, may delay production plans for the 1940 car models.

Negotiations which had been in progress for some time were abruptly broken off when GM executives seized upon Homer Martin's rump outfit as an alibi for refusing to meet with the powerful CIO affiliate.

UAW leaders charge that the existence of half a dozen company stooges in a plant is being used by the management as basis for a claim that it will not bargain with the workers' union.

CHIDES EXECUTIVES

Addressing the meeting of tool and die leaders here, Walter Reuther, head of the UAW's GM division, asserted:

"We have attempted to speak to GM in the language of common sense and conciliation in accordance with American principles of collective bargaining. We asked them to sit down and confer on a supplemental agreement. They refused. They don't understand that language.

"We must inform GM that we are prepared to speak the only language it understands."

Reither said that tool and die workers with high seniority standing have had only short spells of employment in the GM plants.

MUST PLAN PRODUCTION

"If GM wants the skill of these men," he pointed out, "it must plan its production so the men will receive a decent annual wage. The amount of work can be increased by use of the UAW-CIO label."

William Stevenson, chairman of the tool and die council, who presided at the pre-strike meeting, declared that the rump group led by Martin has folded up. He assailed GM officials for pretending to be in doubt as to who speaks for the tool and die makers, engineering and maintenance workers.

Plan Union Drive In Little Steel

Pittsburgh, July 8 — Plans for an intensive organizing campaign in Little Steel will probably be mapped out at a conference of Steel Workers Organizing Committee officials late this month, Chairman Philip Murray announced today.

The four companies which comprise the Little Steel group —Bethlehem, Republic, Inland and Youngstown — are the only major holdouts in the SWOC drive to unionize the nation's steel industry and its 600,000 workers.

Murray will meet with SWOC regional and sub-regional directors in Chicago, July 24, and the organizing drive is expected to be No. 1 problem on the agenda.

Announcement of the contemplated campaign came on the third anniversary of the formation of the CIO steel union. Keynote of the first meeting was Murray's terse remark:

"We have a job to do. Let's do it."

Since that time, 595 firms have signed SWOC contracts, and more than 500,000 workers have enjoyed the benefits of unionism for the first time.

Hearst Tries Arrests To Break Strike Spirit

CHICAGO, July 8. — Nerves shattered by its inability to dent the Chicago Newspaper Guild strike front, the Hearst management engineered wholesale arrests of pickets as the strike against the Evening American and Herald & Examiner entered its eighth month.

Twenty Guild pickets were seized at instigation of the Hearstlings who were unable to stand picket line chanting. All are charged with disorderly conduct. Among those arrested were seven members of the Hearst strike committee and Lucy Read, striking office worker and wife of Harry Read, chairman of the striking Hearst unit and president of the Chicago chapter, Association of Catrolic Trade Unionists.

The Guild's reply to the arrests was a Loop parade of 100 strikers Saturday. Shouting and singing the Guildsmen marched past the Hearst Building. No arrests were made.

Meanwhile, following protests of the arrests by the Guild as well as other CIO unions and organizations, Police Commissioner James P. Allman promised a thorough investigation of the violation of the strikers' rights to free speech.

Victim of Goons

Eric Hessler, official of the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee, lies in a Chicago hospital after being attacked by thugs the night before he was scheduled to testify against the Intl. Harvester Co. at National Labor Relations Board hearings. The union and liberal city officials have asked for an official probe of the attack, which left Hessler with a fractured skull.

CHICAGO, July 8—Foul play against one of the union's key witnesses in the Labor Board hearing against the International Harvester Company now going on, seems to account for the brutal attack made on Eric Hessler, financial secretary of the McCormick Works Local 109, United Farm Equipment Workers.

Hessler, who disappeared the day before he was to testify, was found a week later in Cook County hospital, delirious and with a fractured skull. Joseph Weber, assistant director of the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee, laid the case before Alderman William A. Rowan, chairman of the City Council's labor committee.

ORDER POLICE PROBE

Police Commissioner James Allman, at Rowan's request, ordered an immediate investigation. Hessler, lying in a deep coma at the hospital, was unable to tell what happened to him. An emergency operation was ordered in an attempt to save his life.

He criticized the "obvious negligence" of the police department which failed to identify Hessler although numerous papers and documents were in his pockets, any one of which was sufficient to have given a clue as to who he was.

Anniversary

Chairman Philip Murray of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, who announced on SWOC's birthday that union contracts now cover 75 per cent of the nation's basic industry.

Youth Group In Pledge to Democracy

New York, July 8 — Over 1400 delegates to the American Youth Congress, meeting in a four day session here, pledged themselves to "uphold the democratic way of life" and adopted a program of progressive political and organization action for the coming year.

Chief items in the legislative program were demands for a $500,000,000 youth loan fund for education, medical treatment, and aid in starting professions and businesses, plus support for social laws under reactionary attacks and suggestions for their extension.

DEFEND WAGNER ACT

Included in this were resolutions calling for a defense of the Wagner Act, expansion of WPA, resumption of WPA cultural projects, passage of the Bloom bill to lift the arms embargo against democratic nations, adoption of the Wagner child refugee bill.

James B. Carey, secretary of the CIO and president of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, presided over one of the sessions and was unanimously elected a vice-chairman of the organization.

Thousands To Hear Lewis In Chicago

CHICAGO, July 8—Packinghouse Workers locals all over the country are planning to send large delegations to hear John L. Lewis, CIO president, speak and to attend the national convention of the PWOC called here for July 16.

Special trains, chartered buses, and private autos will bring the delegates to this city, where plans will be laid for consolidating PWOC affiliates and completing the drive for national contracts from the Big Four of the packing industry — Armour, Wilson, Cudahy and Swift.

First emphasis will be on a national contract from Armour, whose stalling tactics have delayed negotiations for months, though the PWOC represents the overwhelming majority of Armour workers and has already won concessions in many Armour plants.

WELCOME PLANNED

Pres. Lewis will be met by a welcoming committee representing every CIO organization in the city. Van A. Bittner, PWOC chairman, will introduce Lewis at the meeting and will be a speaker himself. Don Harris and Henry Johnson, director and assistant director of PWOC, will act as co-chairmen. Alderman Wm. A. Rowan, chairman of the City Council committee on Industry and Labor, will officially greet Lewis in the name of the city government.

Textile Union Wins Poll In Bay State

Plymouth, Mass., July 8 — Workers in the Puritan mill of the American Woolen Company here voted 232 to 194 in favor of the Textile Workers Union of America.

This is the fifth mill in the company's chain to be won by the CIO union.

An agreement covering 12,000 American Woolen Workers in Lawrence, Mass., Dover, N. H., and Skowheegan, Me., is expected to be reached within the near future, the TWUA announced.

FOUGHT RUMORS

The election conducted by the National Labor Relations Board, was won by the CIO union despite the spreading of malicious rumors that the mill would shut down if the TWUA won. The victory won by the workers in the Puritan mill is the first to be achieved to date by the CIO in Plymouth, site of the famous rock where the Mayflower Pilgrims landed.

Employer Petitions — Just a Sales Argument?

NEW YORK, July 8.—Indication that the insistent demand of employers for the right to petition for National Labor Relations Board elections is more a talking point than an effort to win relief from a pressing difficulty was indicated today in figures published by the New York State Labor Relations Board.

The SLRB, which has allowed employers to petition for elections, revealed that only 85 employers have taken advantage of the provision. During the same period, about 2,500 election requests were filed by labor unions.

In only ten of these cases did the Board find it necessary to hold elections. Ten others are still pending, while 65 have been settled, dismissed or withdrawn.

Detroit. — A supplementary contract with General Motors to cover tool and die makers and other skilled workers seemed near as a United Automobile Workers, CIO, strike closed 12 plants working on 1940 models.

Wagner Act

Washington. — Representatives of the AFL Hotel and Restaurant union, an economist, three clergymen and a representative of consumers testified against Wagner Act amendments at Senate Labor Committee hearings.

No Need for WPA?

The camera catches a small portion of the crowd of 6,000 men applying for 58 chauffeur jobs in New York. Many waited in line all night. A number of them said they'd lost WPA employment during recent slashes.

Sen. Murray Introduces New Bill

(See Story Page Three)

WASHINGTON, July 15. — The CIO threw all its support today behind S. 2765, introduced by a group of Senate liberals headed by James Murray of Montana, to stop reductions in WPA monthly wage rates and restore the prevailing wage rate provisions stricken out by Congressional reactionaries.

"We believe this legislation is the proper way to settle the WPA wage question," Ralph Hetzel, CIO unemployment director, declared. The bill, he said, embodies CIO suggestions.

The CIO Unemployment Committee, headed by Sec. James Carey, warned that "Congress must not adjourn until it has righted the wrongs for which it is responsible."

Demand for passage of the new bill followed unprecedented nationwide protests against the vicious onslaught on WPA in the bill rushed through both House and Senate on June 30.

"Just resentment against the starvation and wage - cutting WPA bill passed by Congress" was the description given the demonstrations by CIO leaders, who pointed out that if the AFL's national leadership had waged a more vigorous fight against the bill when it was in the formative stage, the present protests might have been unnecessary.

Gotham Subways Sign Contracts, Avert Strike

NEW YORK, July 15.—Possibility of a New York subway strike ended today when the city's two largest private rapid transit companies reached new agreements with the CIO Transport Workers Union.

The two pacts, which carry closed shop provisions and run until July 1, 1941, represent substantial union victories, Pres. Michael Quill declared.

If the two lines—the Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit Co. and the Interborough Rapid Transit Co.—are taken over by the city in the next few months, considerable improvement in wages, hours and working conditions should be effected, Quill predicted. Plans for unification of all major transit systems in New York under city ownership and operation are being worked out at the present time.

WAGE ADJUSTMENTS

The 13,000 employes of the IRT won sick leaves with pay, four paid holidays a year and adjustments in wage rates and working conditions, to finance which the company agreed to set aside $600,000 annually. The B-MT will allocate $450,000 during the first year for similar adjustments covering 8,500 union members, and half a million the following year.

The agreements succeed previous contracts which expired on March 31 of this year and which have been extended for short periods on a number of occasions.

LEWIS SENDS GREETINGS

CIO Pres. John L. Lewis sent the following wire to Pres. Quill:

"My hearty congratulations on the splendid settlement reached with the transit companies. The members of your great union have reason to rejoice over the splendid accomplishment of yourself and your associates."

In return, Quill, together with Pres. Austin Hogan and Sec. John Santo of the New York local expressed appreciation in behalf of the members for the "advice, support and encouragement" given by Lewis.

CIO Pickets Shut GM Plant

Pickets by the thousand surround Fisher Body Plant No. 3 in Detroit as the United Automobile Workers, CIO, strikes General Motors for 10c hourly wage increases and a supplementary agreement covering tool and die makers, engineering and maintenance workers. Strike has halted work on 1940 models. See Story Page 8

Perjurer, Spy Opens Hearing AgainstBridges

By MIRIAM ALLEN DEFORD

SAN FRANCISCO, July 15.—An admitted perjurer led off the government's attempt to prove that Harry Bridges, West Coast director of the CIO, is an alien Communist and therefore liable to deportation.

Major Lawrence Milner of the Oregon National Guard Reserves, from 1933 to 1937 an undercover agent for the Oregon Adjutant General detailed to "report on radical activities", revealed that he had lied during his disappearance as a witness at the trial of Dirck DeJonge on criminal syndicalism charges in Portland, Ore., a few years ago.

The reserve officer also testified that he had been on friendly terms with Larry Doyle, one of the West Coast's most notorious labor spies. Milner told of having advised Doyle to plant a dictaphone in Bridges' hotel room during the 1936 convention of the longshoremen in this city.

The hearings opened in a tiny government building on Angell Island, a 32-minute boat ride away from downtown San Francisco. Despite public protests, only newspapermen and officials interested in the case are permitted to attend the hearings, at which Dean James M. Landis of Harvard Law School is acting as special trial examiner for the U. S. Department of Labor.

DENIES 'RED' CHARGE

At the beginning of the hearing, Bridges took the stand to admit that he has not yet become an American citizen, but bluntly denied membership in the Communist party.

Miss Carol King, authority on deportation proceedings, who is acting as Bridges' chief counsel, told the hearing that the proceedings should be considered as a labor, not a deportation, case.

"Harry Bridges is a symbol of labor's strength to the employer groups who instigated and paid for this conspiracy," she asserted.

Miss King recalled that original charges against Bridges, made by Harper Knowles, chief stoolpigeon for the American Legion and other patrioteering groups on the Pacific Coast, had been dropped as "groundless" by the Immigration Service.

SOUGHT BY EMPLOYERS

Then, she said, "these employer groups by bribery and blackmail, secured false affidavits and testimony. . . . They received the active assistance of Portland and Los Angeles police officials and other West Coast foes of labor," Miss King charged. "These are the same people who sought the impeachment of Secretary of Labor Perkins.

"Back of it all are Harper Knowles and Larry Doyle, who have supported themselves by this case for years. We shall prove that this is a conspiracy, that Bridges is not a Communist, that false testimony has been deliberately prepared outside the Labor Department, that the witnesses are felons, labor spies or both—people who hate Bridges, the CIO and all labor unions."

It is generally believed that the hearing will last for a month or more. Those back of the move to deport Bridges would like very much to prolong it to Sept. 30, when the maritime contracts will be reopened, or even longer, to the time of the CIO convention here in October.

COUNCIL MEETING

Seattle, July 15—Washington State's CIO Industrial Union Council will hold its second annual convention at the IWA Hall in Tacoma on Sept. 16-17, Pres. Richard Francis announced today.

Miss Lewis Reports Unions Growing In South America

WASHINGTON, July 15. — Encouraging reports about the progress of the labor movement in Latin American countries were brought back by Miss Kathryn Lewis, daughter of the CIO president, on her return from a three-month tour of South America.

"Everywhere I went," she said, "I was questioned closely about what the CIO is doing organizationally, about its aims and policies, and about its part in the liberal political life of the United States.

"I found that Latin-America labor and liberal leaders have been heartened and inspired by the dramatic success of the CIO in recent years. They look to the organized workers of the United States as their natural allies in their own efforts to organize and win democratic rights."

INDUSTRIAL UNIONS

Miss Lewis noted that industrial unionism is the rule in almost every South American country.

The building construction workers, she said, unlike in the United States, are almost invariably organized in industrial unions. As a result they form the strongest single unions in such countries as Uruguay and Argentina.

The sympathetic interest shown by the CIO in the Latin-American Confederation of Labor, whose first convention in Mexico City was attended by Pres. John L. Lewis, was particularly interesting to Latin-Americans, Miss Lewis found.

SPLIT ATTEMPTS FAILING

"The Latin-American Confederation now has affiliated with it every labor movement in South America, except that of Brazil, where union organization is under strict government control," she said.

"I saw no evidence that AFL efforts to split Latin-American labor by reviving the Pan-American Federation of Labor were meeting with any success.

"The Latin-American Confederation, on the other hand, is a strong and growing force everywhere. To it belongs the chief credit for the revival and advance of union organization in many countries where organized labor previously felt weak and isolated."

Miss Lewis attended the International Congress of the Democracies in Montevideo, Uruguay, as a delegate from Labor's Non-Partisan League. While in South America she also visited Brazil, Argentina, Paraguay, Chile, Bolivia, Colombia and Ecuador.

GAINS IN CHILE, COLOMBIA

She was particularly impressed by the progress being made in Chile and Colombia, in which countries liberal democratic governments are in power.

In Chile the organized labor movement, the C. T. Ch., is an integral part of the Popular Front which placed President Pedro Aguirre Cerda in office at the last elections. It has 150,000 members, Miss Lewis said, and is growing fast.

"The Popular Front government is bringing many benefits to labor by protecting democratic rights and civil liberties and by enforcing the Chilean labor code, which is in some respects one of the best in the world," she declared.

"It takes real courage to be a democrat or to belong to a labor union in many of these countries," she said. "Imprisonment or death are the lot of many. But still the heroic struggle goes on to win democratic liberties and labor rights."

NAZIS, FASCISTS ACTIVE

Nazi and Fascist penetration was everywhere in evidence in South America, she reported, but was meeting with strong resistance from the democratic forces wherever they had a chance to express themselves. Under dictatorial governments, however, "they just have to put up with it."

Miss Lewis stressed the importance of increasing trade between the United States and Latin-American countries for the mutual benefit of all countries concerned.

Silver Price Is Golden Goose —But Not for Miners

DENVER, Colo., July 15. — Profiteering mining companies are finding gold in the recent silver purchase bill, and mining workers are finding nothing, according to a study just released by the CIO Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union.

"The new silver purchase policy means just that—increased profits for the mining corporations," according to the study, prepared by Ben Riskin, union research director. "But it doesn't mean a thing for the workers in the industry."

ALL GRAVY

The new price, upped from 64.64 cents to 71.11 cents per ounce by Congressional action, will not mean that new mines will come into production, or even that production in the present ones will greatly increase, according to Riskin. It means "merely more gravy for those mine operators already producing silver."

This is due to the fact that most silver is produced as a by-product of copper or other metals, the study points out. "The wage scale in the copper fields is based on the price of copper, so that the extra profit from silver is all gravy . . . and none of that gravy goes to the workers.

"It's not to higher silver prices or tariffs on copper or zinc or lead that workers can look for wage increases," Riskin concludes. "Those things mean only profits for the employers. The one stable and dependable condition for decent wages still remains strong union organization."

NAME OFFICERS

Another Pact Won by CIO In Jersey City

JERSEY CITY, N. J., July 15—The CIO added to its growing string of victories in this industrial hot spot when the Clorox Chemical Co. signed an agreement with District 50 of the United Mine Workers.

The contract provides for sole bargaining rights for the UMW, wage increases running as high as 25 per cent, the forty-hour week and time and a half for overtime work.

Samuel Macri, CIO field representative, aided a union committee in winning the victory.

High Pay Benefits Farmers

Washington, July 15—Livestock prices paid to farmers by the big packers go up or down with wages paid to industrial workers, according to figures released by the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture. Low wages do not mean high prices for the farmers' products. Higher wages do mean better prices.

This information, gathered by Farm Research, Inc., research agency for the Farmers' Union, shows conclusively that farmers have everything to gain from organization and collective bargaining by industrial workers.

It also counters the propaganda put out by many employers, and by the big packing firms especially, that tries to persuade farmers higher wages won by the CIO Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee mean money out of the farmers' pocket.

WAGES SMALL ITEM

As a matter of fact, Farm Research points out, wage costs accounted for only 6.8 per cent of the gross value of all meat products in 1937, and even this figure should be lower, since it includes inflated salaries and bonuses paid to top company officials as well as wages paid to production workers.

For example, the Census Bureau, which gathered the figures, includes the $347,685 presented to the Swift family in one year as part of "wages," and $129,520 paid by Armour and Co. to its president.

WHAT FARMERS FACE

What farmers do face at the hands of the big packers is a cut in their income from meat sales due to the packers' stalling on collective bargaining with the CIO union in the industry, Farm Research reveals.

As Farm Research explains, farmers have everything to gain from collective bargaining and higher wages by industrial workers, and everything to lose by the packers' refusal to bargain or their attempts to keep wages low.

Name Rathborne To NYA Board

Washington, July 15.—President Roosevelt has appointed Mervyn Rathborne, president of the American Communications Association, CIO, a member of the National Advisory Committee of the National Youth Administration.

The President said Rathborne represented "the interests in which the problems of young people are involved" when he requested the CIO official to serve.

CIO Supports WPA Bill Amendments To Protect Wages

WASHINGTON, July 15.—Full CIO support was mobilized today behind a bill to restore the prevailing hourly rate of pay and prevent reduction in monthly wages of WPA workers throughout the nation.

Introduced by Sen. James Murray of Montana in cooperation with more than 20 other Senators, the bill—S. 2765—follows out demands of demonstrators who brought WPA work almost to a halt in every large city following realization of the terms of the Woodrum bill passed by Congress on June 30.

"The amendments being introduced embody the suggestions we have made on these two matters," Ralph Hetzel, speaking in behalf of the CIO Unemployment Committee, declared. "We believe this legislation is the proper way to settle the WPA wage question.

"The amendments will stop the reduction in the monthly wages and restore the prevailing hourly rate principle. The central importance of the monthly security wage must not be forgotten in the outcry about the prevailing wage rate. The monthly rates, after all, determine how much the WPA worker has to live on. The most important thing to do is to stop reductions in the monthly rate."

The Murray amendment would instruct the Federal Works Administrator to fix a monthly earning schedule so that no class of workers will receive less monthly income from WPA than under the old set-up.

After August 31, 1939, the monthly earning schedule would permit no pay differential for people doing the same type of work in the same wage area, nor between cities or counties in the same wage area that might discriminate against the less urbanized districts.

'JUST RESENTMENT'

Demonstrations against the WPA wage slashes were described as "just resentment against the starvation and wage-cutting WPA bill passed by Congress," the CIO Unemployment Committee, headed by Sec. James Carey, declared.

The protests, it continued, "bear out the CIO's warning to Congress that the provisions of the Bill were exceedingly dangerous, leading to wage-cutting and human misery."

Improvements derived from the Murray amendment "will not make the Appropriation Act a model bill, "the committee warned, "but they will make it possible to operate a program.

Marine Union Outlines Program

By RAY TORR

New Orleans, July 15 — The second convention of the National Maritime Union neared the end of its deliberations here completely united behind a progressive trade union and political program.

The myth of factionalism, so persistently nurtured by shipowners and the anti-labor press, was dispelled early last week and the 176 delegates have gone full speed ahead, steady on a straight course, ever since.

RECOMMENDATIONS

The tone of the convention was set by Pres. Joseph Curran in a 15,000-word report delivered last Friday. Some of his recommendations were:

Cooperation with any group or organization for the defeat of reaction in 1940;

National unity of all maritime unions in the United States;

JOINT NEGOTIATIONS

Joint negotiations between all marine unions and the operators for renewal of the contracts expiring September 30, this year;

A program of trade union education (as outlined by CIO Director John Brophy) as a labor weapon against employers and their agents;

Sharp resistance to a shipowner drive for new subsidy raids and for further restrictions on marine unions;

A continued fight against efforts by the operators to utilize any hangover of discrimination within the ranks of the union to their own ends;

Elimination of district divisions and centralization of the administrative aparatus; and

Complete elimination of shipowner influence within the union;

Endorsement of Pres. Roosevelt for a third term.

'Patience Nearing End'; Lewis Warns Big Meat Packers to Sign Pacts

CHICAGO, July 15 — John L. Lewis came to Chicago this week-end, to place the full weight of the CIO behind the packinghouse workers in their demand for collective bargaining with the "Big Four" meat packers. After attending the National Policy convention of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee, he was scheduled to address a monster mass meeting in the Coliseum Sunday evening.

Delegates from the 94 local unions of the PWOC throughout the country attended the convention, representing a union membership which has recently grown to the 78,000 mark out of some 129,000 employed nationally in the industry.

PUSH PACKINGHOUSE DRIVE: James Sampson, head of the Wilson local of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee (left) welcomes PWOC Director Henry Johnson to the microphone. Friday noon is CIO time at the Wilson plant, with speeches from the sound truck by union leaders. The PWOC National Policy Convention July 16 climaxed the drive to bring the meat packing industry under contract.

Calling of the PWOC national convention came as a climax to the two-year drive of the PWOC to organize the packinghouse workers employed by the "Big Four" packers, Armour, Swift, Wilson and Cudahy.

Recent sweeping gains by the union have brought it to the point where it is demanding a contract with Armour and Company, bellwether of the "Big Four." In 14 of the Armour plants, the PWOC is now certified by the Labor Board as sole bargaining agent, and with certification hearings going on in three other plants, the union is pressing for a signed agreement.

Principal demands include full recognition of the union, reduction of speedup, establishment of a proper seniority system, and elimination of health hazards, as well as an adjustment of wages.

The Chicago Hearst strikers and members of all other CIO unions in Chicago aided in the preparation of the Lewis mass meeting, and delegates were present from the steel mills, farm equipment plants and other industries which the CIO is organizing in the surrounding territory. Parades to the meeting from all parts of the city were arranged.

Gus Scholle, new CIO regional director, has brought together all CIO unions in the city to make joint preparations to follow up the Lewis meeting with a big campaign to organize the unorganized and make Chicago a CIO city.

CIO Pledges Support To Die Casters' Drive

WASHINGTON, July 15.—Full CIO assistance to the Natl. Die Casting Workers Assn., CIO affiliate, was pledged by Pres. John L. Lewis and the executive officers of the CIO in a campaign to organize some 20,000 unorganized workers now employed in the industry.

CIO help in the drive was announced here by John Brophy, national director, following the decision of the executive officers and of the CIO Board at its June meeting in Washington.

The Association already has made considerable progress in its field, according to George Peacock, president, and Edward Cheyfitz, secretary-treasurer, who will act as organization director during the drive.

10,000 UNDER CONTRACT

The industry is a comparatively new and rapidly expanding one, Cheyfitz explained, since it makes a new product of key importance to the automobile and other manufacturing industries. Employment has quadrupled in the depression years since 1929, and a minimum of 100,000 workers are expected to be employed within the next few years.

Close to 10,000 are already under contract in the Association, Cheyfitz said, mostly concentrated in the metropolitan area of New York and in Toledo, Syracuse, Batavia, N. Y., Pottstown, Pa., and Kansas City, Mo.

The main drive will be for a national contract and the use of the union label on all die castings, to drive out alley shops at present competing with organized plants.

Shipyard Union Selects Jersey for Convention

JERSEY CITY, N. J., July 15—Frank Hague's Jersey City is scheduled for a new experience on Sept. 8, when the CIO Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers holds its fifth annual convention here.

The convention will be the first held by a national union in this city, it is believed.

Official notice of the convention was sent today to all locals by Pres. John Green. The union has a large membership in the New York metropolitan area and has been carrying out organizing activities here for some time.

NEW CITY LAWS

Meanwhile, Hague, bowing to CIO demands, announced formulation of new libel city ordinances covering street meetings.

As the law now reads, street meetings may be held anywhere in the city, although a police permit will have to be secured 24 hours in advance. A previous draft of the ordinance would have limited meetings to four locations in the city and would have required four days' notice and a police permit.

What was interpreted as Hague's last defense of employers, who have been lured to the city by promises of an open shop haven, was a warning that meetings would have to stay at least 50 feet away from factory gates. But this point remains a matter of enforcement, as the ordinance itself does not include any such restriction.

My, How Times Do Change! Tory Lawyers Rap Court

San Francisco, July 15—The impossible has happened—Frank J. Hogan, head of the American Bar Association, was on record today as believing that the U. S. Supreme Court will have to be roped in by Congress to prevent its using "arbitrary exercise of power" against the people.

Speaking at the annual session of corporation lawyers, Hogan could find praise only for Justices McReynolds and Butler, the last two remnants of the extreme Old Guard on the high court. The only contribution of Roosevelt-appointed Justices Reed, Black, "procession of precedents to the graveyard," despite the Two Old "procession of precedents to the graveyard," despite tre Two Old Men's "courageous efforts to preserve landmark after landmark of the law."

As a result of the changed attitude of the court, the Bar Association head claimed that the Supreme Court no longer preserves constitutional liberties.

The Association was the most persistent lobbyist against the Roosevelt court plan two years ago, maintaining that while the Tory clique was in control, the court could do no wrong.

Congress Must Undo This Wrong

In all the demonstrations against the slashing of the prevailing wage rate on WPA jobs, it should not be forgotten that there are other provisions of the bill passed by Congress that are fully as pernicious and affect far more people.

These are the laying off of one million WPA workers which is decreed for the coming year; the reduction of the monthly security wages; and the provision for a starvation layoff for any WPA worker on the rolls 18 months or more.

The CIO fought the whole of this hunger and misery program at every stage of its passage through Congress — while national AFL leaders were asleep at the switch or even condoned it.

Now that labor and the unemployed everywhere are beginning to feel the full impact of the crime which Congress has committed against them, the CIO calls for every effort to be concentrated on impressing Congress with the necessity of undoing the wrong that has been done.

Senator Murray and 21 other Senators have sponsored an amendment, S-2765, now before the Senate, not only to restore the prevailing wage rate for skilled workers, but also to prevent reduction of the monthly security wages for all WPA workers.

The CIO supports this amendment 100%. It calls not only on labor, but on all men and women of good will and humane instincts, to urge on their representatives in Congress the immediate passage of S-2765.

The CIO and the Farmers

The sons and daughters, the brothers and sisters of the farmers of the middle west are among the workers in the meat packing plants, the steel mills, the farm implement and other factories of all kinds which the CIO is organizing throughout this area.

Even where blood relationship is not involved, there are economic ties of common interest which should bind together the toilers of factory and countryside. The prosperity of each group is dependent on the prosperity of the other. And both labor and farmers must work together if they are to win the legislative relief they seek, as well as a fair return for their toil.

Yet financial and industrial interests which exploit both groups in different ways, will stop at little in their efforts to drive a wedge of propaganda and hostility between the two, to prevent their presenting a common front for their common interests.

That is why John L. Lewis, when he came to Chicago to aid the CIO organizing campaigns in middle western industries, brought with him also a message of goodwill and cooperation for the farming population.

"The CIO does not believe there can be any balanced and permanent prosperity until farmers as well as industrial workers receive their fair share of the national income," he said.

The CIO leader pointed out that "the purchasing power of fairly paid workers is necessary to provide an adequate market for farm products". And labor recognizes, he said, that "an impoverished farm population is a constant menace to its own conditions as well as to the nation's prosperity."

Relating the CIO's official stand in support of legislation desired by the farmers and of all measures that will aid in improving their conditions, Lewis declared:

"The CIO is ready at all times to go more than half way to cooperate with the farmers and their organizations in winning their just demands for an adequate income and remedial legislation."

Editor of Coal Union Paper Dies

Wilkes-Barre, July 15—Llewellyn P. Richards, editor of the "Anthracite Tri-District News," UMWA publication of the anthracite region, was buried this week, after a colorful life in the labor field was cut short Friday afternoon.

Mr. Richards was one of the most informed men on the history of the UMWA in Pennsylvania and was the friend of outstanding labor leaders. Many labor officials attended the funeral.

The Round-Up

Looking Ahead

By LEN DE CAUX

The Middle West Goes CIO

The CIO has never been afraid to tackle the big fellows.

AFL craft unionism was a product of the small-scale industry of an earlier day. Its basis is still in industries and service trades where the smaller shop prevails.

So far as the great modern mass-production industries are concerned, the AFL never did more than to touch their fringe.

The CIO, on the contrary, has concentrated on the biggest corporations in the biggest industries.

U. S. Steel, General Motors, Chrysler, General Electric, Westinghouse, Goodyear, Goodrich and Firestone—these and dozens of others of the world's greatest corporations have been unionized by the CIO for the first time.

In every important industrial center, as a result, the basic industries are CIO, or fast on the way to becoming so.

In the Pittsburgh area, for instance, it's steel, coal mining, electrical and glass manufacturing—all CIO.

In Akron it's rubber — CIO without challenge.

In Detroit, the automobile industry is the stronghold of the CIO.

And now comes Chicago!

The CIO in Chicago

Chicago, the metropolis of the middle west, is also the gateway to the rich farming and industrial areas of the central states.

Here cattle, sheep and hogs are sent to the world's biggest stockyards and packing plants. Here farm implements and machinery of every kind are manufactured, as well as most of the other mass-production factory goods that are in demand through the midle west. And here in huge mills steel is made, the basic fabric of the transportation and manufacturiing industries.

In the old AFL days, Chicago used to be considered a comparatively well unionized city. At a meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor you would find building and printing trades, barbers and restaurant workers, musicians and theatrical employes and various other skilled crafts and service trades.

But when you left the cozy meeting and traveled around the city—to the great farm implement, electrical and other factories of the west and southwest sides; to the stockyards, packinghouses and steel mills of the south side—you found that union organization was an unknown quantity in all the city's basic industries.

Today, however, the CIO has come to all these basic industries for which Chicago is famous, to do the job which the AFL so miserably failed to perform.

Chicago is fast becoming a CIO city, in the same sense that Detroit, Akron, Pittsburgh are basically CIO.

Ready for the Big Four

John L. Lewis came to Chicago for the national policy convention of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee and for the great Coliseum mass meeting which followed, to throw the whole weight of the CIO behind the culminating stages of one of the most successful CIO organizing drives.

The meat packing industry, of which Chicago is the world capital, has in the past year or so become substantially organized in the CIO packinghouse union.

Some 78,000 out of 129,000 workers employed nationally in the industry have been brought into the union ranks. Scores of union contracts have been won with independent packers. Elections have gone overwhelmingly for the PWOC wherever they have been held.

And now the CIO union is closing in on the mammoth corporations of the industry, the Big Four packers, Armour, Wilson, Cudahy and Swift.

Having established itself by organization, elections and certification as the representative of the great majority of Armour's employes throughout the country, the PWOC has for months been trying to persuade the company to obey the law and negotiate a national collective bargaining agreement.

Lewis came to Chicago to join with the PWOC in serving notice on Armour and the rest of the Big Four that their employes are now organized and will not much longer be denied the collective bargaining rights to which the law entitles them.

The Gateway Opens

Chicago is the gateway to the middle west. There are a dozen other great packinghouse centers throughout this area, besides Chicago.

In all of them the CIO union is well established. When the Big Four packers fall in line with unionism, as sooner or later they must, a dozen other cities will also be CIO in their basic industry.

The same goes for the farm equipment industry. Chicago has its huge International Harvester plants. But other cities through the middle west also have their big farm implement plants. And the CIO farm equipment union is on the march in all of them.

AFL Hotel Union, Liberals Defend Act at Hearing

WASHINGTON, July 15. — The 14th week of hearings on proposed amendments to the Wagner Act brought an AFL attorney, three clergymen, an economist, and a consumers' leader before Senate and House Labor Committees to argue against changes in the act put forward by AFL top officials and other employer interests.

The AFL attorney, Louis Boudin, appeared for the Hotel and Restaurant Alliance, one of the largest AFL affiliates, which went on record at its last convention against all amendments. Boudin pointed out the dangers in the Green-Walsh amendments on collusive contracts, citing the Consolidated Edison and Zirkin cases as evidence.

DENIAL ATTEMPTED

An AFL headquarters attorney attempted to deny the anti-amendment stand of the hotel workers, though the convention clearly states that the delegates went on record against all changes.

Monsignor John A. Ryan of the Natl. Catholic Welfare Council, appearing for the American Assn. for Economic Freedom, cited the previous stand taken by his group and told the Senate Committee:

"Let no one doubt that if the Wagner Act is left unchanged, and is administered with firmness and justice until all employers are willing or are compelled to accept and abide by its provisions, the primary cause of industrial unrest and controversy will have been removed."

MINISTERS FOR ACT

Two ministers, the Rev. Wm. B. Spofford of the Church League for Industrial Democracy and the Rev. Knox of the Civil Rights Federation added their testimony to the weight of evidence against changes in the act. Senator Rush Dew Holt, junior statesman from West Virginia and honorary president of the Natl. Ping-Pong Assn., tried everything from red-baiting to arguments about the sit-down to shake their testimony, but failed.

Pouncing on Knox's statement that AFL workers did not want the AFL leader-backed amendments, Holt asked with intended sarcasm: "Then the AFL is not speaking for its members?" and Knox replied: "That is true."

Mary Dublin, general secretary of the Natl. Consumers League, appeared before the House Labor Committee with the consumers' point of view on the act. Her organization, she explained, was founded 50 years ago to promote fair labor standards in industry, for the welfare of workers, consumers and general public.

Figures Show CIO, AFL Gain In Board Polls

Washington, July 15—Latest figures on Natl. Labor Relations Board elections for collective bargaining show the CIO out in front, in number of victories won, number of workers involved and number of elections in which CIO unions ran.

Of a total of 25 elections in the month of June, CIO took part in 17, won 13. Six of these were contests between AFL and CIO affiliates, of which CIO won four. AFL unions took part in 16 elections, won eight.

Consumers Urged To Help Defense Of Wagner Act

NEW YORK, July 15.—More than 85,000 organized consumers, represented by Consumers Union, were urged in an article by their general counsel to oppose all amendments to the Wagner Act as a protection of labor's rights and a means of increasing consumer incomes throughout the nation.

The article, written by A. J. Isserman and appearing in the current Consumers Union Reports, official CU organ, describes the functions of the act, analyzes the proposed amendments, declares that the forces seeking amendments are those opposed to the whole principle of collective bargaining.

"Their case is a poor one," Isserman writes. "Behind their pseudo-patriotic shouting, behind their charges of inequality, unfairness or bias in the administration of the act, the facts are against them.

PURPOSE OF AMENDMENTS

"Careful analysis shows that the amendments are designed: (a) to cripple the work of the Board; (b) to destroy the right of self-organization by giving employers and supervisory officials the right to choose the unions for their employes and by taking away from the Board the right to set aside contracts executed in violation of the present act; and (c) to throw the administration of the law into the lower Federal courts, which have already shown antipathy to it."

The article concludes by urging all CU members to support the act and oppose amendments "as consumers and wage-earners and in a larger sense as citizens interested in industrial peace and America's well-being."

119 California AFL Unions Knock Green

SAN FRANCISCO, July 15. — One hundred and nineteen California AFL unions are on record against all amendments to the Wagner Act, according to the latest revised list just released by the California Committee to Save the Wagner Act. They represent more than 210,000 workers.

In addition, the committee announced that 82 branches of the California Young Democratic Clubs, the Democratic County Central Committee of Los Angeles, the 24th St. Boosters and the North Beach Promotion Club of San Francisco are also on record against meddling with the act.

ALL TYPES

All kind of unions are represented in the 119 AFL locals, ranging from hod carriers to diamond setters, from bridge and iron workers to teachers. Hollywood is well represented with screen writers, cartoonists, directors, publicists, readers, set designers.

The committee, headed by George Creel, reports constantly increasing support for its work in rousing the public to the dangers contained in the proposed amendments, including those sponsored by top leaders of the AFL, to the act and to labor.

'Largest Telegram' Raps AFL Amendments

Washington, July 15—The world's largest telegram, signed by 13,000 individuals and 162 organizations, was delivered at the White House and the Capitol today, protesting proposed amendments to the Wagner Act and urging the President and Congress to do all in their power to defeat them.

The telegram, circulated by the American League for Peace and Democracy, asked President Roosevelt and Congress to defeat the Walsh amendments, backed by top AFL leaders, "and the numerous other amendments which would weaken or destroy the effectiveness of this law."

"The Wagner Labor Relations Act has, to a large extent, compelled adherence to the basic liberties guaranteed in the constitution of the U. S. and has been of inestimable benefit to the American people as a whole," the message said.

Included in the 149 organizations endorcing the gigantic wire were 47 from the AFL, 27 from the CIO, and over 50 from fraternal church, civic and other progressive groups.

TWO REINSTATED

San Francisco — Western Union was ordered to reinstate two messengers and an operator fired for union activity, by the Natl. Labor Relations Board office here.

Civil Liberties Better Observed, Harder Hit

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

Washington, July 15.—The American people, irritated by a growing din of anti-democratic propaganda both at home and abroad, have become increasingly aware of the importance of preserving and strengthening basic liberties, the American Civil Liberties Union declared today in its annual report.

Entitled "The Bill of Rights—150 Years After," the report found both government and private organizations of citizens paying more attention to constitutional guarantees of freedom than for many years past.

CITE HAGUE CASE

Significant among developments during the 12 months ending June 1, the ACLU declared, were the U. S. Supreme Court decision in the Hague case and the creation of a Civil Liberties unit in the Department of Justice by Atty. Gen. Frank Murphy.

"On the whole, the record of the courts, both federal and state, throughout the country showed a more favorable interpretation of civil rights," the report stated.

". . . mob violence dropped to a new low with only one major instance reported through the year, and two or three slight skirmishes. While lynchings of Negroes increased from eight to twelve, the record is low compared with previous years. Troops were called out in strikes in only two states, Iowa and Kentucky, another new low.

"Censorship of movies, radio, the theatre and literature also declined," the Civil Liberties Union found.

THE OTHER SIDE

That is the rosy side of the picture. The other side—

"Against these favorable advances, there developed during the year a more intense anti-democratic propaganda, whose effect, if successful, inevitably will result in sweeping denials of civil liberties.

"This propaganda, aimed allegedly at Communism and in part against Jews, is in fact directed generally against progressive movements, the New Deal and the CIO.

ATTACK DIES GROUP

"Its chief mouthpiece became the Special House Committee on Un-American Activities headed by Rep. Martin Dies of Texas. The committee's exposure of alleged Communism doubtless had considerable effect on the November, 1938, elections in several states against candidates favorable to labor's civil rights."

Atmosphere for the denial of civil rights is created by the activities of "self-styled patriotic organizations," the report charged.

"Generally speaking, in the field of professional patriotic activity there is an unofficial alliance through community of interest between the military organizations, the followers of Father Coughlin and the German-American Bund. They are aided and abetted by numerous smaller organizations, many of which are obviously rackets for the benefit of their promoters."

STATE LEGISLATION

The "conservative political tendency" which nurtures anti-progressive propaganda was reflected not only in the elections but in sessions of state legislatures, where not a single bill extending civil liberties was passed, though five states adopted measures to curtail union activities and numerous cities and states moved to restrict picketing.

The ACLU has vigorously opposed amendments to the Wagner Act, the report said, pointing out that protective machinery set up under the statute has resulted in a drop in the number of strikes and a consequent reduction in violations of civil rights in industrial struggles.

In the courts, the civil liberties group noted but one major setback to labor—the $700,000 Sherman Act damage award in the Apex Hosiery case.

"The implications of the decision, if sustained, would be far-reaching in nullifying the recent advances in law protecting labor's rights to organize and strike."

Pressure Mounts Against Movie Attack on Union Leaders

HOLLYWOOD, Calif., July 15—Unless popular pressure changes its plans, Paramount Pictures will soon release a feature film which is described by observers here as a direct attack on labor.

The picture, "Our Leading Citizen," is called "the most vicious anti-labor script that has ever been turned out in Hollywood," by John R. Chaplin, correspondent here for the Federated Press, labor news service.

Two leading liberals in the film colony have charged that the picture, if released, will be a direct attack on Harry Bridges, West Coast CIO director.

The Hollywood Tribune, new progressive movie paper, reports that the film caricatures a labor leader in typical Hearst fashion —"an agitator" carrying "a bomb in one hand, the word comrade in his throat and dynamite hidden behind his Bolshevik black beard. He goes in for violence, shooting, provocation, demagoguery and a conspiratorial alliance with the hired-thug strikebreakers."

Says Associated Film Audiences:

"Mr. Arthur's (producer of the film) error may be due to lack of knowledge, but the American public should make clear to him that attacks on the labor movement are an aid to fascism and an insult to our democracy."

Sign CIO Pacts, Meat Packers Told

Lewis spoke enthusiastically about the PWOC progress, saying that it "ranks with the greatest triumphs of industrial organization in the steel, automobile, rubber and other previously unorganized mass production industries.

"For decades the packinghouse workers, because of their unorganized condition, have been in thrall to giant corporations which have been a law unto themselves," he said."The biggest of these corporations still set themselves above the law of the United States, in denying to their employes their collective bargaining rights. But now the success of CIO organization gives warning that the end of this autocracy is in sight."

WARNS ARMOUR

Noting the refusal of Armour and Company to negotiate, despite repeated requests from the PWOC since it established itself as the representative of the company's employes, Lewis declared:

"But labor's patience is not without limits. The organized packinghouse workers of the nation are now serving notice on Armour and Co. that their patience is nearing an end, and that if the company continues to refuse collective bargaining, it must accept the consequences of its own action."

CHEERS GUILD STRIKERS

Turning to the general labor scene in Chicago, Lewis warmly congratulated the workers for building strong CIO unions in steel, farm equipment, clothing and other industries. He paid special tribute to the loyalty and courage of striking Newspaper Guild workers on the two Hearst papers, now in the seventh month of their struggle for union rights.

"The Hearst management is mistaken if it thinks it can reverse the trend of the times and deny to its editorial and office employes the union rights which it has long accorded to its mechanical employes," he said.

Lewis commended the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee as "one of the most active and growing unions of the CIO." He noted the progress of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in winning 595 union contracts covering more than half a million workers. "The time will not be long," he said, "before four more are added to this imposing list — namely, the Bethlehem, Republic, Inland and Youngstown companies."

Lewis praised the record of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers in Chicago as one of decades of "100 per cent union organization and responsible and peaceful collective bargaining which has benefitted the industry as much as it has benefitted the workers." He said he hoped soon to see a CIO Industrial Union Council established in Chicago.

SPEAKS TO FARMERS

Bringing a message of good will and cooperation to the farmers of the middle west on behalf of the CIO, Lewis declared: "The CIO does not believe that there can be any balanced and permanent prosperity until farmers as well as industrial workers receive their fair share of the national income.

"That is why the CIO is ready at all times to go more than half way to cooperate with the farmers and their organizations in winning their just demands for an adequate income and remedial legislation.

"If labor and the farmers combine for the promotion of their mutual legislative interests, and if each group shows sympathy and understanding of the other's legitimate aspirations, there is no force that can prevent our onward march to better conditions for both groups, and greater prosperity for our whole economy as a result."

LASHES WPA BILL

Describing unemployment as "the gravest problem confronting our country today," Lewis lashed out at the "miserable failure" of Congress to meet this problem. He denounced the failure of the Democratic Party to live up to its 1936 platform, saying that it "must share responsibility with the Tory Republicans for a measure which will deprive a million unemployed of WPA jobs, besides reducing the already meager WPA wage."

"The CIO has fought throughout, not only in defense of the WPA program, but also for a far more adequate acceptance by government of its responsibility to provide socially useful work at decent wages for all who need it," he said.

"We are now supporting amendments to restore the prevailing rate and prevent cuts in the monthly security wages."

Ask Probe Of Armour Arsenals

Chicago, July 15—Federal investigation of anti-labor arsenals being collected by Armour & Co. to use against the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee was asked by Don Harris, PWOC director, in a wire to Attorney General Frank Murphy.

Harris wired Murphy that he could "produce witnesses to testify before a duly constituted authority that Armour & Co. has fortified its Chicago plant, has built and stored over 100 street barricades and is increasing its armed police force, which even now constitute a private anti-labor army."

ASKS LAW AND ORDER

Harris also asked Murphy to employ the newly created Civil Liberties Division of the Justice Department to help in maintaining law and order in the Armour plant, pointing out that "78,000 organized packinghouse workers will be heartened by the assurance that your office will protect civil rights and, if you feel it necessary, investigate the preparations for violence by Armour & Co."

CIO Director John Brophy was here and addressed the delegates on new tactics of anti-labor employers. They are turning more and more from the old methods of wage-cuts, lockouts, corruption of politicians to the new method of labor spies and traitors, he said.

Among resolutions passed are the following:

Asking for an embargo against the three fascist aggressor nations —Nazi Germany, Italy and Japan;

Backing up the Roosevelt foreign policy and asking nationalization of the munitions industry;

Ousting of certain persons in high army and navy circles who are deemed not in sympathy with the President's program;

Condemning religious and racial bigotry; and

News Guild, Smashing Opposition, Prepares For Convention

By CLYDE BEALS

NEW YORK, July 15.—With many evidences that the union has broken through the organized opposition of publishers and is in a favorable position for another good year, the American Newspaper Guild is facing toward its sixth annual convention.

The gathering, with Pres. Heywood Broun wielding the gavel, will be held in San Francisco from July 31 to August 4, with Aug. 5 as Guild day at the San Francisco World's Fair. Governor Olsen, Tom Mooney, Harry Bridges and President Jack Shelley of the AFL Central Labor Council, are expected as speakers.

Chief evidence of the union's solid position was the doubling and possible tripling during the year of the number of members under contract protection, which is announced in the bargaining report prepared for the convention. The number of contracts jumped to 111, covering 140 shops —mostly big city papers—as against 77 contracts a year ago and 37 in 1936, while most of the contracts protected many more members than before because of the large proportion of new agreements and renewals which cover the Guild's entire jurisdiction.

The Guild enrolled only editorial workers until 1937, when it joined the CIO and broadened its base to include all newspaper workers not eligible for the AFL's mechanical unions.

49 GUILD SHOPS

The organized opposition was publicly proclaimed at that time by the American Newspaper Publishers Association. During the past year, however, an increasing number of papers recognized the Guild for its full jurisdiction without challenge, and the first of the major chain papers, the Hearst Sentinel in Milwaukee, has just acceded in part to the demand for a Guild or union shop.

The Guild has Guild shops in 49 plants, including the New York Daily News, the country's largest paper, and the Stern papers in Philadelphia and Camden, N. J.

The year's gains were made in large part during the course of the union's greatest strike, that now in progress on the two Hearst papers in Chicago.

CIO Backs Amendments To WPA Bill

"The CIO fougght for a decent program for the unemployed in the form of the bills introduced by Sen. Murray and Rep. Casey. The AFL national leadership on the other hand either lifted not a finger or the WPA or actively engaged in attempts to cripple it. . . ." during the Congressional fight last month.

"The CIO is urging its affiliates to center their fight on behalf of the WPA workers on the passage of these amendments to the WPA bill. That is the only way these wrongs can be righted. Congress must not adjourn until it has righted the "wrongs for which it is responsible."

RECEIVED SUPPORT

Most of the demonstrations were conducted by members of the AFL building trades unions and in most localities received support from CIO locals and city bodies. In Toledo, Ohio, executive boards of the CIO and AFL councils held joint meetings to discuss the WPA problem until Francis Dillon, representative of William Green, warned the Central Labor Union that continuance of the procedure would lead to revocation of its charter.

Says Green Gave OK to WPA Bill

Washington, July 15. — Rep. Clifton Woodrum, sponsor of the WPA slash bill, declared that he and AFL Pres. Green conferred for several hours while the bill was being drafted and made no mention of prevailing wage rates, according to Federated Press, labor news service.

The July issue of the Federationist, AFL official organ, contains an editorial by Green which describes the relief proposal before Congress at the time the article was written as a "step in the direction of a well-considered relief program."

Demands Armour Co. Sign Union Contract

CHICAGO, July 16—Following are excerpts from a speech delivered by CIO President John L. Lewis at a mass meeting in the Coliseum here today:

Today I attended a great convention of packinghouse workers in this city. The delegates came from every center of the industry throughout the country. They represented a host of workers who have been organized for the first time, thanks to the CIO, into a powerful union which can speak with authority for labor in the packinghouse industry.

This achievement of the CIO ranks with the greatest triumphs of industrial organization in the steel, automobile, rubber and other previously unorganized mass-production industries.

For decades the packinghouse workers, because of their unorganized conditions, have been in thrall to giant corporations which have been a law unto themselves. The biggest of these corporations still set themselves above the law of the United States, in denying to their employes the collective bargaining rights. But now the success of CIO organization, to which today's convention testified, gives warning that the end of this autocracy is in sight.

UNION HAS MAJORITY

The Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee, with a majority of the workers in its ranks, has prevented wage-cutting in the industry and has been responsible for improving conditions in every plant. It has won union agreements with some 40 independent packers, and now it is ready to bring the "Big Four" into line. It has been certified as the workers' collective bargaining representative in most of the plants of Armour & Co., as well as in establishments of Swift, Wilson and Cudahy throughout the entire country. Wherever elections have been held, the workers have voted by overwhelming majorities to be represented by the packinghouse union of the CIO.

When the union's sweeping election victory in Armour's biggest plant, in Chicago, capped its organizing successes in the company's other plants, the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee followed the orderly procedure prescribed by the law by approaching Armour & Co. for the negotiation of a collective bargaining agreement.

PATIENCE NEARING END

The packinghouse workers' union has since exercised the greatest patience in repeatedly and over a long period requesting that Armour & Co. sit down in peaceable and friendly fashion to bargain collectively with its employes. But, Armour & Co. has continued to play the autocrat and to refuse to negotiate a national agreement with the chosen spokesmen of its workers.

Labor's patience is not without limits, however. Nor, I am convinced, will the American people generally continue to tolerate a condition of industrial serfdom in this industry, when their representatives in Congress have decreed through the National Labor Relations Act that democratic rights must be accorded to American workers.

The organized packinghouse workers of the nation are now serving notice on Armour & Co. that their patience is nearing an end, and that if the company continues to refuse collective bargaining, it must acept the consequences of its own action.

The Packinghouse Workers have at all times followed the orderly procedure prescribed by the National Labor Relations Act. They have taken, and they plan to take, no action which is not fully in accord with the law. All they ask is that the packing corporations be similarly law-abiding and negotiate with them in good faith, as required by the law.

Justifies CIO

The success of the organizing activities of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee is a shining example of the validity and virtue of the CIO program of industrial organization.

The CIO has succeeded, where the American Federation of Labor failed miserably, because it has followed a program of organization which is adapted to the needs of the workers in modern mass-production industries; and because it has mobilized behind newly organized workers the full power and prestige of its established unions.

The meat packing industry, like most of other modern industries, remained unorganized as long as it did, because of the inertia and incompetence of the AFL leaders. But now the packinghouse workers, thanks to the CIO, have a great industrial union of their own, to which all the workers may belong with equal rights, and which is capable of mobilizing their collective bargaining power to match the power of the biggest corporations.

PLEDGES CIO SUPPORT

As a result of the modern and progressive policies which it follows, the CIO has brought four million workers into the ranks of organized labor. And I am here to pledge the full support of this great movement to the packinghouse workers in any struggles into which they may be forced by the intransigeance of the big corporations.

With the knowledge that its cause is just and reasonable, with the majority of the workers now in one industrial union, and with the full weight of the CIO behind it, the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee is assured of success in establishing the collective bargaining rights of the workers which have been so long denied.

Farm Equipment

This meeting is evidence, if further evidence be needed, that the CIO has come to Chicago to stay. It has not come from the outside, but has grown from the desires and aspirations of the workers employed in the great industries of this metropolis.

Not only is the CIO firmly established in your stockyards and packing plants, but it is also bringing new hope to tens of thousands of workers in the steel mills, in the farm implement factories and in a dozen other industries for which Chicago is famous.

The Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee is one of the most active and growing unions of the CIO. In the gigantic plants of International Harvester and other corporations, the workers look to it as their champion. It is exposing the sham of company unionism which has kept the workers impotent to defend their rights, and its progress is assurance that here too the workers will soon enjoy the benefits of genuine collective bargaining.

In the steel industry, Chicago has seen the lengths to which industrial despots will go in their fight against labor unionism. The horror of the Memorial Day massacre in South Chicago is still fresh in all of our memories. But the cause for which those strikers died has not been stopped by the bullets which laid them low. It has gone marching on, until even Girdler and his associates can now see the determination of the thousands who have joined the union to take the places of the martyred dead.

Little Steel

Little Steel is sooner or later going to have to do what Big Steel has done. It is going to have to obey the law and bargain collectively with the Steel Workers Organizing Committee. And this is going to happen sooner rather than later, because the employes of Little Steel are law-abiding citizens, who consider that their employers should also abide by the law; and because their union has been growing in strength and in the power to insist on its collective bargaining rights.

Already the CIO steel union has 595 union contracts covering more than half a million workers, and the time will not be long before four more are added to this imposing list — namely, the Bethlehem, Republic, Inland and Youngstown companies.

LAUDS ACWA

For the benefit of those who are so timorous as to fear what labor may do with its new-found power, let me call attention to the record of another outstanding CIO union in Chicago, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. It has a record of decades of 100% union organization and responsible and peaceful collective bargaining, which has benefitted the industry as much as it has benefitted the workers.

This meeting is testimony to the cooperative activities of all the CIO unions in the Chicago area. We hope soon to see an Industrial Union Council established, which will aid in further coordinating the work of the CIO unions and become the authorized spokesman in civic affairs of the great majority of Chicago's workers. The CIO is on the march here, as elsewhere, and the prospects are bright for future progress.

I want to pay a tribute to the loyal union newspapermen and women who are standing fast in their long struggle for collective bargaining with the Chicago Hearst papers.

I can remember that it used to be said that editorial workers would be among the last to join the union ranks. They were supposed to be too individualistic, too professional in attitude, to make common cause with manual workers for their economic advancement. But the last few years have shown that this insulting estimate of their intelligence was only a myth, carefully nurtured by anti-union publishers for their own purposes.

Instead of being the last to join the union ranks, the newspaper men and women have been pioneers and leaders in the wave of union organization that has swept the country since the CIO was formed. They have shown fully as much capacity for collective action as have any other workers organized by the CIO. And the present Hearst strike gives convincing evidence of their courage, initiative, self-discipline and enduring qualities of union loyalty.

As a result, the American Newspaper Guild is now firmly planted in the newspaper offices of nearly all the great dailies. It has overcome every kind of resistance and won collective bargaining agreements which have greatly improved the conditions of newspaper work.

HEARST MUST BOW

The Hearst management is mistaken if it thinks it can reverse this trend of the times and deny to its editorial and office employes the union rights which it has long acorded to its mechanical employes. If it wishes to re-establish itself in public esteem, to revive the dwindling circulation of its Chicago papers and to operate a profitable instead of a losing business, it will have to quit trying to smash the Guild and agree to bargain with it in good faith.

Needless to say, the CIO is 100% behind the Newspaper Guild in this fight, and our growing movement in Chicago will not rest until collective bargaining is established in the newspaper offices as well as in the great industrial plants of this city.

In organizing the industrial workers, the CIO is not unmindful of the interests of the farming population. Yet we know that every effort will be made by profiteers who exploit both farmers and workers, to drive a wedge between these two groups of producers who have everything to gain and nothing to lose from cooperation and united action.

The CIO does not believe that there can be any balanced and permanent prosperity until farmers as well as industrial workers receive their fair share of the national income.

In seeking to win decent wages for the workers, the CIO is making its contribution to a better income for the farmers. For the purchasing power of fairly paid workers is necessary to provide an adequate market for farm products; and labor on its side recognizes that an impoverished farm population is a constant menace to its own conditions as well as to the nation's prosperity.

READY TO COOPERATE

That is why the CIO is ready at all times to go more than half way to cooperate with the farmers and their organizations in winning their just demands for an adequate income and remedial legislation.

Unemployment

Unemployment is the gravest problem confronting our country today. No section of our population can consider itself secure so long as there are ten or eleven million unemployed, outcasts through no fault of their won, who are denied their right to contribute their labor to the nation's prosperity and to earn a decent living in return.

To provide work for these millions at a wage which will hold up buying power, is a problem which calls for immediate and drastic action. But the present Congress has failed miserably to meet this problem. Not only has it taken no constructive steps to put the unemployed back to work, but on the contrary it has concentrated on cutting the vitals out of the WPA program.

The WPA bill recently passed by Congress is a direct repudiation of the pledges made by the Democratic party in its 1936 platform, when much was said about the government's obligation to provide work at decent wages for those for whom private industry makes no provision. The majority party must share responsibility with the tory Republicans for a measure which will deprive a million unemployed of WPA jobs, besides reducing the already meager WPA wage.

CIO DEFENDED WPA

The CIO has fought throughout, not only in defense of the WPA program, but also for a far more adequate acceptance by government of its responsibility to provide socially useful work at decent wages for all who need it.

The CIO led the fight for a decent WPA program in this last Congress. Many of the AFL affiliates followed this leadership. The national officials of the American Federation of Labor made no moves which would be construed as a fight on behalf of WPA workers.

BACKS AMENDMENTS

We are now supporting amendments to restore the prevailing rate and prevent cuts in the monthly security wages. Our officials were the first alive to the new opportunity to get the reactionary wage provisions of the WPA bill substantially changed. The CIO will, as it has in past struggles, lead in the drive to stop WPA wage slashes.

In the coming political campaigns, we shall want to know from any party or candidate who seeks labor support, just what program they will advance to give the people work;

WASHINGTON, July 15.—Fighting provoked by Gov. A. B. ("Happy") Chandler in Harlan Co., Ky., in which one miner was killed by Guardsmen and many wounded and arrested, today drew a stinging letter from United Mine Workers and CIO President John L. Lewis to Attorney-General Murphy. He described Chandler as "a politically disappointed and angry Governor," and demanded Federal action to stop the shooting and jailing of miners.

Harlan miners have been keeping the pits closed since the refusal of Association operators to sign the UMW contract. A handful of scabs, protected by Natl. Guard bayonets, has brought up less than a trickle of coal during the stoppage. Attempts of a scab to run a coal car at high speed through a picket line caused the most recent shooting.

Pres. Lewis' letter to the Attorney-General, which pointed out that present laws are ample machinery for Federal action, follows in full:

LETTER IN FULL

"In Kentucky, Happy Chandler has young men in military uniforms shooting coal miners. He is also filling the jails with other miners that he has not shot. The mine workers are citizens of the United States and members of the United Mine Workers of America.

TWO MOTIVES

"Chandler has two reasons for thus violating his oath and prostituting the power of his state:

"(a) To repay a political debt to a criminal band of coal operators, whose previous crimes are spread on the sworn public records of three authoritative Governmental agencies.

"(b) To exact vengeance upon the United Mine Workers of America and its members in Kentucky, for supporting Barkley and opposing Chandler in the senatorial election last year.

"In this election, Chandler was defeated and Senator Barkley re-elected. The Mine Workers opposed Chandler and supported Barkley. They did so with unanimity and enthusiasm, at the request of Frankin Delano Roosevelt. They are now being shot, harried and incarcerated by Happy Chandler. He pursues and wounds them with the same ferocity and lack of restraint that characterize the habits of a Dominican dictator.

LAW IS VIOLATED

I submit, Sir, that the law is being violated by this politically disappointed and angry Governor. In the name of all the mine workers of this nation and millions of other citizens, I inquire whether you will move to abate this intolerable situation.

"You have statutes under which you can proceed. You have facilities at your disposal. In addition, the President can act if he is so disposed. The Republic has vested him with ample powers to protect the lives and liberties of its citizens. Kentucky and Harlan County, after all, are within the United States.

"Will you be good enough to inform me whether the Government will act?"

Ask Probe Of Union Man's Death

Chicago, July 15.—Eric Hessler, financial secretary of Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee Local 105, died in Cook County Hospital this week, as union leaders demanded city and federal probes of suspected anti-union foul play.

Hessler disappeared after leaving an FEWOC meeting the night before he was to testify at a Labor Board hearing against Intl. Harvester Co. He was discovered in the hospital a week later suffering from a skull fracture which doctors said was caused by a blow from a blunt instrument.

WIRE TO MURPHY

Immediately after Hessler's death, FEWOC officials wired U. S. Atty.-Gen. Frank Murphy asking for a complete investigation of the circumstances surrounding the case. Previously Alderman W. A. Rowan, head of the City Council's labor committee, asked that Police Commissioner Allman launch a similar probe.

Joseph Weber, assistant director of FEWOC, declared that nothing he had learned about the case had shaken his theory that Hessler "met with foul play because of his union activities."

See Pact Near As Strike Shuts 12 GM Plants

DETROIT, July 14. — General Motors Corp., apparently convinced at last that the CIO United Automobile Workers is the only union representing its employes, gave indications today of reaching an agreement for several thousand tool and die makers, engineering and maintenance workers.

Closing of a dozen tool and die shops, all of them working on 1940 models, gave evidence of the strength of the UAW-CIO and its determination to win a supplemental contract for the strikers.

Production workers were not affected by the strike, and Pres. R. J. Thomas urged them to withstand company efforts to divide the workers.

"If any production workers are kept from their jobs—it will be GM's actions," Thomas said. "GM has stalled on an agreement with the skilled men since October, 1938. If it really cared about the production workers, it would have sat down in the American way and negotiated an agreement long before the strike was declared."

MURRAY, KNUDSEN CONFER

CIO Vice-Pres. Philip Murray, who had previously sent a message to the union promising full support for the strike, met with Pres. William Knudsen of GM and James Dewey, U. S. conciliator. Further conferences between UAW leaders and other corporation executives are anticipated.

Fisher Body Plant 37 shut down when 250 men walked out as the management attempted to move dies out of the factory. The UAW-CIO tool and die council of Detroit pledged full support to the walkout. In some 40 Detroit jobbing shops, 1,500 UAW members refused to work on tools and dies for General Motors.

Only strike violence came in Pontiac, where the corporation mobilized thugs and imported strikebreakers for an attempted "back-to-work" movement. It failed. A thousand UAW pickets kept tight lines around GM property.

Republican Gov. Dickinson ordered a detachment of state police to the city, once a Black Legion stronghold. UAW men urged the governor to force the cops to end their "ruthless disregard" for rights of peaceful picketing.

RAP 'SECURITY PLAN'

Action of the corporation in terminating its so-called income security plan in factories affected by the strike were described as "a piece of petty vindictiveness" by Walter Reuther, head of the union's GM department. He pointed out that the plan never added a penny to the workers' income, and called the ending of the plan "an attempt to black-jack its workers into submission."

CIO Aims to Assist South, Students Hear

MONTEAGLE, Tenn., July 15.—"The CIO is determined that the South shall be freed from its shackles as a colony of Wall Street. The CIO is determined to make democracy work so that in the world of tomorrow, we shall have a greater south and a greater America."

This was the pledge given students at the Highlander Folk School here by President Sherman Dalrymple of the United Rubber Workers, whose union has been waging a campaign to improve working conditions in the southern states.

Anti-union employers are engaged in sowing seeds of distrust among southern workers in an effort to cut them off from their brothers in other parts of the country, the URW official declared.

'CREATE ILLUSION'

"They attempt to create in the minds of the southern people the illusion that industry in the south is owned by southerners, that southern land is owned by southerners and that southern labor is content to be exploited and under-paid for the sake of protecting the south," he asserted.

On the other hand, "absentee ownership, not having to live in the south, is perfectly willing to have southern people have poor schools, poor roads, poor health facilities, poor working conditions."

Other speakers included T. J. Smith of the United Mine Workers; Yelverton Cowherd, head of the Alabama Industrial Union Council, and Joe Dobbs, organizer for the Textile Workers Union of America.

STERLING, Ill., July 15.—Maybe you never saw a dream walking, but this town has seen a company stooge talking. And truthfully, too, admitting his occupation.

DESMOND: "I do."

RISSMAN: "What position?"

DESMOND: "I'm a stooge."

RISSMAN: "What?"

DESMOND: "Well, that's what they call me — a company stooge."

RISSMAN: "Well, what's a stooge?"

DESMOND: "A stooge is a guy that — say, I don't want to answer that. What would you call one?"

RISSMAN: "I know several definitions, but I am restrained by my position from helping you out."

AUTHORIZE STRIKE FOR ARMOUR PACT

CIO Opens Defense Of Labor Act

(See Stories Pages 3 and 5)

Washington, July 22.—Led by Vice-Pres. Philip Murray, a number of CIO leaders this week commenced to testify before the House Labor Committee on why the Wagner Act should not be amended.

Murray, appearing in his capacity as chairman of the powerful Steel Workers Organizing Committee, read into the record a fact-studded statement to indicate how the Act has promoted industrial peace in the nation's key industry.

He charged that the National Labor Relations Board has leaned toward AFL demands for craft unionism, predicting that passage of the Green amendments would lead to a break-up of industrial unionism in the mass-production industries and a consequent threat of turmoil in labor-capital relations.

Other CIO witnesses were Pres. John Green of the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, and Sec.-Treas. Victor Pasche of the American Newspaper Guild, both of whom warned of the dangers implicit in altering the Wagner Act at this time.

Meanwhile a dozen Labor's Non-Partisan League witnesses —most of them influential AFL union leaders — were telling a similar story to the Senate Committee on Education and Labor. All said that the Green amendment demands do not represent the feeling of the AFL rank-and-file.

Knoxville, Tenn., July 22. — Harlan County's coal operators, sole remaining holdout against the United Mine Workers contract demands, bowed to union strength today and signed a two-year agreement.

The new contract, under which several thousand locked-out miners will return to work, provides for elimination of the "strike penalty clause" — a basic UMW demand.

CHICAGO, July 22. — Armour & Co. is on the defensive in its battle to escape collective bargaining, Chairman Van A. Bittner of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee charged today.

His statement followed the appearance of large advertisements in the nation's leading newspapers, in which the giant meat packing firm attempted to justify its anti-union stand through several hundred words of evasion of PWOC demands for collective bargaining and a national contract.

Developments followed thick and fast after the PWOC's National Policy Convention in Chicago on July 16, when more than a thousand delegates authorized their leaders to declare a strike if necessary to win the agreement.

The convention was followed by the greatest labor mass meeting in Chicago history. Close to 16,000 workers heard CIO Pres. John L. Lewis warn that labor's patience with the big meat packers' stall tactics is almost at an end.

Rev. Bernard Sheil, auxiliary bishop of the Chicago diocese, delivered the opening prayer at the meeting and spoke words of encouragement to the packinghouse workers in their efforts to win decent working and living conditions.

Labor and the Law

By Lee Pressman

CIO General Counsel

For over two years the CIO has been sponsoring an amendment to the Walsh-Healey Act to prevent government contracts from going to firms that violate the National Labor Relations Act. Ever since the Wagner Act was passed in 1935, huge corporations such as Bethlehem and Republic Steel, Electric Boat, Douglas Aircraft and many others have been fattening on Federal Government orders, while openly flouting Federal law.

This has given these coroporations not only a subsidy for lawbreaking, but a distinctly unfair advantage in competing with firms that recognize the right of their workers to collective bargaining. It means that the Federal Government is putting a premium on wage-cutting, on violations of its own laws.

ACT ON BILL

Last week the Senate Committee on Labor and Education reported out an amendment that would put an end to this evil, by cutting off government subsidies to such firms. As reported by the committee, the bill had a provision that violations of the Wagner Act must be certified by the courts before government contracts would be withdrawn. Firms found in violation would be ineligible for more contracts for a period of three years.

This provision was satisfactory, though not what the CIO originally asked for. Fear of the courts upholding the Wagner Act would be sufficient for most corporations to force them into line.

Then in a burst of confused thinking the Senate adopted an amendment whereby any corporation found guilty of violating the Wagner Act and put on the ineligible list could be taken off the list again by the Secretary of Labor, if the secretary finds that the guilty corporation has permanently removed the basis for the court's judgment.

This is not so good, but even so the guilty corporation will have to show that it really intends to stop violating the Wagner Act, and what is more, will have to show that it is capable of obeying the law of the land.

A STEP FORWARD

The bill as voted by the Senate is a step in the right direction. It is a step toward forcing some of our biggest corporations to obey the law—which a large number of them have never before been forced to do. The CIO has fought for this measure for two years. Every trick in the reactionary bag has been used to prevent its passage, even in its present modified form. Now it has passed the Senate, and a beginning in law observance by wealthy corporations has been made.

The measure still has to be passed by the House. The same Rules Committee whose obstructive tactics kept the bill from a vote last year, will try to keep it bottled up for the few remaining days of this session.

Once again pressure from all CIO members and all friends of labor and fair dealing is needed. Wire, write, send petitions to your two Senators and to your Congressman, telling them that American labor demands passage of this bill.

The Wagner Act is part of Federal law. The Federal Government is sworn to uphold the laws of our Country. It is time the Government stopped subsidizing employers and corporations that openly and consistently break those laws.

Associated Farmers Under Board Fire

WASHINGTON, July 22. — Associated Farmers, "overall and hayseed" front outfit for the West Coast's most bitter big business reactionaries, received another black eye today—this time from the National Labor Relations Board in the shape of a proposed order relating to the bloody Salinas, Calif., lettuce packers' strike of 1936.

The order directed the Grower-Shipper Vegetable Assn. of Central California to bargain collectively with the CIO United Cannery, Packing, Agricultural & Allied Workers.

It ordered the association to stop interfering with the organizing rights of employes, reinstate with back pay 10 workers, and reinstate with "remedial" pay other shed workers employed on Sept. 3, 1936 who have not since been rehired. Setting a new precedent, the Board ordered the growers to insert a "cease and desist" notice in a local newspaper at least once every two weeks for the next eight weeks.

Auto Union, GM Continue Parleys

Detroit, July 22. — Its key tool and die plants closed by a United Automobile Workers strike, General Motors management representatives were meeting with union officials today to discuss a supplemental contract to cover tool and die makers, engineering and maintenance workers.

Militant picket lines have brought to a standstill the work on dies for the 1940 GM cars. At the same time, UAW members in tool and die plants selling their products to General Motors, have refused to work on any pieces headed for the struck company.

Production plants of the big motor firm are not affected by the strike.

WARNS COMPANY

Pres. R. J. Thomas of the UAW promised that no settlement will be tolerated which "does not satisfactorily adjust" the strikers' demands.

"There will be no piecemeal settlement, nor does the present procedure in negotiations between the top officials of GM and our union contemplate such a settlement," he said.

Walter Reuther, strike director, said that "GM cannot make a single 1940 car until it gets these plants in operation . . . it will not get these plants in operation until it reaches an equitable settlement on our demands for tool and die, maintenance and engineering workers."

PennsyMayor Says Act Ends 'Terror'

Washington, July 22—Before 1936 steel workers were forced to cringe before the boss. Company police walked through the mills all day. Men were fired for a casual remark. Even workers' wives were forced to accept attentions from foremen and other tyrants—or their husbands went on the breadline.

In 1933 the company unions started, when NRA was passed. By '35 the unrest began. In '37 the Wagner Act was upheld by the Supreme Court. Even before that, the workers were flocking into the Steel Workers Organizing Committee by the thousands.

A MAN CAN STAND UP

Today the steel mills are free from terror. A worker can stand up and speak his mind, without fear of the boss and the boss' spies. And the steel towns are free, too, with honest elections, with the workers voting for the candidates of their own, not the company's choice.

This was the story told by a witness before the Senate Labor Committee, John J. Mullen, steel worker, SWOC official, and mayor of Clairton, Pa., once part of Little Siberia. Mullen testified on the proposed changes to the Wagner Act. He said, quoting from a steel worker:

"We've had a couple of years of freedom, the right to live like free people. These amendments will destroy this. They'll take us back to 1933. Back to slavery."

THOUSANDS ATTEND MEETING: Close to 16,000 persons packed the huge Chicago Coliseum to hear Pres. John L. Lewis and leaders of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee warn "Big Four" meat packers — Armour, Wilson, Swift and Cudahy —that their patience is wearing thin. The companies were warned to come to early terms with the powerful CIO affiliate.

WPA To Drop 300,000 Persons By August 1

WASHINGTON, July 22.—Three hundred thousand people will be shoved off WPA rolls before August 1, Commissioner F. C. Harrington announced today, cutting WPA employment to 2,100,000.

Most of those scheduled to feel the WPA axe will be persons who have been on the rolls for 18 months or more, authorities said. To get back on WPA, they will have to be re-certified.

Decision to begin dropping workers was influenced by a survey showing 650,000 would have been affected by the end of August, Harrington declared, adding that a gradual dropping of workers may help to relieve the sharpness of the crisis.

Meanwhile, Sen. Murray of Montana, sponsor of amendments to the Woodrum WPA bill, said he would press for action on his bill only when the present demonstrations against WPA have ceased. His statement was falsely interpreted in some quarters as abandonment of the amendments—a move which the Montana Senator indicated he has no intention of making.

The Murray bill—S. 2765—has the support of the CIO. It provides for protection for monthly income for WPA workers and restoration for prevailing hourly rate of pay clause.

Tories, AFL Get Probe Of Labor Board

Washington, July 22—Unable to gain their demands for amendment of the Wagner Act at this session of Congress, House Tories won a flank attack today by bagging an investigation of the National Labor Relations Board by a special House Committee.

The vote to conduct the investigation was 253-135. Members of the House Labor Committee were outspoken in their criticism of the measure, which they said was a direct slap at themselves, as well as at the NLRB. The House Labor Committee has been hearing testimony for the last several weeks from friends and foes of the Wagner Act.

Harlan Miners Win Contract; Lockout Ended

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 22.—New peace came to bloody Harlan County, Ky., today, as the Coal Operators Assn. finally signed a United Mine Workers contract and ended the lockout in force since April.

The new contract, terminating with other UMW agreements in 1941, grants the union sole bargaining rights and removes the penalty clause, removal of which the miners had demanded during the Appalachian negotiations in the spring.

Operators agreed to re-hire all union men to their former jobs without prejudice, to place UMW members on a preferential rehiring list if there is no work, and to drop several hundred "house cases" instituted by the mine owners at the outset of the dispute.

Nevertheless, a not inconsiderable portion of Harlan's mining population awaited grand jury action, following an attack by national guardsmen on their picket lines last week. Some 260 UMW pickets were jailed on a variety of charges.

Most of the arrested men were charged with "banding and confederating" though George Titler, secretary-treasurer of the UMW district, was held on charges of sedition, forcible rebellion and attack on National Guardsmen. A majority were freed under $500 bail, but 34 were forced to post $2,000 each and Titler was released only after bail of $8,000 had been deposited.

OPERATORS IN DUTCH

A large group of the operators, on the other hand, still face possible federal trial for criminal conspiracy to deprive the mine workers of their civil rights. A first trial on this indictment resulted in a split jury, but the Department of Justice has never indicated that the case is dead.

Atty.-Gen. Murphy sent additional G-men into Harlan shortly after the National Guard attack on the miners, though declaring at the time that his action had preceded such a demand by UMW Pres. John L. Lewis.

Lewis had asked how much longer UMW members would be forced to bear the brunt of Gov. A. B. "Happy" Chandler's vengeance for their refusal to support his candidacy when he opposed Sen. Alben Barkley, Roosevelt ally, in 1938.

BIGGEST VICTORY

The Harlan contract brought to a victorious conclusion the United Mine Workers' battle to protect itself from possible raids by the AFL.

By securing the union shop for well over 90 per cent of its members in both bituminous and anthracite coal fields, and by winning removal of the "penalty clause" from the remainder of the agreements, the miners have placed their organization in the most powerful position in its history and helped to ward off future attacks on the CIO as a whole.

Senate OK's Teeth For Contract Law

Washington, July 22—Businessmen filling government orders must obey federal labor laws or lose their federal contracts, the Senate decreed today in passing CIO-supported amendments to the Walsh-Healey Act.

The Senate bill provides that violators of U. S. labor regulations, including the Wagner Act, will go on a three-year "unfair" list as far as the government is concerned. Firms may be taken off the list inside of that time only if they accept with court compliance orders.

Two other important provisions of the bill directed:

1. That government contractors must pay basic minimum wages in line with those established by the Federal Fair Labor Standards Act.

2. That the Act will apply to contractors holding orders of $4,000 or more—compared with the $10,000 minimum in the present law.

This member of United Optical Workers Local 951, a CIO affiliate in Buffalo, N. Y., isn't missing a bet in his fight to win a contract from Dr. E. Wagner, optometrist. He's carrying four picket signs, with messages in Polish and English. Union wants wage increases, holidays off, seniority rights and grievance apparatus.

Auto Local Quits AFL

Detroit, July 22—The big Packard local of Homer Martin's rump auto union withdrew from the AFL affiliate today and took steps to rejoin the CIO United Automobile Workers.

Pres. Ed Linder of the local, strongest in the Martin outfit, said the decision had been taken by the executive board.

The announcement said that "our brief association with the AFL has convinced us that the federation entered the picture not to organize the auto workers but to attempt to disrupt the UAW-CIO."

150 Regain Jobs, Back Pay

Camden, N. J., July 22 — One hundred and fifty CIO members will get their jobs back at the Radio Condenser Co. here — and $12,500 in back pay, as well.

Through an agreement reached by the company, the Labor Board and Local 109 of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, the firm will rehire the workers whom it discharged two years ago in the course of a strike.

Push Campaign In Capital

Washington, July 22. — Forgetting all about the Capital's famed summer heat, the United Federal Workers, CIO, is pushing an intensive organizing campaign here.

Two additional field representatives have been placed on duty here, and substantial gains have already been made in the Interior and Labor Departments and at Freedman's Hospital.

Rubber Union To Convene Sept. 11

AKRON, O., July 22 — The United Rubber Workers of America will hold its fourth annual convention at Pioneer Labor Hall in LaCrosse, Wisc., on Sept. 11, Sec.-Treas. Frank Grillo announced today.

The union has rolled up an impressive list of victories since its last convention in Trenton, N. J., leaders declared. Several hundred delegates are expected to attend the sessions.

Murray, First CIO Witness On Wagner Act, Cites Benefits To Steel

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, July 22. — The new cycle in steel labor relations, whereby the workers have become "citizens of the steel industry," with the rights of free men, must not be brought to an end by action of Congress in amending the Wagner Act, Philip Murray, Steel Workers Organizing Committee chairman, told the House Labor Committee in testimony on proposed changes in the act this week.

"Steel workers are now more than employes," he said. "They are citizens of the steel industry. They have just as strong an interest in its welfare as management. And through the SWOC they are taking part in its development and improvement.

"Despite the ill-advised and futile efforts of Tom Girdler and the misguided steel employers that followed his lead, a majority of the steel workers and steel employers of this country now determine their relationships by democratic means.

"Whether this economic and industrial development of democracy shall continue in the

Ask Damages For Vigilante Attack

San Francisco, July 22 (FP)—Damages aggregating $3,523,074 have been asked of a company union by the CIO Intl. Woodworkers of America on behalf of 323 members and their families in Westwood, Calif.

The suit, filed against the Industrial Employes Union, charges that individual defendants were provided by the Red River Lumber Co. with "rifles, pickhandles and high pressure hoses, in a conspiracy to drive the complainaints by force and violence from their respective homes" in the vigilante purge of last July. The company is also named in the suit.

The amount sought in the suit, filed in state superior court here, covers $5,000 punitive damages for each complainant plus compensation for wage losses, hospital bills and other expenses.

Equal Justice Under the Law

When a poor man breaks the law, he goes to jail or money is taken from him in the form of a fine.

But when a rich corporation breaks the law, a considerate government gives it money, instead of taking it away.

Why are Bethlehem Steel, Douglas Aircraft and dozens of other industrial corporations which have violated the National Labor Relations Act, allowed to fatten on contracts granted them by a government which is supposed to enforce the law?

The answer, he told the crowd as it roared its agreement, is that the big corporations are organized to impress their will on Congress, and if labor expects to get equal justice under the law it too must organize.

Labor has been organizing and through the CIO it has demanded of Congress that it put an end to government coddling of lawbreaking corporations.

As a result of this labor demand that the rich be brought under the law as well as the poor, the Senate has just passed amendments to the Walsh-Healey act providing that when a corporation has been found guilty in court of violating the Wagner labor relations act, it may receive no more government contracts for three years.

This simple measure of justice, to prevent government encouragement of lawbreaking, has still to be passed by the House to become law. Let your Congressman know at once that labor expects, and justice demands, the speedy passage of this amendment to the Walsh-Healey act.

The Miners Mop Up

When the great majority of the coal operators of the nation agreed to grant the United Mine Workers of America the union shop, in one of the most sweeping labor victories of all time, there still remained a number of hold-outs in outlying districts.

One by one these various hold-out groups have since been brought into line and have signed up with the UMWA.

Toughest of all the anti-union groups were the Harlan County coal operators, who were given the armed support of Governor Chandler and his troops in their fight against the union.

The news, therefore, that the Harlan County Coal Operators Association has finally signed a union agreement with the UMWA makes the miners' triumph complete.

This great union, which has been the backbone of the CIO in all its organizing work in other industries, has at the same time built itself to the greatest strength in its history in its own industry. The whole CIO rejoices in its achievement.

A Fighting and Winning Union

The National Maritime Union, which has just concluded its second national convention in New Orleans, is one of the new unions of the CIO which has crowded into its brief existence greater achievements than most of the older unions of the AFL can boast of in half a century of existence.

The NMU has not had easy sailing, however. It came into existence as a rank and file revolt against a corrupt and dictatorial AFL setup that did worse than nothing for the seamen.

But although it had to fight AFL leaders and shipowners at one and the same time, it succeeded in organizing the great majority of the seamen; in winning an almost unbroken succession of election victories; and in securing union agreements with nearly all the shipowners which have immeasurably improved wages and working conditions.

Unable to destroy the NMU from without, the enemies of this fighting and winning union next turned to attempts to disrupt it from within. Every effort was made by labor spies and other agents of the shipowners to stir up internal dissension.

The New Orleans convention, however, has demonstrated that the NMU knows how to overcome internal difficulties as well as outside attack. The elected delegates registered the majority will of the membership in democratic fashion, and the result was a harmonious and enthusiastic convention which has given to the NMU the signal for full steam ahead.

Towards Mutual Assistance

Looking Ahead

By LEN DE CAUX

The Middle West Goes CIO

The CIO mass meeting which John L. Lewis addressed in Chicago was the largest labor rally ever held in the middle west.

The huge Coliseum was jammed to the roof. Every seat was taken. All standing room was occupied. And the crowd overflowed to the street outside.

The atmosphere was electric. Murmurs and ripples of approval spread in a second to the furthest reaches of the auditorium. The frequent applause burst out like claps of thunder.

The reception given to Lewis was like a demonstration at a national political convention. Delegations paraded through the aisles with banners and placards, and it took a long time to quiet the ovation so that he could proceed with his speech.

As he spoke, the thousands upon thousands listening intently responded to every word, every gesture, every intonation. There was hardly a sentence that did not bring its round of applause.

The CIO has succeeded, Lewis said, because it expressed the needs and desires and responded to the heart-throbs of millions of workers.

And the great throng at the Chicago Coliseum responded as it did to the CIO leader's speech, because it recognized his voice as its own. He said what tens of thousands of workers in Chicago were thinking, and his voice rang out with all the force of their collective determination.

Packinghouse Workers

At the convention of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee earlier in the day, more than a thousand delegates had come to a decision of the greatest moment.

After careful deliberation they had resolved to authorize a national strike against Armour & Co., and the other biggest corporations in the industry as well if necessary, if they continued to deny to their organized workers their collective bargaining rights.

This decision was not lightly made. It came only after months and months of patient effort to persuade these companies to sit down peacefully and negotiate an agreement with the chosen spokesmen of their employes.

Lewis addressed the convention after the vote had been taken. He spoke to the delegates as man to man. He knew the seriousness of their undertaking. He knew they had voted to strike only as a last resort. He breathed courage into them and bade them be of good cheer. He reminded them that the meat packers were no bigger than U. S. Steel, General Motors, or any other of the great corporations that once refused, like the packers, to enter into collective bargaining agreements with their employes.

When Lewis spoke at the Coliseum mass meeting, pledging the support of the whole CIO to the packinghouse workers, he not only voiced the sentiments of his audience, but he also spoke for the millions of members of the CIO who are rallying behind the packinghouse workers in the crucial struggle which impends.

Church and Labor

The speech of Bishop Bernard J. Sheil at the same meeting was also an event of the deepest significance.

Why should it be considered unusual for a dignitary of the church to appear at a labor meeting, Lewis asked reporters when they questioned him about it.

"It is entirely in keeping with the attitude that should exist," he said. "The church has a stake in the well-being of labor. It doesn't want to be the representative for only the rich and powerful. Surely the church and its leaders realize that before a man can be a Christian, he must first have the right to live."

But nevertheless the Bishop's appearance at the CIO mass meeting was treated as a sensation in the press. It was known that he had been under considerable pressure from employer sources to prevent his attendance.

When the Bishop spoke, however, his eloquent exposition of the social doctrines of the church, and of its clear approval of labor's right to organize for the improvement of its conditions, was so logical and so convincing that it made one wonder why the sympathetic interest of church leaders in labor's cause should be considered as anything but natural.

The Message of the CIO

When Lewis spoke in Chicago, he brought a message from the whole CIO not only to the packinghouse workers, but to the steel workers, the farm equipment workers, to the Chicago Hearst strikers, to the clothing workers, the shoe workers, the oil workers, the fur workers and to all the other thousands who have been organized by the CIO in the Chicago area.

He spoke too for the millions of unemployed and held out the hand of friendship and cooperation to the farmers. And as if in answer to his pledge of labor support for the farmers' demands, there came a message of sympathy and support for labor from the Farmers' Union, which the huge audience received with the greatest enthusiasm.

All in all, the Chicago meeting was one of those rare occasions when the collective purpose of great masses of people finds concentrated expression. It testified to the amazing growth of the CIO in the last few years, and it revealed the constructive purposes and program of the progressive labor movement.

AFL Witnesses Rap Top Leaders, Oppose All Amendments

By ROBERT DALE

WASHINGTON, July 22.—Anti-labor amendments of the Wagner act sponsored by a few top officials of the AFL were sharply attacked this week before the Senate Education and Labor Committee by AFL witnesses speaking for thousands of rank and file members.

The witnesses were officials in their states of Labor's Non-Partisan League which arranged for their appearance before the committee. Resolutions of local AFL labor bodies and petitions containing thousands of signatures to protests against the amendments were submitted by the witnesses.

Opposition to all pending amendments, but especially to those backed by the AFL Executive Council, were strongly voiced by the witnesses. They related first-hand accounts of employer violation of the law in their states and explained how the AFL amendments would play into the hands of anti-labor employers.

OMAHA LEADER

A highlight of the testimony was the account by Mace Brown, president of the Omaha Central Labor Union, AFL, of how audience protests caused him to go on the air to deny statements in a Labor Day speech last year by Joseph Padway, AFL counsel. Padway, who wrote the AFL amendments, had told the Omaha audience in his broadcast address that labor wanted the act changed.

"This so aroused the audience present that it became necessary," Brown told the committee, "for me to request the broadcasting system to grant us two and a half minutes over the time allotted for a statement in refutation. I had to inform the audience, seen and unseen, that Mr. Padway's views did not in any way represent the sentiment of the AFL workers in Omaha."

Brown explained he represented the labor body whose members included 75 per cent of Nebraska's AFL membership.

CALIFORNIA LEADER

Sensational testimony by J. Vernon Burke, state secretary of Labor's Non-Partisan of California and prominent member of the Printing Pressmen's Union, AFL, torpedoed the AFL claim that their amendments would not promote company unionism.

Burke told instance after instance of open collusion between California employers and state AFL officials.

He declared:

"I am sure that the great mass of rank and file members of the American Federation of Labor are not in accord with the amendments which are now being considered by you gentlemen. There have already been in the state of California 119 AFL labor unions and central bodies who have gone on record as opposing any amendments to the National Labor Relations Act.

CHICAGO ITU HEAD

Ralph E. Fisher, secretary of Labor's Non-Partisan League of Illinois and member of the Typographical union that started the AFL, told the committee Illinois labor opposed the AFL and other amendments. He explained his own international opposes the changes and that it has also refused three times to comply with AFL edicts to fight the CIO.

Explaining why AFL amendment proposals do not represent the view of many AFL internationals or of the membership generally, Fisher told the committee:

"It is highly significant that (so far as I know) not one International union affiliated with the AFL has by official action endorsed the pending amendments proposed by the AFL executive council. On the other hand, many of them are actually on record as opposing any changes in the law."

Other state League witnesses, mostly AFL officials and veteran members of AFL unions, who testified similarly were R. R. Tisdale, Atlanta, Ga., C. N. Robertson, Jacksonville, Fla., Walter V. Risley, Brockton, Mass., Lawrence Spits, Woonsocket, R. I., and John Souter, East Chicago, Ind. Another witness was Monroe Sweetland, Portland, Ore., who testified for the Oregon Commonwealth Federation.

OLIVER SPEAKS

Careful analysis of the AFL amendments and the devastating effect they would have on legitimate unionism was presented to the committee by E. L. Oliver, executive vice-president of Labor's Non-Partisan League.

On the basis of his analysis, Oliver said:

"Congress has before it proposals that amount to complete nullification of the National Labor Relations Act. Neither these specific amendments, nor any others, should be adopted at this time. The labor clauses of the Transportation Act of 1920 were unchanged for six years; the Railway Labor Act of 1926 for eight years; that act, as amended in 1934, has not been changed in five years.

"Certainly, Congress should avoid any of the destructive proposals now under consideration, and equally certainly should not expect to be able to find whatever slight imperfections there may be in the statute, on the basis of the brief experience under unprecedentedly trying conditions."

Wage Act Endangered, Andrews Says

Washington, July 22.—A group of tory Congressmen, working with the full approval of the anti-union Associated Farmers organizations, is attempting to commit mayhem on the wage-hour law, U. S. Administrator Elmer F. Andrews charged today.

In a letter to Mary Norton, chairman of the House Labor Committee, the wage-hour official poured heavy ammunition on the wage-hour amendments proposed by Rep. Graham Barden of North Carolina—the same Congressman who is serving as sponsor of the AFL's Wagner Act amendments in the lower House.

SEEK TO WRECK ACT

"What is proposed in the Barden amendment is the wreckage of the Fair Labor Standards Act," he said. If the bill were to pass, more than a million workers in 18 industries would be completely exempted from provisions of the act, while additional thousands would be no longer protected by the wage or hour sections of the law.

"Textiles and apparels aside," Andrews continued, "the net result of this bill would be to remove from the coverage of the law the great bulk of employes who have had their wages raised by the Act."

The Barden bill received a decided set-back when Pres. Roosevelt assailed the proposed amendments, warned of the harm they would do to the nation's lowest-paid workers, and gave an indication that he would veto the Barden bill if it were passed by Congress.

Shipyard, Guild Leaders Urge Congress To Save Act

Testifies

Philip Murray, chairman of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, who led off the string of CIO witnesses appearing before the House Labor Committee to attack proposed amendments to the Wagner Labor Relations Act.

WASHINGTON, July 22. — Following Philip Murray, SWOC chairman and CIO vice-president in the first full week of CIO testimony on the Wagner Act, John Green, president of the Marine and Shipbuilding Workers and Victor Pasche, secretary-treasurer of the American Newspaper Guild, opposed all amendments now under consideration by the House Labor Committee.

Speaking on the AFL craft union amendments, to the Act, Pres. Green of the Shipbuilders, declared: "A craft group has no more right to secede from a plant-wide unit than the southern states had to secede from the Union in 1861. Collective bargaining with the more than 20 crafts that would have to be considered under such amendments would be impossible," he pointed out.

Big shipbuilding corporations are already violating the act wholesale, he added, and such amendments as those proposed by the AFL, both on craft unit representation and on court review of Board decisions, would only encourage them to further lawbreaking.

Testimony by Victor Pasche for the Newspaper Guild similarly attacked the craft unit proposals of AFL top leaders, pointing out that close to 35 splinter groups had claimed jurisdiction on newspapers under Guild jurisdiction.

Propaganda in favor of amendments from big dailies should be heavily discounted, Pasche warned, since it springs from a direct interest the papers have as large employers against collective bargaining. Many of them are violators of the act, he pointed out, citing the New York Times, the Hearst, Scripps-Howard and Gannett chains, the Chicago Tribune and a host of smaller papers.

PAPERS GRIND AXE

"These newspapers and wire services therefore have a direct and immediate interest in defeating the purposes of the Wagner Act," he said. "They developed their loudest opposition to the CIO and bias for the AFL after the organized editorial employes had voted by two to one to join the CIO."

Enemies of the act who propose amendments, Pasche said, "refuse to believe that collective bargaining is here to stay, and that they will serve the public and themselves by obeying the law instead of seeking ways to circumvent it."

Murray Describes Gains Under Labor Act

steel industry, or whether the industry shall revert to the chaotic and barbarous ways Tom Girdler is trying to perpetuate will be determined, in large measure, by the action of the Federal Congress.

FEDERAL POLICY

This success, in which steel labor freed itself from tyranny and industrial warfare, came in great part because U. S. law finally undertook to guarantee the workers their basic constitutional rights.

"The part the industrial relations policy of the Federal government, as administered by the Natl. Labor Relations Board, played in this development, and continues to play in it, is indeterminable," he declared. "But to the credit and glory of our political democracy it has been substantial, and rightly so."

BULWARK TO DEMOCRACY

"This collective bargaining development is unparalleled in American industrial and labor history," Murray said. "It is a bulwark to our democratic form of government. I am happy to report that not a single company that embarked on contractual relations with the SWOC beginning in 1937 has severed connections with SWOC."

Only exceptions to this record of peaceful, democratic labor relations are in the actions of a minority of steel firms — the Little Steel group dominated by Tom Girdler, Murray said.

These companies — Republic, Youngstown, Bethlehem — refused bluntly to obey the law of the nation, provoked strikes, violence, bloodshed, all in the attempt to smash SWOC rather than bargain collectively. They are today, Murray said, "continuing brazenly to violate the NLRA in the hope and expectation that the act will be so weakened by amendments that they will never be called to account for their unlawful conduct."

Turning to the claims of these AFL top officials, Murray showed that in case after case the Labor Board, far from being biased against the AFL, had leaned over backwards to concede craft union certification where no real basis for it existed.

BOARD PRO-AFL

In reality, he pointed out, the Board was pro-AFL rather than pro-CIO in many SWOC cases, such as Worthington Pump, where the wishes of 1600 SWOC members for representation were overruled in favor of 69 AFL craft unionists, the Walworth Co., where the Board ordered an election because 43 AFL craftists wanted it, as against 1,238 SWOC members, and numerous others.

"If this same rule should operate in our national government, then Mr. Alfred Landon would now be the President of the 'United States of Maine and Vermont,'" he said.

"The facts belie the charges of bias levelled at the Board by certain leaders of the AFL. In view of the fact that a cross section of the steel industry, which is more representative than a Gallup poll, shows less than four per cent of the workers belong to the AFL, the charges of bias must be judged accordingly.

"I know, as well as can be known, the attitudes and temperament of those AFL leaders that hurl charges of bias against the Board. In my judgment, gentlemen, the charges of bias we hear from certain AFL leaders sound like so much downright, rotten sour grapes."

In the concluding section of his 2-day testimony, Murray analyzed proposed amendments to the act and condemned them as designed to make the act unfair to labor, as certain to provoke industrial chaos, to tear down a present solidly based democratic system of labor relations in steel and other industries.

New Labor Board Policy: Certification by Poll Only

Washington, July 22 — The National Labor Relations Board indicated today that it will hereafter curb its practice of certifying a union as sole bargaining agency in cases where the union offers signed membership cards as proof of its majority position.

The ruling was made on a plea of the Packinghoue Workers Organizing Committee for certification in the Denver, Colo. plant of the Cudahy Packing Co.

"Although in the past, we have certified representatives without an election upon a showing of the sort made by this record, we are persuaded by our experience that the policies of the Act will best be effectuated if the question of representation which has arisen is resolved in an election by secret ballot."

Edwin S. Smith filed a minority dissent, pointing out that the PWOC obviously had a majority of the workers in the plant.

A similar decision, with a like dissent, was also filed in a PWOC request for certification at the Armour plant in Oklahoma City.

Thousands Hear Lewis In Chicago

Negotiate— Or Face Strike, Armour Told

CHICAGO, July 22.—A national strike against Armour and Company, if it refuses to meet with the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee to negotiate a contract, was authorized by the national policy convention of the PWOC meeting in Chicago.

The delegates, representing packinghouse workers from coast to coast, unanimously adopted the strike resolution. They were assured of the full support of the CIO by President John L. Lewis, when he spoke at their convention and later at the mass meeting in the Coliseum.

"Our patience is rapidly becoming exhausted," said Chairman Van A. Bittner of the PWOC, and "the Packinghouse Workers are determined that Armour & Company must sign up with the Union."

The resolution adopted declares that the union is "willing to leave the question of whether or not Armour & Co. officials shall meet with the officials of our union and negotiate a contract in the hands of the President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt."

DEFENSE OF RIGHTS

But in the event Armour & Co. fails or refuses to agree to leave the question in the hands of the President and refuses to meet with the PWOC, the union's representatives are directed to serve notice upon Armour & Co. "that in defense of the rights of its membership, the PWOC is declaring a strike in all of the Armour plants where we have a majority membership."

Replying to a suddenly launched anti-union publicity campaign, Bittner said:

"After reading the Armour ads in the public press, we are happy to say that Armour is on the defensive and the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee is on the march.

The workers in the Armour plants know that these ads are simply bunk. The PWOC is demanding that the representatives of the company meet with the representatives of the PWOC to negotiate and sign a contract. If Armour continues to refuse to sit down around the conference table and settle these matters, the responsibility is theirs."

WARN OTHER PACKERS

The convention also served notice on all other packing companies in which it has a majority membership that if they maintain the same attitude as Armour & Co. "in refusing to confer with our union and negotiate peacefully written, signed contracts, then and in that event the convention authorizes and instructs the national officials of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee and the national bargaining committees of the Swift, Wilson, Cudahy and other independent plants in which we have a majority membership, to declare a strike against such company or companies whenever the same is necessary in defense of the lawful rights of our members employed therein."

78,000 MEMBERS

The PWOC now reports a membership of 78,000 out of some 129,000 employed nationally in the industry. It has been certified by the Labor Board as the sole bargaining agent of the workers in most of the Armour plants. But despite this fact the company has consistently refused to negotiate an agreement with the union.

When Lewis addressed the Coliseum mass meeting, following the PWOC convention, he declared that the organization of the Packinghouse Workers "ranks with the triumphs of industrial organization in the steel, automobile, rubber and other previously unorganized mass production industries."

"The organized packinghouse workers of the nation are now serving notice on Armour & Co. that their patience is nearing an end, and that if the company continues to refuse collective bargaining, it must accept the consequences of its own action," he said.

"I am here to pledge the support of the CIO with its four million members to the packinghouse workers in any struggles into which they may be forced by the intransgeance of the big corporations."

Senate Committee Squats On LaFollette Funds

WASHINGTON July 22.—Apparently engaged in a "Ghandi-ish" race against Congressional adjournment, the Senate Committee on Audit & Control is still squatting on a resolution to provide the LaFollette Civil Liberties Committee with an additional $100,000.

A quartet of New Deal Senators this week moved to blast the appropriation out of committee. Senators Schwellenbach and Downey of California, both sponsors of the resolution for the $100,000, were joined by Senators LaFollette and Thomas in a plea that the money be granted.

As a result of the discussion on the Senate floor, Chairman Byrnes of the Audit & Control Committee volunteered to allow hearings at which proponents of the plan may discuss the measure more fully.

Both the CIO and AFL, as well as the National Grange, farmers' organization, wish appropriation of the funds for further investigation of Associated Farmers, big business-farm vigilante outfit, the Senators indicated, and AF itself has requested the probe to continue.

SUSPECT BIG BUSINESS LOBBY

Many observers here believe that the Special Conference Committee, composed of representatives of a dozen of the nation's largest corporations, has been lobbying against continuing the LaFollette investigation, and that delay in acting on the appropriation may in part at least have been due to its influence.

Unless the committee approves within the next few weeks, the civil rights investigation, which has proved of inestimable value to organized workers, will come to an end.

Last week, President Roosevelt told his semi-weekly press conference that he has always approved the work of the committee and favors the granting of $100,000 to it.

Unions should wire immediately to Sen. James Byrnes, head of the committee, and demand action so that the civil liberties probe may continue.

'Biggest Reception' For Lewis

Chicago, July 22—John L. Lewis, president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, was given the biggest reception ever accorded to a labor leader in the middle west when he came to Chicago to address a CIO mass meeting in the Coliseum.

The huge auditorium was jammed to the rafters with more than 16,000 people, all standing room was occupied, and the crowd overflowed into the streets outside.

UNIONS PARADED

Every CIO union in Chicago participated in the gathering, and delegations paraded through the aisles with union banners, flags and placards in the course of the long and enthusiastic ovation which greeted the CIO leader.

A notable feature of the Coliseum meeting was the speech delivered by Bishop Bernard J. Sheil, who appeared at the meeting despite pressure put on him from employer and AFL sources to stay away. Many priests were also in the audience.

Other speakers who addressed the meeting included Van A. Bittner, chairman of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee; Don Harris, director; Henry Johnson, assistant director, and Alderman Rowan, representing the city.

In his speech (excerpts from which were printed in last week's issue of The CIO NEWS) Lewis told of the achievements of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee in organizing the industry and pledged full support to the union in the struggle which threatens with Armour & Company and the other "Big Four" packers.

He paid a tribute to the strikers of the Chicago Hearst papers and praised the progress of the Farm Equipment Workers, Steel Workers, Amalgamated Clothing Workers and other CIO unions in Chicago.

PREDICTS STEEL PACTS

Predicting that Little Steel would soon have to follow the example of Big Steel and sign up with the union, Lewis denounced the policy of granting government contracts to such firms as Bethlehem Steel, which have violated the National Labor Relations Act.

Organize! Catholic Bishop Urges Rally

CHICAGO, July 22. — Sharing the spotlight with John L. Lewis at the great mass meeting which closed the PWOC's National Policy Convention was His Excellency, Bernard J. Sheil, Senior Auxiliary Bishop of Chicago and founder of the Catholic Youth Organization who gave the opening prayer before the 16,000 CIO members and their friends who jammed the Coliseum to the rafters.

Bishop Sheil, an outstanding progressive Catholic cleric, accompanied his prayer with a short discourse which gave even more impetus to the CIO's powerful drive in Chicago and other industrial centers to organize the unorganized.

"We hold these truths to be self-evident — that man was endowed by his Creator with certain inalienable rights; that amongst these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

RIGHT TO LIVE

"But," said the Bishop, "if man has the natural, God-given right to life, then he must have the right to the means of life. To admit the right to ends and to deny the means without which the ends cannot be maintained is self contradictory. Now in every society with which we are acquainted the only means whereby man can secure for himself and those dependent upon him the necessities of life is his labor.

"But since labor is not an end in itself, but only the means to an end, which is the sustenance of life, it will be useless, except insofar as it secures for the workers a sufficiency of those things which are necessary for the well being and happiness of his family and himself. The worker, therefore, has the strict right to receive from his labor such returns as will assure him these necessary commodities . . . . A wage which does not meet those requirements is an unjust invasion of fundamental, natural rights."

QUOTES POPE

Quoting at length from the encyclicals of Pope Pius XI, the Bishop demonstrated that Catholic doctrine endorses union organization as a proper means to attain "the common good."

In his closing words the Bishop expressed the hope that industrial peace might prevail. Every man and woman in the huge audience understood that it was his prayer that Armour and Co. would enter into negotiations with the PWOC.

Comparing international war with industrial war, and pointing the finger of guilt at the party which is the aggressor and seeks to force its will unfairly on the other, the Bishop said:

"No war can ever be justified until all means of peaceful settlement have been exhausted. A nation which plunges rashly into war is a ghastly criminal whose hands drip with guilty blood.

"Now, what is true of international war is equally true, within proper limits, of economic war. Here again, by reason of the unjust aggression of one party upon the rights of the other, such warfare may sometimes be justified, but the heavy guilt of it is upon the head of the unjust party."

NEW CONTRACTS

Milwaukee, Wis. — The Steel Workers Organizing Committee has renewed four contracts in this area, John Riffe, acting district director, revealed.

BE ON GUARD!

Look for the union label of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America when buying men's and boys' clothing, overalls, shirts, undergarments, neckties, lumber jackets, gloves, and all other kinds of men's wearing apparel.

The Amalgamated Label is your guarantee that the articles you buy are of the best workmanship and produced under one hundred percent union conditions by members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America.

By insisting on the Amalgamated Label you will help to guard against a return of sweatshop conditions to the industry. By helping the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America you help the labor movement generally.

Ask for the Amalgamated label on each part of the suit, coat, pants and vest. There are different Amalgamated labels for coats, pants, vests, shirts and undergarments, work clothes, neckwear and gloves.

BookShows Sherman Act History

Book Review

By PAUL E. ANDERSON

Though the title sounds formidable, this is an invaluable and readable book for labor organizers, leaders and technicians, for it furnishes them with a comprehensive review of the anti-trust cases, and therewith the background of the Apex Hosiery decision and the action against the steel workers and others.

The book is of immense importance to those whose unions are face to face with monopolistic industries, or those which are integrated and practice price control or production control.

Wisely, the author, one of the foremost anti-trust lawyers, permits the courts to speak for themselves. And while he nowhere states it, the implication is clear:

In labor cases (see especially Chap. V), the courts have traveled far from the original limitations imposed by the Act, and have little by little introduced the concept of broad judicial powers, e. g., criminal contempt, and have tortured the meaning of the Act by including under it legitimate attempts by unions to better conditions, and calling these restraints of trade.

It is the merit of Mr. Hadlick that he builds up step by step the development of this policy of the courts.

From the debates in Congress in 1890, Mr. Hadlick shows that the Sherman Act was unanimously intended by the House and all but one Senator as a "legislative intent to attack the trust and monopoly problem principally by means of criminal action and only incidentally through injunctions and consent decrees."

West Point — Sweatshop

WEST POINT, N. Y., July 22.—The United States Military Academy, where Uncle Sam's future army officers get their training, is a gigantic sweatshop. This is the charge made by the United Federal Workers, CIO affiliate.

Waiters are compelled to work longer hours than the federal wage-hour law permits.

Tailors work long years at low pay and then are faced with no protection under federal old age security statutes.

UFWA CAMPAIGN

As a result, the United Federal Workers is engaged in a campaign to improve conditions.

The waiters are looking forward to a better break as a result of the UFWA drive. The War Department is considering asking an appropriation to lift their salaries and provide for the hiring of more men.

But the tailors and laundry workers have been given no promise of improvements. Both groups receive their wages from a fund collected from the cadets, and so by a trick legal interpretation, they have been refused status as government employes. But, they have also been told that they are not workers in private industry.

Thirty-three laundry workers here get $45 a month; 41 earn $47.50. Yet the state law requires a minimum wage of $50 a month in private establishments, and the Veterans Administration, a little way up the Hudson River, pays $90 a month for the same work.

The UFWA is asking for shorter hours for all the groups, sharply increased pay rates and Civil Service protection for all West Point civilian employes.

Monopolies Seen as Harm To Jobs

Washington, July 22 — Increasing monopoly in industry contributes to the nation's growing unemployment problem, the U. S. anti-monopoly committee observed in a preliminary report filed with Congress.

"The tendency toward the concentration of control of the economic system in fewer and fewer business executives seems proved," the committee said. "The consequence of that tendency is a steadily lessening number of competitors . . .

CUTS EMPLOYMENT

"It is clear . . . that the financial and other resources required for economic endeavor are becoming increasingly difficult for the ordinary enterpriser to obtain, and that concentration of economic power and wealth is accompanied by increasing unemployment and narrowing markets."

The committee recommended tightening of the patent laws, strengthening of anti-trust weapons in the hands of the Dept. of Justice and amendment of the Clayton anti-trust act.

Ohio AFL, CIO Groups Plan Joint Picnic

Warren, Ohio, July 22 — CIO and AFL city bodies will combine forces here on Labor Day for another joint picnic.

Last year some 10,000 people attended the affair sponsored by the Trumbull County CIO Industrial Union Council and the AFL Central Labor Union. Leaders of both groups are proud of the fact that there have been no jurisdictional disputes in this area, and officials of the two councils have cooperated on a number of issues.

4,000 ATTEND

That Trumbull County is picnic-minded was indicated by the fact that 4,000 people turned out for the second annual party sponsored by Lodge 1375 of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

President Ernest Webb of the Lodge gave much of the credit for the success of the picnic to Mike Smiley, chairman of the arrangements committee. Rev. Charles A. Rice of Pittsburgh and ex-Cong. Herbert Bigelow of Cincinnati addressed the throng.

Labor Party Marks Third Anniversary

New York, July 22 — The American Labor Party, marking the third anniversary of its formation, pledged itself today to fight "the anti-New Deal and anti-labor forces now trumpeting up and down the land, spewing out hatred and false propaganda against the great social reforms that have spelled out a better and fuller life for the people of the country."

The party, an affiliate of Labor's Non-Partisan League, now holds the balance of power in the New York political area," Alex Rose, party secretary, declared.

"The ALP, from the day of its inception, has been a staunch champion of New Deal aims and policies," Rose declared. "In this, its fourth year of existence, it reaffirms its faith in our great President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

"In the 1939 campaign, it will lay the groundwork for the crucial test that looms ahead in 1940.

Lay Keel for First "CIO Battleship"

Four veteran employes at the New York Shipbuilding Co. yards in Camden, N. J., lay the keel for the new $53,000,000 U. S. S. North Dakota, latest addition to Uncle Sam's marine fighting force and the first battleship constructed by a company operating under contract with the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers. The four men shown in the picture were pioneers in building the powerful CIO union.

Bridges Case In 2nd Week

By MIRIAM ALLEN DeFORD

San Francisco, July 22.—A disbarred lawyer took his place among the witnesses against Harry Bridges, CIO west coast leader, as deportation hearings rounded out their second week.

Aaron Sapiro, a Los Angeles attorney who was disbarred in 1937 from practicing before the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New York, attempted to link Bridges and the Communist party through conversations which took place in 1936.

Sapiro, who has been legal counsel for the AFL sailors' union on the west coast, no longer has an extensive labor law practice, Bridges defense counsel pointed out. Carol King, Bridges' attorney, also recalled that Sapiro had been indicted on charges of monopoly practices in Chicago's laundry industry, a case which also involved Al Capone, one-time dominating racketeer of the nation's underworld.

TO CALL EXPERTS

Much of the recent testimony has been aimed at establishing the Communist party as a group desirous of overthrowing the government by force. If, the prosecution holds, it can prove Bridges a member of such an organization, it will establish grounds for deportation of the CIO leader.

To counter the testimony of one John Leech, formerly a Communist organizer in the southwest, the defense has subpoenaed two expert witnesses on Marxism and Communism, H. C. Brown and Walter Thompson, both Stanford professors.

Leech has a criminal record, having been found guilty in 1921 in Toledo of cashing a money order stolen from another person. He was expelled by the Communists as a police spy and provocateur who was known to have been in touch with Larry Doyle, one of the west coast's most notorious labor spies.

Next witness for the prosecution was John Leppold, an expelled member of the Marine Cooks union, who confessed to having a reputation as the "No. 1 red-baiter on the waterfront."

Typo Union Tells Green 'Hands Off!'

Indianapolis, July 22—The Intl. Typographical Union, one of the AFL's oldest affiliates, is indignant at the highhanded methods attempted by Pres. Green to coerce local unions into line with official policy against the Wagner Act.

The indignation was provoked by a haughty letter from Green to Detroit Local 40 of the Mailers, ITU affiliate, in which Green took the local to task for opposing amendments to act.

The ITU, in its reply in the current Journal, points out that the local is not subordinate to the AFL, that it is affiliated to the ITU, and that as a matter of fact "the ITU does not operate under a charter from the AFL."

Furthermore, says the Journal, "It goes without saying that no local of the ITU will accept any such servile status as Pres. Green is attempting to place upon them.

Workers Benefit From Canada's New 'Wagner Act'

VANCOUVER, B. C., July 22.—Making full use of Canada's newly-enacted "Wagner Act," the British Columbia division of the CIO Inland Boatmen's Union of the Pacific claims a speed record in enrolling new members.

In a month's organizing drive the union has enrolled complete crews of the government fisheries patrol boats, the Malaspina and Nitinat and the Imperial Oil Company tanker, the S. S. Albertolite.

Scores of new members have been recruited from the towboats as well as passenger vessels. The drive has had its effect, since shipping lines have granted their engineers a day off per week and two weeks' holiday with pay without being asked for the concession. The licensed personnel is aware this was won through the union's activity and are joining also.

LUMBER UNION GAINS

With most logging camps in this province running at capacity, the B. C. District Council of the CIO International Woodworkers of America is pushing its campaign to bring complete organization in the lumbering and sawmill industry.

The Cowichan Lake local of the IWA reports enrollment of 150 new members in the past two months. Many old members were brought into good standing also.

The union's "Green Gold" hour broadcasts have become very popular with the loggers and is being used to advance unionism in the camps. Recently Mayor Lyle Telford of Vancouver spoke on the program on the subject "Why You Should Join the International Woodworkers of America."

One of the IWA's main campaigns is directed against the high accident rate in the camps. Thirty-two loggers have been killed in the industry since January 1. This is four more deaths than at the same period last year.

Chicago CIO Leader On School Board

Chicago, July 22—Sam Levin, chairman of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Chicago Joint Board, and vice-chairman of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee, today became the first CIO leader in the city's history to sit on the Board of Education.

Levin, a veteran in Windy City union affairs, was appointed to the post by Mayor Edward Kelly.

When news of the mayor's action was made public, Alderman Paul Douglas, liberal, declared: "I want to congratulate the mayor upon this splendid appointment. Mr. Levin is an excellent citizen and an outstanding labor leader."

Hollywood Unions Get CIO Support

Los Angeles, July 22—The CIO came to Hollywood today with fraternal greetings and pledges of support to the newly-formed United Studio Technicians Guild, organizing medium for an estimated 40,000 movie workers here.

At the same time CIO President John L. Lewis received a wire from Earl Carroll's chorus girls in Los Angeles, asking him to help them to organize.

"The excellent organizational work that you have achieved compels us to insist that you take over chorus girls of America," they said.

The new Studio Technicians group represents a spontaneous move on the part of studio workers who have been dissatisfied with incompetent and undemocratic leadership in the Intl. Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes, AFL.

Greetings were quickly extended by the Los Angeles CIO Council, which resolved to send "fraternal greetings" and to pledge "whole-hearted support wherever possible to this organization."

'Adoption'

CHICAGO, July 22 — Miss Kathryn Lewis, daughter of the CIO president, has become the second member of her family to "adopt" one of the Chicago Newspaper Guild members striking against the Hearst papers.

Miss Lewis sent the Hearst strike committee $25 to provide for Guido Alfonsi, onetime coal miner who became a Hearst circulation branch manager. Previously Pres. Lewis had "adopted" Miss Ann Tonchick, striking Hearst business office employe.

Pump Firm Must Rehire 3 Workers

Washington, July 22 — The Viking Pump Co. was ordered today to stop discouraging membership in the CIO steel union.

Labor espionage at the Viking plant must also cease, the National Labor Relations Board directed, and three union members must be rehired with back pay. One of the men, the Board found, had been fired shortly after he had testified at an NLRB hearing.

Foss Gushard, company superintendent, hid in a real estate office across the street from headquarters of the Amalgamated Assn. of Iron, Steel & Tin Workers, in order to discover who was attending union meetings, the Board revealed.

Senate Vote Hits Movie Monopoly

Washington, July 22—CIO support for a bill to control block booking in the movie industry helped bring a favorable Senate vote here this week, in spite of opposition from Pres. Green of the AFL.

Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, stated the CIO attitude on the measure in a letter to Sen. Neely of W. Va., sponsor of the bill. He described the bill as designed to "establish community freedom in the selection of films and to relieve independent interests in the industry of monopolistic and burdensome trade practices."

Lewis To Address U.S. In Labor Day Speech

WASHINGTON, July 22.—John L. Lewis, CIO president, will speak to the nation on Labor Day, September 4, over a coast-to-coast radio network of the Natl. Broadcasting Co.

Pres. Lewis' speech will be available on 110 stations of the NBC Blue Network in all parts of the country, and including one in Montreal, Canada.

CIO organizations, Councils, local unions and other groups are planning to arrange local meetings to hear the speech, which will be broadcast from 4:00 to 4:30 P. M., Eastern Standard Time, Monday, September 4.

Next week's issue of THE CIO NEWS will carry a complete list of stations in the network. In the meantime, CIO groups are urged to contact NBC Blue Network stations in their communities to inquire whether they will carry the speech.

Firm Hails Union's Aid During Emergency

TOLEDO, July 22.—You'll have to argue a long, long time to convince Pres. Charles Pack of the Doehler Die Casting Co. here that unions create hatreds or mistrust or unwillingness to cooperate—or any of the other labels that Tory critics like to pin on organized labor.

The Doehler plant, which recently signed a national contract with the National Assn. of Die Casting Workers, was the scene on July 4 of a serious gas explosion which wrecked part of the factory. Due to the fact that the accident occurred on a holiday, no workers were killed, though a few men required hospital treatment.

In a letter to all Toledo papers, Pack referred to the "most remarkable demonstration of courage, self-reliance and heroism on the part of every man in the explosion area, that I have ever heard of in my experience of some 30 years in business."

He cited a number of individuals for heroic action to avert further destruction, despite great danger to themselves.

The union, to which all the plant's 1,700 workers belong, also was highly praised by the company president.

"While self-styled labor experts and demagogic theorists stand by and bemoan the days when they had no 'labor troubles,' the officers of the National Die Castings League (sic), an affiliate of the CIO representing the employes of the Doehler Co. promptly volunteered to waive all union rules to aid the company in this emergency," Pack declared.

The union's action was taken by National Sec.-Treas. Edward Cheyfitz, who assured the firm that union members would aid the company in any way possible during the emergency reconstruction period.

"We have done only what any other CIO union would do in such a critical period," Cheyfitz said. "As a responsible organization, we will give the company all possible aid to restore normal operations."

Catholics Rap Hearst

Chicago, July 22 — The Association of Catholic Trade Unionists, composed of members of various labor unions, has thrown its support behind the Newspaper Guild strike against the Hearst-owned Chicago American and Herald-Examiner.

The ACTU demanded that the management of the two papers "at once enter in good faith into negotiations with the Chicago Newspaper Guild looking towards a settlement of the strike."

"The management has repeatedly resorted to violence, misrepresentation and other illegal tactics to break the strike," the Catholic labor group charged.

Hearst Meets With Guild

Chicago, July 29—Representatives of the Chicago Hearst papers and striking members of the Chicago Newspaper Guild are meeting in negotiations for the third time during the course of the eight-month walkout.

Mindful that previous negotiations have indicated only a management desire to destroy the strikers' morale, Guild leaders are maintaining their fight for job security on the two papers until a definite settlement is announced.

CIO Forms New Construction Workers Union

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Formation of a United Construction Workers Organizing Committee to bring the benefits of industrial unionism to the three million workers in the construction industry was announced today by CIO Pres. John L. Lewis.

The new committee, which will be headed by his brother, A. D. Lewis, was formed in answer to thousands of requests since the CIO was started, Pres. Lewis said.

The UCWOC will aim to bring improved wages and conditions to construction workers, while at the same time eliminating the jurisdictional disputes and instability which have plagued the industry for many years. Dues will be $1.50 a month, and no initiation fees are being charged.

Headquarters of the new organization will be in the United Mine Workers Building, 15th & Eye Streets, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, July 29 — CIO Pres., John L. Lewis, appearing before the House Labor Committee to testify against crippling amendments to the wage-hour act, nailed on "a labor-baiting, whiskey-drinking, poker-playing, evil old man named Garner" the blame for recent heavy-artillery Congressional attacks on labor.

"I am against Garner in 1939 and I will be against him in 1940," Lewis declared. He predicted that Garner never would get the presidency of the United States "by baiting labor and seeking to debase Americans."

The vice-president has been field marshal of the forces which are aiding chiselling employers in their fight against a minimum wage of "25 lousy cents an hour" for underpaid workers, the CIO leader charged. His statement created a sensation among House Labor Committee members, themselves engaged in a parliamentary war with the Garnerites, as well as among the crowds of newspapermen and spectators attending the committee meeting.

Lewis urged that action on amending the wage-hour act be postponed until the law, barely a year old at the present time, has had a chance to be efficiently administered and enforced. The tory-dominated House Rules Committee is pressing for amendments which would remove protection of the act from 2,000,000 workers and seriously impair its efficiency for several hundred thousand others.

Packinghouse Union Raps Armour Stalling

CHICAGO, July 29.—CIO Packinhouse workers' demands for a national contract with Armour and Co., member of the anti-labor Big Four in the meat industry, sharpened this week with union protests against Armour's labor-baiting tactics.

Five hundred workers gathered in the yard of one Chicago plant to burn an effigy representing the company in protest against discrimination on the demotion of a union member, who was dropped from an 85-cent-an-hour job to common labor at 62.5 cents for no justifiable reason.

At the same time, Herbert March, PWOC district director, presented Armour officials with a list of close to 1,000 grievances on which management has been stalling.

ARMOUR STALLS

Armour has been stalling on union demands for a national agreement, placing ads in daily papers throughout the country claiming that the workers receive good wages, work short hours, and in general have heavenly conditions.

Chicago workers, who turned out 16,000 strong to hear John L. Lewis pledge full CIO support to the PWOC, and to vote a strike if necessary, know better.

Editor Describes Mine Problems

WASHINGTON, July 29. — Introduction of labor-saving devices in the mining industry, the large number of deaths and accidents to miners, and the continuous shrinkage in the demand for coal are the outstanding problems facing the United Mine Workers today, Ellis Searles, editor of the UMW journal, says in an article in the July issue of Labor Information Bulletin, published by the U. S. Dept. of Labor.

Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers Look Forward To Best Convention

By HAROLD ROSSMAN

DENVER, July 29.—Already certain to present one of the most outstanding programs of noted speakers and educational features ever attempted by the union, the 36th Convention of the Intl. Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, which opens here Monday, Aug. 7, is expected to top all previous meetings of the CIO affiliate for interest and attendance.

Headline speakers will include Tom Mooney, Elmer F. Andrews, Wages and Hours administrator; Harry Bridges, West Coast maritime leader, and Walter Smethurst, assistant to CIO President Lewis. Other CIO national leaders will also address the convention.

MASS MEETING

A special feature of the convention will be a giant open mass meeting honoring Tom Mooney, to be held in Denver's Civic Center, Monday evening, Aug. 7, at which CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhoods union executives will speak. Thousands of trade unionists in Colorado and surrounding states are expected to converge on Denver to hear Mooney and participate in the demonstration.

Topping the list of educational features will be a series of films showing operations in all branches of the copper industry, from mining through fabricating, which will be presented with the cooperation of the Bureau of Mines.

OVERCOME SHUT-DOWNS

This convention will wind up a year in which the union overcame the effects of shut-downs and low production levels to keep its membership intact and register a significant extension of its power in mines and plants of key operators who control the non-ferrous metals industry.

Continuance of these gains, especially in the fabricating plants of the metal monopolies, will be a major concern of the union as it outlines its organizational program for the coming year, President Reid Robinson declared.

The delegates also will have the task of setting up a program to consolidate other gains, including the signing of the first two closed shop contracts won in the "gas belt," the creation of strong local unions in several mining and smelting towns of British Columbia, Canada, and increased strength in Arizona, paradise of the open-shop operators.

Presides

AFL Heads Under Fire In Toronto

Toronto, Ont., July 29—The campaign to halt AFL splitting tactics in the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada received a spurt when the Toronto District Labor Council decided at its last meeting to ask the 55th convention of the Congress to rescind the suspension order against the industrial unions.

Composed of AFL and CIO delegates, the council, largest central labor body in the dominion, termed the expulsion order "unwarranted and arbitrary." Now before council's executive board, the motion was contained in a resolution presented by Local 2 of the Canadian Seamen's Union, an affiliate of the AFL Seamen's Union in the United States.

DEPLORES EXPULSION

The resolution deplored the fact that the Congress executive council had been influenced by AFL leaders to expel the CIO unions last January contrary to the decision of the Congress three previous conventions, which overwhelmingly voted for unity.

If this resolution is finally approved, the Toronto council's three delegates to the convention will be under instructions to vote for the rescinding of the expulsion decision.

Congress affiliates are now in receipt of the call for the convention, which will open Sept. 25 in London, Ontario. The call specifies that CIO unions will not be given representation, nor will central labor council delegates who are members of CIO unions be seated.

Report Big Gains in Gold Mine Areas

Kirkland Lake, Ont., July 29—Ontario locals of the CIO Mine, Mill and Smelter Works Union will have an encouraging report for submission to the union's international convention being held in Denver August 7.

Since the last convention, the union in Northern Ontario gold mining camps has increased its membership considerably and its officers have become outstanding leaders in the community. Four of them hold seats on city and town councils.

The union's campaign for holidays with pay embraced the whole community and won the support of all but the mining barons.

SHARE OF PROFITS

One of the union's main bids now is to obtain a share for the employes of the huge profits rolling into the pockets of the mine owners.

According to production figures released here, the mine owners have obtained $311,433,302 in dividends since 1910, or 32 per cent of the yield of the gold mines.

In view of these huge profits, the union is seeking that some of the money be returned to the community in the form of a 15 cents-an-hour wage raise for all gold mine employes. It is also asking an eight-hour day "from collar to collar," two weeks holiday with pay and the right of employes to choose their own doctor.

ACCIDENT RATE

Another factor which makes a wage boost necessary is the soaring cost of living, which has risen 21% since 1935.

Ex-Lax Sales Sluggish; Firm Has That 'Tired Feeling' About Unions

NEW YORK, July 29. — Resistance of the Ex-Lax Company to collective bargaining with District 50 of the United Mine Workers of America (Chemical & Drug Division) is creating an effective sales-resistance on the part of organized workers all over the country.

Local unions in California alone have forwarded 20 resolutions condemning the anti-labor policy of the company and promising to remember it in their purchases. The Retail Clerks Union and the Nurses Union added that their members will not recommend the scab-made product to customers and clients.

BUY NAZI MACHINERY

A key to the attitude of the management is their recent purchase of Nazi-made machinery for the New York plant. When this was known several Jewish organizations, and consumers' groups joined the fight against the firm. District 50 has maintained picket lines in front of the plant and around stores that sell Ex-Lax ever since the company fired four union members four months ago. A Labor Board referee has recommended the reinstatement of the discharged workers but the company retaliated by firing three more workers.

Fierce intimidation is exercised. Fights in the plant are common in order to provide a basis for trumped-up charges of assault and battery against union members.

Ex-Lax has no fear of the Wagner Act. Ex-Lax can disregard American unemployment and buy machinery in Germany. The only way the management can be brought to reason is through a curtailment of sales. The union asks that every member of the CIO write to the company in New York City and tell them what they think of such a labor policy.

District 50 Wins Two Labor Board Cases

WASHINGTON, July 29.—District 50 of the United Mine Workers won two major Labor Board decisions today as company unions at the Dow Chemical Co. in Midland, Mich., and the Mathieson Alkali Works at Saltville, Va., received official U. S. bans.

Dow Chemical was ordered to disestablish the Midland Chemical Workers Assn., which the NLRB found to be company-dominated, to rehire 30 employes with back pay from the time they were dismissed for union membership, and to post the Board's cease and desist orders for 60 days.

The firm was found to have used police to spy on the activities of members of Local 12,075 of the UMW, and to have used coercive methods to discourage the workers from joining the union.

ARGUMENTS FLOP

Company arguments that most of the discharged workers had been laid off for business reasons were overridden by the NLRB, which found that 30 of the men had definitely been fired for their union membership and activity.

In the Mathieson case, the Board ordered disestablishment of the Saltville-Mathieson Employes Assn., and the company was told to bargain with it no longer. The complaint had been filed by Local 12,002 of District 50, located at Saltville, Va.

Peace Plea Rejected

CIO Forms Construction Workers Union, Launches Major Campaign

To Increase Pay, End Industry's Instability

WASHINGTON, July 29.—The CIO set the wheels in motion today for a big campaign in the construction industry under the aegis of the newly-created United Construction Workers Organizing Committee.

In making public the formation of the newest CIO affiliate, CIO Pres. John L. Lewis said that "there have been thousands of requests from individuals and groups of construction workers throughout the country" for an organization which will "bring the benefits of collective bargaining to all the workers, will eliminate jurisdictional disputes and will improve their wages and working conditions."

A. D. Lewis, brother of the CIO president and a veteran official of the United Mine Workers, is chairman of the new UCWOC. Headquarters will be opened August 1 in the UMW building at Washington.

Other members of the new organizing committee are CIO Vice-Pres. Philip Murray, CIO Sec. James B. Carey, Pres. R. J. Thomas of the United Automobile Workers and Pres. Sherman Dalrymple of the United Rubber Workers.

Dues in the new construction union will be only $1.50 a month, and no initiation fees are being charged. Members of CIO local industrial unions already chartered in the field will be transferred immediately into the new union.

Aim of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, Pres. John L. Lewis said, "will be to organize all construction workers into a powerful industrial union," which will abolish the many abuses which have beset the industry in the past.

TO BRING STABILITY

"Special provisions will be made by the committee for the elimination of unauthorized strikes, jurisdictional disputes and lockouts, and for the peaceful adjudication of labor disputes," the statement said.

A system of transfer cards for members, and provision for apprentice training to eliminate the need of new workers learning the trade on non-union jobs will be arranged by the new organizing committee.

Further details of the organizing drive, which will be vigorously conducted, will be made known in the next few days, it was indicated.

THE STATEMENT

The statement of Pres. John L. Lewis follows:

"There are some three million workers employed in the construction industry, of whom less than one-third are organized.

"Since the CIO was formed, we have received thousands of requests from individuals and groups of construction workers throughout the country asking for organization and affiliation with the CIO.

"These requests have come to us because the construction workers desire a modern form of organization which will bring the benefits of collective bargaining to all the workers, will eliminate jurisdictional disputes and will improve their wages and working conditions.

"Acting under the constitution of the CIO, which calls for the effective organization of the working men and women of America into labor unions for their mutual aid and protection, the executive officers of the CIO have therefore decided to estab-

West Coast CIO Unions Use Radio

Los Angeles, Cal., July 29—Plans for a radio broadcast over one of the biggest stations in Southern California have been announced by the CIO Industrial Union Council here.

A CIO program known as "Your Daily Bread" originally scheduled for a five-day fifteen minute broadcast over station KFAC beginning July 20, had to be cancelled when the manager withdrew a previous committment from agents of the station.

The CIO committee in charge of the program then opened negotiations for time on a larger station, and expects to announce the starting date of the broadcasts shortly.

Longshoremen Aid Movie Union

Los Angeles, Cal., July 29—CIO longshoremen in San Pedro have voted to lend $1,000 to the newly formed United Studio Technicians Guild.

The new union, formed by members who formerly belonged to the Intl. Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes, affiliated recently with the CIO, and has petitioned the Natl. Labor Relations Board for certification as bargaining agent for 12,000 workers.

Vote Support For CIO Drive

Indianapolis, Ind., July 29 — Support for the CIO's Mid-Western organizational drive was voted at the last executive board meeting of the Indiana Industrial Union Council, John Bartee, secretary-treasurer of the Council announced this week.

The board also went on record in favor of having Bartee and President James Pascoe tour the state, outlining the program of the CIO to local unions.

Leads Drive

A. D. Lewis, chairman of the CIO's newly-formed United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, which has embarked on a major organizing campaign in the construction industry. Lewis is a brother of the CIO president.

Warn of Resentment If WPA Bill Stands

WASHINGTON, July 29.—A solemn warning to Congress that failure to act on the WPA situation during the closing days of this session will result in "nationwide resentment" was voiced today by Ralph Hetzel, CIO unemployment director.

The CIO statement was contained in a letter addressed to Sen. James Murray of Montana, sponsor of amendments designed to correct many of the worst abuses in the present WPA-slashing law. Together with 21 other New Deal Senators, Murray introduced a bill to restore WPA prevailing hourly wage provision and to protect monthly wage payments. In addition, he has also filed a bill to end the firing of WPA employes after they have been on the rolls for 18 months.

This legislation, Hetzel said, "will do a great deal to improve the WPA situation. But, he added, "unless these measures or very similar ones are passed at this session, there will arise in this country . . . a nationwide resentment such as has not been experienced since the days when the Republican party's 'do nothing' policy on unemployment was overwhelmingly repudiated.

"This time, as then, it will be the party in power who will be blamed by the people."

5-POINT PROGRAM

Hetzel reviewed the CIO's attitude and actions on the relief bill, recalling that Pres. John L. Lewis had stated five fundamental principles which should be written into any government work relief measure:

1. WPA jobs for all unemployed workers willing to work.
2. Guaranteed rights of self-organization for WPA workers.
3. Projects to provide all WPA workers with jobs suited to their needs and skills.
4. Projects of a socially useful and productive type.
5. Wages sufficient to preserve the American standard of living and high enough to prevent reduction of union scales in private industry.

Immediate action will have to be taken by Congress if it is to pass on any new WPA legislation. With half a dozen other important measures in the legislative hopper as the session nears its end, New Dealers are pressing for immediate consideration of the WPA amendment proposals.

Firm Ordered To Bargain

Washington, July 29 — The Holston Manufacturing Company, Knoxville, Tennessee, has been ordered by the Natl. Labor Relations Board to bargain collectively upon request with the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, as sole representative for the firm's production and maintenance employes. If an understanding is reached, the company was ordered to embody it in a written, signed contract.

The Board which found that the firm had refused to enter into a signed contract, regardless of the terms agreed upon, ruled that this constituted an unfair labor practice.

Lewis Lashes Garner

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, July 29.—In the most bluntly worded statement heard on Capitol Hill at this session of Congress, CIO Pres. John L. Lewis demanded that the House of Representatives turn down the Tory plea for crippling amendments to the federal wage-hour act, and extended his attack to the reactionary onslaught on all labor legislation, which he said "emanates" from the office of a "labor-baiting, whiskey-drinking, poker-playing, evil old man named Garner."

Referring specifically to the wage-hour law, endangered by amendments proposed by Rep. Barden of North Carolina, Lewis pounded the table at a House Labor Committee hearing as he said:

"All we are asking is that the lowest-paid be assured of 25 lousy cents an hour. I don't believe 25c an hour is too much, nor do the people I represent, believe it.

"We don't understand the reasons for this spectacle, where the Republican minority aided by a band of 100 or more renegade Democrats have conducted a war dance around the bound and prostrate form of labor.

"Many of these people were not above accepting the help of labor in gaining their seats and may plan to ask it again."

The CIO president, obviously angered by reactionary back-biting during this session, explained that "all labor wants to do is to live and to protect the nation's democratic institutions."

FLAYS GARNER

"It runs through the House Democrats and in the Senate, and it emanates from a labor-baiting whiskey-drinking, poker-playing, evil old man whose name is Garner.

"I'm against him. I'm against

Cleveland, July 29—Some 78 union employes of the Cleveland Dental Manufacturing Company celebrated the victorious conclusion of their 11-week strike last night and returned to work today.

The workers walked out 100% strong in May and remained out solidly, keeping the plant completely closed. They are members of Miscellaneous Local 217 of the United Automobile Workers of America, CIO.

A new two-year contract grants $11,000 in pay increases and guarantees other improvements in wages and working conditions, it was announced by President Axel Hansen.

The Tory War Dance

John L. Lewis voiced the feelings of millions of Americans when he denounced the labor-baiting intrigues that have disgraced the present session of Congress.

Appearing to testify against the slaughter of the Fair Labor Standards Act (the wage-hour law) by amendments which would remove millions of the lowest-paid workers from its protection, Lewis expressed the rising popular indignation against this and other Congressional attempts to destroy all legislation passed for the benefit of labor.

"We don't understand the reason for this spectacle," he said, "where the Republican minority aided by a band of a hundred or more renegade Democrats have conducted a war dance around the bound and prostrate form of labor in the well of the House. They dance with glee every time that extraordinary combination is able to hamstring labor."

There seems to be no limit to the arrogance of this tory crew who have voted to cut a million unemployed off WPA; to harry the Labor Board with an alleged investigation for the purpose of preparing the ground for the emasculation of the Wagner act; and who at this writing have out their axes to destroy the wage-hour law.

Their attempts to deny to American workers wages as low as "25 lousy cents an hour" was the last straw for the CIO leader. His voice rose in anger as he expressed labor's wrath at the tory intrigue, and as he pointed the finger publicly at Vice-President Garner as the instigator and director of this intrigue.

Big anti-labor corporations, chiseling sweatshop employers, financial interests that seek to fatten on the poverty and misery of the many—these have all had their day in the present Congress. They have found ready tools in the unholy alliance of tory Republicans and renegade Democrats that has worked so hard to starve the unemployed through the slashing of WPA, to deprive labor of its rights under the Wagner act, and to deny American workers even 25c an hour under the wage-hour law.

But labor and the American people have yet to be heard from. Many of this same tory crew, Lewis pointed out, "were not above accepting the help of labor in gaining their seats and may plan to ask it again."

When and if they do, Lewis has expressed the answer that every right-thinking citizen should give them. He told Garner that he would "never achieve the presidency of this republic by baiting labor and seeking to debase Americans". And every other tory Democrat or Republican will likewise feel labor's wrath for the crimes they are now committing against labor.

A Modern Union for Construction Workers

The CIO has opened the door of opportunity for the workers in the construction industry through the formation of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee.

Pres. John L. Lewis points out that less than one-third of the three million workers in this industry are organized.

Millions of construction workers have long been denied the benefits of collective bargaining because of AFL craft policies similar to those which prevented union organization in so many other great industries until the CIO got on the job.

Excessive initiation fees and dues, exorbitant re-entry fees, and other similar practices have resulted in exclusion rather than organization of the workers.

In this unhealthy situation, jurisdictional disputes, graft, racketeering and other abuses of all kinds have flourished.

The construction workers have been knocking on the door of the CIO for a long time. Now this door is opened to them. A committee of top-notch CIO leaders has been formed to make available to all construction workers a modern industrial union, with low and equal dues for all.

The object of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee is to unite all the workers in one organization, for the improvement of their wages and working conditions through collective bargaining.

The Committee will also make special provisions for the elimination of jurisdictional disputes and of the other evils and abuses that have cursed the industry.

This is the type of organization which forward-looking construction workers have long been demanding. The CIO pledges them full support and wishes them all success in this great enterprise of industrial organization which has now been launched.

Looking Ahead

Wreckers and Builders

THE old story about the WPA wrecking which allegedly pulled down the wrong house, is a favorite among tory members of Congress.

But what is one house compared to the whole structure of New Deal legislation and economic recovery which the tory wrecking crew is working so hard to demolish?

Most of the voters thought they were putting a construction gang on the job in Congress.

It may be funny to some people that this gang has turned into a wrecking crew which is pulling down all the wrong houses.

But the unemployed who are being driven from WPA to the breadline, hard-pressed unionists whose Wagner Act is threatened, and sweatshop workers for whom even 25c an hour is considered too much, won't be able to enjoy the joke.

Three Wrecking Jobs

The tory wreckers have been concentrating on three jobs, none of which were ordered by the people who sent them to Congress.

They have been trying to wreck the WPA program, the National Labor Relations Act and the wage-hour law.

The success of their work on WPA is testified to by the reappearance of breadlines in many American cities, the laying off of hundreds of thousands of WPA workers and the slashing of the meager wages of those who remain.

The wage-hour law is now feeling the wreckers' axe. Appropriately enough the amendments to legalize sweatshop wages and long hours for those who most need protection, have been introduced by the same Congressman Barden who sponsors the AFL leaders' amendments in the House for the wrecking of the labor relations act.

The work of the wrecking crew on the Wagner Act has been stalled for the time being by the strenuous resistance of the CIO, aided by the AFL rank and file.

But nevertheless the wrecking crew is not discouraged. It feels that it has won full license to continue its work by the passage of the Smith resolution for an investigation of the Labor Board.

The idea of this seems to be that, if the demolition of the act can not be performed at this session of Congress, at least the constructive work of the Board can be harried and hampered at every turn for the rest of the year — to loosen things up for the wrecking crew in the next session.

What's On Our Minds

When Congress adjourns, its members are supposed to return home and there to get a closer idea of what is on the minds of their constituents.

If they get the idea that the unemployed would sooner starve than have WPA jobs; that American workers love to work in sweatshops for 10c an hour; and that they don't give a hoot for the rights they have won under the Wagner Act—then look out for more and worse trouble in the next session of Congress.

But if the tory wrecking crew are shown unmistakably that the voters are not amused at their antics; if they are impressed with the fact that the American people want builders not wreckers in Congress—that they want work not breadlines for the unemployed, security and the right to organize, not sweatshop wages and the open shop—then 1940 will see victories for the builders, not the wreckers of American prosperity.

CIO Builders

When Philip Murray, Sidney Hillman and the other CIO witnesses testified before Senate and House committees on the Wagner Act, their sober and constructive statesmanship presented a most startling contrast to the reckless destructiveness of the tory blatherskites who claim to see a "menace" in the CIO.

The testimony of these statesmen of industry told of security, independence and better conditions won for the workers through union organization under the Wagner Act; of many achievements in the direction of industrial stability and peaceful labor relations; and of labor's concern for the country's welfare and prosperity.

But more than that, the CIO testimony pointed the way to checking the work of the tory wrecking crew in this Congress and other Congresses to follow.

For it is only through organization that the workers can become articulate and impress their will on Congress. In proportion as the CIO expands its organizing work in the coming months, therefore, it will play a leading part in saving the whole country from the tory wreckers who now misrepresent the people's interests in Congress.

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, July 29.—A combination of "misinformation" and a deliberate conspiracy to break down orderly labor relations were shown as the sources of AFL leadership and anti-union employer opposition to the Wagner Act by two CIO witnesses in testimony before the House and Senate Labor Committees here this week.

The two witnesses, Matt Meehan of the Intl. Longshoremen and Warehousemen and Jess Gonzalez of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, agreed in ascribing AFL demands for amendments to partisan spite against the CIO and a policy of collaborating with the worst labor-hating employers in the country.

According to Meehan, AFL and employer demands for crippling changes had a basic three-point "philosophy," which was:

1. "The law of the AFL Executive Council is higher than the law of the United States.

2. "The workers have a right to join a union of their own choice so long as this union is the AFL.

3. "In case the workers do not wish to join the AFL, the employer is allowed to influence them to do so."

LOOKS AT RECORD

Citing the record of the AFL leadership in the industry under Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers jurisdiction, Gonzalez analyzed the Eagle-Picher and Tennessee Copper Co. cases, in which AFL officials combined with reactionary bosses to violate the Wagner act in setting up stooge unions and attempting to thwart the workers' choice of their own type of organization.

Gonzalez told how the Eagle-Picher Co. and others in the tri-state area (Missouri, Arkansas, Oklahoma) supplied $17,500 to one Mike Evans to set up a company union. Evans, who was also a mine owner, "signed a contract with himself as an operator, signed it as president of this union, recognizing himself as sole collective bargaining agency for his own employes."

Pres. Green, who chartered this company outfit in the AFL as part of his offensive against the CIO, had the nerve, as Gonzalez pointed out, to criticize the Labor Board for hearing charges against it.

AS USUAL, MISINFORMED

On the Tennessee Copper case, Gonzalez explained that the Board ordered a new election after and AFL stooge group had won from the CIO with the aid of open employer intimidation. Green, who also charged the Board with pro-CIO "bias" on this case, went to the length of complaining that the Board had set aside an AFL "contract" in favor of the CIO.

"As usual, President Green was misinformed," Gonzalez said. "No contract was involved. No contract was set aside. An election was held. The CIO protested the results because of employer interference. The Board held hearings on these protests, and the evidence led it to throw out the election and hold a new one — this time a fair one, without employer interference. And the workers selected their real choice, the CIO union."

Both Gonzalez and Meehan declared that the defense of the Wagner Act against all amendments was essential to maintain peaceful, stable labor relations, and that the defense of the Act was part of the struggle to maintain democracy in America.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—The president of a powerful union which has won nationwide respect for its 30-year record of peaceful industrial relations warned the Senate Committee on Education and Labor today that proposed Wagner Act amendments would help tear down the system of collective bargaining which has been developed in recent years.

The witness was Sidney Hillman, vice-president of the CIO, head of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and chairman of the executive council of the Textile Workers Union of America.

Recalling how the industrial form of organization in the clothing workers union has eliminated jurisdictional disputes and endless squabbles by bringing all the groups of workers into one bargaining agency, Hillman predicted that the craft union amendments backed by the AFL "will threaten with destruction what has been built up during almost 30 years of constructive and cooperative effort."

PRAISES FLEXIBILITY

The CIO official took the position that one of the Wagner Act's greatest assets is its lack of rigidity and the freedom it provides the Labor Board to use its discretion in complex and changing cases.

"I am apprehensive of any effort to freeze the detailed application of fundamental principles into permanent and unchangeable law," he declared.

"The Wagner Act has been successful largely because it is confined in its provisions to the statement of fundamentals, leaving their application to the sound discretion and good common sense of an administrative body which is rapidly becoming expert in this difficult field of human endeavor.

"What would the proposed craft amendment do to the structure which we have built up over a close to 30-year period in the clothing industry?" Hillman asked.

WOULD SPLIT UNION

"Despite the industry's uninterrupted history of industrial organization, the amendment would require a vote of each separate craft—cutters, pressers and the rest—to determine whether a majority of that craft desired to bargain as an independent unit or as part of an industrial unit.

"The amendment is an open invitation to every irresponsible group in the labor field to attempt to seize control of a single craft in a single shop, and having won certification for that craft as a separate bargaining agency, to disrupt the process of collective bargaining in that shop.

"Similarly, every employer desiring to weaken and finally rid himself of the union would encourage the organization of 'independent' craft groups, careful to avoid the stigma of company unionism, and by separate elections and certifications of a few crafts attempt to break down the union in his factory."

Adoption of the AFL amendments, he said, "might provide a temporary crutch to certain affiliates of the AFL which limp along on their antiquated structures over the difficult terrain of the mass-production industries. But they would deal body blows to those progressive affiliates of both the AFL and CIO which travel in a vehicle designed to make the journey in speed and comfort."

CITY-WIDE PACTS

Much of the success of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers in stabilizing the industry has come from a series of market-wide agreements with employers' associations, Hillman added. Yet the AFL leadership, "piqued by a single decision" of the Labor Board has proposed prohibiting certification of unions on such a multiple-employer scale—a move which would injure CIO and AFL unions alike.

The CIO vice-president made it clear that many NLRB decisions seem to have favored the AFL craft unionism, but, he added, "I have never permitted differences in policy to blind me to the inestimable value of the National Labor Relations Act or to the intelligence, integrity and devotion to duty of those primarily charged with its administration.

"I have never been tempted to tear down the whole structure because I felt that some of the windows needed washing."

Lists Act's Benefits

Pres. Sidney Hillman of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers shown as he told the Senate Committee on Education and Labor how the Wagner Act has helped bring better industrial relations to the men's clothing industry. Hillman, who is a CIO vice-president and a high official of the textile union, charged that most foes of the Act are either misinformed or have never given collective bargaining a chance to work.

CIO to Organize Construction Workers

lish the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee.

"The work of this committee will be directed by Chairman A. D. Lewis, who will be authorized to issue charters to construction workers who desire to become affiliated with a modern industrial union in their industry.

TO TRANSFER LOCALS

"A large number of Local Industrial Unions have already been chartered by the CIO in this industry and they will be transferred to the UCWOC at once, to compose its initial membership.

"The United Construction Workers Organizing Committee will be organized on an industrial basis. Dues will be $1.50 per month for all members in all classifications of employment in the construction industry. No initiation fees are being charged.

ABOLISH EVILS

"The aim of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee will be to organize all construction workers in a powerful industrial union which will abolish the many evils and abuses that have beset the industry in the past and improve wages and working conditions of all those employed in it.

"Special provisions will be made by the committee for the elimination of unauthorized strikes, jurisdictional disputes and lockouts, and for the peaceful adjudication of labor disputes.

"A system of transfer cards will be arranged for the benefit of union members, and arrangements will be made under the union agreements for training skilled mechanics so that workers may not have to learn their trades on non-union jobs.

FOUR OBJECTS

"The declared objects of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee are as follows:

"1. To unite into one organization, regardless of creed, color, nationality or classification of employment, all workers in and around construction work.

"2. To increase wages and improve the conditions of employment of the members of the organization and to secure through proper negotiations joint agreements covering wages, hours and working conditions of its members.

"3. To stabilize the construction industry through the elimination of unauthorized strikes, jurisdictional disputes and lockouts, and to provide for adjudication of disputes arising between employers and employes in the industry.

"4. To provide for the education and better living conditions of our members and their families and to obtain a greater participation in the economic and political affairs of our country."

Chicago Times Signs Guild Contract

Chicago, July 29—The Chicago Times, tabloid daily, ended three years of negotiations today by signing a contract with the American Newspaper Guild.

The agreement, which will vastly strengthen the Chicago Guild—now engaged in the eighth month of its strike against the two Hearst papers—provides that the management must first apply to the union when filling editorial staff vacancies, and only after five days can it hire anyone else.

Three weeks vacation with pay, high dismissal indemnities, eight per cent differential for the night shift and, with few exceptions, the 8-hour day, 40-hour week are provided by the agreement.

Textile Union Wins Case

New York, July 29 — Charges made against the American Viscose Corporation by the Textile Workers Union of America, were upheld by Dr. Willard E. Hotchkiss, impartial chairman, following a hearing on a dispute over the patrol system.

Herbert W. Payne, director of the synthetic yarn division of the union said the ruling upholds the TWUA's charge that the company refused to give preferential employment to technologically displaced workers in any of its plants, as specifically provided in Dr. Hotchkiss's previous decision handed down March 23.

The impartial chairman's latest ruling, affecting employes in the company's plants at Marcus Hook and Lewistown, Pa.; Parkersburg, W. Va., and Roanoke, Va. reaffirmed his previous decision and laid down specific instructions for the company to follow in re-employing displaced workers.

him officially, individually and personally, concretely and in the abstract.

"I am against him in 1939 and I'll be against him in 1940 when he seeks the presidency. He'll never get the presidency by baiting labor and seeking to debase Americans.

"I object to Mr. Garner putting his foot upon the neck of millions of Americans by conducting this intrigue on every proposal to protect the rights of labor.

"Gentlemen may arise and say that Mr. Lewis has made a personal attack on Mr. Garner. Yes, I have made a personal attack on Mr. Garner because his knife is searching for the quivering, pulsating heart of my people.

Lewis explained that the wage-hour act has had no time to be thoroughly tested, that it has never been thoroughly administered — let alone enforced — and that until more time has passed, amendments would be sheer folly.

LIKENED TO THIEVES

"Obviously, he said, 'the people against whom the penalties of this act are directed are opposed to it. Certainly opponents of 25c an hour would like to cripple the act."

FIVE WITNESSES

Lewis was one of five people who appeared before the House Labor Committee on the wage-hour problem — a question which in the closing days of the Congressional session has become a test of the strength of the liberal and reactionary blocs in the House of Representatives.

The Labor Committee, overwhelmingly liberal in sentiment, is engaged in a struggle with the Rules Committee, perhaps the most powerful — and also the most reactionary — single group in the lower House.

Early in the session Wage-Hour Administrator Elmer F. Andrews suggested to Chairman Mary Norton of the Labor group that minor amendments to the wage-hour law to "iron out a few rough spots" might be advisable. The Andrews proposals were incorporated into a bill drawn by Mrs. Norton, and were sharply criticized by CIO leaders both for their content and for the danger of more serious amendments being tacked on to the bill by representatives of the sweat-shoppers.

PREDICTIONS COME TRUE

The CIO predictions were shown to be well-founded when Cong. Barden, a member of the Labor Committee and sponsor of the AFL amendments to the Wagner Act, introduced a bill which would eliminate an estimated two million workers from coverage by either the wage or hour provisions of the Act.

BREAK PRECEDENTS

In an action unprecedented in recent Congressional history, the Rules Committee proposed to give the Barden bill a "rule" — that is, a place on the House calendary —even though it had not been passed upon by the Labor Committee. At the same time, it refused to give the Norton bill an opportunity to come before the House with provisions to protect it from recationary amendments.

These actions brought forth sharp comment from members of the Labor Committee. Rep. Welch of California said the Rules group had "committed parliamentary larceny, while Rep. Wood of Missouri described it as "arrogant" and Rep. Keller of Illinois charged that "the Rules Committee is trying to run this Congress. If so, let them take the responsibility."

Box Workers Renew Pact

Indianapolis, July 29. — United Paper Box Workers Local Industrial Union 31 renewed its contract with the Inland Container Corporation plant here for another year. Four hundred production workers are covered.

The company tried to reduce a wage increase granted last year, but the union kept the old rate, which also includes sole bargaining rights, check-off, a 40-hour week and strict seniority.

Representatives of the United Mine Workers sign a two-year contract with the Harlan Coal Operators Assn., ending a three-month lockout of 6,500 miners. Seated, left to right: Sec. George Ward and Vice-Pres. R. E. Lawson of the Association; Earl Houck of the UMW legal department; O. E. Gassoway of the UMW executive board; Attorney C. Dawson for the Assn., and Pres. William Turnblazer of UMW Dist. 19.

WASHINGTON, July 29. — Following is the full text of the testimony of CIO Pres. John L. Lewis before the House Labor Committee against amendments to the Wage-Hour Act:

"I come before the committee today to say that that great membership and those great instrumentalities and all that they represent are opposed to the amendments to this act," he said.

"There are numerous groups of amendments. Labor has had no opportunity to become familiar with the application of the vast crop of amendments. So far as I know, this is the first public hearing that the committee has had.

"We think the Administrator, Mr. Andrews, erred when he came before this committee to suggest amendments to the act before he had undertaken the job of administering and enforcing the act.

"We do not believe the act has had an opportunity to demonstrate its effectiveness, its elements of strength or its weakness, or its impositions or its blessings. We think the act is entitled to an opportunity to demonstrate its effectiveness its lack of effectiveness. It has not had that opportunity. There has not been any effective administration or enforcement of the act.

CHISELERS FIGHT LAW

"Obviously the people against whom the penalties of this act are directed are opposed to its application, its spirit, its intent, and its effective administration.

"Certainly the chiselers in industry, in all industry, who believe that 25 cents an hour is too much for an American would like to cripple this act with amendments, all running to the point of destroying its effectiveness.

"So he who proposed in this Congress to amend this act must have known that he was opening up the flood-gates of complaint and lamentations and propaganda and sinister political influence which has revolved around the discussion of this proposition ever since this committee began to sit upon it.

" Why, certainly, the Amalgamated Association of Porch Climbers and Sneak Thieves would like to get together and have the various State acts covering their professions amended, so that they might take ladies' purses with impunity; or that county fairs might be made more convenient for the purposes of that association by refusing to have the police interfere with them.

"It all runs to the point that the Congress of the United States believed that this act was vitally necessary when it was enacted; that the act would run against certain industries and certain peoples and give protection to certain workers in industry, to the extent of many millions in the United States.

'GIVE IT A CHANCE'

"Why not give it a chance? That condition has not changed. The workers by and large have not been consulted about these amendments. They have had no opportunity to come in here from the industries of the South, or the industries of the West, of the Pacific or the Atlantic seaboard, to tell their story in competition with the corporation lawyers and lobbyists that have infested this Capitol for the past number of months, asking for relief from the provisions of a Federal statute, for certain individuals who believe that 25 cents an hour is too much for an American.

"I do not believe that 25 cents an hour is too much for an American and the people I represent do not believe that 25 cents an hour is too much for an American. And we do not believe that the Congress of the United States believes that.

"We want this act to have a chance. We do not understand the necessity for this spectacle that has recently confronted the Republic, in the House of Representatives, where the Republican minority, aided by a band of 100 or more renegade Democrats, have conducted a war dance around the bounden, prostrate form of labor in the well of that House, whirling like dervishes, and dancing with glee when that extraordinary combination is able to do something to hamstring labor in the United States.

"Many of the men who participated in that outrageous conduct in the House are men who, in the past, have not hesitated to accept the help of labor to be elected to their offices, and who are looking forward to asking for the help of labor in their respective districts in 1940.

'CHANCE TO LIVE'

"All labor asks in this republic of ours is a chance to live. It wants to live so that it can make a contribution to our public life and to the internal economy of our nation; so that it can protect this institution of Congress and this flag of ours; so it can protect the desirable and meritorious institutions of our republic; so it can protect the Congressmen's salaries — whatever they are.

"It is only asking in this instance, before this House, that it be permitted to the least of them to be assured of 25 lousy cents an hour.

"You know, the genesis of this campaign against labor in the House of Representatives is not hard to find.

"It is within the Democratic party. It runs across to the Senate of the United States and emanates there from a labor-baiting, poker-playing, whisky-drinking, evil old man whose name is Garner.

"Some gentlemen may rise in horror and say, 'Why Mr. Lewis has made a personal attack on Mr. Garner.'

"Yes, I make a personal attack on Mr. Garner for what he is doing, because Garner's knife is searching, searching for the quivering, pulsating heart of labor. And I am against him.

"I am against him officially, individually and personally, concretely and in the abstract, when his knife searches for the heart of my people.

"I am against him in 1939 and I will be against him in 1940 when he seeks the Presidency of the United States.

"And I say to Mr. Garner and I say to the people of the United States that he will never achieve the Presidency of this Republic by baiting labor and seeking to debase Americans.

"I have no objection to Mr. Garner if he wants to do it and his neighbors let him get away with it, to debasing sheep men and cattle men in Texas by charging them extortionate interest for loans through the banks that he controls.

HITS INTRIGUE

"But I object to Mr. Garner putting his foot upon the neck of millions of Americans by conducting this intrigue that he has been conducting in recent weeks in this Congress on every proposal that protected the rights of labor or sought to give labor increased or additional privilege.

"I say to this committee—and I am trying to say it briefly, although I am rather full of this subject—that all of these amendments should be laid aside in this session of Congress and the people against whom this act is directed come to know that the Congress of the United States and the republic require and expect them to comply with the law.

"And when there is a record of experience in the administration of this act; when its weaknesses and elements of strength are so recorded that they can be read by the Congress and by the people, will then be the time to take up the question of what are virtuous or non-virtuous amendments to this act.

PROBLEM FOR CONGRESS

"I hope that Mr. Andrews and his administration, whom I admire very highly, will give a little attention to this act from the standpoint of its enforcement and not from the standpoint of its amendment to meet the ideas of individuals in his administration.

"There is work to do. Americans are hungry. Americans want to be protected against further debasement of their living conditions.

"Gentlemen, there is a crisis in your nation, do you know it? Your country is not out of the woods. There are millions unemployed. And this Congress has made no contribution to the well-being of the average American in the seven months it has been in existence, at the expense of this country.

"If the House of Representatives wants to do something, let it set aside some hours of debate, so that its great intellects can tell the American people where 12,000,000 workers can get jobs. There is a task that will tax their I. Q.'s. There is a job for them.

"Do not tinker around and chisel away at acts that were passed with enthusiasm and great majorities and never given a chance to demonstrate themselves.

New Homes for Old

A department dealing with the need for better housing and how to obtain it, conducted by the CIO Committee on Housing.

A New Approach

By THOMAS HUMPHRIES

At the recent meeting of the CIO Housing Committee a new approach to the housing problem was worked out.

It was decided that the Committee would concentrate on helping the various CIO internationals develop specific housing programs to meet their specific needs. In other words, the main activity of the CIO Housing Committee—aside from its legislative work—will be to help the individual CIO unions analyze the housing problems of their members and devise ways of solving these problems.

HELP UNIONS

To illustrate: The CIO Housing Committee is now cooperating with United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing, and Allied Workers. It has supplied the UCAPAWA with information on the cities and towns where UCAPAWA members are located. It has told the union which towns have local housing authorities already established and have USHA housing projects under way and in which towns the union will have to go to bat before local authorities are set up. It is studying the means whereby the needs of UCAPAWA members among the farming population and the migratory workers may be met through the aid of the Farm Security Administration and the United States Housing Authority.

Work is also being carried on with the State, County and Municipal Workers of America. A questionnaire is being drawn up for possible use by the SCMWA in studying housing needs in state capitals. Prominent housing experts are being asked to write articles for the SCMWA's monthly paper.

During the next few months the CIO Housing Committee plans to extend this type of activity considerably. Any unions that are interested in buckling down immediately to a serious consideration of their members' housing problems contact the CIO Housing Committee without delay.

ROLE OF COUNCILS

Naturally, there is still as great a need as ever before for housing action on the part of Industrial Union Councils.

The international unions can get their locals interested in doing something. But this "something" must always be coordinated with the activities of other local unions in the same city or town. A cannery workers local cannot, by itself, carry the whole burden of agitating for a local housing authority. But when cannery workers, textile workers, office workers and others work together — through their local industrial union council—then real results can be expected.

'Guardian of Morals' OKs Wholesale Rape Of Rights, Union Says

By SWANSON C. SHIELDS

PONTIAC, Mich., July 29.—Ruthless disregard of the constitutional rights of labor was charged to the Michigan state police in a telegram sent to Gov. Dickinson by UAW-CIO officials here last week.

Rushed into Pontiac by Michigan officials when the Pontiac police department refused to use violence to break a strike called by the union against the Fisher Body plant here, the state troopers launched a wave of terrorism against the strikers.

Picket lines were smashed by force, several union leaders arrested, unionists insulted by top-ranking officers and spectators were manhandled by Michigan's streamlined "Storm Troopers."

Almost 200 members of the state police force, armed with tear-gas and machine guns, patrolled the strike area two days for protection to scabs.

Despite the strike-breaking tactics of the state police, the strike remains 100 per cent effective. Even under police protection, there were not enough scabs to operate the plant.

The Fisher plant here is among the 11 General Motors plants on strike in the UAW-CIO's fight for a supplementary agreement for tool and die makers, maintenance men and other skilled workers.

Pontiac CIO Rolling Up New Gains

Pontiac, Mich. — July 29. — A scrappy CIO continues to roll up new victories in this automobile town.

The recently-formed Pontiac CIO Industrial Union Council represeenting 40,000 workers won a smashing victory in its first skirmish when it wrung from the city government a pledge for maximum relief funds.

Through pressure exerted by to urge Michigan Congressmen the CIO, city officials also voted to support the Casey-Murray bill which is being pushed by the CIO on a national scale.

Victory of the CIO in its fight for the unemployed was described here as "very significant in view of the notorious anti-labor record of Pontiac officials."

Fresh from a clear-cut victory over the Homer Martin union-busters, the Pontiac CIO is forging a strong labor movement here. Today it is recognized as a powerful force in this community — a force fighting to make Pontiac a better place in which to live.

WPA Builds Lots of Roads

Washington, July 29. — WPA workers have built or improved about 68,000 miles of streets and roads on projects completed during an eight-month period ending March 1, Col. F. C. Harrington, Work Projects Commissioner, announced this week.

This is an aggregate mileage sufficient to span the continent nearly 24 times from New York to San Francisco, he said.

Delegate

GM Strike Hits 12th Plant

Detroit, July 29—With negotiations for a supplementary contract being stalled by General Motors negotiators, the United Automobile Workers, CIO, today had tied up a twelfth plant and threatened strikes at GM powerhouses throughout the state of Michigan.

The latest plant to close down in the strike of tool and die makers, engineering and maintenance workers, was Fisher No. 1 at Flint, where a Homer Martin call for a walkout had been disregarded a few weeks previous. Three other Flint tool and die plants have taken strike votes.

UAW officials said the strike "went off like clockwork," with 500 of the plant's 550 employes on the picket line.

Demands of the powerhouse men concern wages and working conditions, and are to be consolidated with the tool and die makers' demands by UAW representatives at the parley.

CALL MASS MEETING

A mass meeting in front of the General Motors office building at Detroit to call attention of corporation executives to the strikers' unity was also scheduled for this week.

With its key plants closed down tight, and with UAW members employed in independent tool and die shops refusing to work on products ordered by General Motors, the colossus of the auto industry has lost a two-week advantage in the race for production of 1940 models. Chrysler, which had been held up by the strike at Briggs Body Mfg. Co. earlier this year, has caught up with GM on its 1940 work.

News of this development, first published in the Wall Street Journal and printed in local papers, gave the GM management a bad case of irritations and unbelieved denials.

The strikers, all of them skilled workers, are seeking a supplementary contract to the main GM agreement which will recognize the UAW as their bargaining agency, lift wages 10c an hour and improve seniority system and working conditions.

Housing Confab Evades Discussion On Key Problems

By JOHN ANDERSON

(By Trans-Atlantic Airmail)

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, July 15.—Over 800 delegates from 34 countries attended the 17th congress of the International Federation for Housing and Town Planning held in Stockholm, Sweden, from July 8 to July 15.

Delegates ranged from local administrative officials, architects, engineers, town planners, housing experts, and interested private individuals to a scattering of bank directors and real estate men.

Only one of the 800 delegates, John Andrews, as observer for the CIO Housing Committee, officially represented trade union organizations. This is the most significant fact of the congress. The absence of trade unionists resulted in the congress' failure to consider adequately the problems of that vast low-income group whose housing needs are most urgent. Instead the delegates treated the questions from a narrow and technical viewpoint.

COULDN'T DENY FACTS

Despite the theoretical level of the reports and discussion, the congress could not conceal a number of important and ugly facts. The delegates could not deny the miserable housing conditions of agricultural workers.

They could not deny the precarious economic position of old people no longer able to work, a position which presents them with the prospect either of becoming an added burden upon relations or inmates of an institution or poorhouse. Yet the Italian reporter was able to conclude that there was no problem at all.

The reports of the countries, represented at the congress revealed no comprehensive program effectively designed to meet the housing needs of low-income groups. Some slight measures have been taken to better the living conditions of agricultural workers in a few countries.

The reports did not go beyond suggesting glorified poor-houses as the way out for the aged. None suggested that increasing social security and pension benefits might be the basis for a satisfactory solution.

No country at the conference indicated any extensive provisions for single workers in their current housing programs. More attention, however, was given to the housing problems of people with large families.

PICK LOS ANGELES

The next international congress on housing and town planning has been set for Los Angeles.

If American labor wants better housing at rents within reach of the ordinary worker's income, trade unions and other labor organizations can utilize this opportunity to transform an international organization used now primarily as a forum for theoretical discussion into a practical means for bringing action.

Stool-Pigeon Parade Attacks Bridges

By MIRIAM ALLEN DEFORD

SAN FRANCISCO, July 29.—The dreary procession of ex-Communists and undercover men continues as the Harry Bridge deportation hearing enters its third week at the tiny government building on Angel Island in San Francisco harbor.

The prosecution expects to finish its case within the next few days, at which time the hearing will be moved to the mainland and thrown open to the public. Defense counsel expect to take about four weeks to present their case.

The testimony of the second week's witnesses may be summarized as follows:

1. William Howard of Portland, former Marine Firemen union official: "A dozen or fifteen people told me Bridges was a Communist."

2. Joseph W. Marcus, employed during 1934 at a night club and bar run by the father of Arthur Scott, alias Kent, alias Margolis, a confessed burglar who was pardoned by ex-Gov. Merriam for his services to the Dies Committee.

IDENTIFIES WRONG MAN

Marcus' testimony was centered in an assertion that during the 1934 longshore strike here, Communist party headquarters were located in the same building as the union office. Marcus' value as a witness tumbled when he identified Dean James Landis of Harvard Law School—the trial examiner at the hearing—as Bridges.

3. Theodore Stark of Bellingham, Wash., a former Communist who did not know Bridges.

4. M. R. Bacon, member of the Portland, Ore., red squad and a former undercover man in the Communist party, called as an "expert" witness on Communism.

Dean Landis has ruled that in a deportation hearing, testimony bearing on the reputation of the accused may be granted greater credence that would hear-say testimony in a court trial. Inasmuch as not one of the government witnesses has been able to give proof of Bridges' membership in the Communist party, this is considered a vital legal point.

Wages Up 60% In CIO Pact

EL PASO, Tex., July 29—Wage increases ranging up to 60% were won by the CIO for striking Mexican bakers, Maurice Dineen, CIO field representative, announced.

Four large firms came to agreement with the CIO on the wage rates, at the same time consenting to a marked reduction in hours. Six smaller firms which have refused to deal with the union face possible Labor Board action.

Senate Group OKs Anti-Spy Bill

Aimed At Foes Of Labor

Washington, July 29.—Designed to put a Federal damper on labor spies, professional finks, scab herders, private industrial armies and arsenals, and other vicious anti-labor weapons, the LaFollette-Thomas Oppressive Labor Practices Bill (S. 1970) was reported to the Senate this week by the Committee on Education and Labor.

The bill, based on almost three years of investigations by the LaFollette Civil Liberties Committee, has received the unanimous support of labor throughout the country. Pres. Lewis, testifying at earlier hearings, said:

"In passing this bill, our government will take a long step toward securing not only the right of workers to organize in trade unions, but will secure its own future and its own safety as well. The forces with which this bill will deal are not only the enemies of labor organization. They are enemies of democracy and of all government that is not dedicated to their profit alone."

OBJECTIVES

In its report this week, the Senate Labor Committee, headed by Sen. Thomas of Utah, declared "the bill will give vitality to the rights of free speech and assembly guaranteed by the Constitution, which have been denied by private spy systems and by private force."

The report also cited unanimous support by all labor and progressive groups, and remarked: "The committee conducting the investigation under S. Res. 266 (The LaFollette Committee) reported that throughout the entire course of its investigation not a single witness was found who presented a reasoned justification for the use of labor spies, machine guns, professional strike-breakers, or for the employment of armed men away from company property.

"Similarly, the hearings on the bill itself produced not a single witness to defend the practices against which the bill is directed."

The Senate Labor Committee further pointed out that the constitutionality of the bill has been carefully checked by Attorney-General Murphy, who gave it a clean legal bill for passage. According to the Committee report, it will outlaw; 1. labor spies; 2. strikebreakers and strikebreaking agencies; 3. armed private police off company property; and 4. industrial munitions, machine guns, sawed-off shotguns, and bombs containing chemical gases.

Protest WPA Cuts

Six CIO Unions Meet During September

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

WASHINGTON, July 31.—Six important CIO national unions and two state CIO Councils hold conventions during the month of September.

On September 4, the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, will hold its fifth convention in Springfield, Mass. The union, which has a membership of nearly 158,000, was formed in 1935.

The Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, with a membership of more than 24,500, will open its convention in Jersey City, N. J., September 8. On September 11 the United Rubber Workers will meet in LaCrosse, Wis., and the International Oil Workers will convene in Hammond, Ind., on the same day.

Another of the larger CIO national unions, the Transport Workers Union of America, with a membership of more than 90,000, will open in Atlantic City, September 13.

The Washington State Industrial Union Council will hold its second convention in Tacoma, September 16, and the Ohio Council will meet in Columbus, on the 29th.

HOSIERY WORKERS

In addition, the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, a division of the Textile Workers Union of America, will meet in New York City beginning September 18. The convention at which the TWUA was formed by a merger of the Textile Workers Organizing Committee and the United Textile Workers, was held in Philadelphia last May.

On September 27, the State, County and Municipal Workers will hold its national convention in New York City. It has a membership of more than 52,000.

Ask Passage Of Mine Safety Bill

Washington, July 29—Death of 28 Kentucky coal miners in a disaster this week prompted Pres. John L. Lewis to send a letter to all Congressmen and Senators urging immediate passage of bills S. 2420 and H. R. 6532, which set up Federal standards of mine safety regulations.

"Last week 28 coal miners died like rats in a hole," Lewis wrote. "The loss of these lives was preventable, and the accumulation of explosive quantities of gas and dust was contrary to law. Inadequate and criminally negligent mine inspection permitted this financially irresponsible coal company to operate without regard to the safety of the lives of its employes.

"As a result, 28 lives were lost, and the wives and children of these men become dependent on public charity. The same hazard of eminent disaster hangs over hundreds of other coal mines."

HUMANITARIAN GESTURE

Lewis appealed for quick passage of the two mine inspection bills, saying they "can be passed within a few days if each member of Congress will only resolve to take a few minutes' time to exercise his personal influence."

Carpenters Fight AFL Split Attempts in Canada

Victoria, B. C., July 29 — The local union of the AFL United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners unanimously rejected orders from its general executive board to support the expulsion of CIO unions from the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada. Instead the local voted in favor of unity in Canada's largest trade union center.

The union's move was warmly acclaimed by the Victoria Trades and Labor Council which endorsed the unity resolution.

Many other AFL union locals are expected to follow the same course with orders from their executive boards. The sentiment here is predominantly for unity.

Delegates are being named to the 55th annual convention of the Trades and Labor Congress meeting in London, Ontario, Sept. 18 who will vote to reinstate CIO unions in the congress. They were suspended last January on the demand of the AFL executive council.

Quarry Union Files Charges In Hawaii

Honolulu, T. H., July 29—Charges of anti-union attacks by the Ready-Mix Cement Co., and a petition for certification as sole bargaining representative have been filed by the CIO Quarry Workers Union with the National Labor Relations Board.

The union accuses the company, notorious for its low wages and long hours, of using foremen and stooges to intimidate the workers against belonging to the CIO. A petition in favor of a company union was circulated on company property during working hours, the union charges.

HOUSE REACTIONARIES PUSH ANTI-LABOR WAR

The News In Brief

Wagner Act

Washington. — Three CIO international presidents, four industrial union council officials and Lee Pressman, general counsel, took the stand at Senate Labor Committee hearings this week to protest against adoption of proposed amendments to the Wagner Act.

80,000 Vote

Washington. — Eighty thousand auto workers, employed by Chrysler, Briggs and Motor Products, will soon take part in National Labor Relations Board elections which are expected to place the CIO United Automobile Workers strongest position in its history.

Guild

San Francisco. — Delegates to the sixth annual convention of the American Newspaper Guild here received praise from union and public officials for gains made in recent years.

Garner

Washington—John L. Lewis' attack on Vice-Pres. Garner and his Tory cohorts won criticism from the business-controlled press and praise from the people, observers here declared after watching reactions to the CIO leader's sensational statement.

THE CIO IN ACTION: Above: Women take to the picket line in the United Automobile Workers strike at Cleveland, Ohio, following brutal police attacks on tool and die strikers at the General Motors Fisher Body plant there. Lewis's Charges Proved

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—Congress moved towards adjournment today with the House Tory bloc engaged in open warfare against all labor and progressive legislation.

Making no effort to hide its reactionary attack, the bloc composed of anti-New Deal Democrats and gloating Republicans in rapid fashion turned down the President's lend-spend bill and extension of lending facilities for the government slum clearance program, passed a vicious anti-alien bill, appropriated $50,000 for a smear "investigation" of the National Labor Relations Board, and seemed bent on refusing to amend the worst sections of the Woodrum WPA bill.

A move to cripple the wage-hour administration by denying it funds to operate more than a skeleton staff was halted, for the time being at least, by popular pressure mobilized by the United Shoe Workers of America.

Fallen by the wayside were such measures as the Wagner Health Bill, which had the support of the administration and labor; and the Wagner Child Refugee Bill, to permit entrance of 20,000 children from Germany during the next two years.

The Senate Civil Liberties Committee looked forward to another year of life, however, as the Senate Audit and Control Committee approved an allotment of $50,000 to carry on the work of investigating the Associated Farmers outfit on the west coast.

W. Virginia Mine Signs With Union

Charleston, W. Va., Aug. 5.—A contract covering 2000 miners of the Kingston-Pocahontas Coal Co., has been signed by the United Mine Workers. The McKell Coal & Coke Co., is now the only major West Virginia coal mining firm not yet under union agreement.

Labor groups through the state attacked Governor Holt for what they termed was his strike-breaking attempts to get the miners to desert their union if necessary and go back to work before they got a signed contract.

Before the signing of the contract the Governor had written a letter to the miners advising them to return to work and informing them that he would not permit them to be placed on the relief rolls.

Clothing Union — Industry Plan Lifts Wages 10%, Eliminates Chiselling

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—Eight thousand workers in the men's clothing industry in the East have won wage increases totalling $500,000 a year as a result of the union's stabilization program, Sidney Hillman, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, announced today.

The "chiseling five per cent" in the men's clothing industry, which is 95% organized, were brought into line, Hillman said, under the stabilization program. Leading manufacturers loaned their technical experts as "dollar-a-year men" to aid the plan, which has resulted in five and ten per cent increases in piece-rates for underpaid workers in New York City, Philadelphia, New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

Initiated by Hillman and the Amalgamated's General Executive Board, the stabilization program was planned to eliminate cut-throat competition at the expense of labor between both markets and manufacturers, as well as between contractors working for the same manufacturer.

Enforcement of the program on a national scale, Hillman said, has eliminated temptations to favor, exempt or give special consideration to individual firms which result in tearing down the general wage structure.

The stabilization commission made up of both union and management experts, determines the piece rates for every operation in grades I and II, the cheaper lines of clothing where "chiseling" was possible. Hillman has made himself personally responsible for the enforcement of these rates on a national scale.

Packinghouse Workers Win Two Polls

Chicago, Aug. 5.—The Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee today rang up two major victories in its drive to unionize the industry's "Big Four" packers.

At Armour's meat processing plant on 31st Street here, the PWOC scored an easy Labor Board victory, getting 660 votes to only 148 against the union, according to S. Dorfman, regional NLRB director here.

Meanwhile, the PWOC scored an overwhelming NLRB victory at the Cudahy plant in Denver, Colo., trouncing an independent union by a 142-16 score.

Steel Union Plans Drive On Bethlehem

By VIN SWEENEY

CHICAGO, Aug. 5. — The "Little Steel" segment of the steel industry, and Bethlehem Steel Corporation in particular, will be the chief target of a renewed drive which was planned and launched by a conference of sub-district directors of the CIO's Steel Workers Organizing Committee held here recently.

Determination to push the organizing drive at Bethlehem mills came after a sweeping denunciation of that company's labor policies by Philip Murray, SWOC chairman, who presided over the sessions.

"The SWOC and labor generally must realize that Bethlehem Steel is the most forthright enemy of labor unions in America," he declared. "The largest independent steel manufacturing firm in the country, it has, since the passage of the National Labor Relations Act, steadfastly violated that law."

"It continues its acts of intimidation, coercion and discrimination. It maintains, up to the present moment in violation of the Act, the largest single company union in the United States.

'MILITANT CAMPAIGN'

"We shall proceed with an aggressive, militant campaign of organization at each of the properties of the Bethlehem Steel Corp. until bona fide unionization is recognized and accepted," he told the directors.

Mr. Murray reviewed the history of the Bethlehem situation since the birth of the SWOC, pointing out that charges of unfair labor practices were filed with the Labor Board 18 months ago.

The hearings were concluded about seven months ago, and the steel workers of the nation "have been waiting a decision from the Labor Board since the hearings closed," Mr. Murray said.

Taking a definite stand to push the Bethlehem drive, the SWOC leaders unanimously adopted a resolution declaring:

"The international officers of the SWOC shall institute a tremendous and vigorous organizing drive at the properties of the Bethlehem Steel Corp., and they shall be unrelenting in the determination until the benefits of unionism are extended to all eligible employes of that company."

DISCUSS PROBLEMS

While the status of the steel union in Bethlehem mills, Republic Steel Corp., Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., and Inland Steel Co., was the primary consideration of the conference, methods of settling grievances, conducting local lodge affairs and collecting dues were compared and analyzed by the directors.

Some 70 directors, representing every steel center in the United States and Canada, offered reports, the tenor of which emphasized the tremendous strides made by the steel union even in the face of a business depression which struck the steel industry with particular viciousness.

The reports shattered any doubt as to the future of the SWOC, and Chairman Murray was quick to predict that the steel union is on the way to becoming one of the most powerful industrial unions in the world.

LAUD OFFICERS

Also attending the conference were the president and two vice-presidents of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers. They included J. Frank Bennett, president, and Joseph Gaither and Ward Walcott, vice-presidents. Mr. Walcott is currently directing affairs of the SWOC in Portsmouth, O.

A resolution was unanimously adopted commending national officers, including Philip Murray, chairman; David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer; Van A. Bittner, midwestern director; Clinton S. Golden, northeastern director; William Mitch, southern director, and Silby Barrett, Canadian director.

Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, sat in on all sessions. He came before the conference with a complete report on legal aspects of the steel union dealing in detail with major Labor Board cases involving the SWOC.

Came the Dawn!

New York, Aug. 5. — A half dozen persons who placed their faith in big business had a rude awakening today.

They appeared in a city court with a demand that the Executives League of America, Inc., be forced to turn over $900 in back pay. The League platform demands that the "rights of industry be respected and that taxes be reduced."

Though it has received plenty of money from anti-New Deal businessmen, the League allowed its office conditions to reach the point where a girl clerk fainted from hunger and another had to pawn her coat to get money for electric bills. Counsel for the outfit tried to argue that the employes, being white collar workers, had no redress under the law!

Seamen Vote On Changes In Constitution

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—A referendum on the new constitution for the National Maritime Union, CIO, drawn up at the recent national convention in New Orleans, is being held among the 58,000 seamen and inland boatmen who belong to the NMU.

Union agents in each of the 18 major Atlantic and Gulf ports have been provided with printed, numbered ballots which they will take aboard as ships enter their ports. Voting will take place on shipboard. As the ballots are marked they will be placed in sealed envelopes and turned over to the agent who will mail them to union headquarters in New York.

The referendum will continue until September 30, at which time the ballots will be opened and counted by a committee at headquarters. If accepted, the new constitution will go into effect January 1, 1940.

ELIMINATE DIVISIONS

Principal changes made in the proposed constitution include elimination of craft and district divisions to centralize membership control, and increase in dues from $1 to $2 a month, with no other assessments permitted.

Instead of the present council of nine national and district officers and the district committee of nine members, the new constitution proposes a National Council composed of the national president, secretary and treasurer, three field organizers, and 20 port agents, three of whom are to be in New York.

Transit Showdown Near in Buffalo

BUFFALO, N. Y., Aug. 5.—This city of 500,000 tensely awaited today the outcome—due soon—of the struggle of the city's transit workers for the right to genuine collective bargaining.

A strike of all trolley and bus employes which would completely shut down all public transportation facilities, ordered by the CIO Transport Workers Union for August 1, was temporarily averted with the issuance of an order by Supreme Court Justice George A. Larkin restraining the International Railways Company from putting into effect a "closed shop contract" it had entered into with the Frontier Bus and Street Car Employes Union, a company union outfit.

On the same day — July 31 — Justice Pierce Russell denied the application of the IRC (company) for an injunction against an order by the State Labor Relations Board that an election be held to determine the proper collective bargaining representative for the company's employes.

ORDERED POLL

On August 2, the State Labor Board ordered the election to proceed within 15 days, but IRC lawyers on August 3 were again in court seeking to upset Justice Larkin's decision.

The IRC, having a monopoly on all public transit facilities in New York State's second largest city, for years has controlled the political destinies of this upstate region.

Its union-busting record ranks amongst the most notorious, having prior to the Wagner Act conducted employe relations under the infamous Mitten (Company Union) Plan. When the national and state labor laws outlawed company unions, the Mitten Plan was diverted into the Frontier Bus and Street Car Employes Union. The latter subsequently also was outlawed by the State Labor Board, but this ruling was upset by the courts.

UNION MET RESISTANCE

The drive for genuine collective bargaining was undertaken by the Transport Workers Union in Buffalo about two years ago. Many firings and beatings of union men occurred during the initial stages of the drive and on several occasions street riots were provoked by company stooges attacking TWU shop gate meetings.

Steel, Coal Unions Seek Joint Pact

Sydney, N. S., Aug. 5. — Officials of the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation have been asked jointly by executives of the United Mine Workers Union and the Steel Workers Organizing Committee to begin negotiations for a contract for employes in the company's steel plants.

Organized employes in the mining and steel industry here are seeking a wage raise which they claim is justified in view of the current upturn in business. They are determined there will be no stalling on the part of the corporation.

Win 100-Day Strike at Singer

South Bend, Ind., Aug. 5—A 100-day strike against the Singer Company here was brought to a successful conclusion when the firm signed an agreement with Local 917, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, CIO, promising not to cut wages and not to discriminate against union members.

The company previously had demanded a wage cut as the price of a signed contract.

Canadian Steel Workers To Hear Murray Sept. 4

Hamilton, Ont., Aug. 5.—Philip Murray, chairman of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee and vice-president of the CIO, will be the featured speaker at the Labor Day celebration in this steel center of the dominion.

The local Labor Day committee is rapidly completing preparations for a gala affair in which thousands of unionists and citizens are expected to attend. The fete is under auspices of the Hamilton District Trades and Labor Council.

CANADIAN 'PITTSBURGH'

"It is particularly appropriate that Mr. Murray's first visit to Canada should be to the 'Pittsburgh' of the dominion," said Silby Barrett, Canadian regional director of SWOC. "Local steel workers are looking forward to this Labor Day as the 'red letter' day of unionism in the Canadian steel industry, particularly in Hamilton."

Mr. Murray's visit will add impetus to the efforts of the employes of the Steel Company of Canada to abolish the company union existing in the firm's plants and establish a powerful union of the SWOC.

Reach Agreement In GM Strike; AFL Scab Plot Fails

DETROIT, Aug. 4.—Leaders of the CIO United Automobile Workers and General Motors announced they had reached an agreement to end the 12-plant strike of tool and die makers, thereby balking AFL leaders' scab plots.

Local AFL officials refused to enter the maneuver.

"Our members are not going through the picket lines," said F. P. Tise, business agent for the AFL pattern makers. "We have no brief for the CIO, but as a matter of principle we won't break strikes."

A spokesman for the AFL teamsters union said "we don't wish to get pushed around" in attempting to cross the picket lines.

COPS ESCORT SCABS

A disturbance broke out at the machine and die unit of Fisher Body here when police escorted 35 scabs through the picket lines. Tear-gas was used against the strikers, as a result of which one man required hospital treatment.

Pres. R. J. Thomas attributed the violence here and in Cleveland, Ohio, to stalling on the part of General Motors.

"The company has failed to budge the strikers by three weeks of stalling at the conference table," the UAW-CIO leader declared.

"Its backstairs deal with AFL leaders has also failed to make a dent in the picket lines.

"Now the company is attempting to bring the police and the courts into play. GM's use of brute force to intimidate the workers is having the reverse effect."

ATTACK 5,000

The tear gas attack on 5,000 pickets at Cleveland followed efforts of strike breakers to go through a picket line composed of Fisher Body employes, their wives and children. At six a.m. Monday the workers attempted

House Tories Slaughter Progressive Bills

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4.—Acting as if determined to prove to the nation that John L. Lewis' sensational anti-Garnerite blast last week was correct in every detail, House Tories used the axe on each piece of progressive legislation which ground through the Congressional hopper as the session neared adjournment today.

Breaking squarely with the New Deal, a large number of conservative Democrats made common cause with the minority Republican bloc and defeated a half-dozen administration bills.

At the same time, however, a few bright spots shone through the haze of reaction over the Capitol.

The Senate Audit and Control Committee, after months of stalling, reported favorably on a resolution to provide the La-Follette Civil Liberties Committee with $50,000 to continue its investigation of Associated Farmers on the West Coast. Though only half the amount requested, the sum, if approved — as it probably will be — by the Senate, will be sufficient to conduct the much-needed probe. Other favorable developments:

Wagner Act amendments: Out of the picture for the time being. CIO witnesses are winding up their testimony before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor. The House Labor Committee has finished hearings, but will make no report for several months.

Oppressive Labor Practices Act: The LaFollette - Thomas anti-labor spy bill has received a favorable report from the Senate Labor Committee and will be in a good position on the calendar when Congress convenes next year.

GET THE AXE

Compared to this list, however, the damage caused by the House Tory bloc is tremendous.

National Labor Relations Board: To be investigated by a committee—members of whom are still un-named — with $50,000 at its disposal for what may become a giant smear campaign.

POSTPONE LAY-OFFS

WPA: Amendments offered by Sen. Murray of Montana and Sen. McCarran of Nevada to restore the prevailing wage clause and end the 18-month layoff provision were temporarily scuttled when the lend-spend bill met its doom in the House. The amendments were immediately inserted in the deficiency bill, and still have an outside chance to get passed.

WPA Commissioner Harrington has instructed regional officials to make no layoffs under the 18-month clause until final action has been taken by Congress.

Housing: Provision for extension of U. S. Housing Authority's lending capacity by $800,000,000 was killed in the House of Representatives.

Wage-Hour: House Garnerites were fighting desperately to bring the crippling Barden amendments on the floor for a debate, with New Dealers led by the House Labor Committee opposing the move. The Senate has taken no action on wage-hour amendments.

SHOE UNION ACTIVE

A back-handed effort to make the widely-flouted wage-hour law still more ineffective was defeated when the House defeated a move to kill a request for $2,000,000 to administer the law. The sum was sliced from the deficiency bill, but later $1,000,000 was re-inserted after leaders of the CIO United Shoe Workers spoke to dozens of Congressmen.

Closeted with representatives of industry and the public in a wage-hour shoe industry committee meeting when the $2,000,000 appropriation was defeated, the USWA members led the entire committee to the Capitol to buttonhole legislators. Thanks to their action, the wage-hour administration was saved from complete collapse.

Anti-alien legislation: The Smith bill, a collection of the worse parts of a dozen bills that were filed during the session, passed the House. No action has been taken on it in the Senate.

Social Security: Amendments to the Social Security Act, some of them endorsed by the CIO, were tied up in Senate-House conference committee. CIO leaders supported some of the proposed changes, though pointing out that no adequate provision for old age pensions for improving unemployment compensation had been made.

Wagner Health Bill: Still in Senate committee.

DEADLY SERIOUS: CIO Pres. John L. Lewis was in grim earnest as he denounced Vice-Pres. John N. Garner and other members of the Congressional reactionary bloc at the wage-hour hearings called by the House Labor Committee last week. His speech won nationwide applause of workers and progressives.

Letters, Wires Praise Lewis For Speech

WASHINGTON, Aug. 5. — Hundreds of letters and wires were received by CIO President John L. Lewis, applauding his exposure of the anti-labor intrigue in Congress organized by Vice-President Garner.

The letters came from AFL as well as CIO members, from professional and business people as well as workers, and from every part of the country. Many of them expressed the opinion that a body-blow had been struck at Garner's presidential aspirations.

Following are a few typical excerpts from these communications:

"While some people in Washington knew about the skulduggeries of the Garner gang, it took your forthright statement to bring this knowledge to the country as a whole.

"I know that you will not be in the least perturbed by the current reactionary propaganda to the effect that your remarks will prove a boomerang. After all, the function of the boomerang is to hit the mark at which it is aimed. You mowed down that shining mark with masterly aim."

"Those who know, think you have a pretty good concept of the Texan, grown rich through governmental service — once poor but now being groomed for the presidency by the tory element, who are turning heaven and earth through the subsidized press, now absolutely controlled by wealth and corruption, and every other available avenue to defeat decency and consideration for the middle and lower classes."

"As an old labor man with some 36 years membership in the AFL, I am writing to congratulate you for your open and aboveboard estimate of our (un)-worthy Vice President."

"Congratulations to you for your very courageous, sincere and to-the-point remarks, placing the blame on the man who is steadily blocking all labor legislation. I have been hoping for a long time someone would say just what you did. You have the thanks of multitudes." (From a teacher).

"Congratulations . . . Hope you tell the truth about some more of them. Trouble has been too much soft-pedaling and back-scratching, with fellows like Cactus Jack pretending to be friends of labor at elections and double-crossing after they get in — and keeping it up for years." (From a member of a state legislature.)

"It matters not what any of the 'renegade' Democrats say, your statement coincides with what many Americans have long been aware of, that we have entirely too many of what might be called the selfish, gambler-drinker-eater-seller-outer type of statesman in Congress — too many private watchmen for big Republican interests are riding into public office on the Democratic bandwagon, instead of servants of the general public."

"A poor, lone old woman . . . I find myself in imagination clasping the hand of the workingman's friend, and with genuine tears of gratitude in my dim old eyes, trying to tell you how proud I am of ONE man who has the courage and

Shoe Pay Group OKs 35c Wage

Washington, Aug. 5—By unanimous vote, the shoe industry committee today recommended to Wage-Hour Administrator Elmer F. Andrews a minimum wage of 35c an hour.

The committee of 27 members had been studying industry conditions for several months and has taken testimony from representatives of shoe workers and employers.

Leaders of the United Shoe Workers of America, CIO affiliate, who were represented on the committee by several delegates, expressed a belief that the proposed wage, if and when it is finally accepted, will go far to rid the shoe industry of the curse of starvation wages and runaway shops.

As a result of this set-up, the industry has become almost demoralized, and setting of a floor for wages will help to stabilize conditions.

The USWA was represented on the committee by Powers Hapgood, national director; Mae Young, Henry Schwarzott and C. Frank Farrell, all international board members.

Adjourn Hearings To January 15

Chairman Thomas of the Senate Education and Labor Committee announced today that hearings on the Wagner Act would be recessed until January 15, when CIO Pres. John L. Lewis and Vice-Pres. Philip Murray will be given an opportunity to testify.

CIO Leaders To Speak On Radio

Washington, Aug. 5. — The U. S. Department of Labor announced today the launching of a new radio program—"America Unlimited"—on which leaders of the nation's workers will discuss current problems.

The series will be heard over the National Broadcasting Co.'s red network on a coast-to-coast hook-up.

CIO Vice-Pres. Philip Murray is scheduled to speak on the program Aug. 11 at 9:30 P. M. Eastern Standard Time, Vice-Pres. Sidney Hillman on Aug. 25 and Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, on Sept. 8.

Murray will discuss collective bargaining in the steel industry and technological unemployment, while Hillman will review the progress of collective bargaining in the men's clothing industry.

William Green, Daniel Tobin and Matthew Woll of the AFL will be other speakers on the series of broadcasts.

Enemies of the People

The Republican-Garnercratic camarilla, which usurped power in Congress through a parliamentary intrigue, in defiance of the will of the voters, has dealt one blow after another to the interests of labor, the farmers, the unemployed and the whole American people.

After bringing hunger and misery to the doors of a million American homes, by its slashing of the WPA program, it has mowed down with machine-gun precision nearly every measure advanced for the relief of farmers and workers and for the promotion of business recovery. The refusal even to vote on the Housing Authority Expansion Bill, to mention but one example, shows the arrogant contempt of the Garnercrats and their Republican allies for the demands of the common people. Low-cost housing and slum clearance are a crying need for millions of Americans besides furnishing a much-needed stimulus to business generally.

But the Tory usurpers of Congressional power have turned thumbs down on this and every other constructive measure proposed by the administration which the voters thought they had placed in power.

Only the strenuous opposition of the CIO and the other progressive forces to which it has given a lead, has prevented Garner and his motley crew of renegade Democrats and Republicans from destroying the Wagner Labor Relations Act and the Wage-Hour Law by crippling amendments.

The exposure by John L. Lewis of the real character of the Tory intrigue against the American people aided in saving the Wage-Hour Law and preventing some of the other worst excesses. But it has done more than that. It has pointed out clearly to all of the millions who will suffer in coming months from what the Tories in Congress have done to them, just who are responsible for what has happened.

Labor and the rest of the common people now know who their enemies are, and they will not forget them in the next elections.

No Friend of Labor

When John L. Lewis exposed Garner's part in organizing the anti-labor bloc in Congress, he was commended by all sections of Texas labor.

"Texas labor is completely anti-Garner — we will back Lewis in this," said Pres. A. S. McBride of the state AFL.

"All Texas CIO members were already anti-Garner," said Secretary P. F. Kennedy of the state CIO council.

Even the Texas Congressmen who felt impelled to adopt a resolution in defense of Garner would not go so far as to describe him as a friend of labor.

A news release on their resolution in which Garner was described as a friend of labor, was hurriedly withdrawn after it had posted in the House press gallery and before the statement was made to the House.

Within half an hour a revised copy was back, identical with the original release except that the reference to Garner as a friend of labor was deleted.

Canadian Labor Protests

The Toronto District Trades and Labor Council, representing some 40,000 union members, has passed a resolution in which it "deplores the action of the Executive of the American Federation of Labor in prevailing upon the officers of the Trades and Labor Congress to arbitrarily violate the wishes of its membership by suspending the CIO unions last January."

Having seen the arbitrary fashion in which the AFL leaders split the United States labor movement by suspending the CIO unions some years ago, Canadian unionists have long been fighting to preserve unity without impairment of the rights of CIO industrial organization.

Now that the AFL splitters are going about their dirty work of division in Canada, they are arousing a storm of protest from all honest unionists, and their responsibility for such division as may ensue has been established beyond all question.

Tory War Dance

Looking Ahead

By LEN DE CAUX

A Revealing Incident

WHEN a log that has been lying on the ground for a long time is turned over all manner of bugs and other insect life are exposed to the sunlight.

As they scurry for cover in all directions, they denounce the man who exposed them. He is ungentlemanly, crude, a dictator, the insect equivalent of a Communist, and the wiseacres insist he has made a grave political error.

The liberals of the insect world, however, concede that perhaps there is some merit in exposure to sunlight. But, say they, why did he have to turn over the log so forcefully? Would it not have been better if he had praised the benefits of sunlight in polite and well-qualified words, and then left it to nature to effect the turning over of the log in due time and with perfect propriety?

But if we go outside the insect world, we find there are a lot of plain human beings who think that the best way to turn over a log is to turn it over.

An Intrigue Exposed

The recent exposure of John L. Lewis of the tory anti-labor intrigue in Congress has proved a most revealing incident in more ways than one.

The squawling, the squeaking, the yelping, the yelling and the mock heroics of the reactionary elements whom he exposed revealed that his blow struck home in the quarters for which it was intended.

The frantic attempts of most of the press to dodge the real issue by an almost unprecedented campaign of abuse and misrepresentation, revealed the alignment of this press with the forces of anti-labor reaction.

And the spontaneous flood of letters which immediately poured in to CIO headquarters, congratulating and thanking Lewis for what he had done, revealed how much more closely he represented the feelings of millions of Americans than the reactionary politicians who misrepresent them in Congress.

He Spoke Their Minds

"I have never written a letter of this sort in my life before. But I think there must be many millions of Americans who feel as I do tonight that something clean and straight has been said for them and by them against a gang of cut-throats."

This sentiment in one of the letters addressed to Lewis is achoed in hundreds of others from individuals in all parts of the country and in all walks of life.

The following ideas are repeated again and again in different words in the letters received:

Lewis is thanked for doing a "personal favor" to the writers by expressing what is in their minds and the minds of thousands of others.

He is praised for throwing a "lightning flash" of light on a confused political situation, and for exposing the real character of the tory plot from which the whole country is suffering.

His courage is commended, for being the first man in public life to tell the truth about a scandal which others have long known but have not dared to speak up about.

He is urged to continue his exposures of reactionary rottenness in high places and assured that most of the plain people of America will applaud his championing of their cause.

American Style Is Direct

The letters reveal further that most Americans like a direct, forthright and hard-hitting style in their politics.

They do not share the pitiful squeamishness of many alleged liberals, who nearly pass out when a telling blow is struck for the cause they are supposed to support, and who spend most of their time criticizing and bewailing everything that is done by those who bear the brunt of the fight for true liberalism.

A Puzzle Solved

Many people have been shocked and puzzled by the vicious attacks made in Congress against all legislation of benefit to labor and the common people. They have wondered how this could happen in a Congress in which a supposedly New Deal party has had an overwhelming majority.

Lewis exposed the intrigue between the Republican minority and the renegade Democrats which has defeated the people's will. He called public attention for the first time to a fact long known in Washington, that John Garner has been the man behind the scenes who has organized and instigated the activities of this reactionary bloc.

And millions of Americans have called him blessed for doing a duty which others in public life have neglected.

The frantic character of the cover-up campaign immediately launched by reactionary politicians and press may have deceived many by obscuring the real issues. But it hasn't fooled all of the people by a long shot.

Shirt Makers Ask 10% Wage Raise

New York, Aug. 5—A national 10 per cent wage increase will be demanded of all manufacturers and contractors under contract with the Shirt Department of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, the CIO union has announced.

Reveal GM Aid to Union-Busters

Cleveland Bosses' Thugs Fought Labor, LaFollette Reports

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Aug. 5.—While police were dropping tear gas shells into crowds of strikers at the General Motors-Fisher Body plant in Cleveland, the LaFollette Civil Liberties Committee here was releasing a report which revealed GM as the heaviest contributor to Cleveland Associated Industries, purveyor of anti-labor services to embattled employer in the Ohio city.

Spies, provocateurs, strikebreakers, industrial munitions and advice on how best to resist unionism are peddled by the boss outfit, the LaFollette report declared.

Referring to the fight against the Wagner Act, the report asserted:

"Organized employer groups, such as the Associated Industries, acting in unison in the adoption of policies and purposes through the National Industrial Council, have been responsible during the period since 1933 for one of the greatest campaigns of nullification ever waged against any federal statute."

The furnishing of strike guards, over whom—according to newspaper reports from Cleveland — the fight at the General Motors plant occurred, constituted "one of the most important and significant activities" of the association, the LaFollette committee reported.

TOUGH CHARACTERS

"They were frequently men of bad moral character, predisposed to violence, and some of them had criminal records. On the job they engaged in petty theft and pilfering, provoked riots and disorder, slugged pickets and damaged property, often with the intent of embittering and prolonging the strike in order to extend their own employment."

For services of this type, General Motors paid $3,000 a year over a period of three years, while 500 other Cleveland corporations paid out lesser amounts, depending on the number of workers they employed. General Motors representatives not only filled the organization's coffers, but helped to direct its policies through representatives on the board of directors and advisory committee, the report revealed.

OTHER FIRMS

Others among the firms which control the Cleveland employers' group include Midland Steel Products, Thompson Products, Aluminum Co. of America, Willard Storage Battery and the Ohio Rubber Co. One out of every three workers in the city's manufacturing business works for a company which belongs to the Associated Industries.

Indication that the outfit's law-of-the-jungle labor relations policies were no local product was seen in the committee's statement showing that 73 of the 116 Cleveland companies affiliated with the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers belonged to AI, and that AI activities were generally in accord with program laid out by the NAM on a national scale.

THE RESULT

How these policies worked out for labor and the community were discussed by the Senate Committee, which said:

"Examined in detail in one single plant during the period 1933-1937, the labor relations policy of the Associated Industry is demonstrated to be productive of strife, distrust, bitterness, strikes and industrial warfare of the most ruthless and relentless sort."

Alarmed by prospects of the Senate Committee's investigation, Associated Industry destroyed and altered its books "to conceal the labor espionage services which it had rendered to its members, and its business connections with a detective agency engaged in spying on unions."

HAD OWN SPIES

At first, Associated Industry maintained its own espionage service, which it placed upon request in the shops of member corporations — in its own words —to advise "members of labor conditions within their own plants of which they are ignorant" and to reveal "the danger in time to avert serious trouble." Later, the AI made arrangements with a private detective agency to do the gumshoe work.

CIO Leader In Canal Zone Files Charge

New York, Aug. 5.—The firing of Lionel Moore after he was made head of the CIO's recently organized Panama Canal Zone Organizing Committee, has caused the National Maritime Union to ask the Natl. Labor Relations Board to assume jurisdiction over Wagner Act violations in the Canal Zone.

Moore, who was a stenographer employed for nine years by the Panama Agencies Co., subsidiary of the Grace Line, was fired July 2 the day after his appointment as secretary of the CIO committee.

CALLS ON NLRB

Louis H. Rubenstein, representing the NMU, under whose auspices the PCZWOC is operating, pointed out at a preliminary hearing held before a Labor Board examiner in New York that the NLRB has jurisdiction in Hawaii, and that if the Board failed to establish its jurisdiction over the Canal Zone, workers employed there would be denied their rights under the Wagner Act, even though employed by American companies.

H. A. Stoudt, PCZWOC chairman, chief witness at the hearing said that Moore had been called into the office of E. J. Brown, manager of the Christobal office, and asked about his name appearing as an officer of the new CIO union. When he confirmed this, Moore was told that he was discharged as he could "not serve two masters."

ARBITRATE

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 5—Arbitration of a wage dispute at the big plant of the big Cluett-Peabody Co., makers of Arrow shirts, was embodied in a written understanding won by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers here.

Freedom of the Press: Writes Letter to Paper, Gets Fired by GM!

PONTIAC, Mich., Aug. 5.—For tops in union discrimination, take the case of a Pontiac UAW-CIO steward who was fired last week by General Motors for exercising freedom of press.

Ted Hegelson is an American citizen. He believes in democracy. So Hegelson wrote a letter to the local newspaper defending his union against vicious company attacks.

The next morning Hegelson was summoned before the personnel director. Angrily thrusting the letter before Hegelson, the personnel chief demanded:

"Either retract or be fired."

When he explained that, "I cannot retract the truth," Hegelson was fired.

The case was immediately filed with the NLRB by William McAulay, Regional UAW-CIO Director. Hegelson was employed in the Pontiac Fisher Body plant, a division of General Motors.

80,000 Auto Workers to Vote In Board Polls

WASHINGTON, Aug. 5. — Eighty thousand automobile workers, employed by Chrysler, Briggs Manufacturing Co. and the Motor Products Co., will trek to the polls during the next two weeks in the biggest series of elections ever ordered by the National Labor Relations Board.

Leaders of the United Automobile Workers, CIO, immediately predicted that the workers' ballots would sound the death knell for what remains of Homer Martin's shrunken rump-AFL outfit, at the same time making the CIO union sole bargaining agency in the three corporations' plants.

"We have better than 90 per cent of the Chrysler and Motor Products workers enrolled in our locals now," he declared. "The contract of our Briggs local with the company gives us exclusive recognition and our strength in the Briggs plant is almost 100 per cent."

Proof of the union power at Briggs was indicated a few months ago when it won a strike of several thousand workers, despite efforts of Martin to disrupt the walkout.

OVER-RULED CIO

In decreeing by a 2-1 vote that each of the companies' plants constitutes a separate bargaining unit, the Labor Board overruled the UAW-CIO, which had pointed out that in each case labor relations policy is determined in the executive office for the entire corporation. In one plant it ordered a separate craft poll for die sinkers, also over UAW-CIO protests.

Edwin S. Smith, sole dissenter on the NLRB, argued that his colleague's decision "makes possible further frustration of collective bargaining, and insofar as bargaining is rendered ineffective, gives rise to further disruptions of industrial peace.

"It apparently constitutes an effort to be fair to one faction of the international union (the AFL outfit—Editor) at the expense of the other. The result, I feel, constitutes an unfairness to the employes as a whole."

to persuade a group of scabs not to enter the plant.

Before strikers had an opportunity to talk to the scabs, several mounted police, trampling upon men, women and children, forced their way to the scabs' car and motioned them inside.

One of the police reached into his pocket and pulled out a tear gas bomb, which he threw into the crowd.

CHILDREN PANIC-STRICKEN

Many pickets were blinded. Small children and women ran panic-stricken through the streets. The police, laying down a constant barrage of tear gas, threw stones, used their clubs and turned high pressure streams of water on the crowd.

The attack did not end until the police supply of tear gas had been exhausted. Onlookers reported that many cops, sickened by the violence of the attack on the workers, laid down their clubs and refused to join in the war on their fellow-citizens.

'WORST' VIOLENCE

A local labor reporter described the tear gas attack—an average of 75 bombs an hour were hurled by the cops—as the "worst I have seen in 10 years of strike reporting." At times the air was so filled with yellow gas from "scooter shells," which hop from place to place, that the picket line was scarcely visible.

Later the same day, five more strikers were injured in a second attack, which was looked upon approvingly by Mayor Burton and Police Chief Ness.

ASK PROBE

Strike committee leaders wired Atty. Gen. Frank Murphy and Sen. Robert LaFollette for investigations. On the same day that the violence occurred, the LaFollette committee made public a report on hearings conducted last year which showed General Motors as a $3,000-a-year contributor to Cleveland Associated Industries, an employers labor-spy and strikebreaker service.

WHOSE POCKETS —

ARE YOU FILLING? When you buy your clothes do you help pay the wage of a union worker, or do you help swell the profits of a sweatshop boss?

- The Label of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America will give you the answer. When you don't see the label you know that the garment was probably made by an un-American sweatshop chiseler. When you see the Amalgamated label you know that your money will go into the pockets of union workers, earning union pay, working under union conditions.
- Demand the union label in the clothes you buy and insure yourself against sweatshop garments, against sweatshop conditions in industry.

You can find the Amalgamated label in union made suits, overcoats, uniforms, work clothes and overalls, workshirts, dress shirts, underwear, gloves, neckties, sheeplined, leather, and sport coats, children's clothing and wash suits.

Pressman Charges Green, In Fighting Wagner Act, Rebuffs Own Members

WASHINGTON, Aug. 5—Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, told the Senate Committee on Education and Labor today that the campaign against the Wagner Act by reactionary business interests and leaders of the American Federation of Labor is based upon a "host of downright deliberate mis-statements and absolute distortions of the record!"

AFL leaders, whom Pressman accused of "incredible gall and the most brazen hypocrisy," have come before the Committee to defend startling changes in the Act to protect their power, without mandate from their membership. He recalled that many of the most powerful unions in the AFL have had no conventions in many years, so that the present ruling groups in these organizations have no directions from the workers to attack the Act and the National Labor Relations Board.

". . . . It is perfectly clear that if the handful of office-holders of the AFL who seek an amendment to deprive the Board of its power to set up industrial units have their way, the interests and wishes of vast numbers of members of the AFL itself will have been overridden."

"AMAZING DEMONSTRATION"

AFL testimony has been an "amazing demonstration of the ability of certain sections of the public press to distort very simple facts beyond all possibility of recognition," he said.

This propaganda barrage, Pressman asserted, has succeeded in convincing many intelligent people that there must be something wrong with the Labor Act and the Board which administers it.

"Were it not for the fog, and the noise, and the false representations which have been spread by the enemies of the law, and of collective bargaining, and of organized labor, it would be more difficult to fool so many intelligent people on this issue," he declared.

AFL LEADERS UNSUPPORTED

Pressman pointed out that while the CIO membership is unanimously lined up in opposition to amending the Act, the workers enrolled in the AFL are openly hostile to the amendments supported by the AFL's top leadership.

"We speak of these bills as the proposals made by the AFL executive council, or the top officials of the AFL, and we do so advisedly, because it is by now established that despite the approval of Mr. Green, these bills have the open and unequivocal opposition of a number of outstanding and important organizations in the AFL, a number of local and regional organizations of the AFL and a number of established independent unions which have no connections with the CIO, such as the railroad workers."

AGAINST WORKERS' NEEDS

In pushing its demands for compulsory setting of craft unit elections by the Labor Board, the AFL top leadership is directly moving against the interests of this vast bloc of unconsulted members, Mr. Pressman charged.

"In any event, it is perfectly clear that if the handful of office-holders of the AFL who seek an amendment to deprive the Board of its power to set up industrial units have their way, the interests and wishes of vast numbers of members of the AFL itself will have been over-ridden.

"In their hatred for the CIO, which they conceive to threaten their security, their positions, and their power, these men have turned against the form of organization best suited to the needs of American Labor. In so doing, they have turned against the interests of their own members."

manliness to tell John Garner what is true about him."

"Thank you, John L. Lewis, for this — to us — personal favor. And may you always be as right as this in all your public and private utterances."

"May I congratulate you on your frank and open denunciation of the subversive activities which we in the street have for long suspected. It was strong meat, but this is not a time for minced peacock tongues."

"Hearty congratulations from a member of an AFL union. It's time some of our people told men like Pecan Jack where to get off at. Stand by your guns, no matter what the politicians and newspapers say."

"Bravo! John L. Bravo! Texas labor knows that 'evil old man' is one of its worst enemies!"

"Congratulations . . . May none of the leaders of labor pull their punches when it comes to putting the enemies of popular government in the right categories. There are many other pets of privilege in need of classification."

"I personally think you did not make your words strong enough to show some of these labor-baiting individuals where they get off."

"I fully believe you have expressed the sentiments of a vast majority of the electorate in your statement as of today."

"Your statement . . . is the sharpest truth. But it did not go quite far enough. The writer is not a laborer but a small manufacturer who has had experience and ought to know. When labor has money it buys the small manufacturers' product, the storekeepers' merchandise and the farmers' produce, making all of us prosperous. Betrayers of men like Garner have bled the American home market white."

"I thank you for your lightning flash before the Congressional committee on June 27. It will clear the skies. We need more frankness to lead the millions away from their covert enemies and toward recognition of their friends . . . The clear, terse outspokenness such as you gave the committee should be often repeated from now on to the 1940 national election."

"Kindly accept our heartiest approval regarding your recent statement on the wages and hours bill, and especially your condemnation of the reactionary members in Congress."

As usual you called a spade a spade. It was just what the country needs. There are too many stuffed shirts in Washington . . . All of us little devils of underdogs are with you 100%."

"As a member of the AFL and an American citizen, I want to thank you from the bottom of my heart . . . It was certainly time somebody spoke up against the wave of reaction among those misrepresentative politicians in Congress."

"You may have made a political error, but you sho' used perfect English!"

"I want to congratulate you and the labor movement as a whole for your courageous stand and the splendid fight you are putting up for American labor. The poorest paid workers will remember you and fight with you to the bitter end."

"A helluva good wallop . . . well timed and well-placed . . . There are more in Congress that need it, and it is high time that someone representing labor has the courage to stand up and let these wreckers know how labor feels about the rotten game they are playing with the destinies of this great nation."

"CIO leadership has again courageously voiced the protest of labor against the sniping attacks of the tories upon the American working people's living standards and constitutional rights."

Union Officials Warn of Danger In Amendments

WASHINGTON, Aug. 5.—Members of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor received additional evidence today of the unanimous feeling of CIO members against Wagner Act amendments, as leaders of four affiliated international unions took the witness stand at hearings here.

Pres. Mervyn Rathborne of the American Communications Assn., Harold Straub, organizational director of the Amalgamated Utility Workers; Powers Hapgood, national director of the United Shoe Workers; and Pres. Joseph Curran and William Standard, counsel, of the National Maritime Union all told the same story of workers' enthusiasm for the Wagner Act and fear that gains made in recent years would be wiped out by employer-AFL proposed amendments.

AVOIDED DISPUTES

Rathborne said that the Labor Board is, if anything, "pro-AFL" in its bias, but that the Act nevertheless has been of incalculable aid to the ACA in its organizing activities.

The ACA, he pointed out, has filed 236 Labor Board cases. Without the Wagner Act, many of these disputes which were peacefully settled would have resulted in costly strikes.

FIRM FLOUTS LAW

Straub warned the Senate Committee that proposed AFL amendments are "nothing more than an attempt to persuade Congress to legalize the illegal tactics used for their benefit in Consolidated Edison."

When the AFL International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers won recognition from the giant New York utility, Straub asserted, it had only five members among the company's 42,000 employes. Since the Supreme Court decision which upheld that contract but ordered certain unfair labor practices to cease, discrimination and defiance of the Wagner Act have continued, he added.

"The dispatch and fairness with which it conducted elections," Curran said, "has greatly facilitated the negotiations and execution of collective bargaining agreements between operators and the certified unions. Thus peace was brought to the maritime industry of our country, previously much troubled and harassed by labor disputes."

Curran told of discontent in the AFL sailors' union, which culminated the refusal of the membership to accept a "shockingly inadequate" contract in 1936. As a result, the AFL leaders pulled a behind-the-scenes deal with the shipowners—a deal which was stoutly defended by Green and Joseph Padway, AFL counsel, before the Senate Committee some weks ago.

AFL CLIQUE 'EXPOSED'

But the seamen felt differently about it, Curran related, and after formation of the NMU, they voted their "utter contempt for the AFL Seamen's Union officials" by voting almost 30-1 for the CIO union in 11 major elections.

"We submit that the vindictiveness and the unjustified criticism of the AFL officialdom is due more to the fact that it was exposed as an autocratic clique, rather than to the alleged bias of the NLRB," he concluded.

CHISELERS HATE ACT

Seven shoe manufacturers have already been charged with wage-hour act violation, he pointed out, and wages as low as 7c. an hour have been discovered in "factories on wheels" which migrate from place to place.

"If these amendments to the Wagner Act are passed, they will force workers to belong to unions of their company's choice, rather than of their own choice," Hapgood predicted, and efforts to improve wages and stabilize the industry will result in failure."

Sewing Machine Firm Signs

Cleveland, Ohio, Aug. 5—Sole bargaining rights at the White Sewing Machine Corp. here were won for the first time in a new contract signed recently with Local 721, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, CIO. The agreement runs to July, 1940.

Although the CIO union was certified by the Labor Board as sole bargaining agency in the spring of 1938, the company had refused to include this in previous contracts.

Equalize The Wagner Act?

WASHINGTON, Aug. 5—A formula for altering labor laws to please those employers who want the Wagner Act amended to work "equally" for employer and employe was suggested here by Pres. Allan S. Haywood of the New York State Industrial Union Council.

Testifying before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, Haywood said it might be a good idea to treat pickets the same way as employers are treated when they break the labor law.

"Wouldn't it be nice," he said, "to devise a procedure where the picket, instead of being jailed, or worse still—shot and killed, as in the Chicago Memorial Day massacre—received a letter from the police department asking him to come in at his convenience to discuss a charge of disorderly conduct or improper picketing, sit around and talk whether the picket wouldn't cease and desist from such picketing in the future; and if the picket wouldn't agree, have a hearing before a trial examiner, receive an intermediate report, have an oral argument and finally be served with a cease and desist order which did not punish him but required him not to do it again."

Four CIO Council Leaders Rap 'War' On Wagner Act

WASHINGTON, Aug. 5.—Officials of four CIO State Industrial Union Councils in New England, the East, South and Middle West appeared before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor today and advised that workers in their localities are united in opposition to amendments of any sort for the Wagner Labor Relations Act.

The four who testified were: President Allan S. Haywood of the New York State Industrial Union Council; President Michael F. Widman, Jr., of the Massachusetts Industrial Union Council Yelverton Cowherd, Secretary-Treasurer of the Alabama Industrial Union Council; and Secretary-Treasurer Gunnar Mickelsen of the Wisconsin Industrial Union Council.

Haywood, representing some 700,000 members in the Empire State, said that employer demands for amending the Wagner Act must be considered in the light of persistent hostility to labor unionism on the part of many employers—hostility including "the widespread use of labor spies and provocateurs."

The Wagner Act "constitutes an effective declaration of basic national policy, a true charter of liberties for all people who work for a living," Haywood said.

BLAMES EMPLOYERS

"The most bitter strikes involving organizations with which I have been connected during the last two years in the New York area," he continued, "have been due to the refusal of the employers to follow the clear provisions of the law and sit down and bargain with the duly chosen representatives of their employes."

WIDMAN TESTIFIES

Widman, speaking for 100,000 CIO members in Massachusetts, said that the history of the CIO in New England reveals that "since the enactment of the Wagner law, there have not been more than half a dozen strikes in New England in our jurisdiction over the issue of union recognition."

Widman said that the vast majority of some 290 petitions for certification filed with the Boston office of the NLRB have been peacefully settled. "Ninety-nine per cent of these cases, I venture to say, were it not for the good offices of the Board, would have resulted in strikes causing loss of pay to tens of thousands of workers and a consequent loss of business."

WISCONSIN KNOWS

Mickelsen told the committee that "we in Wisconsin are in a peculiarly significant position" in regard to Wagner Act amendments, for "here in Wisconsin there has just ben put upon the statute books a law which Sen. Burke joyfully proclaims to be the 'very thing that I want to do to the Wagner Act.'

"Moreover, here in Wisconsin, the AFL, led by Atty. Joseph Padway, has appeared side by side with CIO in the most vigorous opposition to the new Wisconsin labor laws—laws which as written and passed are virtually similar to what the Wagner Act would be if amended according to Mr. Padway's stated wishes."

SOUTH HAS GAINED

Yelverton Cowherd, secretary-treasurer of the Alabama Industrial Union Council, said that through benefits obtained under the Wagner Act, the United Mine Workers has been able to raise wages from a low of $1.40 a day and has won operators' praise for doing it.

The CIO official charged that George Googe, southern AFL representative who appeared before the Committee some time ago, was "stating falsehoods in attempts to belittle the Board and the Act."

Cowherd denied that Lawrence Hunt, an NLRB official, had ever spoken at a CIO mass meeting in New Orleans, as charged by Googe. Persons who were escorted from the meeting by police were labeled as "AFL union members" by Googe, but Cowherd identified them as "professional gunmen who at the time were under arrest on charges of assault with intent to murder."

"If Googe wishes to claim this type of citizen as his members, we believe that it would be very interesting to the Committee," Mr. Cowherd declared.

Order 4th Poll At Alcoa, Tenn.

Washington, Aug. 5—A fourth election to determine a collective bargaining agency has been set by the Labor Board among employes of the Aluminum Company of America at the Alcoa works in Alcoa, Tenn.

At previous elections, the latest of the three held in June, the Aluminum Workers of America, CIO, won the most votes but failed to get a majority of those cast, and the Board was forced to call for another run-off. In the coming election to be held some time in August, the CIO union will be the only one on the ballot, as the choice will lie between the AWA or no union.

Your WPA Job

By RALPH HETZEL
CIO Unemployment Director

There is agreement here in Washington that if Congress were given an opportunity to vote on a number of the vicious clauses of the WPA Bill, it would cut them out. The game of the reactionaries has been to prevent Congress from ever clearly voting upon the issues raised in the WPA Bill.

The passage of the bill reveals a most remarkable record: the issue of the bill's evil effects was never once placed before either the members of the House or Senate in such a way as to put on record the people who were trying to attack the WPA workers.

Ever since the Act was passed there has been a strong fight going on to amend it. Many of the members of Congress realize that this bill is one of the most serious blows to the common people of the country that has been passed by Congress since the advent of the New Deal.

An example of the way the cards are being dealt to hide the issues was the fate of Senator Murray's amendment to the so-called Spending-Lending Bill. The Senate by a substantial majority passed an amendment which would stop the 18-month layoffs as forced by the new bill. We believe that it is very clear that if the amendment itself had come before the House it would probably have passed. Yet it went to a quiet death when the reactionary coalition of conservative Democrats and Republicans smashed the President's spending-lending bill. Nobody voted against the bill. They simply voted against a rule to consider it, but the truth was they voted to smash the bill and the WPA amendment.

FIGHT NOT YET OVER

At this writing the fight has not yet been given up. There is one last ditch chance which the CIO is straining every effort to take advantage of. The Congress must pass a Third Deficiency Bill which carries certain appropriations that have to be made before Congress adjourns. A number of the Senators have promised that they will attach to this bill amendments to the WPA Act. These amendments will at least cover the restoration of the prevailing hourly rate, prevention of cuts in the security wage and wiping out of the 18-month layoffs.

Until this bill is voted on it has been announced by Colonel Harrington that the 18-month layoffs will be held up.

Several Senators who voted against the prevailing wage and the prevention of cuts in the security wage have made emphatic statements in the Congressional Record that they would vote for these measures as amendments to the appropriations bill. There is, therefore, an excellent chance that this will pass.

Very soon the Senators and Congressmen will be going back to their constituents, and they will learn what the common people of this country really feel about the record of the 1939 session of Congress. Here in the air-conditioned, well-fed atmosphere of Washington the members of Congress forget what WPA means to a jobless man with a wife and children. Those in the know here in Washington freely predict that those reactionaries who have smothered the New Deal program at this session will find themselves exceedingly unpopular at home.

Truth A La Mode:

NAM to Dish Up Some New Propaganda

By C. W. FOWLER

Washington, Aug. 5 — Telling the truth about industry is always a laudable thing to do. The labor movement has been doing it for years. Liberals, progressives, crusaders have tried to get it across for generations. The American people are entitled to it, especially the workers who make their living in industry.

Now the truth has a powerful "booster", the Natl. Association of Manufacturers, which is getting itself all set to jump into print, radio, movies and the lecture platforms with a new and greatly-improved line of truth for a waiting nation.

The program, incidentally, comes just at the right time — in the NAM's own words, they're fixing to "plan the program (of truth about industry) well into 1940."

FREE, GRATIS

And it won't cost the public a cent. The manufacturers will pay for it all, at the rate of $25 for an employer with 10 or fewer workers, graduated up to $25,000 for the biggest bosses.

At least, that's what the Natl. Industrial Information Committee of the NAM is outling for its sponsors in a circular letter over the personal signature of Ernest T. Weir, chairman of the NIIC, head of National Steel Co., Czar of Weirton, organizer of the Weirton hatchet gangs, consistent violator of the Wagner Act.

According to Chairman Weir, there's a "growing interest by the public in the problems of business. All segments of the public are coming to look once more to business and industry for leadership in meeting our national problems and in attaining recovery.

"I need not recall how different is this attitude from the one prevalent a few short years ago," he writes. And who's to get the credit for this? None other than the NAM, which alone has had "the vision to see this and the breadth of support to undertake this job for all industry. The NAM's forceful public information program in behalf of all business and industry begins to be heard above the din."

THE LAYOUT

The program is a thorough one, judging by the efforts the Natl. Industrial Information Committee has already been putting forth, and those it plans to put forth, in the cause of industrial truth. Here are some of the things it has been doing, and some of those it plans to do—if the sponsors come across. They're outlined in a handsome layout titled, "Re-selling the American Way to America."

On the radio, they're got "The American Family Robinson" going out weekly over 250 stations. (This program has been sharply attacked by labor leaders as anti-union propaganda.) To back this up, they have Geo. E. Sokolsky, weekly commentator over 200 stations. Sokolsky was named by the LaFollette Committee as receiving close to $30,000 of NAM funds during the steel campaign of CIO. (His latest advice to his clients is to deal with WPA demonstrators with machine guns—N. Y. Herald Tribune, July 24.)

For the press, they have their "Industrial Press Service" going to 6,600 editors of rural and small town weekly papers, plus a weekly cartoon, columns by "six outstanding economists," and a weekly boilerplate editorial.

Plus a billboard series, "The American Way," seen by "an estimated 65,000,000 people daily," plus material for industrial house organs going to 1000 company publications, plus a committee for "farm cooperation" whose job is to educate the farmers to the industrial way of thinking.

NEW PLANS

For the new campaign—extending "well into 1940" — the NIIC proposes a womens' division, a school division, increased radio, movie and newspaper work, — all with emphasis on the job of regaining "full public regard for industry."

It is a seductive program. So seductive that a long roll of America's leading industrialists, including the most flagrant violators of the Wagner Act, the most vicious enemies of labor organization in the country, have joined with Chairman Weir in the appeal to businessmen to help put it across.

The list is a long one. It has many of the leading union-busters of the U. S. on it. They're all dedicated to the truth about industry. And if the American public doesn't watch out, these gentlemen will slip it over on them — via the movies, the radio, the newspapers, the lecture platform, the schools, the women's organizations — in a program, as Chairman Weir says, planned "well into 1940."

THE REAL THING: The Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers propaganda sounds smooth—until you realize that its anti-union talk is as close to anti-union action (like that above) as ham is to eggs.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 5. — The American Newspaper Guild prepared to wind up its sixth annual convention here today, after acting on a number of proposals for future activity and hearing a number of nationally-important speakers discuss issues facing labor and the New Deal.

Pres. Heywood Broun, presiding officer at the get-together of more than 100 delegates from various sections of the nation, read a telegram from CIO Pres. John L. Lewis, who said that "the CIO is very proud of your union and what it stands for. It has pioneered in this field where organization was once thought impossible."

Wage-Hour Administrator Elmer F. Andrews, a convention guest, charged that foes of the Fair Labor Standards Act "really want the right to pay their workers something less than 25c an hour, $11 for a 44-hour week, and the taxpayers to be forced to make up the difference in the form of relief between the wretched wages they are willing to pay voluntarily and the minimum essential to sustain life."

BRIDGES SPEAKS

Harry Bridges, CIO west coast director, complimented the ANG for its progress since formation in 1935, adding, "We're all for the Guild, and more and plenty of it . . . it has earned the respect of all unions."

The delegates were told by the CIO director that deportation proceedings now in session against him will end in failure.

"We're not afraid of a parade of labor spies, stool pigeons and perjurors when we have a fair judge like Dean Landis," Bridges commented.

Broun, commenting on the frame-up case against the longshoremen's president, said that the Bridges trial "has nothing to do with the so-called issue, but is going on because he is an honest, efficient, able labor leader." Broun predicted that the day is near when the Guild will have complete organization in its field.

'WON RESPECT'

Making his annual report, Exec. Vice-Pres. Jonathan Eddy noted that the Guild has won its battles "for self-respect, decent wages and security."

"We have placed a mighty stumbling block in the path of the fascist-minded people of this country," he said, "and have shown them that the interests of the white collar workers lie not with those of the employers but with those of the workers."

Eddy pointed out that fascists in other countries have been able to fool white-collar workers into believing that their interests "lie with big business, with low wages, with long hours, with watering down of democratic rights in every way." Guildsmen, he added, won't be fooled by such propaganda, adding that the ANG is "committed to the New Deal."

Sec.-Treas. Victor Pasche revealed that the Guild has close to 19,000 members, and 111 contracts covering 140 papers, wire services, radio stations and news magazines.

A resolution passed unanimously commended Gov. Culbert Olson of California for his activities in behalf of labor. Olson sent a message to the delegates welcoming them to the city.

Bridges Refutes Red-Baiters

San Francisco, Aug. 5—Harry Bridges, CIO West Coast director, took the witness stand at his deportation hearing today and vehemently denied that he is—or ever was—a Communist, that he accepts orders from Communists, or that the Intl. Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, which he heads, is Communist-dominated or Communist controlled.

Bridges' testimony came after a succession of stoolpigeons and professional red-baiters had sought, with a minimum of evidence, to link him with the Communist party.

FOR DEMOCRACY

Asked if he believed in "the democratic form of government," Bridges replied:

"I most certainly do. We practice it every day. From my knowledge of the government, we have certainly followed that policy, and in all our actions have supported the democratic form of government."

Under question, the CIO official said his conception of democratic government was "rule by the majority and in the interests of the majority." He went on to differentiate democratic government from capitalistic society, for the latter of which Bridges said he "had not much use" because "to me, it means the exploitation of a lot of people for a profit, and a complete disregard of their interests for that profit."

'SMOKE-SCREEN'

Telling of his experience in the union, Bridges said the "question of Communism and the red herring has been used and has always been used to divide our unions, to lay smoke-screen down under the cover of which a lot of anti-union activities can be carried on."

Bridges declared that in his position as a union leader he had had no particular trouble with Communist members. Asked if he saw any indication that the Communists were "trying to take over the union," the ILWU president declared:

"We have the most democratic trade unions in the country and it is impossible for anybody to take them over."

CIO Construction Union Announces Regulations

WASHINGTON, Aug. 5.—Provisions for the elimination of jurisdictional disputes and unauthorized work stoppages in the construction industry were announced today by A. D. Lewis, chairman of the new United Construction Workers Organizing Committee of the CIO, in making public the rules and regulations under which the new union will operate.

Training of journeymen workmen and a transfer card system are other matters covered by the regulations, which also detail the duties of state and regional directors, business agents, job stewards and other local officers.

In order to eliminate jurisdictional disputes on any construction job, the regulations provide that "every effort should be made to establish a procedure whereby any workman doing work, for which a scale of wages is provided, shall be paid either his regular scale of wages, if the work performed by him calls for a lower scale, or he shall be paid at the higher scale if the class of work calls for a higher scale of wages."

The regulations state that "the organization shall make every effort to stabilize labor conditions in the construction industry and eliminate strikes and stoppages of work during the adjudication of grievances."

PROVIDES FOR PEACE

They therefore provide for the insertion in all contracts of stipulations that where grievances arise between workers and the contractor, there shall be no suspension of work on account of such differences, and every effort shall be made to settle them immediately. The procedure details steps to be taken in the settlement of grievances, first between local representatives, and if that fails between the general manager of the construction company upon the election of an umpire to decide the case.

"Pending the adjudication of any dispute, construction workers shall not cease work,' it is stated. "When a joint decision is reached at any stage of the procedure, it shall be binding upon both parties thereto and shall not be subject to reopening by either party, except by mutual agreement."

PROVIDES FOR HELPERS

Recognizing the necessity for the "proper and adequate training of journeymen workmen in the construction industry,' the Committee declares that "Local unions shall make rules to govern the admission into Local Unions with full membership workers in helper classifications and the employment of helpers upon a practical basis on all construction jobs."

'Enemy' Navy Fails to Sink Guild Fleet

Chicago, Aug. 5. — Indication that foes of the Chicago Hearst strikers had embarked on a program of "naval warfare" on the waters of Lake Michigan near Chicago's busy loop district, grew clearer today as the union "picket boat" was attacked for the second time by another mystery ship.

The attacking craft collided with the Guild boat, crippling its motors. A week previous an unregistered 37-foot cruiser tried to smash the Guild boat, but without success.

Hague in New Role: CIO Strike Mediator!

Jersey City, N. J., Aug. 5. (FP)—Faced with the threat of a strike, the first major one since the U. S. Supreme Court upheld the CIO's right of assembly in Jersey City, Mayor Frank Hague about-faced and aided in mediation efforts today, instead of using his old method of running all the strikers out of town.

Requested by Local 421, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers to intervene and avert a strike against H. Goodman & Sons, Hague appointed City Commissioner Daniel Casey (also a former member of the city's anti-CIO board of strategy) as arbitrator. A conference was held and an agreement reached to avert the walkout.

The union agreed to postpone strike action and the company promised not to institute its proposed wage cuts pending further discussions. The union had set the strike deadline for the firm's 350 workers after the company tried to push through pay slashes of as much as $9 a week.

Serve Warning on Armour

An effigy typifying the labor policies of Armour & Co., giant meat packing firm, goes up in smoke as members of a Chicago local of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee show resentment at firm's long stalling. A work stoppage followed management's withdrawal from negotiations.

Do You Know This Man?

Toledo, Aug. 5.—John Brezinski, Jr., a former employe of the Logan Gear Company here and a member of the United Auto Workers, Local 12, has been missing for over two years and all efforts to locate him have failed. He is 31 years old, weighs 165 pounds, is 5 feet, 9 inches, brown eyes and black wavy hair. Thumb on his right hand amputated at the first joint and has large mole on the left cheek under his nose. He sometimes shortens his name to "Breezy".

His mother is in poor health since his father's death two years ago and her conditions is aggravated by John's absence. Anyone having any information is urgently requested to contact Mrs. John Brezinski, Sr. at 860 Tecumseh Street, Toledo, Ohio, who will pay a reasonable reward for any information leading to the location of her son.

CIO Wins Hands Down In Baltimore

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 5.—A Labor Board election held here among 442 employes of the Locke Insulator plant eligible to vote was won overwhelmingly by the CIO. The election, held in three voting units — machinists' department, power house and all other maintenance and production workers—was carried by the CIO in all three departments by a total of 354 votes.

In the machinists' department, the CIO defeated the AFL machinists union 13 to 1. The power house workers cast nine votes, all for the CIO. In the largest unit the CIO defeated the National Brotherhood of Operative Potters by a vote of 332 to 23. Only 20 workers altogether voted for no union.

Armour Heeds Tie-Up Threat

Chicago, Aug. 12—Armour & Co., giant meat packing firm, today had bowed to union strength and rehired 15 suddenly-discharged members of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee, thereby averting a strike of the company's several thousand employes.

Discharge of the 15 men occurred while they were attempting to take up a grievance with the management. After two days of refusal to rehire the grievance committee, a mass meeting of 3,000 workers demanded action.

Later, 500 shop stewards and officers of Local 347 instructed the strike strategy committee to prepare the union for a walkout.

Shortly afterwards a delegation of PWOC leaders met with two Armour vice-presidents and the reinstatements followed.

MANY DEVELOPMENTS

Developments in the situation arising out of Armour's refusal to negotiate a contract with PWOC meanwhile remained at the boiling point.

Van A. Bittner, PWOC chairman, announced that the union's National Policy Committee will be called to Washington in the next few days to lay their case before government officials.

"No stone is being left unturned to focus public attention upon the vicious 'public-be-damned' attitude of Armour and the other packers," Don Harris, PWOC director, declared.

Success Story

Washington—The CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League were the only major organizations in the nation that fought amendments to the Wagner Act. Combatting employers' propaganda, vicious newspaper attacks and the double-dealing of the AFL leadership, the CIO and the League were able to fight foes of the Act to a standstill, preserve Labor's Magna Charta intact.

Packinghouse, Auto Workers Win Demands

(See Stories on Inside Pages)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12. — Affiliates of the CIO won a string of victories throughout the nation this week, capped by the success of the United Automobile Workers in gaining its first company-wide agreement with General Motors and substantial wage increases for 7,600 skilled workers.

The victory, coming at the end of a month-long strike frequently marked by police violence against UAW members, was described by union officials as the most important since the first agreements with the big motor companies following the 1937 strikes.

Meanwhile, Armour & Co., giant meat packing firm, backed down in a show of strength with the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee.

Other recent victories:

1. The Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers won a National Labor Relations Board election victory in Alabama, polling a 5-1 majority over their AFL rivals.

2. CIO brick and clay workers rolled up a 13-1 majority at the Locke Insulator plant in Baltimore, as well as defeating AFL unions in two craft unit elections at the same factory.

3. The Textile Workers Union won sole bargaining rights at the Pequot Mills in Salem, Mass., in one of the largest elections yet held by the National Labor Relations Board in New England.

4. The Simmons Bed Co. signed its first CIO contract, covering several hundred workers in its San Francisco plant.

5. One thousand workers gained wage adjustments and a contract after negotiations with two big Philadelphia leather firms.

6. The Dominion Steel Co. in Sidney, Nova Scotia, announced it would agree to sign a Steel workers Organizing Committee contract for the first time.

Shipyard Union Certified For 5,000 At Bethlehem Plant

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—The National Labor Relations Board today had widened the breach in the anti-union policy of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, when it certified Brooklyn Local 13 and Hoboken Local 15, of the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, as the sole bargaining agencies in that company's three ship-repair yards in the Port of New York. Some 5,000 men are affected.

This militant CIO affiliate made the first opening in Bethlehem's die-hard anti-union policy last spring when the Labor Board ordered Bethlehem Steel's shipbuilding division to bargain with its East Boston Local 25 in the Atlantic and Simpson Drydocks, Boston. Enforcement of this order is at present being held up in the Circuit Court on an appeal against the order by the company.

The National Office of the IUMSWA pointed out that certification of its local unions in these ports, coupled with its successful organization campaigns in Bethlehem's huge Fore River and Sparrow's Point ship construction yards are bringing nearer the day when it will open negotiations with the leader of the "little steel" group for a nation-wide pact covering its some 20,000 employes in the shipbuilding division.

San Pedro Local 9 of the IUMSWA is its only affiliate which has an agreement with Bethlehem at present.

Striking tool and die makers, members of the United Automobile Workers, CIO, cast their votes to accept the sweeping victory settlement won by the union after a month-long struggle with General Motors.

AT RIGHT: Officers of the UAW-CIO — Pres. R. J. Thomas, Sec.-Treas. George Addes and Walter Reuther, strike chairman—look over the victory contract, which gave the UAW sole bargaining rights in 42 plants, forestalled AFL disruptionist plans, and lifted wages for skilled workers.

CIO Wins More Elections, Contracts

Ask Court Order Against Girdler

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 12.—The CIO joined with the National Labor Relations Board today in seeking a U. S. Circuit Court order to force Tom Girdler's Republic Steel Corp. to abide by an NLRB decision which accused it of unfair labor practices and granted some 5,000 workers reinstatement to their jobs with back pay.

The case, an aftermath of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee "Little Steel" strike, dates from the first Labor Board complaint against the company in August of 1937.

Filing a 60-page brief, Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, argued that Republic Steel had flouted the Wagner Act, and that whatever violence arose during the strike was a direct result of the company's effort to destroy the union.

RAPS REPUBLIC

The brief summarized Republic's labor policy as being filled with:

". . . threats, discharges and lockouts; with espionage, shadowing and beatings of organizers and union members; with a barrage of propaganda against unionism in general, SWOC in particular, and the leaders of SWOC and the CIO; with the proliferation of company union on company union; with the instigation of lawless Law and Order Leagues and back-to-work movements; with attempts to turn civil authorities, business and other interests against the union; and with announcements that under no circumstances would it ever sign any contract with the union."

TRACES STEEL HISTORY

Pressman traced the history of labor relations in the steel industry, and showed that the strikes of 1892, 1901, 1909, 1919, 1934 and 1937 all had a similar basis—the effort of the steel barons to destroy unionism, often while at the same time breathing lip service to collective bargaining.

PACT AS SYMBOL

He denied Republic claims that the strike was merely an "organizing" maneuver, and asserted that the demand for a written contract served as a symbol during the workers' struggle to maintain their right to self-organization under the Wagner Act.

Contrasting the era of industrial peace which U. S. Steel ushered into its vast domain by signing a SWOC contract, with the unrest in Little Steel, the CIO counsel charged that a similar amicable relationship will come to Republic when that firm is ready to deal openly with the SWOC.

NLRB attorneys, in their argument before the court, showed how the Girdler corporation has had the protection of "due process of law" and defended the Board's decision as justifiable and legal.

WIN CONTRACT

Jersey City, N. J.—District 50 of the United Mine Workers has signed a closed shop contract with the Dye Specialties Corporation here providing for an increase in minimum hourly rates from 45 to 75 cents.

Labor Board Takes Jurisdiction Over Bank Employes

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Bank employes are covered by the National Labor Relations Act, the Labor Board ruled this week in a decision on the case of the Bank of America, mammoth corporation with headquarters in San Francisco.

Declaring that the bank is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of the Wagner Act, the Board ordered the San Francisco bank to reinstate with back pay a trust department employe found to have been fired for activity in the United Office & Professionl Workers Union, CIO.

At a hearing before the Board the Bank of America had contended that national banks are agencies of the Federal government and not employers within the meaning of the Wagner Act.

In other types of cases, the banking institutions have argued that they are private firms, entirely independent of the government.

The Board ruled that the United States did not create the bank but "merely provided a permissive means" by which it could be organized and do business.

IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

In answer to the bank's contention that it was not engaged in interstate commerce, the Board declared:

"It is a matter of common knowledge that the commercial bank, of which the respondent (bank) is an outstanding example, is the primary medium in the commercial system of the United States for the transfer of money credits from one portion of the country to another, without the actual transfer of cash, whereby payment is effected for goods or merchandise sold and transported from one part of the United States to another and between the Unit-

12 Furniture Shops Sign, Avert Strike

New York, Aug. 12.—Contracts with 12 out of 37 parlor frame furniture shops called out on strike recently by the United Furniture Workers were signed the first day of the strike, the CIO union announced this week.

Ten other firms signed up before the strike deadline, and were not involved in the walkout which affected 400 employes.

The union workers struck in protest against a threatened 25% wage cut and elimination of a number of paid holidays included in the expired agreement with the Furniture Frame Mfrs. Assn.

Order G-M To End Spy Practices

Washington, Aug. 12.—General Motors was ordered to stop spying upon the union activities of its employes at the Delco-Remy plant at Anderson, Ind., in a decision announced today by the National Labor Relations Board.

The company was also ordered to throw out the Delco-Remy Employes Association, Inc., found to be dominated by the employer, and to protect its employes from violence or threats aimed to discourage membership in the United Automobile Workers, CIO, or any other labor organization.

The Board found that the Association was established in 1933 at the suggestion and with the aid of supervisory officials of the corporation, and that many workers were threatened with the loss of their jobs if they refused to take part in the activities of the company union.

$185 MONTHLY FOR SPIES

It was also disclosed that the corporation paid out an average of $185 a month for espionage service by the National Metal Trades Association. Evidence before the Board showed that in the summer of 1936 when the CIO union began a campaign to organize the Delco-Remy and Guide Lamp plants of the company in Anderson, "back to work" movements were begun by employes of the corporation.

Seattle Paper Must Rehire Two

Washington, Aug. 12—Two employes in the classified advertising department of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, Seattle, Wash., who were fired in 1936 for union activity in the Seattle Newspaper Guild, have been ordered reinstated with back pay by the National Labor Relations Board.

The Board also ordered Hearst Publications, Inc., owners of the paper, to stop discouraging membership or activity in the Guild or any other labor organization, and to notify the NLRB regional director of compliance within 10 days.

The strike out of which the case grew was called August 13, 1936, in protest against the firing of two Guild employes. John Boettiger, son-in-law of President Roosevelt, who was made publisher during the course of the strike, settled the dispute.

Biggest Poll In New England Won By CIO

Salem, Mass., Aug. 12—Polling 1,320 out of a total of 2,570 votes cast, the Textile Workers Union of America won collective bargaining rights for workers at plants of the Naumkeag Steam Cotton Co. here and in Peabody, Mass.

The CIO union defeated the Independent Sheeting Workers of America, which had previously been recognized as bargaining agency. The regional office of the Natl. Labor Relations Board which conducted the election said it was one of the largest polls ever held in New England.

5,000 Win 5% Pay Increase

Philadelphia, Aug. 12.—Five thousand workers at the Alexander Smith Carpet Company of Yonkers, New York, won a five per cent wage increase in a new agreement signed this week with the Textile Workers Union of America.

William Pollock, secretary-treasurer of the union here, said in announcing the agreement, that in addition to the general wage increase, which is on the basis of 50 weeks' employment a year, and amounts to a quarter of a million dollars a year, another 5 per cent increase was gained for workers on the third shift.

The contract also gives the TWUA sole bargaining rights, provides for a week's vacation with full pay, and sets up machinery for the adjustment of grievances. Emil Rieve, president of the TWUA, and Alex Riddett, president of Local 122, Yonkers, signed the contract. It was ratified at a mass meeting of the workers in Yonkers.

Leather Workers Get Pacts

Philadelphia, Aug. 12—Two contracts covering about 1,000 workers have been signed by the International Fur and Leather Workers Union, CIO, with the Surpass Leather Co. and H. Swoboda & Sons, Inc.

The agreements, which provide for a preferential shop and no wage reductions, run until August, 1940.

MUST REHIRE SEVEN

The National Labor Relations Board in Washington this week ordered the E. Hubschman & Sons, Inc., leather firm, to reinstate with back pay seven employes discharged for union activities, and to stop discouraging membership in the CIO union.

Evidence introduced at Board hearings disclosed that officers and supervisory employes of the company had taken a definitely anti-union attitude from the start of an organizing drive by the CIO leather local in April, 1937. The dismissed employes were all active members of the union and were highly skilled workers.

Simmons Bed Firm Signs CIO Contract

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 12.—The Simmons Company, one of the largest concerns in the bedding industry, has signed a closed shop contract with the United Furniture Workers covering workers in its San Francisco plant.

The company also has plants in Kenosha, Wis.; Seattle, Wash.; Elizabeth, N. J.; Atlanta, Ga.; Watertown, Mass.; Los Angeles, Cal. and other cities.

Won after prolonged negotiations, the agreement provides for minimum wage rates of 65 and 62½ cents for male workers, and 60 cents for female employes. Rolling mill employes are to receive 90 cents. In slack periods work is to be divided by operating on a 30-hour week. Under normal conditions the work week will be on a five-day 40-hour basis.

GM Agreement Major Gain For Union

DETROIT, Aug. 12.—Members of the United Automobile Workers today were back at work at General Motors, celebrating the biggest auto union victory since the first written agreements were signed in the winter of 1937.

Seventy-five hundred skilled tool and die makers, engineering and maintenance workers who had been on strike for more than a month, won most of the demands which they had submitted to the mammoth auto producer.

The agreement, signed after it had been ratified by the strikers, gave the UAW-CIO sole bargaining rights for the first time in 42 of GM's 59 plants, and increased wages by as much as 25c an hour in some cases. Most of the workers involved received 5c increases.

The agreement, which wipes out the remains of Homer Martin's disruptive influence in the GM system, provides for double time for Sunday and holiday work, and permits the use of the union label on tools and machinery purchased by the company from union suppliers.

Production workers, who were not called out on strike, will benefit from the pact when a new agreement is negotiated for them, UAW leaders predicted.

Though GM Pres. Knudsen endeavored to minimize the scope of the corporation's concessions, details of the agreement showed it to be an overwhelming union victory.

'ON FIRMEST BASE'

Walter Reuther, head of the UAW-CIO GM department, said that the union has been established "on the firmest base it has yet achieved among the 250,000 General Motors workers. . ."

Pointing out that the UAW-CIO will have sole bargaining committees in 42 General Motors plants, he predicted:

"The functioning of these committees can no longer be disturbed by the destructive efforts of the AFL or any other group as long as the present contract remains in effect.

"Until this agreement was signed, it was possible for the AFL to recruit three followers, send their names into the corporation, and claim the right to act as a plant committee. Automatically, that meant the end of bargaining for the workers in these plants, since the corporation refused to recognize either committee where dual committees appeared."

The agreement, he added, "re-establishes bargaining and griev-

Packard Workers To Vote

Detroit, Aug. 12 — Nine thousand employes of the Packard Motor Co. will vote for a bargaining agency on August 17, the National Labor Relations Board announced today, thereby removing the possibility of a strike by the CIO United Automobile Workers.

The strike threat followed refusal of the management to discuss grievances with the CIO affiliate on the excuse that the AFL rump outfit has substantial representation among the employes.

Texans Say: 'Nix On Garner'

Amarillo, Tex., Aug. 12—Only 9 per cent of the Democratic voters in Vice President Garner's home state constituency in Amarillo favor him as a Presidential candidate, a poll taken by the New York Daily News-Chicago Tribune Press Service in this typical Texas city reveals.

Over 50 per cent of the members of the low-income group in Uvalde, Garner's home town, were found by the newsmen to oppose the leader of the anti-labor bloc in Congress.

'Explain Your Actions!' Congressmen Told

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Workers, farmers, unemployed and other groups of progressive citizens today were preparing a nationwide "Information, Please" program with which to pepper reactionary Senators and Representatives returning to their homes after hatcheting almost every piece of liberal legislation considered at the Congressional session which adjourned last week.

A wave of protest—voiced by CIO Pres. John L. Lewis in his attack on Vice-Pres. Garner two weeks ago, and by New Deal Senator Claude Pepper of Florida on the Senate floor just before adjournment—swept the nation. CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League affiliates were formulating a program of warning foes of New Deal legislation that defeat awaits them at the 1940 polls unless their policies are drastically changed.

THREE VICTORIES

When the Congressional smoke died away, the wage-hour bill remained unamended on its vital points, the Wagner Act was preserved—thanks to the CIO's year-old campaign and the LaFollette Civil Liberties Committee had been given an additional $50,000 for its work.

Outside of these victories, the picture was a sorry one. Hoped-for amendments to the Woodrum-WPA bill were defeated by the conservative Democrat - Republican bloc. As a result, lay-offs of several thousand WPA workers who had been on the rolls for 18 months were ordered by Commissioner Harrington, who previously had held up his orded in the hope that the amendment introduced by Sen. Murray of Montana might be passed.

Other amendments, calling for prevailing hourly wage rates and retention of the monthly security wages, also were howled down.

TO PROBE NLRB

Investigation of the Labor Board, a move favored by the House Tories when their hopes for amendment of the Wagner Act were smashed, received a formal O.K. and $50,000 to boot. Speaker of the House Bankhead obliged the Administration foes by appointing a five-man committee deemed almost certain to smear the NLRB.

The Senate, responding to a plea by Senator Tydings, wealthy and conservative Marylander, passed a rider to the lend-spend bill which would have practically forbidden political activity by organized labor. Refusal of the House to consider the President's lend-spend bill wiped it off the books. The rider certainly would have been killed in conference committee sessions had the spending measure passed the House.

Possibility of an extended housing program, hailed both for its slum-clearing qualities, was postponed for another six months as the House repeated its lend-spend action and refused to give the proposal a place on its calendar.

PEOPLE AROUSED

The Congressional break with labor and the New Deal developed out of the progressives' reverses in the 1938 elections—which the reactionaries falsely estimated as a repudiation of the entire New Deal philosophy.

In months ahead the people will have their opportunity to show Congress that it made a bad guess. Evidence that the people have little sympathy for the Tory offensive is contained in the letters and wires that continue to pour into the CIO office as a re-

Maritime Unions Plan Pact Conference

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—In preparation for renewal of union contracts with major steamship companies, representatives of eight CIO maritime unions will hold a conference in Washington, Aug. 18.

The meeting, called by Joseph Curran, president of the National Maritime Union and chairman of the CIO Maritime Committee, will discuss the basis for joint action in renewing present contracts, which expire September 30.

EIGHT UNIONS

Eight unions altogether will be represented, five of them West Coast organizations. Two national unions, the American Communications Association and the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, are also in the group.

In announcing the meeting, Curran said: "In addition to laying the groundwork for action in relation to September 30, I have some very definite recommendations to make in regard to making the CIO Maritime Committee a functioning body to unite our activities on a national scale."

EXPIRE SEPTEMBER 30

Most of the marine labor contracts with the exception of the tanker agreements expire September 30, Curran explained. The CIO, he said, hopes eventually to unite all the marine unions into a National Industrial Maritime Federation.

There are three marine unions at the present time still in the American Federation of Labor, the Intl. Longshoremen's Association, the Sailors Union of the Pacific and the Masters, Mates and Pilots Association.

Garner

"Garner is the canny, hard-bitten, self-made, richest citizen of Uvalde, Tex., whose career and public service has been devoted to the cause of making richest citizens richer and poorer citizens take it. During the last six years he has been the spiritual head of the reactionary Roosevelt opposition and on occasions its conniver-in-chief.

". . . liberal politicians . . . just can't visualize a torch-light procession in which the marchers hold aloft a banner inscribed 'vote for the labor-baiting, poker-playing, whisky-drinking evil old man'. Since Harding, they reason, there has been no irresistible public demand for a whisky-drinking poker player in the White House." — Kenneth Crawford, writing in the Aug. 5 issue of The Nation.

LaFollette Committee, Given $50,000, To Push Associated Farmers Probe

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—The Senate Civil Liberties Committee today was rushing plans for a continued investigation of the Associated Farmers on the West Coast, following action of the Senate in providing an additional $50,000 for the probe.

By 36-17 vote, after a long and heated debate, the Senate granted the funds on the day before adjournment, though agreeing to allot it only half of the $100,000 requested by Senators Downey of California and Schwellenbach of Washington.

Friends of the committee, headed by Senators LaFollette of Wisconsin and Thomas of Utah, had despaired of winning new life for the investigation. The request for funds was tied up in the Senate Audit & Control Committee during most of the session, and a recommendation for action on the probe came to the Senate only a few days before adjournment.

Pres. Roosevelt spoke in favor of the appropriation at a number of press conferences, and Atty.-Gen. Frank Murphy, whose new civil liberties division at the Department of Justice was regarded by some as a successor to the LaFollette committee, took a similar stand.

As finally reported out by the Audit & Control Committee, the appropriation was cut to $50,000. Sen. LaFollette, during debate on the resolution, opined that the full $100,000 would be necessary to carry on the Associated Farmers investigation, pointing out the extra expense involved in travel to the west coast and the complexity of the AF set-up.

MAY GET MORE FUNDS

In supporting the $50,000 appropriation, however, a number of the Senators made it clear that the door will be open to further grants if the committee finds them necessary.

Sen. Hiram Johnson of California, Sen. "Cotton Ed" Smith of South Carolina and Sen. Burke of Nebraska were among those who led the opposition to the La-Follette-Thomas Committee.

"Cotton Ed," who managed to beat the purge a year ago, felt that the committee was a step to "state socialism" because it helped to centralize the federal government, and Burke, who sponsored the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers' amendments to the Wagner Act, objected to what he called the unity of the "philosophy" of Senators Thomas and LaFollette.

PRAISE WORK IN HARLAN

On the other hand, Sen. Alben Barkley of Kentucky, majority leader, praised the Committee's probe of Harlan County, asserting that it had helped the state to clear up a messy situation, and other Senators joined to laud the investigations.

The Associated Farmers, on which the LaFollette committee will concentrate during the next few months, is largely composed of big ranch owners and controlling interests in "farm factories" throughout California. It has been a consistent foe of unionism, and West Coast labor leaders have charged that it serves as a "front" for reactionary industrialists up and down the West Coast.

Largely responsible for much of the reactionary legislation in California's farm counties, the AF has expanded into neighboring states—Oregon, Washington, Arizona and Idaho—and has met sharp labor criticism in each new locality.

The CIO, the AFL and the National Grange all supported the resolution to give the LaFollette Committee funds to continue its investigation.

The General Motors Victory

The winning of the recent General Motors strike by the United Automobile Workers of the CIO was described by Pres. R. J. Thomas as "the greatest single victory for the union since the great strikes in 1937."

The CIO union won sole bargaining rights in 42 plants, a boosted wage schedule, overtime concessions and many other improvements in conditions.

The strike was a model of solidarity, militancy and union discipline. It demonstrated that the automobile workers have not lost their fighting spirit, despite the betrayals of the Homer Martin gang and the factional confusion which they created.

The strike established beyond question the loyalty of the auto workers to the CIO and sounded the death knell to the hopes of the AFL leadership to split their union ranks.

The early and dramatic successes of the UAW lent tremendous impetus to the organizing drives of the CIO in other industries. Now the General Motors victory, following successful strikes in Briggs and Allis-Chalmers plants and a long list of other organizational gains, has shown the stability of the UAW-CIO and demonstrated that it is coming out on top of all its recent difficulties.

This will be the best of news to the Packinghouse Workers, now approaching a showdown with the big corporations of their industry, and to all other CIO unions.

The CIO is on the march and not even the biggest corporations can stop it.

Don't Leave Them in Doubt

"You'd better talk to your representative when he gets home," is the advice given by one Washington agency to businessmen and employers. It advises them to tell members of Congress what they like and don't like about their voting records.

That's swell advice for labor too.

The tory majority in the past session of Congress went on the rampage on a dozen issues of vital concern to all labor unionists.

When they return home, your Congressmen and Senators will be wondering just what the voters are thinking about what they did or failed to do in Congress.

Don't leave them in agonizing doubt.

If they went down the line for labor in defense of the Wagner Act, of WPA, of the wage-hour law and in support of other progressive legislation, express your appreciation both individually and through your organizations.

If, on the other hand, they joined the tory bloc in voting to slash WPA, if they joined the conspiracy against labor's rights as embodied in the Wagner act, and if they voted against other measures of benefit to labor, be sure to let them know what you and your organizations think of their actions.

Most of the Congressmen with bad records will return home with pocketsful of excuses and alibis. But let them know that their votes speak louder than all their excuses, and that when next elections roll around, labor's votes can do a lot of talking too.

Success to the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers

The congratulations of the whole CIO go to the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers on the occasion of its 36th convention in Denver, Colo.

A long-established industrial union itself, this organization was a pioneer and founder of the CIO and has been one of the staunchest supporters of the whole program of industrial organization of the mass-production industries.

Although the past year has been one of poor production for the industry, Pres. Reid Robinson was able to report an impressive record of organizational gains.

Many elections and new contracts have been won in the north, east, south and west, throughout this far-flung industry.

Encouraged by the progress of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, all other CIO unions will wish them all success in the program of expanded organization planned by their convention.

Due For The Woodshed

Looking Ahead

Revolt in Congress

THE revolt which occurred in the past session of Congress was a revolt directed against the interests of the great majority of the American people.

The revolt was directed against the unemployed. Slash after slash was made in appropriations for WPA and public works generally. WPA wages were cut and layoffs decreed for a million jobless.

The revolt was directed against labor unions. Every effort was made to amend and destroy the Wagner Act, and a so-called investigation was voted to smear the Labor Board and to hamper its usefulness to labor.

The revolt was directed against the lowest paid groups of American workers. A drive was started against the Wage-Hour Act, for the purpose of depriving two million sweated workers of its protection. Attempts were also made to prevent enforcement of the law by denying adequate appropriations.

The revolt was directed against farmers and little business as well as labor. The administration's lending-spending and housing bills were defeated. The House also voted to refuse an appropriation of $119,000,000 to the Commodity Credit Corporation for loans to farmers, but had to rescind its action at the last moment.

The revolt was directed against democratic liberties. Scores of anti-alien bills were introduced, and some of the most vicious of them were passed by the House.

Who Engineered This Revolt?

The American voters who reelected a New Deal administration and gave the Democratic party a huge majority in Congress, were under the impression that they could expect a progressive program of legislation in the interests of workers, farmers, and the common people generally.

Their will was defeated by the desertion of a bloc of tory Democrats who made common cause with the Republican minority, and who turned the control of Congress over to the new tory majority thus formed.

Hitler first raised his standard of revolt in a beer parlor. But the American tory conspiracy got off to a better start over the whisky glasses in Vice-President Garner's Senate office.

How Successful Was The Revolt?

The revolt of the Republican-Garnercrat alliance did not succeed in all it attempted.

Enough resistance was mobilized to prevent total destruction of the WPA program.

The Wagner Act was saved from the slaughter for which it was intended.

The wage-hour law was also saved at the last moment from destructive amendments.

The LaFollette-Thomas civil liberties committee was preserved through an appropriation of $50,000, despite all attempts to kill it.

But enough damage was done to WPA, to the housing program and to nearly all other progressive legislation to cause rejoicing in the reactionary camp.

Who Fought This Revolt?

The progressives in Senate and House put up a valiant fight but found themselves in a minority most of the time.

The lead in mobilizing popular resistance throughout the country to the tory revolt was taken by the CIO, by Labor's Non-Partisan League, and by other farm and progressive groups.

The role of the AFL leadership was a pitiful one. So far from rising to the defense of the Wagner Act, it actually led the attack by introducing amendments which embodied much of the program of the most anti-labor manufacturers.

The CIO fought every step of the way against the slashing of the WPA program. But the AFL top leadership did not raise a finger in defense of WPA until after the passage of the Woodrum bill, when it finally took alarm at the elimination of the prevailing wage.

Much of the rank and file of the AFL, however, joined with the CIO in defense of the Wagner Act, of WPA and of other progressive legislation.

The blast by John L. Lewis against Garner and the whole Republican-Garnercrat conspiracy aided in turning the tide somewhat in the closing days of Congress.

After this incident, the wage-hour amendments were shelved, the appropriation for the Lafollette-Thomas civil liberties committee was voted, and a few amends were made here and there for some of the worst excesses.

The Issue Is Clear

The issue is now clearly before the country. The tory bloc engineered by Garner has revealed its program of revolt against the interests of the majority of the American people.

Now it's up to labor, the farmers and all other progressives to let their representatives know what they think of this revolt, if they are to prevent even worse to follow in the next session, and if they are to prepare for the final stamping out of the revolt at the next elections.

Murray Asks Study of Unemployment

Steel Union Head Suggests F.D.R. Call Conference

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—A ringing challenge to government and industry to join with labor in working out a solution for the unemployment crisis, was issued today by Vice-President Philip Murray of the CIO in a nationwide radio broadcast.

Murray urged that a conference be called by the President of the United States, at which representatives of government, labor and industry would sit down together "in a spirit of patriotism" to pool their ideas on "America's No. 1 problem."

"This conference,' he said, "might solve the unemployment problem either through a collective agreement between these three groups to put people back to work, or by a coordinated legislative program worked out by government, industry and labor to be presented at the reconvened session of Congress this winter."

Speaking on a Dept. of Labor program over the NBC network, in which he was interviewed by Commissioner Isador Lubin, Murray told of the benefits brought to the steel industry by collective bargaining. A discussion of technological unemployment led up to his challenge.

A CHANCE FOR BUSINESS

"We have been belabored during the last few years with cries from business that it has not been given a chance to work its way out of its difficulties," Murray declared.

"We have been deafened by sure cures for economic ills from writers, statesmen and economists. We have furnished relief to the unemployed, and relief of course is necessary. But it is not the remedy.

"Now I'm going to issue a challenge! I challenge government, business and labor to send their best thinkers to meet in a spirit of patriotism around the conference table in Washington and to solve by processes of reasoning the grave problem of unemployment.

"Such a conference, I personally believe, should be held at the call of the President of the United States."

Describing unemployment as "America's No. 1 social, economic and political problem," Murray declared: "Failure to solve it constructively might very well rock the fundations of our government. The democratic method is the conference table."

Repeating his challenge, he concluded: "If the government accepts this challenge, I dare any group of Americans to resist or refuse to cooperate."

EXTENDS DEMOCRACY

Murray said that he had been pleased to see the "democratic way of life extended, through our collective bargaining agreements, into the steel mills of this nation and into the homes and communities of the steel workers — in fact into their very lives and the lives of their families.

"I've lived and worked in the Pittsburgh industrial district for more than a quarter century," he went on, "and I can tell you that until a few years ago Democracy —the democratic way of doing things — was something we were always after but never had."

The SWOC leader recalled that in pre-union days, many of the steel communities were virtual dictatorships. In 1933, when Sec. of Labor Frances Perkins was compelled to address Homestead, Pa., steel workers from the post-office steps, since all other meeting places were closed to her.

"If the Secretary of Labor should visit Homestead this summer," Murray said, "she'd find that one of the permanent town institutions is the steel workers' union office on Main Street, and all meeting places are wide open to Homestead's people. This is typical of how the collective bargaining agreements have brought new civil liberties to the workers, as well as new industrial rights."

In the mills themselves, dictatorships used to exist, he noted, with each department serving as a "little kingdom with foreman as judge, jury and executioner, too." Thanks to the union, "the foreman's kingdom has become a republic, and the workers have stopped being subjects and have become self-respecting citizens with rights and privileges in their departments," with each member having the right to take complaints before a "jury of his peers."

Job security and seniority are other union contributions to the peace of mind of the steel worker, the CIO vice-president told the radio audiences, while average hourly earnings have jumped from 72½c in 1936 to 91½c at present — a 26% increase.

Say Go-Between For AFL-NAM Has 'Smear Board' Job

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Gilbert H. Montague, Wall St lawyer linked with the AFL's efforts to amend the Wagner Act, will be general counsel for the smear investigation of the National Labor Relations Board, informed observers predicted today.

Montague, it is recalled, was in secret communication with Joseph Padway, general counsel for the AFL, during the federation's convention last year, and helped the AFL leadership to draft crippling amendments for the Act.

Letters printed in the "Washington Merry-Go-Round" column last May revealed that Montague had written to Colby Chester, retired head of the National Assn. of Manufacturers, that . . . "Padway has now asked me confidentially to prepare for him draft amendments of the act . . ." During July, August and September of 1938, Montague had supplied the AFL lawyer "confidentially . . various legal memos and data he requested . . ."

If Montague becomes the committee's counsel, the smear drive against the Labor Board will continue at an even greater pitch than was first expected from the three-man majority of opponents to the Board who were appointed by the Speaker of the House.

TWO LIBERALS

The two men counted as sympathetic to the NLRB are A. D. Healey of Massachusetts and Abe Murdock of Utah, both Democrats.

Heading the group is Howard Smith of Virginia, sponsor of the investigation and a man never known during his many years in the House to have supported a labor measure. Two Republicans, C. A. Halleck of Indiana and H. N. Routzohn of Ohio, complete the quintet.

As announced by Smith, the committee will meet in Washington Sept. 7, to work out its plan, and hearings are expected to get under way around October.

Also joining the anti-New Deal smear drive will be the Dies Committee, whose hearings are expected to start very shortly. Rep. Healey, one of the small liberal minority on the Dies group, resigned from that post to accept the position on the Labor Board inquiry.

HEARINGS RECESSED

Hearings of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor have been recessed until Jan. 15, 1940, when CIO Pres. John L. Lewis and Vice-Pres. Philip Murray will be given an opportunity to wind up the CIO argument against Wagner Act amendments. During the summer, statements of a number of union officials will be filed in the Committee's record.

When the hearings came to their temporary end. Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, was reading into the record his 200-page argument against amendments, and citing widespread AFL membership displeasure with the Walsh-Green-NAM proposals as evidence that the AFL generals had no army to lead.

A supplementary statement filed by Pressman analyzed and criticized the amendments offered by Sen. Bruke, which have direct NAM support.

Strike Victory Nips Company's 'Plan' To Move

Philadelphia, Aug. 12 — The Brown Packing Co. has given up its widely-publicized intention of "moving south" and instead has recognized the United Agricultural, Cannery, Packing & Allied Workers, increased wages and granted holidays with pay.

The Senator's speech, made on the Senate floor at the closing session, brought protests from the anti-New Deal, anti-labor clique, and Senator Burke of Nebraska, sponsor of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers' Wagner Act amendments tried, though without success, to silence the Florida liberal.

Veteran observers here harked back to the days of "Old Bob" LaFollette for a similar type of attack on the representatives of reaction. Members of the Republican-Garnerite coalition were stunned by the southern New Dealer's criticism.

Pepper charged that tory Democrats, by forming an "unholy alliance" with the Republicans, had jeopardized world peace and attempted to "scuttle the American government and the American people."

PLACE GRUDGES OVER WELFARE

While Senators on the floor and visitors in the gallery listened in tense silence, Pepper continued:

"I accuse that wilful alliance of a designed attempt to withhold aid and meager succor from the unemployed of America in the hope that in their mad misery they might raise their hand against a President and an Administration who have tried to restore them to the dignity and opportunity of American citizens.

"I accuse that designing alliance of a deliberate attempt to sabotage the first real effort ever made in this nation to secure for the workers of America industrial democracy and economic emancipation."

"I accuse this pharisaical alliance of hypocritical lip-service to the cause of Constitutional government while they use the lives of the men, women and children of America as a pawn in a vicious game of petty, personal, partisan policies," the Senator continued.

"I accuse them of having prostituted their power to serve the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, the Manufacturers' Association and the beneficiaries of special privilege who hate in their hearts that man who has tried to lighten the burden of toil on the back of labor.

"I accuse that intriguing alliance of trying to strike down by emasculation and assassination the fair labor standards act, to preserve intact the unconscionable employers who would sweat their fortunes out of the nonresisting bodies of men, women and children, and wring their dirty dividends from the misery of their fellow citizens even in their own communities."

Pepper charged that this group has sought to widen and extend the breach in labor's ranks in order that employers may benefit, and has sacrificed the "best interests of their states, their regions, their businesses, their professions and their country in order to kill this Administration and carve up its corpse for personal, political aggrandizement."

ENCOURAGE FOES OF DEMOCRACY

Warning that the tory clique has encouraged the enemies of democratic government and has tried to "perpetuate the dictatorship of a privileged class," the Senator concluded:

"Men who sink into restless sleep with the muffled sobs of a disconsolate wife dinning their ears, and open their eyes to see the gaunt faces of emaciated and sick children, do not understand the chess game which the ambitious and designing make out of government and the cold heartlessness with which bitter men make the helpless suffer when they war for power and the Presidency of the United States.

sult of Lewis' speech against Garner.

The Waukesha, Wis., Trades and Labor Council, AFL, declared that Lewis "rendered a public service when he condemned the labor-baiting of the Garner Democrats and the reactionary Republicans."

From Texas, CIO officials expressed the belief that the "Garner boom is a deliberate attempt to defeat Pres. Roosevelt and the New Deal in whatever may be proposed for 1940." They pointed to the fact that practically every big business lobbyist in the Texas capital is whooping it up for the Uvalde squire.

Warn Foes Of New Deal

New York, Aug. 12—Acting upon the direct request of a number of locals, the American Communication Assn.'s general executive board today pledged full and continuing support for the New Deal while warning opponents of the President's program that labor will not stand for its destruction.

The resolution named the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and the "Hoover-Dewey-Vandenberg Republican group" as leaders in the campaign to destroy the Wagner Act, the Wage-Hour Act and other progressive legislation.

WON'T REMAIN IDLE

Pres. Mervyn Rathborne, commenting on the board's action, warned that "the communications workers will not stand idly by while the 'evil old men', both reactionary Democrats of the Garner ilk and tory Republicans destroy the rights of the American people.

Mine, Mill Union Hails New Deal

Denver, Colo., Aug. 12. — "The membership of the CIO will not tolerate a Munich peace, whereby our affiliated unions will be stripped of their membership in order to satisfy the principles of craft unionism."

This was the message brought by Walter Smethurst, assistant to CIO President Lewis, to 150 delegates attending the 36th annual convention of the Intl. Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, in session here today.

Declaring that many reactionary members of Congress rode into their present offices only by holding on to the "coat-tails of President Roosevelt's popularity," Smethurst warned that "if the administration in power today expects the workers' vote in 1940, it must rid its household of those who would destroy labor's rights."

LAUDS GAINS

President Reid Robinson, in an address of welcome to the delegates, outlined the tasks which lie before the convention, and congratulated the union on its recent gains in Canada and all parts of the United States and Alaska.

He read statistics to show that existence of the Wagner Act has reduced the number of strikes in the metal mining industry, at the same time shortening the duration of those which did take place. Defense of the act and of other New Deal legislation was outlined as a key task for American workers during the next few years. A resolution committing the union to supporting the New Deal and President Roosevelt in 1940 won a standing ovation from the delegates.

MISS LEWIS PRESENT

Present at the convention was Miss Kathryn Lewis, who brought greetings from her father, CIO President Lewis. Miss Lewis, a U. S. delegate to the Lima, Peru, conference of American nations and to the meeting of democratic groups in the Latin-American nations at Montevideo, Uruguay, led a round-table discussion on the problems of Latin-American workers in this country, a large number of whom belong to the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers Union.

Other convention speakers included President Michael Quill of the CIO Transport Workers Union, who answered red-baiting charges against unionism by pointing out that members of his own organization now have ample time for church, not to mention spare change to put in the collection box.

Describing the TWU's cooperative medical service, Quill declared: "It used to cost the worker about $25 to get his tonsils removed. Now we're ripping out the tonsils at $6.50 a clip, and the companies call it 'Communism'."

Harry Bridges, West Coast CIO director, and Tom Mooney were unable to make scheduled appearances before the convention. Bridges is attending deportation hearings against him in San Francisco and the veteran labor martyr is seriously ill.

PLAN PICNIC

Barberton, Ohio, Aug. 12—CIO Councils in Cleveland, Akron and Barberton, and their affiliated locals, will hold a joint picnic at Chippewa Lake Park, Sunday, Aug. 27. A Studebaker Champion and 50 other prizes will be given away. A number of well-known speakers will address the crowd, according to Glenn Street, secretary of the Barberton Council.

ance machinery" in the other 11 plants.

Reuther recalled that the 1937 agreement had given the UAW-CIO sole bargaining rights in only 17 plants, and for a period of but six months.

RESPONSIBLE UNION

He said that the UAW pledge not to strike before grievance and bargaining procedure had been fully used, was given "voluntarily and without hesitation."

"We have not had a single 'wild cat' strike since the union rid itself of Homer Martin and his irresponsible lieutenants seven months ago," he said.

Adjustment of the wage rates, which strikers claimed had followed a crazy-quilt pattern through the GM corporate structure, will be based on a revised scale at Fisher Body Plant 23, and the wide differentials among plants which have existed in the past will be "ended or minimized."

SPLIT EFFORTS FAILED

The CIO victory gained added lustre through the failure of the AFL to split the strikers' ranks. Federation big-wigs journeyed to the motor city last week and talked eloquently about the projected campaign to organize the auto workers into the AFL, but the attempt to split the GM strike by officially-condoned scabbing proved a dud when local AFL unionists refused to follow their top leaders' advice.

The agreement, according to Reuther, "kills the AFL current local union campaign before it can get under way, and lays the basis for stable industrial relations in the future." It signalizes the "end of Homer Martin, because those few locals he has will swing over and in six weeks he will have lost his own local."

Construction Union Campaign Off To A Good Start

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—The new CIO union campaign in the construction industry is meeting with a most enthusiastic reception, Chairman A. D. Lewis of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee reported today.

Thousands of letters from workers of all categories in the industry have poured into the UCWOC office in the United Mine Workers Building here, Lewis said, nearly all indicating a desire to help build the new CIO union.

Although the Committee has barely begun its work, a number of locals have already been chartered and many more applications for charters are pending. Field representatives have been selected and placed in the field, and the organizing work is getting off to a good start.

All CIO affiliates have been asked to cooperate, and Pres. John L. Lewis has instructed all CIO regional directors and field representatives to give every possible assistance to the campaign.

"The CIO has set up an Organizing Committee in the construction industry, not as a gesture, but as a definite program which all CIO representatives should promote to the best of their ability," the CIO president said in a letter addressed to all CIO officials.

"I would request that you immediately canvass the situation in the construction industry in your locality and advise the Chairman of the Committee as to the possibilities of organizing and setting up a local union therein."

The letter of President Lewis noted that thousands of requests for this action have come to his attention, "because construction workers desire a modern form of organization modelled along industrial lines, which will bring to them the benefits of collective bargaining, eliminate jurisdictional disputes and improve their wages and working conditions."

News Guild Re-Elects Pres. Broun

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 12—Delegates to the American Newspaper Guild's sixth annual convention were homeward bound today after committing the newsmen's union to continued support of the New Deal and re-electing Pres. Heywood Broun to a sixth term.

Milton Kaufman of New York was elected executive vice-president to succeed Jonathan Eddy, who has held the office since formation of the ANG. Eddy was given an ovation when described as a "valiant man" and was thanked by Pres. Broun for his services to the organization. Kaufman has been executive secretary of the New York Guild.

Pres. Harry Wohl of the Chicago Guild, a leader of the Hearst strikers in that city, was added to the executive board as a regional vice-president.

TO FIGHT A.P.

Groundwork for a determined fight against the two-year stalling policy of the Associated Press was laid in a report by Vice-Pres. Morris Watson, former AP employe who heads the union's wire service committee. A resolution condemned AP's "reactionary labor policies" and instructed the Guild to inform the entire labor movement about the news service's anti-union labor relations policies.

The delegates also voted condemnation of Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, whom they branded "an enemy of progressive unionism, a harbinger of fascism, a would-be strike-breaker." The resolution was offered by Jack Morris, a Hearst striker from Chicago and a Catholic.

Independent political action again won ANG support, and the Guild executive board was directed to create a special committee to support the New Deal in 1940. Reactionary Congressmen were rebuked for crippling WPA, and the delegates demanded that WPA jobs be given to all unemployed workers willing to work.

BLAME AFL LEADERS

Discussing the split in labor's ranks, a resolution pointed out that there is "little actual division in the rank and file" and charged that responsibility for the present situation lies with "entrenched AFL leaders who do not lead, but rather are in actual reaction and retreat."

Spies Squirm At Bridges Hearing

San Francisco, Aug. 12—Two of the West Coast's most prominent foes of organized labor took the witness stand at the Harry Bridges deportation hearing this week and jumped about like kittens on a hot stove.

Questioned by counsel for the CIO west coast leader were Harper Knowles, director of labor spies, stoolpigeon for the Associated Farmers and industrialist groups, red-baiter par excellence; and Capt. John J. Keegan of the Portland, Oreg., police department, friend of open shoppers and foe of labor unions.

Defense counsel caused a minor sensation when it read into the record a letter indicating that Keegan had no faith in Larry Doyle, general chief of labor spies in the Northwest and a strong supporter of the Bridges deportation movement.

Questioning of Knowles and Keegan was aimed at building up their connections with the Immigration Service their participation in offering illegal inducements and making threats in order to secure witnesses against the West Coast CIO director.

Labor and the Law

By Lee Pressman

CIO General Counsel

Success Story

The reactionary officials of the AFL wanted amendments. The anti-labor employers making up the National Association of Manufacturers and the Chamber of Commerce wanted amendments. The so-called public press screamed in daily editorials that the "public" wanted amendments.

Against this tremendous pressure for the destruction of the Wagner Act, the CIO, with its four million members, stood firm for no amendments. It was supported by a considerable section of the AFL unions themselves, independent unions like the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, progressive organizations, and outstanding liberals like Senator Thomas of Utah, Senator Wagner and Msgr. Ryan.

It is worthwhile recounting the legislative record. A flood of amendments, touched off by the AFL Executive Council proposals, were introduced at the beginning of the year. Hearings began in April before the Senate and House Labor Committees and continued for four months to the end of the session. During the course of the hearings, AFL top officials, notorious anti-labor corporations and their lawyers appeared before the Committee and presented a mass of unsupported charges and absolute distortions of the facts, both as to particular cases and as to recent developments in industrial relations.

REACTIONARIES MADE THREATS

Throughout the hearings, threats were made by reactionary blocs in Congress that they would force amendments no matter what the hearings disclosed. In carrying out these threats, the Garner-dominated Rules Committee of the House of Representatives paved the way for passage by the reactionaries of the Smith resolution providing for an investigation of the Labor Board.

But the CIO will have an opportunity to meet the false charges which will undoubtedly be made in the Smith investigation. Both the Senate and House Labor Committees have completed hearing the testimony of witnesses sponsoring amendments. Both have adjourned to reopen at the beginning of the next session of Congress in January, 1940. At that time, in the House the CIO will have full opportunity to present all of its witnesses to show that these amendments would destroy the Wagner Act and that they do not represent the wishes of organized labor in the AFL and the CIO.

LEWIS, MURRAY TO APPEAR

In the Senate, John L. Lewis, President of the CIO, and Philip Murray, Vice President of the CIO, are scheduled to appear and present the views of progressive labor forces in this country.

A summary of the record is a source of gratification. The CIO succeeded in staving off the attack on the part of the reactionaries, including the officials of the AFL, to destroy the Wagner Act. In addition, the CIO succeeded in having both the House and Senate Labor Committees resume their hearings at the beginning of the next session of Congress. CIO leaders will then be in a position to open the attack against the enemies of labor.

PHILIP MURRAY

Honored by CIO steel workers

Steel Workers To Honor Murray

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 12—Steel workers from a hundred communities in western Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio today pay honor to their veteran leader, Chairman Philip Murray of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

The celebration—first of an annual affair to be known as "Phil Murray Day"—will be held in the future on June 17, and all steel workers in the nation will observe the day, which marks the anniversary of the formation of SWOC.

In the three years of SWOC existence, Murray has won the respect of steel worker and steel employer alike. Under his leadership, the CIO steel union won 595 signed contracts in an industry that previously had boasted of its open shop policy; gained the $5 minimum wage, the 40-hour week, vacations with pay, grievance and seniority systems.

Some 1,100 SWOC lodges, led by 11,000 officers, are now functioning throughout the nation, and 8,000 grievance committee men are helping to establish a new era in the steel industry's labor relations.

HIGHLY REGARDED

Under Murray's guidance, the SWOC has won a nation-wide reputation for its intelligent handling of problems, its responsibility, and its observance of contracts. The SWOC leader has described his philosophy of collective bargaining as this:

"Never try to fool the men you represent. Tell them what it is possible and what it is impossible to do. And look upon a signed contract as something sacred—a pact to be observed; an agreement which is your bond of good faith."

CAME TO U. S. IN 1902

Murray came to this country in 1902 from Scotland, where his father had been a leader of a coal union local. Arrived in the United States, "Phil" dug coal by day, studied correspondence courses at night. In 1912, when he was 24 years old, he became a member of the United Mine Workers international executive board, and four years later was elected president of District 5 of the UMW. He became international vice-president of that union in 1920 and has held the office ever since.

Murray has served on a number of government agencies, dating from participation in the National War Labor Board in 1917-1918 to more recent activity during the NRA period. He has helped to frame a number of pieces of important legislation, most of them dealing with the coal industry.

A Tale of 3 Union Men:

Brother Blunder Buys A Suit

(The first of a series of 3 stories. The next will appear in an early issue.)

Brother Ben Blunder, loyal member of Local 444, went downtown one day and bought a new suit. There was nothing extraordinary about the suit. It had buttons, sleeves, pockets, and creases just like any other suit. Ben bought it because he liked it, and as soon as it was altered he put it on and walked home.

Then strange things took place. Before Blunder had walked very far his vest began to get tighter, so tight that he could hardly breathe. Just as Ben began to unbutton it, it began to loosen, much to his relief. But before he had a chance to take a deep breath he was startled by all the money and keys in his trouser pockets falling in the street. After retrieving the money and keys he put his hands in his pockets but could find no holes. Instead he discovered his trouser cuffs around his knees.

TERRIBLE SPECTACLE

The cuffs returned to their normal position, and then began the most terrible spectacle put on by a man's suit. It stretched and it shrunk. It pulled Ben Blunder from one side of the street to the other. It made him lie down. It made him jump. It smothered him, tripped him, chafed him. In fact that brand new suit did everything possible to make Brother Blunder, loyal member of Local 444, the most uncomfortable man in the world.

Suddenly, without warning, the suit relaxed, returning to the shape and behavior it had when Ben first put it on. "What have I done to deserve such treatment?" Ben asked, talking to no one in particular.

"You're a fool," answered a small voice.

"I'm stitches," the small voice replied. "I'm what keeps your suit together, and you're still a fool. Imagine! A good union man and you buy a suit like this! Do you know that the women who put me here were paid less than eight dollars a week?"

A CONSUMER-SCAB

Then a deep voice spoke. It was the voice of Pockets: "You're not only a fool, you're a consumer-scab. I have a good notion to drop all your money again."

"What have I done that makes you abuse me so?" Ben asked. He decided that he had lost his mind and that he might as well continue the conversation.

"What have you done?" squealed Buttons. "You've bought this suit. That's what you've done!"

"Yes," said Lining, "you've bought a suit made in a sweatshop by non-union labor. You've put money in the pocket of a sweatshop boss, and you've encouraged his competition with union shops."

Then Trouser Cuffs spoke in a very low voice: "And you've encouraged him in his anti-union tactics. How can organized labor become stronger if union men don't buy union made products?"

ASHAMED

Brother Blunder was now feeling thoroughly ashamed. "But how could I tell that this suit wasn't union made?"

Ben was practically shaken out of his new suit by the answer. Every member of the suit spoke up in chorus, from the smallest button-hole to the cloth itself.

"LOOK FOR THE UNION LABEL," they all said. "LOOK FOR THE LABEL OF THE AMALGAMATED CLOTHING WORKERS OF AMERICA"!

Nova Scotia Steel Firm To Sign Pact

Sydney, Nova Scotia, Aug. 12—The Dominion Steel and Coal Corp. is willing to recognize the Sydney Steelworkers' Union, CIO affiliate, as sole bargaining agency for union employes of its Sydney plant, the corporation announced in an official statement.

Furthermore the statement said the corporation was agreeable to signing a two-year contract with the officers and the union.

Issuance of the statement followed shortly after a conference between company and labor officials concerning the plant, which employs 3,100 men. The conference was arranged on the occasion of the visit of President Arthur Cross of the company to Sydney.

Republicans Gloat

Pretty pleased over the defeat of progressive measures in Congress are these three Republican House leaders: C. E. Mapes of Michigan, J. W. Martin of Massachusetts and J. P. Wolcott of Michigan. Joining with conservative Democrats, the GOP killed the lend-spend and housing bills, authorized a smear probe of the Labor Board and tried to kill the wage-hour bill.

New Homes for Old

A department dealing with the need for better housing and how to obtain it, conducted by the CIO Committee on Housing.

By THOMAS HUMPHRIES

A Temporary Setback

The housing bill has been defeated.

During the last few days of Congress the unholy alliance of the Republicans and anti-New Deal Democrats in the House knifed legislation that would have enabled the construction of more than 220,000 new homes for families now living in the slums.

But did they fight the housing bill openly and honestly?

Not at all! They used every underhand method known to man.

UNDERHAND TACTICS

First of all, they misrepresented. They exaggerated the cost of the housing program. They deliberately misinterpreted statements that had been made by USHA Administrator Straus.

Second, by voting against consideration of the bill and thus keeping it off the House floor, they avoided a direct vote on the bill. In this way they were able to win the votes of many Representatives who never would have dared to vote openly against slum clearance and low-rent public housing.

Third, scores of Representatives went back on pledges they had made to their constituents. When the vote on considering the housing bill was taken, the floor of the House was strewn with broken promises.

Fourth, the Republicans reversed themselves and made housing a partisan issue. In the Senate many Republicans joined in passing the housing bill. In the House, however, the Republicans voted almost solidly against the bill.

At the next session of Congress the housing bill will come up again.

Since it has already been passed by the Senate and by the appropriate House committees, the fight will take place on the House floor. But it should not be confined to the House floor. It should be waged in the home district of every Representative who voted against considering the housing bill at the last session.

Moreover, there is no reason to wait until January. The fight should start right now. CIO unions should find out exactly what position their Representatives took on housing and take the necessary steps to insure favorable action at the next session. The CIO Housing Committee can answer any inquiries as to how individual Congressmen voted.

ENCOURAGING SIGNS

Perhaps the most important of these was the authorization of a National Housing Census. This housing census, which will cost about $8,000,000, will be taken in conjunction with the regular 1940 census and will bring together the best information ever gathered in America on the extent of bad housing and the housing problem in general.

Moreover, Congress voted to allow the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to increase the amount of time for the repayment of loans by home owners from 15 to 25 years. And on its own accord the HOLC decided to reduce interest rates from 5% to 4½%. In addition, the Federal Housing Authority reduced the maximum interest rate on FHA-insured mortgage loans from 5% to 4½%.

These reductions in interest rate by the HOLC and FHA were largely the result of the campaign waged by HOLC home owners and the Monopoly Committee's emphasis upon the importance of reducing interest rates. Nevertheless, they are only a beginning. FHA and HOLC interest rates should be reduced to at least 3% during the next two years or so.

8,000 Picket Celanese Co. Plant

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 12—The giant Celanese Corporation here closed down last week when 8,000 workers went on strike as the result of a breakdown of negotiations with Local 1274 of the CIO Textile Workers Union.

The work stoppage began with the three o'clock afternoon shift, and within five hours the mill was closed down tight with strong picket lines set up.

The CIO textile union has been trying to negotiate a contract for more than a year, but in spite of its high profits the Corporation has refused to make the wage adjustments demanded by the local.

TURN DOWN OFFER

At a conference last week, a company proposal for slight wage increases covering only one-third of the employes was turned down by 3,000 members of the local, and the executive board was authorized to call a strike if the company continued to refuse to meet their demands for union recognition, protectin for workers in meeting technological changes and larger wage increases for all employes.

The union maintained that with the corporation's profits exceeding $3,000,000 for the first six months of 1939, it could well afford to pay its workers more. From 1925 to date, Celanese profits have totalled about $40,000,000, the local stated.

Paging Mr. Garner!

BALTIMORE, Aug. 12.—"Horse and buggy" economics still prevail in this city, a survey made by CIO leaders has revealed.

Inquiries at a local stable brought the information that it costs $12 a week to hire a horse.

It costs only $11 a week to hire a man for 44 hours, under the minimum scale set by the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Tiff Miners, Starving On $4-a-Month Relief, Win U. S. Probe

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Bringing tales of virtual starvation on $4 a month relief handouts, leaders of jobless tiff miners in Washington County, Mo., successfully appealed today to Pres. Roosevelt for an investigation of their plight.

Jack Sullivan and Atty. George Duemler, representing the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers Union, and T. P. Lacey, speaking for small landowners and shopkeepers, left a petition at the White House containing upwards of 3,000 names, and later conferred with WPA Commissioner Harrington, who promised to send investigators to the scene.

Machines, each one of which does the work of nearly a hundred men, have brought economic chaos into the county, which has always been notorious for its low living standards, the delegation told officials. Tiff—used in paint, rubbers tires and other commercial products—was formerly dug out of the ground by hand, but steam shovels now scoop it up in great quantities. Before introduction of the machinery, the miners used to average about $7 a week.

CHILDREN SUFFER

Children are suffering from lack of milk, and whole families are existing on meager rations of beans and bread, Duemler said. He pointed out that the people of Washington County are seeking a full investigation of the problem, knowing that temporary relief handouts will provide no permanent answer.

The petition presented at the White House noted that "normal functioning of relief and WPA cannot feed these victims of circumstances.

"The business men and farmers of the county are so tied up with this problem that the entire Washington County, Mo., faces complete chaos unless something is done immediately to remedy this situation."

Metal Miners Win Poll By 5-1 Margin Over AFL

Birmingham, Ala., Aug. 12 — An election held among the red ore miners of the Woodward Iron Company was won by the CIO over an AFL union by a vote of 454 to 81.

In announcing the results of the poll conducted by the Labor Board, Yelverton Cowherd, CIO regional director, said it was an outstanding victory "in the face of persistent company interest in behalf of the AFL."

Woodward is the same company that attempted to hold out against an agreement with the union in the recent mine contracts, but finally capitulated and signed the captive mine agreement.

A. H. Berg, president of the company, has been showing a deep interest in the affairs of Associated Industries, Inc., of Alabama, in an apparent program to destroy labor unions in this district, Cowherd declared.

and Peoria, Ill., plants have been filed with the National Labor Relations Board. A scheduled Labor Board election at the Armour plant in Fort Worth, Tex., has been postponed, union officials said, due to the company's "campaign of terrorism."

The Chicago charges grew out of distribution by foremen and company union stooges of anti-PWOC poems during an NLRB poll at the 31st Street plant here. Supervisors of the election, which the PWOC won by a 642-146 margin, forced the company to cooperate in destroying the literature.

"Marked bias" in favor of an AFL company union by an Armour official at Peoria was responsible for the filing of Labor Board charges in that city.

In Oklahoma City, the PWOC lost its first election by 25 votes as a result of a desperate company campaign against the union.

STOOGES ENROLLED

Don Harris of the PWOC revealed that the management had enlisted the aid of stooges, supervisory and office workers, in a campaign to paint the issue as one of strike, rather than of collective bargaining agency. Workers were told that a PWOC victory would result in closing of the plant, and warnings were issued that men who voted for the union would lose their jobs.

Efforts to stir up race prejudice among Negro and white workers were also undertaken by the company, Harris charged.

CIO Sweeps Board Poll

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 12—The CIO continued its string of Labor Board election victories today as the United Clay and Brick Workers here trounced an AFL affiliate, 332 to 23.

In addition to winning among the production employes, the CIO union also captured two more victories in craft unit elections ordered by the NLRB. Machinists picked the CIO over the AFL 13 to 1, while all nine eligible engineers voted for the CIO.

Button Workers Call Strike

Muscatine, Ia., Aug. 12.—Failing to reach an agreement after seven weeks' negotiations with the Hawkeye Pearl Button Co. here, 400 workers walked out on a strike called by Local 289, Amalgamated Clothing Workers, CIO.

The union spokesmen say the strike is 100% effective in spite of an injunction restricting the number of pickets around the plant. A representative from the Labor Board has held conferences with both parties to the dispute.

Workers Force Action

Some 3,000 members of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee joined this Chicago mass meeting to protest the firing of 15 members of a local grievance committee by Armour & Co. Threat of a strike forced the company to rescind its action. PWOC's drive for a national Armour contract continues at full speed.

Unions Back U. S. Probe In Louisiana

New Orleans, Aug. 19 — Efforts of the federal government to get to the bottom of Louisiana's current political scandal have the wholehearted support of the New Orleans Industrial Union Council, CIO.

The resolution called for full CIO support to Pres. Roosevelt and Atty. General Murphy in their campaign to "give our state a square New Deal" . . . and to "ferret out corrupt political officials and their satellites."

The CIO council called upon AFL unions in the state "to join with us in the assistance of these federal agencies for the fullest prosecution of every individual connected with any form of graft and corruption."

Union Leaders Confer With Miss Perkins

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18.—Every major plant of Armour & Co., giant meat packing firm, will be closed by a strike before Labor Day unless the company quickly reverses its time-worn policy of stalling off union contract negotiations.

This was the warning issued here by Chairman Van A. Bittner of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee, who led the union's National Policy Committee to Washington for conferences with Sec. of Labor Frances Perkins.

Miss Perkins was to confer today with H. S. Eldred of Armour over the union's demands, but PWOC leaders were frankly pessimistic about the ability of the meat packing corporation to understand any action less drastic than strike.

Bittner said that the union, which has been certified by the National Labor Relations Board in every key Armour property, would cripple the firm's operations until a contract was won. The other "Big Four" meat packers — Swift, Wilson and Cudahy—have also been asked to sign PWOC contracts, and union leaders predicted that all four would be faced with a concerted demand for action.

"We've used every peaceful method to persuade Armour to negotiate," Bittner informed Miss Perkins. "We have won elections and been certified by the NLRB in 17 of their 19 major plants. Yet still they refuse . . . If you and the Federal government cannot persuade Armour & Co. to obey the law, to bargain collectively in good faith, to negotiate a contract, we will use our economic strength in a nationwide strike."

Model Pact—40% Pay Raise

CHICAGO, Aug. 19 — Steel Workers Organizing Committee officials signed what they called a "model contract" today with the Intl. Rolling Mill Products Co. here.

Negotiated by Harry Harper, SWOC organizer, and a union committee, the agreement provides for a 40 per cent increase in wages, the union shop, check-off, seniority and vacations. One hundred workers are affected.

Shoe Workers Win Election

Worcester, Mass., Aug. 19.—Organizing activities of the United Shoe Workers, CIO, were speeded up in this city today following a Labor Board election victory by the employes of the H. H. Brown Shoe Co.

The poll, which found the USWA in a strong majority position, ended a short strike at the Brown plant. Negotiations for an agreement and recognition are now under way.

USWA leaders said that the victory in the city's largest shoe plant will pave the way for further organizing successes among Worcester's 10,000 shoe workers.

BIG MASS MEETING

Indianapolis, Ind., Aug. 19. — What is believed will be the largest mass meeting of organized labor in Indiana will be held here September 7, James Robb, CIO regional director said this week. Philip Murray, CIO vice-president and chairman of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee will address the meeting at 8 P. M.

Sign CIO Pact Covering All Stores In Town

RHODELL, W. Va., Aug. 19. — Threats of a group of locals of the United Mine Workers near here to divert their trade to the 100% union town of Sophia, has resulted in the introduction of a novel experiment in collective bargaining.

Worried over the danger of losing a big chunk of their trade, business men of the city invited representatives of the UMW and the United Retail and Wholesale Employes to draw up a blanket agreement improving wages, hours and working conditions.

After a three-hour conference between the three parties led by John J. Schulter, representing the CIO, and Mayor G. W. Thomas, an agreement was concluded covering 17 stores, all those in town. It is effective for one year.

Lumbermen Win 5% Raise

Cleveland, Ohio, Aug. 19—Workers at the American Box Company here won a five per cent pay increase in a contract signed after months of negotiations.

The agreement signed with Local 182, International Woodworkers of America, will mean nearly $3,000 yearly wage raise for 52 employes. It was signed as the zero hour of a strike threat approached.

Similar pay raises were won by members of the union working at the Smead Box Company several weeks before.

Rubber Workers Nail 'Ghost Town' Lies

By ROBERT L. CRUDEN

AKRON, O., Aug. 19. — Dramatic refutation of the Akron "ghost town" story is featured in a four-page broadside just issued by the United Rubber Workers of America.

Entitled "Is It True What They Say About Akron?" the broadside displays recent newspaper headlines telling about a sharp pick-up in Akron business since the union defeated wage cut proposals which would have deflated Akron's purchasing power $10,000,000 a year.

Quaker Oats has ordered construction of new elevators in addition to its present facilities, at a cost of $500,000.

Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. has embarked on a modernization program costing an indefinite amount.

Ohio Edison Co. is spending $1,000,000 to enlarge its capacity in Akron.

Akron Aircraft has started a new factory for production of medium priced airplanes.

Royal Body Co. has moved its operation into Akron to take advantage of Akron's position as center of America's long-distance trucking industry.

QUOTES BROKERAGE HOUSE

The leaflet quotes from a report from Merrill, Turben & Co., investment brokers of Cleveland, Ohio:

"A few significant facts disprove the widely accepted illusion that Akron has suffered irreparable damage and indicate that it is continuing to progress industrially and economically."

A recent study of Akron business by the Bureau of Business Statistics of the University of Akron is quoted, showing, in the words of the study, that:

"Business is substantially substantially above the 1938 mark, and while industry nation- above the 1938 mark, and while industry nationally in 1939 has been well above the 1938 level, Akron has fared much better than the country at large."

The leaflet points out how rubber companies have increased their profits since operating under union contracts and quotes Pres. Wm. O'Neil of the General Tire & Rubber Co. as saying, "The last two years have perhaps been the best in the last twenty."

The leaflet concludes with a brief summary of the work of the United Rubber Workers.

"Our single purpose is to improve the living and working conditions of the working people so that our children and our families may enjoy a standard of living which will give them security, health, and opportunities for education and self-improvement," it says.

"That is why we say that in fighting for a better standard of living for ourselves and our families we are fighting the battle for the American institutions which we all revere. Surely no good American could do less!"

Copies of the leaflet may be secured from the Publicity Department, United Rubber Workers of America, 503 United Building, Akron, Ohio, at $5.00 per 1,000, 60c per 100.

Seamen May Establish Training School

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Aug. 19. — Sailors of the National Maritime Union here are talking of establishing a winter trade union school for men working on Great Lakes ships, open to union members.

A letter sent out from the NMU district office to unionists on ships under contract said the proposal was to have the school last 12 weeks, at a cost per student of $5 to $7 a week. "The instructors will be WPA teachers and we will try to draft professors from the nearby universities of Cleveland," the letter explained.

PLAN MANY COURSES

Courses in labor history, the maritime industry, the functioning of the NMU and other maritime unions and the duties of union functionaries are being planned. It was proposed to limit students to the first school to 50 men, the letter said. A suggestion was also made that some of the ships might provide scholarships by raising sufficient funds from among the members.

"The school will be open to any NMU member who wants to put up part of his summer earnings to pay his way through it, but the union's hope is to have the ships back the school with elected representatives, to take advantage of this opportunity to get familiar with seamen's organizations, their history, programs and policies, and their practical functioning."

The district office announced that the proposal for the NMU school is receiving much warm support from the members.

Toronto Labor Body Kills 'Split' Attempt

TORONTO, Ont., Aug. 19.—A move to oust CIO unions from the Toronto District Labor Council, largest central labor body in Canada, was ruled out of order by President W. G. Russell at council's semi-monthly meeting. Instead the delegates overwhelmingly voted for a resolution demanding that the 55th convention of the Trades and Labor Congress rescind the suspension order against the CIO unions.

John Conlin, delegate of the Machinists Union, submitted the motion for expulsion of the CIO unions from the council after a letter was read from AFL Pres. William Green in which he alleged the CIO was responsible for "disunity in the ranks of organized labor."

Conlin and his seconder, Arthur Dowell of the Musicians Union, were shouted down by the delegates who are pro-unity.

Green's letter was in reply to a council communication in which was included CIO Director John Brophy's charge that certain AFL leaders, among them Green, were responsible for the split.

NewShipyard Local In Nova Scotia

Halifax, N. S., Aug. 19 — Local shipyard workers have organized in a local and are now awaiting a charter from the Industrial Uniin of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, CIO.

James O'Connell who worked tirelessly for nearly two years to organize the Halifax shipyards was elected president of the new union. A policy committee of three was formed to direct the union's membership drive.

Forman Wayne, assistant regional director of the CIO in Canada and J. W. Brown of the Shipbuilding Workers addressed the meeting which set up the new local.

Striking Dairy Farmers Win CIO Co-operation

NEW YORK, Aug. 19. — Upstate New York dairy farmers struck today for higher milk prices, while state CIO leaders promised full support in the fight against "the milk trust and the rest of the reactionary elements in this state."

Leaders of the Dairy Farmers Union, with headquarters in Utica, instructed members to refuse selling their milk until wholesalers increase the price by at least 10c a hundred pounds. Provisions were made, however, to keep a milk supply flowing to New York City's hospitals and thousands of children consumers.

Picket lines will be established along upstate highways and around New York City processing plants to enforce the strikers' demands, Archie Wright, union president, declared.

FOLLOWED CONFAB

The CIO pledge of support, voiced by Pres. Allan S. Haywood of the New York State Industrial Union Council, followed a conference of farmers and workers' leaders here.

"The rotten and reactionary record of the 1939 State Legislature makes imperative an immediate and strong coalition of trade union and farmer organizations, particularly if we are to avoid further anti-labor or anti-farmer legislation in 1940," Haywood said.

The statement, contained in a letter sent to all Council affiliates, pointed out that "right now the dairy farmers are waging a campaign against the infamous New York milk trust and it is the duty of organized labor, as the best organized consumers group, to help them win. The bankers and manipulators that run New York's milk trust are the same who run other vital public services under private control, and also constitute the reactionary clique in control, through agents, of the state legislature."

WARNS OF DANGER

Haywood warned the unions that "unless we prepare now to head them off, they'll be back in 1940 for another wrecking expedition" even more serious than at the last legislative session, at which vital public services — including the schools—were slashed.

WPA Juggles Wage Rate Structure; Northerners Suffer

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19.—Forced by Congress into a policy of robbing Peter to pay Paul, WPA today announced a nationwide revision of wage rates through which southern workers will receive substantial increases—while skilled and unskilled WPA workers in other areas will have their incomes cut.

The new scale will lift the national WPA monthly average wage from $53 to $55.50. At the same time it will increase WPA costs $50,000,000 for the fiscal year, and will result in the firing of an estimated 80,000 or 100,000 people from the government work relief program.

CIO leaders had endorsed a move to lift the scandalously low income of the southern WPA employes—which ran as low as $26 a month—but insisted that this should not be done at the expense of workers in other areas.

Under the new scale, WPA workers in the South will benefit by $15 to $10 monthly raises. On the other hand, some unskilled workers in the northeast will be cut from $61.10 to $52, and those in most of the nation's industrial areas will be similarly affected.

The new rates, scheduled to go into operation on Sept. 1, were based on a section of the Woodrum WPA bill which specified that WPA bills could not vary in different sections in an amount greater than could be justified by differences in the cost of living. Instead of appropriating additional funds to lift the southern workers average, Congress allotted less than a billion and a half dollars for WPA.

Organizer Unhurt In Murder Attempt

Crescent City, Calif., Aug. 19. — An attempt to murder an organizer of the International Woodworkers of America, CIO, has been reported here.

William Gettings, who had just returned from a meeting of the Del Norte CIO Industrial Union Council was fired upon through a window as he turned the light on in his kitchen.

The bullet, fired from a high-powered gun by an assassin standing outside in the dark, crashed into the room a few inches above Gettings' head, smashed through the far wall and hit the ceiling of the next room.

Gettings said the attempt to kill him was the climax of a long series of threats against him and other union members for their organizing activities. He declared that he intended to remain in Crescent City and continue his work.

CIO and AFL unions in Del Norte county have a unified program and hold joint meetings regularly.

Seamen Propose Unity

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19—National unity for all unlicensed seamen, resistance to union-busting tactics of the U. S. Maritime Commission, and joint action on maritime contract renewals coming up Sept. 30 were outlined at the two-day session of the CIO Maritime Committee here.

The committee, headed by Joe Curran, president of the Natl. Maritime Union, elected Bjorne Halling of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific as executive secretary, and ordered offices set up in Washington. The committee consists of representatives of CIO maritime unions, and was set up last year to coordinate organizing, legislative and political activity.

Under the plans for a national seamens' union, a joint council with representatives from each of the seamens' unions would be set up, with the job of exploring possibilities and making recommendations to bring the four unions of unlicensed seagoing workers into one industrial group.

At present, there is one east coast and Gulf union, the NMU, and three on the west coast—the Sailors Union of the Pacific, the Marine Cooks and Stewards and the Marine Firemen, Oilers, Watertenders and Wipers.

PROPOSE FEDERATION

The committee also proposed the creation of a national federation of all maritime unions, taking dock workers, licensed officers, radio men, etc., into an industry-wide association such as already exists in the Maritime Federation of the Pacific.

On the unity plan for the seamen, Curran declared: "The seamen are for the plan. The shipowners, naturally, are against it. On the side of the shipowners are

Shipowners Refuse Union Demands

San Francisco, Aug. 19.—A flat refusal by the Waterfront Employers Association to make any changes in the agreement with the International Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union which expires September 30, resulted this week in the complete breakdown of negotiations.

The threat of the employers to end all relations with the union when the contract expires would mean a general tie-up of all west coast ports.

CHARGE 'INSINCERITY'

Roth is president of the San Francisco Employers Assn., and Foisie heads the Waterfront Employers Assn. In a letter signed by Foisie which was sent to all ILWU locals, the statement was made that September and October bookings were being cancelled in favor of other forms of transportation, due to the uncertainty over the contract renewal.

Bridges accused Roth of insincerity in bargaining negotiations, quoting him as having said: "We have tried to make a Christian out of Mr. Bridges, but from now on it is a fight to the finish." Bridges also referred to a statement made by Foisie in which he said: "I foresee a long drawn out struggle — we may as well take staggering losses at one blow. The only solution is to discredit the Bridges gang in the unions."

Packinghouse Union Ready For Strike

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18.—Fifteen Armour local delegates from all over the nation, headed by Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee Chairman Van A. Bittner, told the Federal government here that either Armour management would negotiate with the union for a national contract, or "we will shut down every Armour plant in the country, and keep them shut down until we get an agreement."

Chairman Bittner urged the government, through Secretary of Labor Perkins, to use all possible influence to bring Armour to the conference table, both through her office and if that failed, through President Roosevelt.

"There is only one way to prevent a strike," Bittner told the Secretary, "and that is by Armour and Co. consenting to negotiate. And if a strike is not prevented by this means, it will come before this Labor Day, September 4."

ARMOUR WILL TALK

In reply to this urging by Chairman Bittner, Secretary Perkins wired H. S. Eldred, general manager for Armour, asking him to come to Washington for a conference with government officials. Within three hours Ildred wired back, saying he would be here with a committee on August 18. Miss Perkins' wire said in part:

"A large committee from several plants of your company has come to Washington today and discussed with me the labor situation in those plants with special reference to the problem of collective bargaining.

"Since I have conferred with this committee I am anxious to discuss the matter with company representatives, and would like to invite you and any others you would care to have present to come to Washington and give me your information and suggestions."

NEGOTIATIONS THE ISSUE

Chairman Bittner told Secretary Perkins bluntly that the situation was an extremely serious one, that the workers were ready to strike every plant, and that the strike undoubtedly would spread to others of the Big Four packers.

"We've used every peaceful method to persuade Armour and Co. to negotiate," he told Miss Perkins. "We have won elections and been certified by the Natl. Labor Relations Board in 17 of their 19 major plants. Yet still they refuse. Our patience is wearing thin.

"If you and the Federal government cannot persuade Armour and Co. to obey the law, to bargain collectively in good faith, to negotiate a contract, we will use our economic strength in a nation-wide strike."

LONG STALL

Bittner pointed out that Armour has been stalling on this issue for months, that all the time they have carried on a ruthless campaign of firings, intimidation, violence, and evasion of the law in their frantic effort to break the union.

Packinghouse workers have been patient, he pointed out, and have held back from a national strike in the hope that Armour would come around to bargaining in good faith, as the law requires them to do. Now they see that they cannot wait any longer, he explained, since Armour's tactics put the existence of the union at stake.

DELEGATES CONFER

Following the meeting with Secretary Perkins, the delegates met with Bittner, Director Harris and Assistant Director Johnson, to plan further moves in case Armour continues to defy the law and the PWOC by refusing to negotiate.

First order of business was a unanimous rising vote of confidence in the present officers of the PWOC, coupled with a vote

Plan CIO Maritime Drive

Leaders of CIO maritime unions met in Washington this week to consider plans for eventual unity of all the nation's marine workers. Seated around the conference table are, left to right: Bjarne Halling, Maritime Federation of the Pacific; William Standard, counsel for the National Maritime Union; Walter Fisher, Marine Firemen, Oilers, Watertenders and Wipers of the Pacific; N. Hedley Stone, NMU Great Lakes representative; John O'Donnell, Marine Cooks and Stewards of the Pacific; Pres. Samuel Hogan of the National Marine Engineers Beneficial Assn.; Roy Pile of the American Communications Assn.; Pres. Joseph Curran of the NMU, chairman of the CIO Maritime Committee; Pres. Mervyn Rathborne of ACA; and Stephen Harvey, NMU legislative representative.

'Repudiate Tories!' Clothing Union Board Advises

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—A quarter million organized clothing workers were urged today by the general executive board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, CIO, to repudiate at the polls those Congressmen and Senators who "sabotaged" the labor and welfare program of the New Deal.

The board's decision was made public by Pres. Sidney Hillman. It aimed particular fire at the "coalition of reactionary Democrats and Republicans who have not hesitated to imperil the security and well-being of the American people in a reckless attempt to discredit the Roosevelt administration and return Hooverism to power in 1940."

The session just adjourned, the ACWA leaders declared, "sabotaged legislation vital to the economic health of the nation and enacted or advanced measures which undermine the meager livelihood of tens of thousands of American families and threaten the civil rights and liberties of all."

WOODRUM'S HYPOCRISY

That section of the Woodrum bill providing for "abolition" of regional wage differentials was described as "hypocritical" because of Congressional refusal to appropriate funds to increase southern WPA wage rates.

The coalition was charged with plotting emasculation of the Wagner Act and the wage-hour act — "efforts which were temporarily defeated only by the energetic action of the CIO and the liberal and progressive forces of the nation which rallied around it."

Anti-alien bills, which received favorable treatment in the House, "violate every tradition of American liberty and equality and threaten the freedom of citizens and aliens alike," the statement charged.

TransitUnion Convention September 20

New York, Aug. 19 — Delegates representing 90,000 subway, elevated, trolley, bus and taxicab workers throughout the country will attend the second biennial convention of the Transport Workers of America, one of the youngest of the CIO international unions, which opens September 20 in Atlantic City, N. J.

Michael J. Quill, president of the transport union and New York City councilman, will preside at the convention which is expected to last four days. It will be held in the Grand ballroom of the Hotel Chelsea.

PLAN BIG DRIVE

Inauguration of an extensive national organizing drive will be one of the major steps to be taken up at the sessions. In announcing the convention call, John Santo, international secretary-treasurer of the union, said that more than 300 delegates are expected to attend.

Armour & Co. Versus The United States

No union has ever made more consistent, conscientious and patient efforts to avoid a strike than has the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee of the CIO.

For two years now it has followed every available legal channel to secure its collective bargaining rights with Armour & Co. and the other meat packers.

In election after election the PWOC has been chosen by overwhelming majorities and certified as the workers' bargaining agent. In each case it has asked Armour & Co. to negotiate with it for an agreement. But it has been met again and again with only blank refusals from the company even to meet with it for this purpose.

The law requires that an employer must bargain collectively in good faith with the duly chosen representatives of his employes. This clearly means that he must meet with these representatives for the purpose of making a collective bargaining agreement.

Armour & Co. has seen fit to disobey the law. It has defied public opinion and threatened the public welfare by its refusal to date even to meet with the PWOC to iron out its differences with the union around the conference table.

Fully conscious of the seriousness of such a national stoppage in the meat packing industry as Armour & Co. seems to be trying to force, Chairman Van A. Bittner and the representatives of the PWOC Armour locals came to Washington last week. As a last resort, they appealed to Secretary of Labor Perkins and the President of the United States to use the influence of their high offices to prevail on Armour & Co. to prevent this crisis.

At this writing Armour & Co. has agreed to confer with Secretary Perkins. But it has not yet agreed to negotiate with the PWOC.

The showdown will come before Labor Day. And if Armour & Co. chooses to force a strike, rather than to obey the law and negotiate, it will have to fight a union which has been doubly fortified—by the organized strength and determination of the workers who have chosen it, and by their knowledge that they have done everything humanly and legally possible to avoid this struggle.

Armour & Co., in this event, will not only be taking on the PWOC and the CIO, but it will also be declaring war on the whole people of the United States, whose laws it has disobeyed and whose interests it has recklessly disregarded.

Workers Prefer The CIO

Given a fair chance to choose their union, American workers have demonstrated again and again that they vastly prefer the modern industrial unionism of the CIO to all other types of representation.

In the second quarter of 1939, from April 1 to June 30, almost 50% more workers voted for CIO unions than for those of the AFL.

The CIO participated in 79 elections in this period. It polled 17,466 votes and won 68% of these elections.

The AFL, on the other hand, participated in 96 elections, but polled only 11,893 votes and won only 56% of the elections.

In 31 elections in which CIO and AFL unions competed, the CIO won 17, while the AFL won only seven.

The latest figures, for July, show that in this month 64% more workers voted for CIO unions than for AFL unions.

The CIO participated in 34 elections, the AFL in 33, but the AFL polled only 5,036 votes, while 8,256 workers voted for CIO unions.

It is because the trend is all toward the CIO, when workers are free to vote without interference in fair elections, that AFL leaders have joined with anti-union manufacturers to amend the Wagner Act. They want to allow employers to stack the cards in favor of the organizations they prefer, and to destroy in many other ways the workers' present freedom to vote as they please.

Looking Ahead

By LEN DE CAUX

A Strange Encounter

NOT since Snow White first found herself among the Seven Dwarfs has there been such a strange encounter as that between the movie stars and the 15 odd members of the AFL executive council.

When such an irresistible force from Hollywood met such an immovable object as the executive council, the impact must have been terrific.

It would have taken a Walt Disney to do justice to the reactions of the Sleepy, Grumpy, Sneezy, Dopey and possibly Bashful old duffers of the council when so much beauty, talent and personality suddenly appeared in their midst.

As for the reactions of the Snow White stars they encountered the mental cobwebs, the dirty linen and the rest of the slovenly disorder that has accumulated these many years in the AFL council, Disney would probably be too gentle to handle it adequately.

Anyhow Disney was not along with the delegation, and the rather matter-of-fact accounts which have appeared give only a few, albeit intriguing, hints as to the reactions of the stars to the 15 odd council members and vice versa.

William Green, it is related, described the situation as a "headache." And some of the stars reported that council members had called them "Communists"—which, incidentally and off the record, is exactly what Grumpy called Snow White when he first discovered the results of some of her nefarious activities with broom and scrubbing brush.

Your own correspondent was not invited to Atlantic City for the occasion. So, like a Chicago Tribune editorialist writing about the "collapse" of the CIO, he stayed as far away as possible and drew on his imagination—with the following results:

The scene opens on the Atlantic City boardwalk. A procession of heavily laden wheel-chairs moves constantly to the right. As the pushers groan, the 15 odd AFL council members stroke their tummies caressingly and, soothed by the motion of their chairs and the sound of the waves, break into their theme song:

"The CIO is after us, but we shall not move;
The CIO is after us, but we shall not move;
Like council members riding on the boardwalk,
We don't move, but we can be pushed."

Suddenly the procession is surrounded by movie stars, backed up by hundreds of autograph-hunters. Heckling starts. The council members call a special session and elect Doc Green as their spokesman (with all the 15 odd members dissenting but unable to agree on anyone else).

"So we're all a bunch of Communists, are we?" pipes up a childish voice. And there, sure enough, is Shirley Temple, looking very cute as she shakes her finger at the old codgers.

"Dear me, Shirley, that wasn't me . . . I mean I . . . that was Mr. Dey, er, Mr. Freys, rather . . ." and Doc Green begins to stutter and slip into the role of Bashful as he notices all the beautiful movie stars looking at him.

Woll, in a sly aside: "Act your age, Bill. Lucky for you that Our Gang didn't come along. Now there's a real bunch of Communits for you! My National Civic Federation, of blessed memory, used to consider their activities more subversive than a whole army of third termites."

"So, you won't talk!" several menacing voices rasp. The council members are startled enough to quit straightening their wing collars and frock coats and their other primping for the ladies' benefit. Several of the building trades officials look up hopefully but relapse into discomfort when they see the tough guys come from the world of make-believe.

"But gentlemen, please," Green pleads. "My dear Mr. Cagney and Mr. Raft, sir, I assure you I'll talk. In fact, that's all I've been doing for years.

"I'll say anything that Mr. Hutcheson and Mr. Woll and Mr. Frey and Mr. Browne tell me to say. I believe in democracy, you know, and when they've made up my mind, I'll mince no words—and to hell with the rank and f—, I mean the Communists and the CIO.

"If you like, I'll make you a speech right now," and he clears his throat. . . .

"Ladies and gentlemen, I believe in human progress. The AFL stands like the Rock of Gibralter. . . ."

"But we want a movement, not a still picture of a rock," one of the movie actors cracks wise.

"Ay tank I. . . ."

"All right, Miss Garbo, you go home and be alone," Green shoots back, astonished at his own gift of repartee.

But now Green's dander is up. "I know just what you're going to say, Mr. Auer, and I think it's in very bad odor. The trouble with you is that you're all Communists—and the same goes for the CIO, the Labor Board, the New Deal, and all the AFL unions that don't like what we and the NAM are trying to do to the Wagner Act. . . ."

The movie stars, however, have heard enough. "Oh, I see!" they begin to chant. The words are taken up by the whole crowd and repeated again and again until they sound more and more like "CIO," "CIO" . . .

The council members stuff their ears, as they are pushed off in their wheel chairs further and further to the right, until they are finally lost to sight.

LaFollette Report Scorches NAM; Criticizes 'Disrespect For Law'

Shows Control Rests in Hands Of Big Business

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19. — The National Association of Manufacturers, heavily financed by the top leaders of American big business, was sharply criticized today by the Senate Civil Liberties Committee for failure to adapt its policies "to changing times and to laws which the majority of the people deem wise and necessary." It charged the NAM with encouraging disrespect for law and undermining public authority.

In a 334-page report crammed with facts and figures, the Committee traced the history of the organization, took note of its 1937 budget of $1,440,000, its "biased propaganda directed against organizations of American workingmen" and cited its long-range warfare against the Wagner Act as typical of the attack it has directed at "social legislation adopted by Congress."

Signed by Sen. LaFollete of Wisconsin and Sen. Elbert Thomas of Utah, the report is the third in a series on Labor Practices of Employer Associations. The final document, covering Citizens' Committees, has not yet been published.

"The Natl. Association of Manufacturers," the Committee declared, "is to be condemned for cloaking its propaganda in anonymity and for failing clearly to disclose to the public whom it is trying to influence that this lavish propaganda campaign has as its source the National Association of Manufacturers."

LIMITLESS RESOURCES

The organization's propaganda campaign, the Committee continued, "stems from the almost limitless resources of corporate treasuries. Not individuals but corporations constitute the membership of the association and supply its funds. It is this fact that makes the political aspects of the association's campaign of propaganda a matter of serious concern."

Though the NAM claims to speak for a large segment of American industries, "it is largely financed by a small group of powerful corporations," the report found. In 1937, 10% of the Association's 3,000 members accounted for most of its funds, and about 60 companies provided the actual leadership.

BIG CONTRIBUTORS

Largest single contributor in the five-year period studied by the Senate Committee was E. I. DuPont, which handed over $119,600. General Motors, in which DuPont interests are heavily entrenched, contributed $66,520, while E. T. Weir's National Steel paid $41,450, Tom Girdler's Republic Steel $24,650 and Armour & Co. — now engaged in an anti-Union skirmish — $10,850.

Prior to 1933, the study showed, NAM affairs had been in the control of smaller industrial concerns, but in that depression year a group of big businessmen, describing themselves as the "Brass Hats" picked the NAM as the organization to conduct its campaign for "business salvation."

Results were soon forthcoming. In 1934, a public relations committee of the NAM was established, and a year later the National Industrial Information Committee was set up with the purpose of soliciting "funds for the propaganda campaign formulated by the public relations committee." In five years, the membership doubled and income increased 500%.

PROPAGANDA DRIVE

Thus established, the Association was ready to go to town against labor and liberal movements.

"Through newspapers, radio motion pictures, slide films, stockholders' letters, pay-roll stuffers, billboard advertisements, civic-progress meetings and local advertising, the NAM blanketed the country with a propaganda barrage which surpassed its 'Industrial Conservation Movement' of 1916-1920 in intensity, scope and variety of technique . . . .

"Its message was directed against 'labor agitators', against governmental measures to alleviate industrial distress, against labor unions, and for the advantages of the status quo in industrial relations, of which company-dominated unions were still a part."

The Senate Committee revealed that the NAM's president has estimated the value of free radio time given the Association as worth a million dollars a year.

$2,250,000 FREE SPACE

"The value of billboard space donated to it by outdoor advertisers equalled $1,250,000 for a 3-month period, and the free newspaper space would have cost $1,000,000 to buy," the report asserted.

"Statements by officials of the association as well as an analysis of the content of propaganda material indicates that the purposes of this prodigious effort is in part to forestall union organization, and in part to sway public opinion in favor of a legislative committee approved by the large corporations which control the association, and to influence the electorate in its choice of candidates for office."

That NAM member corporations are hostile to labor was shown in Committee statistics which revealed a large number of the largest contributors as steady customers of detective agencies and industrial munitions salesmen. Large NAM contributors purchased 61% of the munitions sold to industry in the 1933-37 period.

WAR ON WAGNER ACT

Typical of this activity was the war on the Wagner Act, which organized labor, led by the CIO, has been able to forestall. The report described the industrialists' early hostility to the Wagner Act, efforts to cripple enforcement of the Act, calls for its repeal and still later for its amendment.

The committee, in its conclusions, "condemned" the NAM efforts to "promote organized disregard for the National Labor Relations Act. Such action, by a powerful and responsible organization, encourages disrespect for the law and undermines the authority of government."

In filing their report, Senators LaFollette and Thomas said the committee is not yet prepared to offer remedial legislation, but asked that this not be construed to mean that legislative recommendations may not be forthcoming in the future.

CIO News Edition For Michigan

Detroit, Aug. 19 — Michigan's powerful Industrial Union Council is sponsoring a special edition of The CIO NEWS, which it hopes eventually to send to every CIO member in this state.

First issue of the new paper will be timed for Labor Day, and will be an elaborate publication filled with articles reviewing the growth of the CIO movement in Michigan. Regular publication of the new edition will be started in early September, and will be sent to the membership of a large number of important unions.

Report OKs Wagner Health Bill

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19— Pressing need for enactment of federal legislation to increase the scope of medical service available to the nation's citizenry was stressed today in a preliminary report on the Wagner Health Bill filed by a Senate Labor sub-committee.

In a statement accompanying the report, Sen. Murray of Montana, chairman of the group which has been studying the bill, declared that the "mass of testimony and information available to the subcommittee showed convincingly that there are great opportunities to improve health conditions in this country, to reduce the toll of pain and suffering, to lessen disease and premature death, and to diminish public and private burdens created by preventable sickness and disability."

ANSWERS ATTACK

Federal legislation along the lines of the Wagner Bill is necessary to permit the people's health to improve, Murray said. Answering reactionary propaganda — much of which flowed from the offices of Frank Gannett, New York state newspaper publisher— Murray showed that the bill does not set up a federal medicine system, nor does it establish "health insurance" nor "socialized medicine."

Instead, he pointed out, the bill "undertakes only to encourage and aid the states in setting up their own programs." Should the bill be passed, five general programs will be undertaken by the government during the next ten years; maternal, infant and child health services; general public health services; construction of needed hospitals; general medical care; and compensation for disability wage loss.

Textile Union Publishes Songbook

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 15 — Going on the basis that a "singing army is a winning army," the southern division of the Textile Workers Union of America has just published an attractive book of "Labor Songs."

Compiled and edited by Zilphia Horton of the Highlander Folk School in cooperation with R. R. Lawrence, TWU's southern regional director, the book contains more than 50 numbers which fit practically every labor situation.

"Most of the songs in this collection were written by people who work in the mines, mills, factories and on the farms," Miss Horton declares in the introduction to the volume.

CIO Pres. Lewis, Vice-Pres. Hillman and Pres. Rieve of the TWU have also written short introductory notes about the value of labor music.

Copies may be obtained from the Textile Workers Union of America, 421 Atlanta National Building, Atlanta, Ga. Single copies are priced at 25c each; in lots of 50 or more, they may be obtained for 12½c a copy.

AFL Leaders Under Fire As Typo Meet Opens

FORT WORTH, Tex., Aug. 19. — Delegtes to the 83-year-old Intl. Typographical Union, AFL affiliate, meet here today for the union's convention with the federation's war against the CIO a major item on the agenda.

A sharp challenge to the AFL's top leadership was contained in the report of Sec.-Treas. Woodruff Randolph, printed in the latest issue of the Typographical Journal, ITU official publication.

"It is quite apparent that there can be no peace in the labor movement until the executive council of the AFL abandons its present philosophy of dictatorship," the Randolph report declares.

"Many of our local unions and conferences have adopted resolutions urging peace in the labor movement. Such peace is apparently as far off as ever.

BLAMES AFL

"The latest maneuver of the peace negotiators between the AFL and the CIO demonstrates quite clearly that the fault still lies with the executive council of the American Federation of Labor."

Pres. C. M. Baker, in another convention report, described the membership as lacking "unanimity" on the problem of labor peace, and recommended no action "which would intensify the conflict."

A large bloc of the members have been aroused by the efforts of AFL Pres. Green to invade ITU jurisdiction and seek to dictate to ITU locals. The Detroit Mailers union, an ITU subsidiary, received a sharp letter some weeks ago from Green after it had opposed Wagner Act amendments. At the time Green charged that the local is a direct AFL affiliate — a charge strenuously denied by ITU Sec. Randolph.

Metal Miners Plan Organizing Drive

Convention Marked By Unity

By HAROLD ROSSMAN

DENVER, Aug. 19—Adoption of a broad organizing program and action to provide funds for expanded organization stood out today as the main accomplishments of the 36th Convention of the Intl. Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers just concluded here.

As the 150 delegates from all sections of the United States and Canada started for their homes they also had the satisfaction of knowing that the leadership of their union would repose for another year in the capable hands of President Reid Robinson, whose contributions to the union's progress were acclaimed when he was nominated without opposition to serve a fourth term.

UNITY OF SPIRIT

The six-day meeting, shortest in the union's recent history, was marked by the unity and progressive spirit of the delegates as well as by the galaxy of government and labor leaders, who spoke as guests of the conclave.

U. S. Wage-Hour Administrator Elmer F. Andrews addressed the nation over a CBS nationwide hook-up from the convention banquet. Other headliners to speak were Miss Kathryn Lewis, assistant to the chairman of the CIO; Walter Smethurst, executive assistant to John L. Lewis, and President Michael Quill of the Transport Workers Union.

PLAN EXPANSION

Plans for the expansion of the IUMM&SW and the continuance of its program of concentration on the strategic portions of the metals industry were continued in the report of Pres. Robinson, which was concurred in by the executive board and adopted by the convention. At the same time the convention formulated a constitutional amendment, to go to a national referendum of the membership, which will provide the per capita necessary to carry out the program.

A highlight of the meeting was Walter Smethurst's opening-day speech, in which he told the delegates, "The membership of the CIO will not tolerate a Munich peace, whereby our affiliated unions will be stripped of their membership in order to satisfy the principles of craft unionism."

DEFIES RED-BAITERS

President Quill of the Transport Workers Union was applauded wildly for his defense of progressive unionism and a blast against red-baiting in which he declared: "Sure, our members are better church members than ever before. When they used to work 84 hours a week there was no time for church, and no money for the collection plate, either.

"Now that the majority of our members have Sunday off, they have time to go to church. And higher wages makes money for the collection plate."

ROUND-TABLE TALKS

The round-table discussion on labor problems in Latin-America, led by Miss Lewis, was an outstanding feature of the meeting.

Among the actions taken by the convention was endorsement of a third term for President Roosevelt and adoption of one of the Chicago Hearst strikers. Denver was again selected as convention city.

Nomination of the officers to be voted on by referendum in October saw two board members unopposed—Tony McTeer of District 4 and Jess Gonzalez of District 6. All other officers will be contested.

FIGHTING HEARST, Pres. Heywood Broun of the American Newspaper Guild and Mrs. Broun take to the picket line in Chicago to aid the eight-month fight of Hearst employes for a job security contract with the American and Herald-Examiner. Mr. & Mrs. Broun were en route to the East after attending the ANG convention in San Francisco.

Mr. Ryan (czar of the AFL Longshoremen) and Harry Lundeberg, secretary of the Sailors Union of the Pacific." Lundeberg is also "president" of the AFL Seafarers Union, created by Wm. Green out of the discarded bones of the old AFL Intl. Seamens Union.

The committee sharply criticized the U. S. Maritime Commission for its consistent attempts to break down the maritime unions, describing it as "an agent and representative of the shipowners."

The report on the Commission prepared by Wm. Standard, NMU attorney cited its "insistence on compulsory arbitration for the seaman, its refusal to recognize collective bargaining rights for seamen employed on its ow nvessels even though operated in private industry, its establishment of government hiring halls, and its willingness to attack the rights of seamen" as evidence for the charge.

WRECK TORIES

Curran urged that labor and progressives get together to "wreck the Tories" in Congress and outside it who ganged up against the New Deal at the past session. Workers must "unite as effectively as the lobbies maintained by the Chamber of Commerce, the Natl. Association of Manufacturers, the shipowners' lobby, the patent medicine lobby, etc.," he said.

He also said the seamen and all maritime workers 100% back of Pres. Lewis' blistering attack on John N. Garner, the "evil old man" Lewis named as center of the reactionary drive in Congress.

Plans were outlined for joint action on forthcoming negotiations for renewal of wage agreements, and a proposal made for an investigation of shipowner-Maritime Commission collusion against the maritime workers and the public.

"The racketeering that was exposed by the Black Committee will seem like the smallest kind of petty thievery once the facts behind the coming scandal are exposed," the committee said.

THIRD RENEWAL

Indianapolis, Ind., Aug. 19. — A contract with the Mayer Stamp Company here has been renewed for the third time, CIO Regional Director James Robb announced this week.

CIO Gains in West Hailed by Smethurst

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19. — "CIO unions in the Rocky Mountain States have done a marvelous job of co-ordinating their forces and spreading their influence."

This was the report given today by Walter Smethurst, assistant to CIO Pres. Lewis, on his return from a month's trip in the west. A native of Montana, Smethurst held conferences with leaders of the Industrial Union Council in that state and in Utah, Wyoming and Colorado.

"Throughout the entire area there is tremendous enthusiasm for the CIO—for its accomplishments and for its ideals and its goals," Smethurst said. Consolidation of union ranks has provided a basis for furthering organizational activity.

Labor Day celebrations in Montana, Wyoming and Denver, Colo., will be an indication of this new union enthusiasm, the CIO official predicted.

ANGERED BY TORIES

The west has been keeping a close eye on the activities of Congressional Tories, Smethurst reported, and there is "no disagreement" that this was the worst legislative session in many years.

"Representatives and Senators will hear plenty from their constituents in the west about the attack on the New Deal," he said. "Rep. Thorkelson of Montana, for instance, campaigned for office on a platform of friendliness to labor. During the campaign he promised to act in behalf of the unions in Butte and other Montana cities.

"Thorkelson turned out to be a Tory and an anti-Semite when he got to Washington. He'll have some tall explaining to do to the folks in Montana."

READY TO PROGRESS

Smethurst expressed pleasure at the confidence and unity of the delegates to the convention of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers Union, which was held at Denver last week. Pointing out that this union, whose membership is large throughout the mountain area, is now prepared to launch a big organizing campaign, he said:

"The Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers are the backbone of unionism in half a dozen western states. With funds and personnel now available for a big drive, a lot of long-time open shop mining companies are going to learn that CIO unionism is the American way.

of thanks for the benefits already won under their leadership.

Following that, the delegates conferred for several hours on strike strategy in the event a strike is forced by the Armour management. Detailed plans for handling the strike, for setting up strike committees, arranging for food were discussed.

Delegate after delegate rose to report that his local would unanimously back the strike to the fullest extent needed. Each of the fifteen declared that their workers were ready to walk out and to stay out until the contract is won.

Chiseller Deluxe!

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Aug. 19. — The Connecticut Labor Department has cracked down on Abraham Katz, proprietor of the Alpakatuft Manufacturing Co., as the first culprit in its new war on sweatshops.

Among other offenses, Katz was found to be using the labor of a 15-year-old girl without paying for her work. After an unsuccessful attempt to hide the girl in the women's washroom, Katz explained to a state inspector that he was "teaching the business" to the girl, who will enter sixth grade when her summer "vacation" is over.

Although state law provides for a minimum wage of 25c an hour, another girl, only 16, was discovered to be working long hours for 11c an hour. A 16-year-old boy was found to be working 75 to 76 hours a week for wages ranging from 11c to 15c an hour.

Katz was fined $350 in city court on 18 counts for violation of the state labor laws.

Bridges' Foes Put On Defensive At Coast Hearings

By MIRIAM ALLEN DEFORD

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 19. — The Bridges deportation hearings this week provided a study in contrasts.

Appearing on the witness stand were two scholarly professors from Stanford University, who discussed at considerable length the philosophy and theory of communism; and John L. Leech, ex-Communist and tool of labor-baiters, who appeared once before at the hearings as a witness for the government, which is seeking to oust Harry Bridges, west coast CIO director, from the country as an "undesirable alien".

Still another witness was Edgar O. Heinrich, handwriting expert, whose testimony was a severe blow to the prosecution.

Heinrich identified as genuine a signature written some time ago by Leech on an affidavit in which he said that Portland, Oreg. police had tried to get him to make a statement against Bridges, but that he had refused since he had no knowledge of the CIO official's political affiliation.

EXPOSE 'FORGERY' CHARGE

Leech later changed his mind, and attempted to pass off the affidavit as a "forgery". Heinrich's testimony nailed that attempt. Leech's efforts to undo the defense counsel's arguments was scarcely convincing, and Dean James Landis of Harvard's Law School, Department of Labor trial examiner who presides at the hearings, made little effort to conceal his suspicion of the credibility of the testimony.

Dies Committee agents, who have been hovering around the hearings, were much in evidence as Capt. Keegan of the Portland, Oreg. police force resumed his interrupted appearance on the stand. Defense attorney made life difficult for the anti-labor cop by producing letters signed by Keegan which indicate close cooperation among the Portland police, the Los Angeles police and the northwestern divisions of the Immigration & Naturalization Service in the attempt to deport Bridges.

The two professors, appearing as experts on Communism, left the impression that communists in advanced democratic nations such as the United States or Great Britain would not seek overthrow of the government by force.

EXPLAIN STRATEGY

Explaining the reason for calling these experts to the stand, the Harry Bridges Defense Committee issued the following statement:

"In presenting this testimony, we wish it clearly understood that the CIO and the Bridges Defense are not interested in explaining or defending communism. The CIO and the Defense Committee are, however, very much interested in defending Bridges, who happens to be charged with Communistic membership or affiliation.

"We believe that the charges are deliberately framed up against him.

"They are, specifically, that he is a member or affiliated to the Communist party; and that the Communist party believes in, teaches and advocates the overthrow of the American form of government by force and violence.

"The defense believes it to be necessary to fight against this 'blow below the belt' by having expert witnesses give the entire picture of this political party, its aims and how it hopes to win them."

Mechanics Press Nine-Week Strike

New York, Aug. 19 — The nine-week-old strike of the CIO United Mechanics of the Garment Industries against the Central Sewing Machine Co., was reinforced today by the decision of the entire membership of Local 150 to pay monthly $1.00 assessment, until the strike is won.

The membership of the CIO local, an affiliate of the International Fur and Leather Workers' Union, voted to continue the strike until its demands, which include elimination of unsanitary factory conditions, are granted.

The strike against the Central Sewing Machine Shop is a part of the city-wide organizational drive now being conducted by the United Mechanics Local among mechanics working in the needle, fur, glove, buttonhole, and similar lines.

District 50 Finds Camp Plan OK

By MARY GUION

Camp Raccoon, Pa., Aug. 19— A hearty cheer as one of the St. Louis boys makes an impossible soft-ball catch. The clean click of the pingpong balls on two busy tables. The banter of the New Jersey pinochle fans playing under the trees.

Then the eight o'clock bell rings insistently near the mess hall. Sixty-three summer campers troop into the Recreation Hall at Raccoon Creek Camp to become students of labor problems again. This was one evening at the summer camp sponsored by District Fifty of the United Mine Workers.

100% SUCCESS

District Fifty's first attempt at workers education was a 100% success in the opinion of those who attended the camp. Raccoon Creek provided a perfect setting for a serious vacation: 150 acres of beautiful mountain country, 24 modern log cabins, a cold mountain lake, baseball, volleyball and badminton courts.

The CIO Camp Committee has equipped the camp completely with sports facilities and the resident staff did everything to make the week pleasant and memorable.

63 DELEGATES

Sixty-three delegates attended the camp from Local Unions as remote as Pensacola, Fla., and Racine, Wis., Boston and St. Louis. They did not come merely to listen but to take an active part in all the discussions involving organizational and union problems in the District.

Indianapolis Ready For Best Labor Day

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Aug. 19. — The CIO will stage the biggest Labor Day celebration in the history of this city, James Robb, CIO director, predicted today on the basis of plans already worked out.

Sponsored by the Indianapolis Industrial Union Council, the day will start with a parade of 80 floats and close to 4,000 automobiles through downtown streets. Cash prizes will be awarded for the best exhibits.

Following the parade, the crowds will go to Columbus Park for a big picnic, which will be featured by softball games, various athletic events and dancing.

At midafternoon the speech of John L. Lewis, to be made over a nationwide radio hookup, will be tuned in on giant loudspeakers throughout the park.

Officials of the celebration committee, in addition to Robb, include William C. Robertson, secretary; Nelson Joseph, treasurer; Clarence Lyons, William Abel, John Carr, J. K. Shepard, Karl Baker and Orval Kincaid.

Asks Labor Support For Pay Act

New York, Aug. 19. — Wage-Hour Administrator Elmer F. Andrews appealed to labor today for continued support of the Fair Labor Standards Act, which he declared is threatened by the machinations of the "dime-an-hour" bloc.

"I am not so naive as to believe that our opponents are by any means through," Andrews said. "On the contrary, they have only had their appetites whetted. Next January, the dime-an-hour bloc may be expected to come to Washington to renew its demands."

PUBLIC SUPPORTS ACT

Andrews asserted that "the public is behind this act. It is just as anxious to wipe out the slums of industry as it is to tear down the slums of housing. But the public is not organized.

"It looked to labor for leadership in putting this law on the statute books. It looks to you for leadership in the fight to keep it there."

Andrews OKs Hosiery Wage Rates

Washington, Aug. 19 — in his first approval of minimum wage recommendations made by industry committees under the Wage-Hour Act, Administrator Elmer F. Andrews this week issued an order covering the hosiery industry which will mean wage increases for some 46,000 workers, effective September 18.

The recommendations approved call for a minimum wage of 40c an hour in the full-fashioned and 32½c in the seamless hose industry. It was estimated that the increase would affect 30,000 of the 80,000 seamless hose workers, and 16,000 of the 60,000 full-fashioned workers.

The basic minimum wage of 25c an hour covering all industries, for the first fiscal year, will be increased to 30c in October, under the provisions of the Wage-Hour Act, which also provides for the setting up of industry committees empowered to recommend higher minimum for specific industries. The general minimum is to be raised to 40c within seven years, the Act specifies.

RIEVE HAILS RULING

In commenting on Administrator Andrew's order, Emil Rieve, president of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, CIO, said that although it took a long time for the recommendations to be approved, "they're good ones and will help the industry as a whole." Rieve was a member of the committee making the recommendation.

Board Orders Bethlehem End Stooge Tie-up

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19. — The National Labor Relations Board today had handed down its fourth Little Steel decision —a sizzling order to the Bethlehem Steel Corp., to disestablish its hoary company union system embracing 10 of the company's most important plants.

Previous Labor Board orders have covered Republic Steel, Inland, and Youngstown Sheet & Tube, all of them involved in the Little Steel strike of 1937, conducted by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

Bethlehem, less than 24 hours later, had filed an appeal in the U. S. Circuit Court here asking that the NLRB decision be overturned. As a result, long-drawn-out litigation is expected to follow.

TEN PLANTS

The plants covered by the decision are located at Johnstown, Lebanon, Bethlehem, Rankin, Leetsdale and Steelton, Pa.; Lackawanna, N. Y., and Sparrows Point, Md.

Hearings, which extended over a period of several months, found Bethlehem arguing that its employe representation plan—instituted shortly after the World War—is an "independent union." The Board took the opposite view.

FOUND COMPANY AID

"We find that the company has dominated and interfered with the administration of the plans of employes' representation at its various plants and has contributed support to them," the decision stated.

In 1937, it noted, "certain amendments, suggested and phrased by the company, were put into effect.

"These amendments did not alter the basic structure and manner of operation of the plans, nor could they possibly erase from the minds of the employes of the long-continued and well-known company approval and encouragement of the plans."

The plans, which were formed with the assistance of McKenzie King, now Canada's conservative Prime Minister, were designed to prevent bona fide organization of the corporation's several score thousand employes, the NLRB found.

RAP CITIZENS' COMMITTEE

Company support for the notorious Johnstown Citizens' Committee during the 1937 strike also came in for condemnation from the Board.

In providing money to Mayor Daniel Shields of Johnstown and to the committee directly "the company was thus, in the most effective manner, interfering with the organization of its striking employes," the decision said.

CAT OUT OF BAG

It quoted H. G. Andrews, a prominent member of the committee, who wrote in a local paper shortly after the strike:

"The job on hand, from the citizens' committee standpoint, was the breaking of the strike and the resumption of work in the mills. The academic members of the committee did the talking about the constitutional right of men to work. However, that right didn't amount to two whoops in Hades unless the strike was broken."

The NLRB order was signed by Chairman J. Warren Madden and Edwin S. Smith. William Leiserson, third Board member, did not participate in the case, since proceedings had been concluded prior to his appointment to office.

Labor Board Slaps Ford Anti-Unionism

Washington, Aug. 19. — Another set-back in the Ford Motor Company's bitter fight against unionism was received last week when the National Labor Relations Board ordered it to stop its union smashing drive against the United Automobile Workers, CIO.

The company was also ordered to cease spreading propaganda criticising labor organizations or advising their employes not to join, and to reinstate 24 employes with back pay.

The Board's findings were based on testimony given at a public hearing in Detroit in July, 1937. On December 22, 1937, the Board issued its first decision in the case, and two weeks later petitioned the court for an enforcement of its order.

In May, 1938 the court granted the Board's motion to withdraw the case in order to set aside the decision of December and issue proposed findings upon a reconsideration of the entire case.

Order Hearing On Deere Co.

The corporation, employing about 8,000 workers in three plants in Iowa and Illinois, has been charged with unfair labor practices embodied in yellow dog contracts signed with its stooge unions.

Joseph Weber, assistant director of the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee, predicted that the hearings would spur CIO organization at the plant and lead to the removal of one of the few remaining yellow dog agreements left in American industry.

Technicians To Have Day At Fair

New York, Aug. 19. — Members of the CIO Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians are working out elaborate plans for Federation Day at the New York World's Fair on Sept. 16.

Plans for the day include guided tours to points of special interest to technical men and special motion pictures on scientific and technical subjects. A luncheon and symposium on "contributions of technical men to the World of Tomorrow" will be attended by authorities on architecture, engineering, chemistry, labor, education and public health.

Hail Lewis Attack On Garner

Bellaire, Ohio, Aug. 19. — The executive board of Belmont County's Labor's Non-Partisan League has voiced a unanimous "amen" to John L. Lewis' denunciation of the Garnerite reactionaries.

A letter sent to Lewis by Pres. Adolph Pacifico of the county League unit declared:

"It is our desire that your remarks will not stop with this one Tory, but will extend to all such back-stabbers of American labor. Your clear-cut expression stands as notice to all reactionary labor-baiters that the millions of men and women in the U. S. who toil for a living will not stand idly by while sorely-needed social legislation is sabotaged by obscure and nefarious methods.

"Labor's Non-Partisan League of Belmont County, Ohio, stands ready and willing to assist in every way possible in the eradication of these reactionaries from public office."

CIO, AFL Join Fight to Save News Jobs

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Aug. 19. — CIO and AFL unions operating in the city's three local newspaper plants have organized a "Free Press Committee" to fight a rumored proposed merger whereby the evening Times-Leader-News would be handled in the morning Record's plant, with accompanying loss of jobs.

Thousands of petitions are being circulated throughout this area asking subscribers to declare themselves opposed to "monopolistic" control of the local press. "One-clique-rule" would be injurious to "the best interests of the people," the petitions state. Both papers are already under the same board of governors, operating under the name of a single publishing company.

POSTPONE POLL

Labor and the Law

By Lee Pressman

NLRB vs. Bethlehem

The decision of the Labor Relations Board against the Bethlehem Steel Company upholds the charges made by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

It represents a notable triumph for the union in its struggle to secure the rights of workers guaranteed by the federal government to choose their own representatives and bargain collectively free from any interference of any kind by the company. The decision represents the final result of hearings before the Labor Board which were commenced after charges were filed by the SWOC in July, 1937. The mills of the gods grind slowly but surely.

NO MORE COMPANY UNIONS

The most important thing about the Labor Board's decision is that it puts an end to the elaborate company union schemes which the Bethlehem Steel Company has foisted upon its employes since 1918. This means that the employe representatives no longer meet with the management and attempt to deal with it. It means that a true representative of the workers in their grievances will take the place of the employe representation plans.

NO MORE ADVICE FROM THE BOSS

Bethlehem has been notorious in the use of various means to attempt to tell the workers how they should run their own affairs. This has ranged from elaborate pamphlets issued by the heads of the company, including Pres. Eugene Grace himself, to bulletin notices explaining how wonderful the company-dominated plans are for the workers, and statements by foremen and supervisors as to what is good for the workers. These plain violations and outright interference with the free choice of representatives must now cease.

Bethlehem has in the past used the services of such notorious spy agencies as the Pinkerton service. Through these spies the company got inside information on the union activities of the workers and placed all the employes under the fear that their confidential conversations and private meetings would be known to the boss. Now these vicious practices can no longer take place.

NO MORE CITIZENS' COMMITTEES

During the strike in 1937 certain public officials, including the Mayor of Johnstown and "respectable" citizens, formed a citizens' committee for law and order. According to the findings of the federal agency the work of this committee was financed by the Bethlehem Steel Company. The committee was used in an attempt to swing public opinion against the strikers and against the SWOC and to get the workers to agree to stay in the embraces of the company's fake plans. This hypocritical and secret kind of interference with employes' rights to bargain collectively and choose their own representatives is now outlawed.

THE NEXT STEP

Bethlehem has already filed a petition to have the order of the Board reviewed by the courts. It will undoubtedly take the case to the Supreme Court of the United States. These court proceedings will mean delay but we confidentially expect that the final decision will uphold the charges of the SWOC and that industrial peace will prevail in the plants of the Bethlehem Steel Company.

Three-Day Strike Won In Texas

Fort Worth, Tex., Aug. 26—A three-day strike, in which every one of the 180 members of Local 59 of the Packinghouse Workers, CIO, walked out, brought a complete victory in a signed contract from the Fort Worth Stock Yards Co. here.

The company had been stalling on the issue for many weeks, but the 100 per cent walkout by the entire force brought the management into line—in spite of the usual pre-strike statements about never signing with the CIO.

Clatskanie, Oreg. — Clatskanie culinary workers, tired of receiving no aid from AFL officials, have voted to apply for a CIO charter.

Packard, Motor Products Votes Show CIO Favor

(See Story Page Three)

DETROIT, Aug. 26.—By 4-1 and 20-1 pluralities, the CIO United Automobile Workers swept to victory in National Labor Relations Board balloting at the Packard and Motor Products Co. plants here, thereby ending all threat of AFL disruptionist raids in the industry.

The two victories, UAW - CIO leaders predicted, would be duplicated early next month when Briggs and Chrysler workers —80,000 in all—will be given a chance to name their sole bargaining agency in NLRB polls.

AFL - Homer Martin claims of dominance at Packard were badly dented by the results of the election, which also belied newspaper reports that the auto workers are turning away from unionism. Only a few of the 8,000 Packard employes voted for no union.

Inland Boatmen Vote to Join CIO

CAIRO, Ill., Aug. 26.—Delegates representing 4,000 organized boatmen on the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois and Warrior rivers voted 100% affiliation with the National Maritime Union at a conference of the Inland Boatmen's Union held here.

Subject to ratification of the membership, the conference recommended that the rivermen adopt the NMU constitution as revised at the second annual convention held last month in New Orleans.

The conference adopted a program for a drive to complete the organization of the 17,000 unorganized river workers, and planned to send organizers soon into the Illinois and Ohio River areas.

43 DELEGATES

There were 43 delegates representing 28 boats and seven river ports at the conference, and seven fraternal delegates from the Intl. Longshoremen's Assn., AFL. The Ohio River Pilots' Assn. also sent a fraternal delegate.

Board Orders Show PWOC Strength

Washington, Aug. 26 — One Labor Board certification and three election orders issued this week testified to the growing strength of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, in the meat packing industry.

In Chicago, the Board certified Local 347 as sole collective bargaining agency at the Armour Co. Auxiliary plants, after an election won by the local by a three to one majority.

In Omaha the Board set the date for an Armour election at 15 days from the issuance of the order, which was sent down Aug. 23. Local 8 will be on the ballot there.

In Fort Worth, Tex., the Board ordered an election Sept. 23 among Armour employes, where Local 54 will be on the ballot.

In Albert Lea, Minn., the Board postponed a scheduled election at the Wilson and Co. plant "because the company had not yet posted the proper orders as required" by the Board. These orders directed the company to cease opposing the CIO and to observe the Wagner Act. Local 6 is represented in this plant.

Missouri CIO Plans Council

St. Louis, Aug. 26. — CIO affiliates throughout the State of Missouri were preparing today for the formation of an Industrial Union Council which will embrace hundreds of locals with membership running in the thousands.

The convention will be held on Saturday and Sunday, Sept. 16 and 17 at Selinger Center Auditorium in Jefferson City.

CIO membership runs into the thousands throughout this state. Large numbers of packinghouse workers live in St. Louis, St. Joseph and Kansas City; clothing workers in St. Louis; electrical manufacturing workers in St. Louis; shoe workers both in St. Louis and surrounding small towns; coal and metal miners, and workers in steel fabricating plants which are centered in St. Louis.

Local CIO officials predict that the state council will rapidly become one of the most powerful in the country.

Construction Campaign Progressing

Washington, Aug. 26 — Continued progress in CIO organizing among construction workers was reported by A. D. Lewis, chairman, United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, with headquarters here.

Mr. Lewis disclosed that a steady stream of letters and applications from construction workers all over the country is coming into his office, asking for information and indicating a desire to join the newly formed CIO affiliate.

"The construction workers are ready and anxious for the CIO," Lewis said. "We are ready to give them the benefits of CIO organization, and to bring to the construction industry the same benefits and stability that the CIO has brought to so many other basic industries in our country."

Woodworkers Win Poll by 5-1 Margin

TACOMA, Wash., Aug. 26.—The CIO piled up a commanding lead in a Labor Board election here today as Local 2-9 of the Intl. Woodworkers of America defeated an AFL affiliate 738-163. Only five workers voted for no union.

The poll was conducted among the employes of the St. Paul & Tacoma Lumber Co.

James E. McDonald, president of the local, hailed the election results as a justification of CIO policies.

"Let this be a warning to all employers and other forces who attempt to disrupt and destroy bona fide unions which are militantly putting forward the program and policies of the CIO in the progressive labor movement.

"I feel our action and the result of the election will be the 'green light' for all CIO unions on the West Coast to go ahead and build their organizations."

Lumbermen Send Out Call For Conclave

Seattle, Wash., Aug. 26 — A call to the third national convention of the International Woodworkers of America which opens in Klamath Falls, Oregon, October 18, was sent out this week from the national IWA office here.

Set previously for October 11, the date was postponed a week, after the CIO executive board had decided on October 10 as the best date for the national CIO convention in San Francisco.

100,000 MEMBERS

The union has a membership of more than 100,000 in the lumber and wood working industry throughout the country.

Although formed less than three years ago, the official call states, the union "points with pride" to its achievements. "Never before in the lumber industry has a labor organization waged such a successful fight against unscrupulous employers and company domination of workers.

Shipyard Meeting Sept. 8

Jersey City, N. J., Aug. 26—As host to the fifth national convention of the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers which opens here September 8, Jersey City Local 16 is planning to spare no trouble or expense to make the convention a success, John F. Dempsey, local president, said this week. Lou Jones is chairman of the committee in charge of arrangements.

Delegates will come from shipyards and plants in California, Maine, Louisiana, Masachusetts and other parts of the United States and Canada. Local 16, made up of employes of the Federal Shipyards at Kearny, N. J., will entertain the delegates at a banquet in Celtic Hall, to be followed by a grand ball at the Ukranian Center, 181 Fleet St.

The convention which will be held at Celtic Hall, Clinton and Jackson avenue, Jersey City, will open Friday morning, September 8 at 10 o'clock.

Radio Union Convention Labor Day

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 26—The convention of one of the CIO's largest and youngest unions, the United Electrical Radio & Machine Workers, opens here at the Kimball Hotel on Labor Day.

Formed in 1936, the union's membership has jumped from 25,000 to 158,000 in three years. It has won contracts from General Electric, Westinghouse and other giant corporations formerly non-union.

ACA to Meet Next April

NEW YORK, Aug. 26—The international executive board of the American Communications Association announced this week that the next national convention of the union would be held in Chicago, beginning April 8, 1940. The 1938 convention chose Chicago as the convention city.

CIO Leaders Denounce Coughlin Parade Plan

New York, Aug. 26 — CIO unionists here are taking part of the credit for preventing an anti-Semitic, anti-labor parade by the "Christian Mobilizers," Father Coughlin storm-troop outfit, that was scheduled for this week.

The parade was denounced by 50 top-ranking officials of New York CIO unions, who protested to Mayor LaGuardia and urged him not to issue a city permit for the march. The parade was later cancelled by the Christian Mobilizers, as CIO and other protests poured in.

NOT 'FREE SPEECH' ISSUE

"We know that you stand, as you have said, for the principle that inciting to riot and the stirring up of religious and racial hatred cannot be considered under the heading of free speech," they wired.

"Just as the Nazis now wage war on German Catholics, Jews and Protestants, so do these lawless and un-American groups now seek to turn America into the same shambles of hatred and bigotry."

Christian Mobilizers and Christian Front hoodlums have been making New York streets unsafe for decent citizens with their unprovoked attacks on Jews, Negroes, and labor union members.

Auto Union Sweeps Board Polls

Packard Motor Co. employes line up before the Labor Board's ballot box in Detroit. Their 4-1 vote for the CIO United Automobile Workers in what had been considered a Martin stronghold spelled doom for AFL disruptionist efforts and gave the lie to charges that the nation's auto workers are tiring of unionism.

Packard, Motor Products Vote CIO By Big Margins

DETROIT, Aug. 26. — Two overwhelming Labor Board election victories — at Packard and at Motor Products Co. — today had placed the United Automobile Workers, CIO, in an unchallengeable position as the dominating union in the nation's automotive industry.

As a result of the rank-and-file expression of choice, the UAW-CIO gained sole bargaining rights in the plants of the two big corporations.

Coming shortly after the General Motors agreement, which brought major gains to the UAW-CIO, the elections ended threats of disruption by Homer Martin and his disgruntled group of AFL strikebreakers.

The Packard vote:

UAW-CIO	6,090
AFL	1,547
Neither	637

An additional 60 of the 8,897 votes were challenged, void or blank.

The Motor Products vote:

UAW-CIO	2,033
AFL	188
Neither	80

THOMAS HAILS RESULTS

"It is a renewed demonstration of our strength," said Pres. R. J. Thomas of the CIO auto workers. "We will use it to full advantage in further organization."

"The overwhelming victory for the CIO in the Packard election sounds the clarion call for the Labor Board elections that follow in Bundy Tubing, Briggs and Chrysler," declared Richard Frankensteen, director of the UAW-CIO's District One. "The CIO is on the march!

"By the same token, what is the clarion call for the CIO was the death knell for dual unionism.

"The auto workers can now say, 'Alas', poor Homer, we knew him well."

OTHER POLLS SCHEDULED

Elections at Briggs and Chrysler are expected shortly after Labor Day, having been postponed by the National Labor Relations Board because of the immense amount of technical work necessary for the conducting of elections among close to 50,000 workers in about 15 plants. These polls, like the two that went before, are also expected to show huge CIO majorities.

The small AFL vote at Packard, which was long considered a Martin stronghold, came as a stunning setback for the disruptionists, who had confidentially boasted of victory.

"We were sure we'd run the CIO out of Packard" was the way one of the 30 AFL organ-

New York Dairy Farmers Win; Backed by CIO

UTICA, N. Y., Aug. 26. — Organized dairy farmers scored their first great victory with the culmination August 23 of a seven-day strike against New York's infamous milk trust.

The strike, directed by the Dairy Farmers Union and supported by the CIO, brought, in addition to many minor improvements to the much-exploited farmer, the following cardinal accomplishments:

1. An increase in the return to dairy farmers from an average of three cents per quart to four-and-a-half cents per quart for milk, an increase of 50 per cent.

2. Establishment of the first collective bargaining agreement in the dairy farming industry.

3. Creation of a definite and working farmer-labor alliance in New York state.

Meeting in Utica to ratify the strike settlement, negotiated in New York City by their president, Archie Wright, 300 county chairmen representing the union's 15,000 farmer-members, lustily cheered the appearance at their convention of Allan S. Haywood, president of the state CIO Industrial Union Council.

By acclamation, the farmer leaders adopted a resolution expressing their gratitude for CIO support of the strike and pledged reciprocal aid in the future to organized labor on both legislative and economic fronts.

Farm Leader

Archie Wright, chairman of the Dairy Farmers Union of New York, which, with strong CIO consumers' support, won a strike with the milk trust. Milk trust was forced to lift its pay to the milk producers.

Armour Meets Union

Chicago, Aug. 26—Armour & Co., up to this week stubbornly refusing to negotiate with the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, has taken its place at the table and is talking business with the representatives of its organized workers.

The opening of negotiations came after a long and patient process by the CIO union, Local 347 of the PWOC, which, together with other Armour locals, went through every step of trade union and legal procedure to bring the management to agree to discuss outstanding problems.

Finally a delegation from all Armour locals throughout the nation went to Washington, D. C., last week to put their demand for negotiations before the Federal government. At the same time, they served notice that this was the last resort—failing negotiations, they told the Secretary of Labor that they would strike every Armour plant in the nation, and that the strike would spread to other packing centers.

COMMITTEE FORMED

The negotiating committee now meeting with Armour officials here is headed by Van A. Bittner, PWOC chairman; Henry Johnson, assistant national director, and composed of local members Jeff Beckley, Sophie Kosciolowski, Oscar Wilson, Ed Miller, George Kovachavick, Joe Bezenhofer, Paddy McNicholas and David MacKenzie.

Demands presented by the committee include the union shop, the end of the 60-day layoff procedure, adjustment of wage differentials, liberalization of vacations plans, health and safety measures and reduction of speed-up.

AFL Typos Defy Green 'War' Order

Fort Worth, Tex., Aug. 26. —The 83-year-old AFL Intl. Typographical Union, meeting in Convention here, refused Federation Executive Council demands for payment of anti-CIO "war" funds.

An unanimous resolution told the council that if future ITU affiliation with the AFL depends on payment of the assessment—which the typo union has consistently refused to pay — the council will have to make up its collective mind to get along without the ITU.

The council has threatened suspension of the union, founded long before the AFL was created, if it refuses to pay the assessment.

The federation's 1c-a-month-a-member assessment to fight the CIO was first voted by the council in May, 1937, but the ITU has refused to pay it. As a result, the federation now claims the typographers should pay out $22,000.

Sentiment of an important part of the ITU's membership on the AFL demand was voiced by Pres. Elmer Brown of Local 6, New York City.

"We will never pay a tax to fight another union," he said. "Nor will be contribute one cent to destroy any organization which is working in the interests of labor."

Following his recommendations, the local passed a resolution urging the ITU convention to "take no action that might compromise the traditional and long-established independence of the ITU."

Lewis Congratulates Dairy Farmers Union

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.—CIO Pres. John L. Lewis today sent the following wire of congratulations to the Dairy Farmers Union of New York, which with CIO support emerged victorious from a strike for higher milk payments:

"On behalf of the CIO, I wish to convey to you warmest congratulations on the notable victory of the Dairy Farmers Union. Through the courage and cooperation of your members, the union has taken a great step forward in the long struggle of the farmers to get a just payment for their product.

"The CIO has and always will stand back of efforts of the working farmer to get a fair price for their product.

"My compliments to you."

CIO Pickets Insurance Office

Newark, N. J., Aug. 26 — New Jersey saw its first insurance company picket line here when members of Local 15, United Office and Professional Workers, CIO, marched in front of the Metropoltan Life Insurance Co. branch in the heart of the city.

The line was called out when the company, following a consistent union busting policy, fired Charles Simon, local charter member, for a trifling infraction of company rules.

"The members of our local are aroused because they realize that the dismissal of Brother Simon is a direct threat to the security of their own jobs," the local president said.

"We intend to carry on this protest as long as necessary, to show the company that our jobs can't be taken away at the whim of someone who does not like the victim personally or because we exercise our rights under the Wagner Act."

Farmers and Workers Join Forces

Farmers are supposed to be a pretty patient lot of men. They don't lead too easy a life. They work hard, long hours and they get too often a pretty small cash return for their labor.

Their compensations are supposed to be elsewhere—in the fine open air life they lead, in their contact with nature, and the like. They're not supposed to worry about cash income to buy sordid things like decent clothing or a few of the comforts that make life more tolerable for an American working family.

Certainly they're not supposed to go out on strike when Wall Street can't see its way to giving them a minimum of the things every American family ought to have. Above all, they're not supposed to get together with organized industrial labor in the struggle to secure those benefits.

This is the picture the bankers and the mortgage holders try to peddle to the farmers and to the public generally. It is a pretty picture — for the bankers. It is anything but a pretty picture for the millions of families who get their living by wresting it from the land.

And just now it's a picture that has been drastically upset by dairy farmers and CIO workers of the New York state. Tired of being squeezed by the milk trust—which is one of America's biggest monopolies—the farmers struck for a price for their milk that would enable them and their families to live like human beings.

This was bad enough, but the dairy farmers have committed an even greater sin. They were offered—and they accepted gratefully—the full cooperation of the CIO in New York state in winning their just and reasonable demands.

So the working farmers and the organized industrial workers of New York state got together, and made effective the right of a large section of our population to earn a living by their toil.

Naturally the milk trust and the newspapers that speak for it are worried and outraged. This is something new, something ominous. If working farmers and industrial workers can get together on a fair price for milk, what is there to prevent them from getting together to ensure decent living standards for everybody, whether they work on the land or in factories?

The answer is that nothing can prevent them—if they stay together against their common enemies, the chiselling milk trust and the chiselling employer.

The CIO and the working farmers are showing the way. The CIO has long stood for close cooperation between the two. Now it has worked out in New York state, and it will work out elsewhere.

It will work out in the packing industry, for example, if the attitude of the meat packers—another big monopoly in their field—remains as stubborn against genuine collective bargaining as it has been previously.

Dog Days and the AFL

The summer doldrums are with us again. All over the United States the hot, muggy weather hits everybody, falling on the just and the unjust alike.

But the effects aren't the same everywhere, nor do all people react alike. The AFL Executive Council and President Green, for example—they take it one way.

The CIO takes it another way.

The AFL Executive Council, and President Green, have been doing some peculiar things during the current dog days. They have been trying their level best, apparently, to injure their own organizations in their zeal of hatred for the CIO.

The CIO is renewing contracts, extending its organization, chartering new locals in every field, meeting in lively, progressive conventions in a score of industries and industrial communities.

The CIO is going ahead. The AFL Executive Council is determinedly striving to push the labor movement back.

Maybe it's the weather, but the same humidity falls on the CIO and on the AFL Executive Council alike. It's just the reaction that's different.

CIO Brings End to 'Slavery' In Iowa Button Factories

MUSCATINE, Ia., Aug. 26. — One more slave sector in American industry has fallen with the signing of a CIO contract by the Hawkeye Pearl Button Co., of this city.

Men and women who had been drudging at machines in their shacks, for years, cutting buttons for three or four dollars a week, voted with tears in their eyes to ratify the settlement arranged by Joseph Kaminsky, Amalgamated Clothing Workers leader, after a strike which had paralyzed operations of the company since June 19th.

The contract provides for a preferential union shop, for revision of wages in the lower brackets, machinery to negotiate a general wage revision, and for a 40-hour week.

Until the coming of the CIO, the buttonmakers of Muscatine worked under conditions as hopeless as that of the English weavers who drudged over their looms from daylight to dark 200 years ago. "We are going to reclaim Muscatine from the jungle of American industry and make it a 100 per cent union town," declared Vernon Dale, Amalgamated organizer, following the signing of the contract.

Ill-Housed, Ill-Fed

From the plant of the Hawkeye Pearl Button Co., the ghetto of the buttonmakers is only a few blocks away.

In street after street of shacks with tin walls and tarpaper roofs, pale men and women who have hardly eaten a square meal since the beginning of the depression bend over their machines, cutting blank buttons from clam shells.

In one shack, with a large family of anaemic children, father and mother work at machines which drain water into the kitchen sinks and into whatever food the family can buy from peon wages.

"Before 1939, any first-class button maker could make from $30 to $35 per week," said the father. "But one week this year, I got a check for 46 cents after paying for my shell and having my culls thrown out. A buddy of mine got a check for two cents one week.

"Hawkeye has been the hardest nut to crack in the business, and we still have a long, hard fight to bring back wage scales to what they were before 1930. But we've got a man in the White House who's for us, and a union which isn't going to sell us down the river."

Down another street, 14 cutters work in a shack which has only one window and where the hot sun makes the place seethe like a cauldron. One of these men is designated as a "contractor" on the company's books because the other workers pay him $1.50 per week each for space in the shack. But there is little difference between his living standards and those of the men who are supposedly his "employes."

Like the others, he worked in the Hawkeye plant until it was closed in July, 1937, as a maneuver of the company to prevent union organization. Like the others, he has done piece work in a shack for the company since that time, and like the others, he is an enthusiastic CIO member.

The heads and chests of the 14 men are always wet from the moisture of the machines. Clam shells—the raw material of the industry—soak in an open tank whose water is as green and scummy as that of a stagnant pool.

Cutting and Coughing

Many a man has coughed away his lungs cutting buttons for Hawkeye—spent his life cutting and coughing until claimed by the potters' field. The dampness seeps into the undernourished systems of the button makers so that tuberculosis, bronchitis, and yellow jaundice are common occupational diseases.

Until forced to do so by the strike, Fred Vetter, company president had been too "patriotic" to deal with the CIO, although his employes have in many cases, been kept alive only by the supplementary aid of local relief authorities.

Every week the workers took their blank buttons to the Hawkeye plant to be weighed. The buttonmakers waited anxiously while the scales determined whether they would have bacon with their beans that week. The company paid only for the number of blanks accepted, but kept the culls and disposed of them although the workers had to pay the charge of four cents for every pound of shell taken out.

But there is a new will to fight manifest in this little city—the will of American citizens to live like human beings.

NAM Official Flays Democratic Methods

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26 — The trouble with the United States is too much democracy. The welfare of the nation is in danger because the government is run simply by the will of "the current majority". The mind of the masses is corrupted by democracy, and as a result our republic is being undermined and its constitution swept away.

This, stated with considerably more rhetoric, is the real low-down on what's wrong with America, according to H. W. Prentis, Jr., president of Armstrong Cork, vice-president of the Natl. Association of Manufacturers, director of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, and one of the orators who spoke for business at the Congress on Education for Democracy held at Columbia University, New York.

And in case you didn't think it was so, Pres., Vice-Pres. and Director Prentis listed some contemporary evils resulting from democracy for his audience at the final meeting in Carnegie Hall. These are, to put it briefly, primary elections, the initiative, referendum and recall, government agencies, and of course and specifically the Natl. Labor Relations Board and the Wagner Act it administers.

THAT MINORITY AGAIN

Further, says Pres. and Vice-Pres. Prentis, the New Deal and the reds who now run the country have taken advantage of the "masses" ' ignorant devotion to democracy to crush helpless minorities whenever they show their heads. For instance, the Wagner Act:

"Under its provisions," says Mr. Prentis, "51 per cent of the employes of any concern are empowered to speak for all—thus disregarding certain individual rights of the minority, which in this case has no specially prescribed constitutional protection."

This is bad enough, because after all the sacred right of a minority to hold up progress, particularly in labor relations, should be maintained. But worse than this, the President of the United States himself has fallen into this trap of democracy.

"In recent years the President himself has frankly advocated far-reaching national policies embracing radical departures from heretofore accepted theories of republican government on the simple ground that such measures are the will of the current majority," Prentis said.

THERE'S A DIFFERENCE

What the American people have to learn, Prentis pointed out, is that there's a difference between a republic and a democracy, and that the U. S. emphatically ought to be the former and not the latter. This is how he put it:

"Hence, at all hazards, the difference between a republic and a democracy must be made clear to the American people. For the advocates of Communism, Socialism, Fascism, Nazism and New Liberalism are constantly obscuring vital issues by juggling with the favorable connotation that the word democracy possesses in the mind of the masses."

Once this difference is learned, the solution to America's problems becomes clear. Not more democracy but less—and a regrowth of individual faith. Only this way, said Mr. Prentis, speaking for business, for Armstrong Cork, for the Natl. Association of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, can we "keep the republic our fathers died to found and save."

Big Labor Day Fetes To Hail CIO's Progress

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.—Steady, major gains by CIO unions throughout the nation will be celebrated in scores of parades, picnics and demonstrations on this Labor Day.

In large cities and small, holiday festivities will be combined with a review of the progress of the last 12 months and surveys of the big organizing jobs that lie ahead.

Largest Labor Day audience will be that of CIO Pres. John L. Lewis, who is scheduled to address the nation over a coast-to-coast hookup of the National Broadcasting Co.'s blue network. His speech, certain to be of timely interest, will be heard from 4 to 4:30 P. M. eastern standard time.

Arrangements have already been made for loudspeaker amplification of his address at most of the CIO celebrations.

Phillip Murray, CIO vice-president, will cross the border into Canada to deliver his Labor Day message. Thousands of Ontario steel workers will converge on the city of Hamilton, where the steel union leader will speak under the auspices of the city's Trade and Labor Council.

BROPHY IN DES MOINES

John Brophy, national CIO director, will travel to Des Moines, Ia., to address the demonstration in that city. Walter Smethurst, executive assistant to Pres. Lewis, will appear in Flint, Michigan. Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, is scheduled to speak at Duluth, Minn.

Brophy's speech will be broadcast over a three-state network in the midwest.

In addition to these representatives of the CIO national headquarters, leading officials of practically all the CIO's affiliates will be heard in various sections of the nation.

Toledo, Ohio, will see a giant CIO parade and picnic. Indianapolis will have its greatest Labor Day celebration in history with 3,000 autos and 50 floats participating in the CIO parade. Washington, D. C.'s Industrial Union Council expects several thousand at its first Labor Day gathering.

A number of CIO groups throughout New York state scheduled special events for the day. Cleveland is expecting a big turnout for its program, and Detroit, scene of recent major gains by the United Automobile Workers, will be in holiday mood.

LOS ANGELES PARADE

Los Angeles CIO unionists will march for the first time on Labor Day, with thousands taking part in a maritime parade at San Pedro, harbor for Los Angeles. San Francisco and Seattle, as well as a number of other West Coast industrial centers, will also participate in holiday events.

In the deep South, Birmingham and Jasper, Ala., CIO councils will join forces for the day, with two ball games and other entertainment planned.

At Warren, Ohio, AFL and CIO locals will combine their memberships for an all-day picnic which is expected to draw 10,000 people to Waddell Park in Niles.

CIO Calls For Greater Democracy

New York, Aug. 26. — While big business spokesmen told the Congress on Education for Democracy that what America needed was not more democracy but less, organized labor through a number of CIO representatives took an opposite and somewhat more American point of view.

They took part in a number of seminars and discussion groups that made up the Congress, arranged by Columbia University.

Labor's opinion of the Congress and of the tasks the nation faces in educating for democracy was expressed by Thomas Kennedy, secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers, who said:

LABOR'S STAKE

"This Congress is a recognition of labor's deep concern for education for democracy, of labor's real stake in the direction of that education, and of the vital part that organized labor can and does play in the maintenance and strengthening of our democratic institutions."

Alabama Unions Rap Tory Law

Birmingham, Ala., Aug. 26. — Alabama's organized labor made plans today for a finish fight against the Hildreth bill, which is aimed at outlawing the closed shop, and at all other anti-labor legislation.

CIO and AFL unions are participating in the campaign, which gained added impetus through formation of the Alabama State Labor Legislation Council, formed by leaders of both labor groups. The Birmingham Typographical Union, the United Mine Workers, the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, railway brotherhoods and other AFL locals are affiliated to the council.

The new group will seek to "promote all those measures calculated to assist the worker in this state," a spokesman said.

ASK CO-OPERATION

Support for labor's fight against the Hildreth bill from the Birmingham News, powerful newspaper here, won praise from Yelverton Cowherd, CIO regional director.

Urging all unions to cooperate in a determined fight against the bill, the Council suggests that each local appoint as large a delegation as possible to attend the committee hearings in Montgomery, and to rally the support of all pro-labor groups in opposition.

Auto Union Sweeps Polls

izers rushed into Detroit by Green and Woll expressed it.

FOLLOWED STRIKE THREAT

Packard's election followed a threat of strike by the UAW-CIO as the management continued its policy of playing the AFL local off against the CIO union. The company had refused to bargain with either group alone, insisting that representatives of both locals be present.

In addition to laying the ghost of AFL claims to substantial membership in the auto industry, the Packard election tore holes in recent newspaper stories which have sought to give the impression that the auto workers have tired of unionism.

ANSWER FOES

The polls gave answers also to Rev. Charles Coughlin and Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith. The anti-union priest from Royal Oak and the rabble-rousing crusader who was trained by Huey Long, both took to the airwaves before the Packard election and counselled the workers against voting for the CIO.

As a result of these two votes and the coming polls at Briggs and Chrysler, the turmoil created in the auto industry by Homer Martin will be completely repaired.

The split in the UAW took place after Martin, repudiating a call for CIO intervention in the unions troubled affairs, illegally suspended a majority of the executive board and started on a mad rule or ruin campaign.

Prosperity, Purchasing Power Linked By Hillman

Washington, Aug. 26.—The main obstacle to America's progress is in our failue to provide enough purchasing power to all the people, Sidney Hillman, vice-president of the CIO and president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, told the nation last night over a coast-to-coast radio network.

Hillman, speaking on the U. S. Labor Dept.'s "America Unlimited" series, was interviewed over the air by John Steelman, head of the Conciliation Service. His talk took the form of answers to questions put to him by Steelman.

"The primary obstacle lies in the failure of our economy to distribute to the American people purchasing power sufficient to enable them to buy the products which our farms and factories are geared to produce.

VAST DEMAND

"There is today among our people a vast unsatisfied demand for food, clothing and shelter. Yet, factories lie idle, farm surpluses pile up and 12,000,000 unemployed tramp the streets in search of jobs because a majority of the people lack the means to purchase even the bare bones of a decent living."

Asked to suggest remedies for this contradictory situation, Pres. Hillman replied:

"Collective bargaining between responsible management and labor organized into strong, independent and responsible unions provides the best guarantee that the income of industry will be fairly apportioned between labor and management, and that the processes of production will continue with the greatest efficiency and the least interruption."

U. S. MUST HELP

In addition to collective bargaining, Hillman pointed out that the federal government must provide direct employment opportunities where private industry has failed.

"I believe that it is and must be the continuing obligation of our national government to provide useful work and decent wages for those whom private industry has been unable to absorb," he said.

HITS TORY CONGRESSMEN

In this connection, he criticized sharply those Congressmen and Senators who voted to cut down WPA and other federal works expenditures at the last session of Congress.

SIDNEY HILLMAN

"Those of our representatives who voted to reduce work project standards, and to deny the President's request for funds for government housing and public works did a distinct dis-service not only to those who have been forced off the relief rolls, but to each and everyone of us, workers, farmers, businessmen and professional people alike, whose welfare depends upon the ability of our people to buy back the goods and services which we have to sell."

Hillman was heard on a national hookup of the Natl. Broadcasting Co. On Sept. 1 Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, will be interviewed on the same program by Marshall Dimock, assistant secretary of labor.

Steel Union Cancels Intl. Nickel Pact; Charges Bad Faith

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 26.—Taking action almost unprecedented in American union history, the Steel Workers Organizing Committee today cancelled its contract with the Intl. Nickel Co. of Huntington, W. Va., asserting the action became necessary because of the "irresponsibility and evasive nature of the company's dealings" with the union.

Chairman Philip Murray of SWOC, in announcing the union's decision, said an immediate complaint of Wagner Act violation would be filed against the corporation.

"Although SWOC has had a contract with Intl. Nickel since 1937, and has demonstrated a majority in the plant through a National Labor Relations Board election, the attitude of the company, as repeatedly shown through hostile actions, is that the contract is binding on the SWOC only, while the company is free to ignore or violate its provisions as suits its convenience," Murray asserted.

PREVENTED STRIKES

"We have repeatedly prevented our men from going on strike because the SWOC does not strike in violation of a contract. This responsibility on our part will end when the contract has been cancelled. We guarantee peaceful relations only where we have contracts."

The SWOC leader added, however, that the pact cancellation is not to be interpreted as a strike call. The union, he said, will resort to the Labor Board "on charges that the company is maintaining a company union and through layoffs and discharges is discriminating against our members."

The company, he continued, "has never shown a responsible attitude" towards collective bargaining. Recalling that the SWOC agreement was gained only after difficult negotiations, Murray said the company then concluded a secret, and more favorable contract with what remained of its company union.

FAITH UNJUSTIFIED

"We prevented a strike at that time only by insisting that our members abide by the contract, and by assuring our members we felt the company would live up to the contract," Murray stated. "We were wrong."

A Labor Board election in March 1938 to determine the majority representative was sabatoged by the company's action in firing "scores" of SWOC members, a move which failed to prevent the CIO affiliate from obtaining a plurality — though it did not receive a majority of the votes.

"Due to the discharge of the men, another strike threatened. Again we kept our men at work, believing that the company fired scores of our men, voting," Murray declared. "In believing that under the grievance machinery of the contract these cases could be settled. Again we were wrong."

WON MAJORITY

A second NLRB election was held last spring, and this time the SWOC received a clear majority, winning the poll 374-273.

"When we asked for sole bargaining rights, to which we were entitled under the law, the company informed us that they would not accept the results of this government-supervised election, but would fight the decision to the Supreme Court," Murray concluded. "The purpose of this legal maneuver, obviously, is to delay and discourage our members in hopes of destroying the union.

"Therefore we are cancelling the contract and will file charges with the Labor Board."

Frame-Up Victims Refused Offers To Frame Bridges

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 26.—Sensational testimony charging the U. S. Immigration Service had approached a brother of Earl King, West Coast labor martyr now serving a frame-up term at San Quentin with a request that he obtain from King an affidavit calling Harry Bridges a "communist" was placed into the record at deportation hearings today.

Mrs. E. G. Ramsay, wife of another of the Modesto frame-up victims testified that she was approached by Stanley Doyle, northwest labor spy chief, with a similar proposal. He failed.

Her husband was sent to San Quentin on a frame-up, she related, and she would do nothing to "frame" anyone else.

The other witness was Garfield A. King of Vancouver, British Columbia, for 25 years a lawyer in that city.

He testified that on February 10, 1938, a Mr. Shearer of the Immigration Service asked him for a conference. At the subsequent meeting, Shearer hinted that if Earl King—a victim of the Modesto frame-up a few years ago—would sign an affidavit against Bridges, Ray Bonham, Immigration official in the northwest, would use his influence to help secure King's freedom.

NOT INTERESTED

The witness said he told Shearer that he was certain his brother would have no desire to be involved in any such proceedings.

Deportation hearings were scheduled to be moved to San Francisco where other charges of inducements to sign affidavits against the West Coast CIO leader will be investigated.

Meanwhile, the Harry Bridges Defense Committee accused two former Pacific Coast governors, William Randolph Hearst and Commander Stephen Chadwick of the American Legion, with being parties to a conspiracy to "accomplish the first objective of Italian Fascism and Nazism—destruction of collective bargaining and a return to the slave market."

LABOR SPY ON STAND

The committee made is charges after Capt. Charles G. Bakcsy, Hungarian labor spy, had testified in the hearing that Pacific Coast shipping interests had hired him to get evidence that Bridges was a Communist.

As Bakcsy's admissions exposed more sinister aspects of the West Coast labor espionage network revealed previously by Legionnaire Harper Knowles, Bridges told the Waterfront Employers Assn. that longshoremen were "ready to prove that your association has collaborated with labor spy, strikebreaking agencies and police agencies on the Pacific Coast to undermine and wreck our unions."

Bakcsy claimed that Larry Doyle, Oregon labor spy boss, had offered him a bribe to sign a false affidavit against Bridges, and linked ex-Governor Martin of Oregon with Doyle in anti-labor activities. Previously Knowles, under defense counsel cross-examination, had admitted that ex-Governor Merriam of California played very closely with industrialists in their efforts to fight the union and "get" Bridges.

'Our Leading Citizen' Leads to No Good, Movie Czars Told

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., Aug. 26—Protests from labor and liberal organizations against Paramount's anti-union movie "Our Leading Citizen," are mounting all over the country, now that Paramount has defied earlier protests and released the film.

Associated Film Audiences here, a group formed to promote progressive flickers and attack reactionary ones, has recomended a boycott to all branches. Film Audiences for Democracy, similar group in New York and other eastern cities, has done the same.

The CIO Council in New York has discussed consumer action by its members, and numbers of CIO bodies and other labor units elsewhere are planning similar steps.

A PHONEY

The movie has been thoroughly denounced by the Hollywood Tribune, progressive weekly here, as "Our Leading Anti-Patriot," and its script analyzed for its anti-labor content. Chief point of the plot is that strikes are always caused by "outside agitators," that all union leaders are bomb-throwers, and that workers who organize and demand better conditions are poor silly misled sheep.

"We cannot emphasize too strongly the need of immediate nation-wide action," Film Audiences for Democracy warns. "This anti-labor movie will mean that more will be made. Film audiences must speak out in no uncertain terms against films that will weaken in any measure any part of our democracy."

Anti-Labor Film Flops in Madison

Madison, Wisc., Aug. 26—"Our Leading Citizen," Paramount's new fink film, was pulled out of a local movie house here after CIO action and a total audience of 45 persons, caused the management to admit the picture "lacked box office appeal."

The Madison Industrial Union Council passed a resolution three days before the picture opened here charging it with "vicious anti-labor bias." A letter to the theatre manager urged cancellation of the booking.

Protest Rubber Price War

Washington, Aug. 26—Officials of the United Rubber Workers today appealed to the Federal government for aid in halting a tire price war which President Sherman Dalrymple predicted "will bring ruin to the smaller tire manufacturers" if allowed to continue.

Price cuts of 25 per cent have been announced for all lines of tires.

"There is absolutely no justification for this cut," Dalrymple said. "The very size of the cut indicates that it is not done for any sound economic reason, but is dictated by the desire of the Big Three to cut the ground out from under the small companies.

LABOR'S WARNING

"We are serving notice here and now that labor will not permit these cuts to be taken out of its hides. We are not going to allow our wage standards to be undermined by cut-throat business methods.

"If the rubber companies will not put their house in order, our government must do it for them."

Fail To Break Milk Strike

New York state cops failed to break the dairy farmers strike in northern milk producing areas. Picture shows the troopers dispersing a farmers' picket line—but the union, backed by CIO support, won a smashing victory.

Colorado Priest Lauds Industrial Unionism

Pueblo, Colo., Aug. 26 — Pueblo steel workers today were warned by Rev. Father Joseph Higgins of St. Patrick's Church against "misleading and vicious propaganda" directed at industrial unions and urged to take an active part in the labor union movement.

Rev. Higgins spoke at a local meeting of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee attended by 250 men and women. In speaking of the advantages of industrial unionism, Rev. Higgins asserted that craft unions are now outmoded and that complete industrial unionization is not far off.

He said the worker is entitled to the following rights: job security, income for "reasonable comfort," collective bargaining, "a share in the profits after just wages and a return to capital have been paid," strike and picket peacefully for just cause, just price for the goods he buys, decent hours and working conditions.

Your WPA Job

CIO Unemployment Director

New Wage Rates

The WPA has just announced a new series of monthly wage rates for all WPA workers in the country. The WPA was forced to establish these wage rates under the law passed by Congress on WPA this last session.

Substantially speaking, the announced rates are better than was expected at the time the law was passed. The law said that the difference in the Northern and Southern rates must not be greater than the difference in the cost of living between various sections of the country, and that the all-over average must be the same as last year. Since the WPA, two years ago, had established extensive differences in the wage rates between the North and South, this meant that it would be necessary to bring down the Northern wage rates in order to bring up the Southern wage rates.

The WPA, however, has succeeded in working out a formula which prevents serious cuts in the Northern rates and still makes a substantial improvement in the Southern rates.

FEWER WORKERS

The general effect of this change is going to be that the WPA will be forced to employ somewhat fewer workers as a whole than they would have been able to employ throughout the country under the old rates. This new wage schedule will raise the average monthly wage payment throughout the country.

The CIO is issuing a letter giving the details on these wage rates. It should be pointed out that this most recent order does not change the requirement that every WPA worker must work 130 hours a month nor does it change the order abolishing the prevailing hourly rate.

It becomes more and more clear due to this most recent wage order and to reports from all over the country about conditions among the WPA workers that more money must be appropriated for WPA as soon as Congress meets in January. The amount appropriated at this last Congress, as the CIO vigorously pointed out, is not enough. Private industry can, by no stretch of the imagination, be expected to employ as many people as have been fired by the WPA since the beginning of the year.

CIO DRIVE UNDER WAY

The CIO is already beginning a fight to establish this necessity in the minds of those who are responsible for legislation.

Already reports are pouring in from everywhere indicating that the Congressmen who voted to slash WPA are now coming face to face with the facts. They are beginning to realize that when they were here in Washington they got the wrong impression as to the need throughout the country. They are beginning to realize that their action is the cause of extensive human suffering and that they must move as rapidly as possible to correct the mistakes that were made at the last Congress.

Pact Lifts Pay 10c An Hour

Chicago, Ill., Aug. 26—A second contract negotiated by the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing and Allied Workers of America with the Serviciced Products Corporation of Chicago has resulted in subtantial improvements for the workers.

Wages have been increased from five to ten cents an hour under the new agreement. The seniority regulations are vastly improved and vacations established.

"Working conditions are 1,000% better under the union," say members of the UCAPAWA Local.

Recent National Poll Showed WPA Policy Endorsed

Concerning the work done by the WPA, everybody has his own opinion. Until recently, there was no official gauge. Each person has had to judge the program only by the small part he himself has seen or heard about.

There is only one way to get a true perspective of a program of this size and character; through a poll of the opinions of those closest to the work—the officials who planned the work, and the people using the improvements WPA workers have created or the services their labor provided.

Until recently nobody—not even Mr. Gallup—thought to poll these groups on a nation-wide scale. Such a poll was made a few months ago.

This first national appraisal of the work program was conducted by ten national organizations interested in social and civic work—representative bodies like the American Engineering Council, the American Association of Planning Officials, the American Municipal Association, and the United States Conference of Mayors.

But as to the wisdom of operating a work program rather than a dole, there is no divergence of opinion. The forty-two state committees who compiled state-wide reports based on the local surveys were unanimously affirmative on this point.

Typical of the opinions expressed are those from Maryland and Wyoming. Maryland's state committee reports: "Without exception, every community is in favor of work relief in preference to the dole for those who are employable."

From Wyoming comes the word that "There is unanimity of opinion that work relief is more American and more constructive to men and communities than a dole."

In a word, this community-by-community appraisal indicates that the people of America endorse not only the principles of work relief but the practical results of the WPA program to date.

What About Work?

Los Angeles jobless took the statements of Tory business leaders seriously — with WPA rolls slashed, they formed a picket line around the Sunshine City's Chamber of Commerce building. "Where are those jobs in private industry?" they asked the industrialists who have promised Utopia from decreased government expenditures.

Big Bakery Signs Contract

NEWARK, N. J., Aug. 26—A closed shop contract has been signed with the Dugan Baking Co., W. J. Carney, CIO regional director, announced this week.

The agreement, covering 400 employes; provides for two weeks paid vacations, wage increases and check-off of union dues. It was negotiated by Henry Miller, representative of the United Bakery Service Employes, CIO, Local 282.

CIO Wins Cleveland Board Poll

Cleveland, Ohio, Aug. 29 — An outstanding victory was won by Local 702 of the United Electrical Radio & Machine Workers in an election at the Edgewater plant of the National Carbon Co., subsidiary of the giant Union Carbon & Carbide Corp.

The election, the largest ever held by the Labor Board in Cleveland, was won by the CIO union by a vote of 683 to 251 for a company union, with 195 voting for no union representation. It was the first poll ever held in a plant of the National Carbide Co.

President Joseph Vejlupek of Local 702, said that the union would enter into negotiations for a contract as soon as official certification is received from the National Labor Relations Board.

Union Official Named To Board

Garfield, N. J., Aug. 26—Simon Saller, CIO field representative, was elected today to the Assistance Relief Board of Garfield. He is the first labor representative to be elected to that group.

Wisconsin AFL Rebuffs Padway

Madison, Wis., Aug. 26 — The AFL's drive against the New Deal sputtered and stalled here today, as Wisconsin AFL members repudiated a speech by AFL General Counsel Joseph Padway, himself a native of Wisconsin.

Appearing before the state federation of labor convention last week, Padway accused the administration of "fostering more attacks on labor than the reactionary administrations of Coolidge, Harding and Hoover."

State federation officials responded by denouncing the Republicans' anti-labor policies, with which they have had no opportunity to become familiar under the administrations of Gov. Julius Heil, GOP leader in this state.

Gordon Hey, president of the progressive Waukesha Trades & Labor Council, told delegates that he had great difficulty in trying to explain Padway's accusations.

"I say that no one here can offer a single word of justification or defense of Padway's statements," he declared.

A Tale Of 3 Union Men:

Brother Bungle Has A Dream

(This is the second of a series of three stories. The final one will appear in an early issue.)

Bud Bungle joined Local 666 and received a raise in pay. With more money in his pocket than he ever had on a Friday afternoon he went downtown and bought himself a suit. It was a gray suit; he bought it because his wife liked gray suits.

That night Brother Bungle had a dream. In his dream appeared a clothing worker, a member of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America.

He said, "Bud, you bought a new suit today. I didn't make that suit. The suits I make may not be any better; they're certainly no worse, and they don't cost any more. The boss made a lot of money on your suit, but not the worker. I'm a union worker, just like you. By buying that suit you didn't help the union workers. You didn't help yourself, either."

Then the union clothing worker disappeared and another clothing worker stood before Bud. This clothing worker looked weak and hungry.

He said, "Bud, I made that suit. For making that suit and others like it I didn't get paid enough to feed my family. If you hadn't bought that suit maybe my boss would have to sign a contract with the union. Here he is now; I'll have to go."

When the worker left the sweatshop boss came to Bud. "Bungle," he said, "I like you. You may belong to a union but you don't act like a union man. I made a lot of money on the suit you bought today. Thanks."

No sooner did the sweatshop boss disappear than a picket line formed. It was a tremendous picket line with a quarter of a million workers marching in successive lines. They were all members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and from the banners they were carrying Bud could see that this great army included workers who made everything from overcoats to underwear.

Suddenly, in his dream, Bud saw himself walk through the picket line. He shuddered at the thought that he could be doing such a thing. But he kept on until he heard a piercing shout from the workers in the picket line.

Bud turned around and saw the clothing workers staring at him. Their faces showed anger. Above them they lifted a long banner. It read, "BUY AMALGAMATED UNION LABEL CLOTHES."

With that Brother Bungle woke up. He jumped out of bed and pulled his new suit off the hanger. He looked in the inside pocket. No, there was no union label. Now he understood. It was his union conscience that plagued him.

Brother Bungle was a good union man, even though he made mistakes. The next day, as soon as the doors of the store were opened, Bungle was exchanging his suit for another which bore an Amalgamated label.

Green Forces Out Official Who Hit Amendments

Omaha, Neb., Aug. 26 — AFL President William Green has forced Mace Brown to resign from the presidency of the Omaha Central Trades & Labor Council because he testified against amending the Wagner Act at hearings before the Senate labor subcommittee.

Brown's testimony was given after the Omaha Council had voted unanimously to oppose all amendments to the Act. In handing in his resignation Brown said, "I am just a poor man who can't afford to antagonize the powerful president of the AFL."

Edward E. Spencer, who succeeded Brown as president of the Council, declared: "We'll carry on as nearly as possible in Brown's footsteps until this trouble is straightened out."

Gotham Trolleymen Demand Security; Union Helps Fight

NEW YORK, Aug. 26.—Job security of all workers affected by a plan now under consideration for motorizing all existing trolley lines in Manhattan and the Bronx must be protected, the Transport Workers Union, CIO, warned this week. Some 3,000 workers are employed by the trolley lines concerned.

"Whatever agreement is finally consummated between the Third Avenue Railways System and the City of New York, it must provide for the transfer of present employes, both in the transportation and mechanical divisions, to the motorized system," declared Austin Hogan, president of the TWU's New York local, which has 50,000 members.

"The men now employed as trolley operators and the mechanics in the Third Avenue repair and construction shops have put in the best years of their lives in the service of the company and the people," Hogan said.

"They guard their job security zealously and the report of motorization makes them fearful of their jobs, and justly so.

"The callousnes with which veteran employes of the Sixth Avenue elevated were treated when that structure was demolished less than a year ago and the suffering from loss of jobs which followed motorization of the New York Railways System in 1935, is still fresh in the mind of every transit worker in this city.

Weigh Libel Suits Against Red-Baiters

Denver, Colo., Aug. 26—Authorization to press libel suits against Liberty Magazine and the Miami Okla., Daily News Record for slanderous statements in a series of red-baiting articles was voted by the recent convention of the Intl. Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

The articles, written by an anonymous "Comrade X" for Liberty and later reprinted in the local paper, claimed that communists instigated the strike of Tri-State zinc workers in 1935 for the sole purpose of helping to defeat presidential aspirations of Gov. Alf Landon. Leaders

'Silk Hat Farmers' Hit by CIO

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 26—The Portland CIO Industrial Union Council has asked the LaFollette Civil Liberties Committee to extend its investigation of the vigilante Associated Farmers to Oregon.

In a resolution passed at a recent meeting, the Council pledged the Committee its continued and enthusiastic support if they refuse to appease the pro-fascist elements in this country by pulling their punches in their future investigations of violations of civil liberties."

Referring to reports circulated to the effect "the members of this committee plan to soft pedal their investigation because of fear of their political futures," the resolution declared:

"This fear is unnecessary and unrealistic, as shown in state elections where the program of the Associated Farmers' was overwhelmingly defeated."

A report submitted to the Council by Lee Coe, editor of the Labor Newdealer of Portland, said that he had forwarded to the LaFollette committee evidence showing how the silk-hat "farmers" had fooled Oregon voters into adopting the anti-union law.

He said that the evidence also showed that the Associated Farmers here were financed almost entirely by Oregon big business to crush labor.

Frame-Up Attempt Against Unionists Flops In Montreal

MONTREAL, Que., Aug. 26.—Efforts of Montreal police to convict C. S. Jackson, international vice-president of the CIO United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, and I. Burman, local field organizer, failed when Recorder M. A. Leblanc dismissed charges of "loitering" laid against them.

The two union officials were arrested while engaged in conversation with employes of the RCA Victor Company in front of the firm's plant.

"This is an obvious attempt on the part of the Duplessis government to intimidate members and officers of CIO unions in the style of Mayor Hague of Jersey City," Jackson protested. "The quashing of this charge must be considered a victory for the right of organization in this province."

USE 'PADLOCK' LAW

Under Quebec's padlock law unions have been prosecuted and obstructed for distributing literature to employes in the plants. Homes of union officers have been raided and attempts made to disrupt unionism.

Premier Maurice Duplessis is the twin of the Hepburn-Duplessis axis which is trying to block unionism in Quebec and Ontario. Both are notorious for their hatred of industrial unions.

The UERMWA has a local in the RCA plant here. The arrests were termed a part of a campaign of intimidation being carried on by the company in a move to prevent the union from completing 100% organization in the plant.

When the union officers were being taken away from the plant entrance the 400 or 500 employes who gathered there acorded them an ovation and booed the police.

Clothing Union Gives Stand in Dispute

NEW YORK, Aug. 26. — Efforts of the independent Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers Union to pressure the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, CIO, into relinquishing jurisdiction over men's bathrobe shops will result in failure, the ACW declared today in an editorial appearing in its official monthly organ, Advance.

The ACW, the editorial said, "has no quarrel with the ILGWU in the men's bathrobe industry. The Amalgamated has the membership. It has the collective agreements. It has the jurisdiction. It is enforcing strictly the terms of the agreements without interruption of work."

The ILGWU has placed pickets around the CIO union's headquarters, and has demanded that the bath-robe workers be turned over to it. The garment workers union has jurisdiction in the women's clothing union, the ACW over producers of men's clothing.

"The Amalgamated is in the men's bathrobe industry because it properly belongs there," the editorial said. "The bathrobe shops, which Children's Dress Local 91 ILGWU presumes to claim for its own, make men's shirts during the early part of the year, augmented by men's polo shirts and later by men's bathrobes. It will be seen at once that all these articles of attire properly belong within the sphere of men's clothing."

To Organize Tuna Fleet

San Diego, Calif., Aug 26 — Plans for organizing the tuna fleet operating out of this port were drawn up by a meeting of the Southern California Council of the Maritime Federation meeting here.

The meeting was attended by about 25 delegates from CIO unions, including the United Fishermen, American Communications Assn., Cannery, Agricultural and Packing Workers, the Longshoremen and Warehousemen, and officers of the San Diego and state Industrial Union Councils.

Furniture Union Signs 21 Contracts

New York, Aug. 26. — Contracts covering 400 workers employed by 21 independent bedding manufacturers have been renewed. Local 140, United Furniture Workers, announced this week. Wage increases and other benefits were included in the agreements.

Som 400 other workers employed by 25 additional independent firms are also expected to win improvements in a settlement now being asked by the employers. The union is now negotiating with the Bedding Manufacturers Association, a group made up of 20 firms employing about 600 workers. It is asking for a flat 15 per cent pay increase.

MUSTER HELPS

Morris Muster, international president of the UFW has been aiding the local negotiators who include Manager Alex Sirota, Secretary-Treasurer Joseph Magliacano and Organizer Sol Kitain.

A strike against four independent employers employing 200 workers, who refused to negotiate has been declared by the union. The largest of the 21 firms which settled, is the Greenpoint Metallic Bed Co., which signed up after a half-day work stoppage. The company employs 175 workers.

Wage increases of more than $8,000 a year were won in the pact signed by Greenpoint. A clause in the contract forbids the firm from moving out of town.

CIO LEADERS HAIL GAINS IN LABOR DAY MESSAGES

Highlights Of Labor's Big Year

The twelve-month period between Labor Day, 1938, and Labor Day, 1939, witnessed mammoth CIO organizing gains, sterling defense of labor's basic rights, and extension of union strength through improved agreements.

Shown here are three high spots from labor's year:

UMW PACT

AT TOP: Pres. John L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers signs the history-making bituminous coal contract, which served final warning on Tory-minded industrialists that the CIO and its affiliated unions are here to stay. The mine contract's union shop provision, later written into the anthracite contract, ended the possibility of AFL raids on the UMW, and paved the way for further union progress.

CIO CONVENTION

GM AGREEMENT

AT BOTTOM: One result of the UMW agreement was the smashing strike victory won by the United Automobile Workers at General Motors. Tool and die makers, engineering and maintenance workers, are shown casting their votes to accept the agreement, which gave the CIO-UAW sole bargaining rights in 42 GM plants, paved the way for major Labor Board election victories at Packard and Motor Products in weeks following.

On this Labor Day, the nation's millions of workers look with constantly increasing faith to the CIO for leadership in protecting their interests.

Furniture Local Quits AFL for CIO

Philadelphia, Aug. 30 — Bedding Local 65, a union with some 800 members, has voted to leave the AFL and reaffiliate with the United Furniture Workers, CIO.

One of the original locals which helped form the UFW at a national conference held in Washington in 1937, the union later was pressured into going back on its agreement to join the CIO.

The recent vote to reaffiliate was unanimous in all departments of the local and was taken after three membership meetings held this month, two of which were addressed by Morris Muster, UFW president, and George Bucher of the general executive board.

Promise Continued Progress

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30—CIO leaders, encouraged by recent gains of American workers under the banner of industrial unionism during the past 12 months, looked forward in Labor Day messages released today, to continued progress and greater prosperity for the nation's working population.

Pres. John L. Lewis, pointing out that the "CIO is moving forward," declared that the "need for security, for equal opportunity, for more even distribution of the products of our vast industry join the great majority of our people in one common cause.

Vice-Pres. Philip Murray, in his annual message, noted that the "CIO has become the united, progressive labor force in this nation."

WAR DANGER

Vice-Pres. Sidney Hillman noted that American labor is not free of anxiety on the "momentous issue of war and peace."

"The age-old battle for democracy must be won. American labor can do its share in the efforts of staving off the tragedy which at this moment is imminent but not unavoidable."

"The CIO has fought off as vicious a series of attacks as any yet launched against the welfare of the American people, both by selfish employers trying to destroy labor's previous gains and by their agents in Congress and state governments," said Sec. James B. Carey.

"Increased prestige" and "organizational strength" were gained by the nation's industrial union movement during the last 12 months, Director John Brophy declared.

Win Strike In Northwest

Holden, Wash., Aug. 30 — By a 5-1 vote, members of Local 379, CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers agreed to a victory settlement of their week - old strike against the Howe-Sound Mining Co.

Increases amounting to 50 cents a day on the base rate were won for all production workers, while poorly-paid employes in the cook house will receive an additional 25 cents increase.

Union officials said the "contract is a model agreement in many respects."

Criticize Labor Board For Pandering To AFL In Recent Decisions

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30.—The National Board was charged today with attempting "to placate the AFL at the expense of the interests of CIO unions and its members and at the risk of encouraging industrial chaos in industry."

The criticism was contained in the CIO Legal Bulletin, distributed to CIO counsel throughout the country.

"The CIO and its affiliated organizations for some time have been viewing with increasing alarm the Labor Board decisions against the CIO wherever the issue has arisen between the AFL and the CIO in regard to the appropriate bargaining unit," the statement declared.

"In other words, wherever AFL organizations have insisted upon craft units, the Labor Board has only too willingly granted such requests in the face of opposition of CIO industrial unions.

"The AFL position has been accepted by the Labor Board in cases where CIO industrial unions have successfully organized workers on an industrial basis."

CITE THREE CASES

Three recent NLRB decisions were cited by the CIO legal department to indicate the new trend — the Sloss Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. case, the American Can Co. case and the Chrysler Motor Co. case.

This "extremely serious problem" of permitting industrial unionism to be threatened by craft unit decisions deserves consideration by all CIO affiliates, the statement said.

UAW ANGERED

Further criticism of recent Board decisions came from Pres. R. J. Thomas of the United Automobile Workers, as a result of the NLRB's refusal to consider the Briggs and Chrysler Corp. as collective bargaining units, but to split the units on a plant-wide basis.

Describing the decision as "monstrous," and running counter "to both reason and precedent," Thomas said "the NLRB has struck at the root of collective bargaining, not only in the auto industry but in every industry over which it has jurisdiction in labor disputes."

Despite the adverse decision, Thomas continued, "we shall sweep every one of the seven Briggs plant units in the Sept. 14 election and every one of the 14 Chrysler plants in the election to follow. After our victory we shall consider petitioning the Board to certify the UAW-CIO as the sole bargaining agent with the employer as a unit."

Fountain Pen Plant Hit By Strike

Newark, N. J., Aug. 30 — A strike by the United Rubber Workers today had tied up the plant of the Waterman Fountain Pen Co. here, where union officials charged the management with undertaking a vicious anti-labor campaign.

In many cases, the local said, workers with 20 or more years of service had been laid off out of turn, and officers and active union members have been discriminated against in a number of ways.

Selfishness Of Industry Scored in Talk

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1.—Shortsightedness and selfishness by industrial leaders, plus propaganda efforts to create an artificial split between workers and farmers, were described by Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, as obstacles in the way of American progress in a coast-to-coast radio talk here last night.

Pressman spoke on the Labor Dept. program "America Unlimited," following a talk last week by Sidney Hillman, vice-president of the CIO and president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

"The only things that can keep us from the attainment of an 'America Unlimited' are the shortsightedness and selfishness of industry," Pressman said. If the various groups in our country can adjust their own interests to the public interest, we can go ahead to a greater prosperity than three-quarters of the American people know now, or ever have known."

COOPERATION

Propaganda of these selfish interests, Pressman pointed out, tries to keep workers and farmers apart, "instead of encouraging them to mutual cooperation and goodwill, which alone can settle the heavy problems of the present economic crisis. Unity between industrial workers and farmers is essential if we are to progress."

Pressman cited U. S. Government figures to show that farmers' prosperity went together with workers' prosperity, pointing out that the incomes of both suffered equally in hard times and rose equally in good.

"The farmer faces two combines—the monopoly power of the food processors and distributors, who can force him to take low prices for his products, and the big industries, who can force him to pay high prices for the goods he needs. Only in combination with labor can these holds be broken. No single group can stand up against trusts and combines. Organized labor, which seeks higher wages for work, lower prices for goods and increased industrial output is working for the farmer and consumer as well as its own members."

Honor Founder of Labor Day

Relatives of Peter J. McGuire, "the father of Labor Day," pay homage at his tomb in Arlington Cemetery, near Camden, N. J. McGuire, a union man all his life, long campaigned for the setting aside of a special day in tribute to the nation's workers.

West'house Poll Won By CIO Union

Lima, Ohio, Aug. 30 — Defeated by a company union two years ago, Local 724, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, staged a triumphant comeback on August 17, when it won a poll held among employes of the Westinghouse plant here by a vote of 574 to 510 for the Westinghouse Employes Association.

Woodworkers File First Case Under Canada's 'Wagner Ac

VANCOUVER, B. C., Aug. 30.—The International Woodworkers of America, CIO, has the distinction of being the first union in Canada to take action against an employer under the Dominion's newly-passed Canadian "Wagner Act". The IWA is charging the British Columbia Plywoods Ltd., with "intimidation and threat of loss of employment".

The charges were laid by Nigel Morgan, vice-president of the IWA district council, and John Stanton, union attorney, under section 502 A of the criminal code. The law, which went into effect August 1, guarantees employes the right of associating in unions. It provides a penalty of $1,000 on conviction.

Alleged offenses were committed three days after the act became law.

Events which led to the court action was the replacement of 51 old employes by youths at lower pay. The remaining employes circulated a petition demanding that the company's cooperative committee of employes seek reinstatement of the men.

When the committee refused to take action the employes demanded its resignation. In reply the company threatened to close the mill for two months and the management began intimidating employes to endorse the committee.

The employes met and decided to affiliate with the IWA. Plans are being made to have International President Harold Pritchett install the local at a meeting at the end of this month.

Labor Songs On Records

New York, Aug. 30. — Labor songs are available now on victrola records that can be played in the home and at meetings. Put out by the Theatre Arts Committee of New York, they include "Abraham Lincoln," with "Joe Hill" on the other side, and "Swing TAC" and a hot little number about a picket line on the reverse.

Both records can be obtained from the Theatre Arts Committee, 132 West 43rd St., New York, N. Y. Price, 75 cents each.

Charge Cops Help Ford In St. Louis

St. Louis, Aug. 30 — Charges of collusion between local police and the Ford Motor Co. during the 1937 United Automobile Workers strike here were renewed in an open letter from Delmond Garst, UAW regional director.

According to Garst, who renewed the charges in an open letter to the St. Louis Police Commissioner, cops on strikebreaking duty at the plant were fed in nearby restaurants at Ford's expense. These charges were virtuously denied by Commissioner Lambert at the time, but recent court testimony by a restaurant owner named Gesso reopened them.

"Gesso testified," Garst wrote, "that the bills for meals eaten by these policemen on strike duty at the Ford plant were paid for by the Ford Co.

"I am calling the attention of your board to the testimony of Gesso so that if you care to do so, you can reopen your investigation of the charges outlined in my previous letter. I should appreciate your informing me of the results of such investigation."

Half-Million U. S. Workers Suffer From Silicosis

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30. — A half million American workers are exposed to the danger of contracting silicosis, says a pamphlet recently issued by U. S. Dept. of Labor.

"Although the industrial disease, silicosis, cannot be cured, it can be prevented by engineering means and proper operating methods", states the foreword to the pamphlet which is called, "Silicosis Prevention". It deals only with dust control in foundries.

The silica hazard exists in all industries, however, "wherever silica-bearing material is worked or handled in a manner that produces dust". In foundries, sand blasting is the worst hazard.

DESCRIBE PRECAUTIONS

Hoods, suction pipes, dust arrestors and other devices for eliminating dust are described in the pamphlet, as well as general precautionary measures.

Workers employed on jobs where silica dust is present will find much valuable information in the booklet. Unions whose members are employed in foundries will also find it worth while to get a copy of the pamphlet, for although it is written to appeal mostly to employers, it will be of help in negotiating demands for improved working conditions.

Copies of the pamphlet may be obtained by writing to the Bureau of Labor Standards, U.S. Dept. of Labor, Washington, D.C.

Plan Great Labor Day Celebrations

CIO Leaders See Big Gains Ahead During Next Year

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30. — Leaders of the CIO cast an optimistic eye over the labor horizon in their annual Labor Day messages released today.

All praised the nation's workers for standing firm against employer attacks during the past year, and predicted that the CIO would be responsible for great new gains during the next 12 months.

All agreed, too, that in the nation's organized labor movement lies the defense of democracy against those forces which would supplant it with reactionary dictatorships.

Pres. John L. Lewis, whose message is printed at the bottom of this page, keynoted the thoughts of American workers with this declaration:

"The program of the CIO is a challenge to men and women of good will. It offers to them the hand of progressive labor ready to join in solving the nation's problems, ready to join in the defense of democracy."

Excerpts from the statements of other CIO officials follow:

Will Continue on Road To Success — Murray

"Labor Day this year finds millions of American workers, who never before belonged to a trade union, now active members of large, powerful labor organizations. They are trade union members now simply because the Congress of Industrial Organizations offered them the opportunity, and they were quick to take advantage of that opportunity.

'FUTURE LOOKS BRIGHT'

". . . The future looks bright for the scores of other national and local industrial unions affiliated with the CIO. Labor Day this year, however, finds the workers of America facing a wide attack by anti-labor forces on their civil rights and on their political mouthpieces are trying to break down the gains labor has won by organization.

"The CIO, representing over 4,000,000 organized working men and women, has held back the anti-labor drive. Wage cuts have been prevented, job conditions maintained. This has become possible only because labor today has a strong, united organization to speak for it.

"What are the objectives of the CIO between now and next Labor Day? They are the same as they have always been. Through the CIO, American working men and women will maintain and extend the gains they have already won.

"They will organize the unorganized. They will win more decent living and working conditions. They will press for social legislation to benefit the people who make the wealth of this country. They will demand decent housing and a national health program, security for old age and sickness and unemployment, the right to work at living wages.

"They will protect the right to organize and bargain collectively, and extend it where it is not already enjoyed. They will

PHILIP MURRAY

Hundreds of Meetings Scheduled; Lewis To Broadcast

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30.—Final plans were being rushed today for great Labor Day celebrations to mark CIO gains during the past 12 months.

Leaders of CIO unions looked forward to busy programs for the day. Pres. Lewis speaks over NBC's blue network at 4 p.m. Monday. Vice-Pres. Philip Murray addresses Canadian steel workers in Hamilton, Ontario, at what is expected to be one of the Dominion's great labor demonstrations.

John Brophy, CIO, director, will be in Des Moines, Ia., where his speech will be broadcast on a three-state network. Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, will appear at Duluth, Minn., while Walter Smethurst, executive assistant to Pres. Lewis, is scheduled to address a big Flint, Mich., mass meeting.

Three national CIO figures will be present at the combined CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League picnic near Cleveland and Akron — Sec. James Carey, Pres. R. J. Thomas of the United Automobile Workers, and Pres. Sherman Dabymple of the United Rubber Workers.

Thomas will do double duty, for his plans call for attendance at Detroit's big parade and celebration. Pres. Lewis' speech will be broadcast through loudspeakers set up in Cadillac Square, in the heart of the motor city.

Fort Wayne, Ind., plans an all-day picnic, with entertainment, dancing and Pres. Lewis' speech as features.

STEEL TOWNS

Big labor demonstrations will mark the holiday in scores of steel towns where previous to CIO organizing drives, unionism was almost unkonwn.

At McKeesport, Pa., typical of the steel towns, coal miners, utility workers and bakers will join with the Steel Workers Organizing Committee to celebrate the day, and other unionists from surrounding communities will help swell the crowds, expected to number around 30,000.

"Since the signing of the Big Steel-SWOC agreement," a union official said, "Labor Day has become a real holiday for the tens of thousands of steel workers."

Bethlehem Drive Spurts; 48 Leaders Affiliate With CIO

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 30.—Organizing campaigns at Bethlehem Steel Corp. plants scattered throughout the nation spurted ahead today, following announcement that 48 employe representatives from nine mills have affiliated with the CIO Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

Attending an SWOC conference here, the men formulated a program to push the union drive into all Bethlehem mills, with the object of securing a signed contract which will provide an increase in wages to the $5-a-day minimum and proportionate increases for higher-paid employes.

FROM MANY PLANTS

The conference followed National Labor Relations Board action in ordering dis-established the long-functioning Employe Representation Plans set up by Bethlehem and carefully nurtured as a company-dominated rival to SWOC. The men who attended the two-day sessions with SWOC Chairman Philip Murray came from plants at Lackawanna, N. Y., Sparrows Point, Md., Bethlehem, Johnstown, Rankin, Leetsdale, Steelton, Lebanon and Pottstown, Pa.

All of these mills, as well as others located on the Pacific Coast, were affected by the NLRB decision. Most of the employe

'Little Six' Packers Sign New Pacts

Chicago, Sept. 2 — Renewal of contracts between the CIO Packinghouse Workers and the "Little Six" packers here showed the way for similar agreements by Armour and Co., currently negotiating with the CIO union, according to an announcement from PWOC headquarters.

Herb March, district PWOC director, commented; "One large employer of packinghouse workers, that is, Armour and Co., seems a little slow to learn. We are confident, however, that as time goes on Armour will learn the American way of negotiating disputes and give up its Nazi tactic of suppression and coercion."

CIO Program Aids Security, Democracy, Lewis Declares In Labor Day Message

Following is the Labor Day Message of President John L. Lewis of the Congress of Industrial Organizations:

"With the passing of each year the significance of Labor Day grows greater. Each year it becomes clearer, for this nation and for other nations, that organized labor is the most important bulwark of democracy. Organized labor's program and aspirations embody the faith that the people in a democracy such as ours can gain security and well-being without resort to dictatorship.

"When labor seeks through collective bargaining to raise wages, shorten hours and to better working conditions, it strengthens at the roots the whole orderly democratic process. By this procedure there is established, plant by plant and company by company, throughout the nation's economic life, a practice of peaceful, honest and democratic settlement of differences between men.

"The day is growing closer when the hopes not only of wage earners but of all progressive men and women everywhere center more and more in the forward-looking labor movement as exemplified by the CIO. There is a growing realization that the CIO by its very nature seeks only the welfare of the people as a whole; that laboring people, professional people, farmers have broad common interests that transcend any differences. The need for security, for equal opportunity, for more even distribution of the products of our vast industry join the great majority of our people in one common cause.

John L. Lewis

"The CIO is moving forward. The inherent rightness of its structure and of its program has carried the CIO through unprecedented attacks. It has weathered a terrific depression, maintaining as never before the wage rates of American workers.

"It has embraced the cause of unemployed workers, giving them leadership and challenging the nation to solve their problems.

"The CIO is moving into new fields, offering to more and more workers in the nation's industries the benefits of industrial unionism.

"The program of the CIO is a challenge to men and women of good will. It offers to them the hand of progressive labor ready to join in the solving of the nation's problems, ready to join in the defense of democracy."

Progressive Labor Advances

Reviewing the record of the past year on this Labor Day, the CIO finds solid grounds for confidence.

It was only last November that the first constitutional convention was held, establishing the CIO on a permanent basis.

Since that time, an unholy alliance of AFL leaders, anti-union manufacturers and tory politicians has spared no effort in an attempt to destroy the new labor movement.

Driven desperate by the growing success of the CIO, the AFL leaders opened venomous attacks on every one of the CIO unions. They chartered every kind of dual and company outfit, and every kind of splinter and breakaway movement they could create, for no other purpose than to pirateer.

These union-busting attempts were actively assisted by anti-union employers, whose virtual agents the AFL leaders became. Out of this collusion was spawned a new type of company unionism bearing the AFL label.

Finally, the tory politicians joined the Green-NAM axis, and at the last session of Congress an aggressive joint legislative drive was launched to destroy the CIO by distorting and crippling the Wagner Act.

Millions of American workers will rejoice this Labor Day that every one of these attacks on progressive unionism have been beaten off by the CIO.

Not only have shady splinter outfits of the AFL been soundly squelched by the workers each time they attempted to disrupt the solid ranks of CIO unionism, but in the process the CIO has been able to register some of its most notable advances.

The great victory of the United Mine Workers in establishing the union shop throughout the coal industry is a case in point. Besides putting the kibosh on AFL dual unionism, this victory placed the UMW in the strongest position in history.

Similarly the attempt of the AFL to disrupt the United Automobile Workers Union of the CIO has proved a most pitiful failure. The CIO union has increased its strength in a series of successful strikes, and now it is burying the remains of the Martin clique in an avalanche of votes at every Labor Board election.

The CIO has done much more than weather the storm of attacks launched against it in the past year. Every one of its unions has an imposing list of advances to report, in new contracts and elections won, in old contracts renewed and improved, and in many improvements in conditions.

In the previously unorganized meat packing industry, the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee has established itself as the chosen union of the great majority of the workers, and is now on the point of winning collective bargaining with the Big Four packers.

Space will not permit the listing of the achievements of the scores of other CIO unions in the past year. But any survey will reveal that they have proved again and again their stability and permanence and their ability to advance.

While the CIO is thus advancing, the AFL leaders are reaping some of the fruits of their reactionary policies.

Labor Board election results in the past four months show that from 50% to 64% more workers have voted for the CIO than for the AFL.

Increasing disintegration within the AFL is shown by the widespread revolt against the leaders' plot to destroy the Wagner Act, and by the growing number of internal disputes which the executive council is unable to solve.

The refusal of the Typographical Union to pay the anti-CIO assessment, the resistance of the Actors to dictatorship and corruption, and the new courage which the healthier elements in the AFL show in asserting their rights, indicate that major breakaways are in prospect.

The prospect of the newly launched United Construction Workers Organizing Committee of the CIO, at the same time, has added to the growing confusion and dismay in the camp of the AFL leaders.

On this Labor Day that progressive unionism is on the march and all the forces of reaction cannot prevail against it.

Bearing Fruit

Looking Ahead

By LEN DE CAUX

AFL Headaches

WILLIAM GREEN and his associates in the AFL executive council have had reason to complain of many "headaches" of late.

The refusal of the International Typographical Union to pay the anti-CIO assessment, even under threat of suspension from the AFL, is one of them.

The revolt of the actors' unions against corruption and dictatorship in the theatrical labor world, is another.

But there are also a dozen other less publicized internal situations which create an increasing demand for aspirins whenever the council meets.

The widespread rebellion throughout the AFL against amendment of the Wagner act has revealed the weakening grip of the Federation's national leadership.

The council is showing less and less capacity to suppress or to solve the many disputes which arise, as the more healthy and progressive elements assert their rights and resist the council's reactionary policies.

The Advancing CIO

But the biggest headache of all for the AFL leadership is the fact that, while the Federation disintegrates and is torn with internal dissension, the CIO has conclusively established its strength and stability and is making many sweeping advances.

Ever since the epoch-making victory of the United Mine Workers in winning the union shop throughout the coal industry, the tide has turned emphatically in favor of the CIO and against the AFL.

Labor Board election results in recent months have shown the CIO running far ahead of the AFL.

At the same time, every attempt of the AFL leaders to disrupt and destroy the CIO unions has failed miserably.

The automobile workers, for instance, with the huge majorities they are giving to the CIO in election after election, are fast making Homer Martin and his little AFL clique no more than a malodorous memory.

Meanwhile, in the meat packing and many other previously unorganized industries, the CIO advances from victory to victory in establishing collective bargaining.

And now, unkindest cut of all for the AFL leaders, the progress of the lusty young CIO construction workers' organization is cutting the ground from under their feet in the one remaining industry in which they imagined they had unchallenged control.

The Power of Inertia

When the CIO was first formed, far-sighted labor men realized that the days of the Old Men of the Sea who had ridden so long on labor's back were numbered.

They did not know how long the process would take. But they did know that eventually the newer and more vigorous labor movement would put an end to the misrule of the Old Men of the AFL executive council.

That the AFL leaders have maintained some following as long as they have, despite the constant advances of the CIO, is due to several factors:

(1) When they found labor support slipping from under them, the AFL leaders offered themselves to the employers to act as their agents in combatting the CIO.

As a result, many anti-union companies made a gift of their employes to the AFL, to forestall CIO organization. And the AFL won the support of all the forces of reaction in press and politics.

(2) CIO principles and methods of organization were imitated by a number of AFL unions which, proclaiming their friendliness for the CIO, set out to profit from the wave of unionism started by the CIO.

(3) What is known in physics as the vis inertiae, the power of inertia, has aided in preserving the shell of the AFL structure and leadership although this shell has become little more than a hindrance and obstruction to the growing labor movement.

Disintegration Sets In

But now it is becoming increasingly clear that none of such factors can continue indefinitely to prevent the AFL from disintegrating before the advancing CIO.

In the first place, the history of company unionism shows that it tends to give workers a taste for real unionism rather than to forestall it. And this is also true of the type of company unionism which the AFL has attempted to foster in recent years.

Secondly, the newly organized workers in AFL unions which have claimed to be friendly or just as good as the CIO, are elements which find themselves in much closer sympathy with the CIO than with the reactionary leaders and policies of the AFL. They do not enjoy seeing their per capita used to fight the progressive unionism of the CIO.

And finally, as the recent internal disputes indicate, all elements in the AFL which are healthy and progressive are bound to come into conflict with the dead-hand leadership of the AFL, and it will take more than inertia to prevent these conflicts from resulting in definite breakaways.

CIO Leaders Predict Great Gains

secure an increasing share in the democratic processes of our government.

"The working men an women of America will know how to achieve these aims, through the same democratic, American methods they have employed in the short years of existence of the CIO."

Must Halt Autocratic War Makers – Hillman

"Labor Day this year finds the world and the working people everywhere anxious and worried over the momentous issue of war and peace. American labor is not free of this anxiety.

"No real peace is possible anywhere as long as autocratic and irresponsible powers can violate the rules of international traffic. The age-old battle for democracy must be won. American labor can do its share in the efforts of staving off the tragedy which at this moment is imminent but is not unavoidable. The strengthening of democracy in our nation is the great contribution we can make toward international peace.

"Our own political and economic life must be geared up to a point where security for all will set an example for others to follow and will make war incentives seem cruel, stupid and ineffectual.

"The program of the CIO is an adequate instrumentality through which the forces of democracy in this country can work effectively, and if animated by a common goal and a common understanding—will work successfully."

CIO Follows Correct Policies – Carey

"The working men and women of America have reason to be proud and confident this Labor Day, proud of their achievements and confident for their future and the future of their nation.

"The past year has been one of continued achievement and new victories for the industrial workers organized in the CIO. The CIO has fought off as vicious a series of attacks as any yet launched against the welfare of the American people, both by selfish employers trying to destroy labor's previous gains and by their agents in Congress and state governments.

"At the same time it has consolidated its organization in already established areas of collective bargaining, the CIO has extended its efforts successfully into new fields. Its legislative and social program has been both defended and advanced appreciably, in spite of the violent efforts of a reactionary conspiracy in Congress and outside it.

"This has been possible because the CIO is a strong, united movement, because it pursues correct policies effectively, and because it represents the will for progress of the men and women who create the wealth and power of America."

Enemies of CIO Have Failed – Brophy

"Labor Day this year finds the organized labor movement, and with it the democratic institutions of our country, stronger and in better condition to cope with the common opponents than ever before.

"Labor as represented by the CIO suffered no setbacks during the year since last Labor Day. On the contrary, it gained greater strength in a number of critical contests, and has increased both its prestige in the nation and its organizational strength.

"The great victory of the United Mine Workers has set a high mark in CIO achievement, an achievement whose beneficial effect was felt throughout our entire economy. Continuing renewal of CIO collective bargaining agreements, winning of new standards, and the maintenance and improvement of wage standards in industry are directly traceable to this and other CIO accomplishments.

"The attack on the Wagner Act was turned back, because organized labor was strong enough to make its voice heard in Congress. The attempt to destroy the Wages and Hours Act was similarly halted. Those representatives in Congress who voted with the reactionary coalition have an aroused and indignant public to face at home—a public that was aroused to the issues by the organized labor movement.

"Our enemies continue to cry down our merits and deprecate our achievements. Their aim is to discredit us with our members and with the working public. They have failed.

"The reputation of the CIO was never higher than it is this Labor Day."

AFL Entertainers Union Supports Wagner Act

CHICAGO, Aug. 30—The American Federation of Radio Artists, AFL, today was on record at its annual convention to oppose any changes in the Wagner Labor Relations Act.

The AFL union, affiliated with the Four A's which has been in conflict with the Federation's executive council, is headed by Eddie Cantor. Lawrence Tibbett, concert singer, is vice-president.

Other resolutions passed by the annual convention of the union called for support of the federal wage-hour law, urged restoration of the WPA theatre projects killed by the Woodrum bill, and backed the Four A's in the battle to protect its jurisdiction from raids by the AFL's Intl. Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes.

Prepared for '40, League Declares

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30.—Labor is in politics to stay—this is the message of Labor's Non-Partisan League for Labor Day of 1939, a day which marks the fourth year in which the League has been a prominent factor in the American political scene.

"The League, now established in all industrial and many farm areas, is recognized as the permanent organization fighting the political battles of labor in season and out," the statement declares.

"Biggest fact about the League in its four-year demonstration that labor set up in the League no more campaign organization, but a solid force to parallel in the political field the immense advances of labor in the economic field.

"Many bitter experiences have taught labor the vital import of political action.

LOOKS AHEAD TO '40

Looking ahead into 1940, the League has this to say:

"Alignments for 1940's presidential campaign are still in process of forming and it is too early to say precisely where League forces will line up. But regardless of candidates, it can be written as certain that the League will be in the 1940 campaign in a big way.

"And it will be campaigning vigorously for those candidates and parties who sincerely offer the best hope of providing jobs, preserving democracy, and protecting the social legislation now on the books. Because the League has been on the job organizing over the past four years, labor will go into next year's campaign better prepared than ever to make its votes count."

Churches Hail Union Gains

NEW YORK, Aug. 30.—"Widespread recognition of labor unions, the acceptance of the principle of collective bargaining and the regulation of hours and fair labor standards" are hailed in the annual Labor Sunday Message of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, as paving the way "for more constructive and intelligent cooperation in American industry."

The message, which will be read in hundreds of churches on Sept. 3 or Sept. 10, takes note of the fact that the "trend toward industry-wide organization of employers for collective agreements with organized labor, covering whole industries, offers hope of . . . more stabilized labor relations and fewer strikes . . .

"We heartily commend the efforts of far-sighted American employers toward this end and earnestly hope that such trends may be strengthened."

FARM-LABOR INTERESTS

Admitting that in the past the Church has paid little attention to the close relations between farmer and worker, the message underscored the mutual interests of these two great groups.

"Both cherish the principle of democracy in organization," it states. "Many farmers seek, through their farm organizations, the same essential democratic right of collective action to safeguard their interests as industrial workers seek through their labor unions . . .

"Furthermore, many of the alleged conflicts of interest between farmers and industrial workers rest upon assumptions which are without foundation."

WHOSE POCKETS —

ARE YOU FILLING? When you buy your clothes do you help pay the wage of a union worker, or do you help swell the profits of a sweatshop boss?

- The Label of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America will give you the answer. When you don't see the label you know that the garment was probably made by an un-American sweatshop chiseler. When you see the Amalgamated label you know that your money will go into the pockets of union workers, earning union pay, working under union conditions.
- Demand the union label in the clothes you buy and insure yourself against sweatshop garments, against sweatshop conditions in industry.

You can find the Amalgamated label in union made suits, overcoats, uniforms, work clothes and overalls, workshirts, dress shirts, underwear, gloves, neckties, sheeplined, leather, and sport coats, children's clothing and wash suits.

Farmer–Worker Cooperation

New York Dairy Farmers, CIO Point the Way

NEW YORK, Aug. 30. — Farmer-Labor unity — not so long ago the "dream" of progressives—has passed from the realm of the hypothetical into actual being in New York State.

To a measure, the 1939 session of the State Legislature already described as the "most putrid reactionary" in New York's history, is responsible.

On August 14 there took place in the office of Allan S. Haywood, regional CIO director for New York, a conference made up of fifteen CIO international unions, four representatives of the Dairy Farmers Union and representatives from consumer milk organizations and the American Labor Party.

Dairy farmers in the New York milk shed, unable to exist on the prices paid them by the milk trust, were about to go on strike and they had come to the big city to ask for help from the organized industrial workers and consumer groups. Their presence in New York City was no accident.

MAULED BY TORIES

When the New York State Legislature adjourned early this Summer, legislative representatives of the CIO had met in Albany to take stock of the severe mauling labor had received at the hands of a legislature dominated by Tory Republicans and Tammany democrats.

Learning of the presence in Albany of Archie Wright, president of the Dairy Farmers Union, Mr. Haywood invited him to address the conference. Mr. Wright, in behalf of the farmers, also had much to complain about the recently adjourned legislature.

It was agreed, subsequently, that there would be a farmer-labor get-to-gether in New York City on August 14. In the meanwhile, conditions had become so bad that the farmers set August 15 as the date for a strike against the milk trust.

When the conference assembled in the New York office of the CIO, the delegates were faced with a specific situation; a strike the next day.

FARMERS HARD-PRESSED

The farm delegates told their story simply. Conditions were unbearable. Most of the farmers were compelled to work as hired hands in order to eke out a bare living. City prices for milk were high, they admitted, but the farmer did not get enough to pay for the cost of feed. Organization was spreading rapidly, but many farmers were still afraid to join the union. There had been an unfruitful strike in 1936.

However, they felt confident that the strike scheduled for the morrow would spread, and this time they would win. They needed help in organizing, in the handling of publicity, and above all, they needed money. They had none, and a strike costs money.

Delegates from the unions, consumer groups and the American Labor Party quickly pledged their aid to the farmers. With little discussion, save for details, resolutions were adopted pledging support, calling for financial contributions and setting up a committee from the three groups to meet with the farmers as a strategy board.

At the same time the conference decided to appeal to the AFL unions to join in helping the farmers.

QUICK ACTION

The pledges of aid were met within an hour after adjournment of the conference.

Haywood signed a check in behalf of the CIO Industrial Union Council and handed it to the farmer representatives. The Transport Workers Union immediately assigned two full time organizers and placed at disposal of the dairy farmers its highly-geared publicity office, besides sending a check for $100. The Newspaper Guild sent a check for $50, the Furriers $200 and all the way down the line, the CIO unions flocked to support of the dairy farmers.

Contact was established with friendly AFL unions. Among the powerful AFL unions which responded immediately were the Hotel and Restaurant workers, teachers, printers, plumbers, teamsters and butchers. Resolutions in support of the farmers were wired to Gov. Lehman, Mayor LaGuardia and Secretary of Agriculture Henry Wallace.

EFFECTIVE STRIKE

The strike gathered momentum quickly although the first two days were marked by statements issued by the milk trust officials denying the effectiveness of the strike.

They changed their tune on the third day, however, and the metropolitan papers were filled with denunciations of "the Communist-dominated CIO dominating the dairy farmers." The old, reliable red herring had been dusted off and trotted out again. There were also horrendous stories of "Communist CIO pickets" coming all the way from Michigan to dump milk in up-state New York.

But, as the Guild Reporter says, "red herrings don't give Milk" and the shortage was felt immediately. Within four days, milk deliveries in New York were cut 60 per cent.

The farmers were doing a magnificent job. They were keeping their milk at home and their picket lines prevented the delivery of milk to the up-state plants. However, public institutions were supplied by the farmers and President Wright announced that the union, if necessary would supply the city workers with milk free of charge.

Attempts to import milk from other states and thus break the strike were prevented when President Haywood, City Councilman Michael Quill (international president of the TWU), Heywood Broun and other labor leaders delivered a sharp protest to Mayor LaGuardia against such action by city authorities. The Mayor convened a conference of city and state officials, representatives of the Dairy Farmers Union and officials of the milk trust.

The farmers emerged with a victory. They gained a 50 per cent increase and President Wright declared that the farmers would never forget the help given them by the CIO.

Farmer-Labor unity has proven its worth in the State of New York. Plans already are under way for a farmer-labor drive in the 1940 session of the State legislature.

Bethlehem Campaign Spurts

representatives said there is "strong sentiment for SWOC" in their mills, particularly since the Labor Board order.

In discussing the union campaign, which was launched at a SWOC conference in Chicago last month, Murray pointed out that Bethlehem has always chiseled on the $5-a-day minimum set by SWOC in its contracts with organized plants.

Hourly rates for common labor, he added, undercut the union minimum of 62¼ cents by 9½c, and rates for other classifications are proportionately lower. Efforts to compel all steel mills receiving government contracts to pay the prevailing wage of 62½c an hour are now tied up in the courts, he said, largely because of the resistance offered by Bethlehem and some other steel companies.

LAUD NLRB ORDER

A formal resolution passed unanimously by the delegates pointed out that the NLRB order "verifies the contention of the majority of workmen of Bethlehem Steel that the Employe Representation Plan is in fact a company union . . . designed to frustrate rather than aid collective bargaining."

Listed as goals of the organizing campaign are the five-day 40-hour week, $5 daily minimum pay, time and a half for overtime, and for Sunday work; a permanent vacation-with-pay plan; just seniority rights and more adequate safety measures.

Unionism The 'American Way,' Church Study Concludes

New York, Aug. 26 — Labor unions represent democracy on American principles applied to industrial relations, according to a new study prepared by Rev. James Myers, industrial secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, and distributed through the Council for Social Action with headquarters here.

"Through labor unions," Myers writes, "workers have found an opportunity not enjoyed by unorganized workers to participate in American democracy. The labor unions movement is in essense a demand for democracy on the part of wage earners.

"It is an effort to elevate labor to the status of industrial citizens with the rights of representative government in industry. It is an expression of our American principles of government applied to industrial relations."

UNIONS RESPONSIBLE

The study, released wiht the title "Labor and Democracy" examines many of the charges unthinkingly or maliciously raised against the labor movement, and finds them based on misinformation or deliberate misunderstanding.

Unions are responsible, Myers declares, citing the record of many years of strict contract observance by labor organizations. The most outstanding case, he finds, is that of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee of the CIO, whose record for strict adherence to agreements drew the comment from U. S. Steel Chairman Myron C. Taylor: "The union has scrupulously followed the terms of the agreement."

On racketeering, another favorite charge of anti-union forces that often deceives the unwary, Myers points out that it only can exist where unions are undemocratically controlled. "The rank and file of unions members are just as honest as any other class of society," he writes.

AGAINST INCORPORATION

Incorporation of unions is no remedy for the supposed evils of trade union organization, he adds. Unincorporated unions can be sued and can be enjoined, he points out. They are subject to the same laws and police powers that every other organization is subject to. They have the same checks on their powers, and incorporation in the hands of unfriendly courts could be used as a weapon to break down the movement.

"In many industries which have been organized over a long period of years," Myers concludes, it has been demonstrated that it is possible for organized employers and organized employes to maintain generally harmonious relations with honesty and integrity and to adjust their differences without recourse to strikes and lockouts and for them to cooperate effectively in reducing costs of production."

Myers' pamphlet, Labor and Democracy, 40 pp, price 15 cents, can be obtained from the Council for Social Action, 289 Fourth Ave., New York, N. Y.

Typo Union Bucks AFL Demands

Fort Worth, Tex., Aug. 30. — Delegates to the Intl. Typographical Union convention here returned to their homes today after having voted to stop all per capita payments to the AFL, if ITU delegates are not seated at the Cincinnati AFL convention, on account of the union's refusal to pay the 1c-a-member anti-CIO assessment.

The convention, in a unanimously adopted report, reaffirmed the refusal of the ITU to pay the assessment, despite the threat of the AFL executive council to suspend it on this account.

A letter was addressed to the convention by Secretary Frank Morrison of the AFL, warning of suspension if the ITU failed to pay the assessment and $22,000 in arrears since it was first levied two years ago.

PROPOSE NEW GROUP

A proposal for an independent printing trades federation combining existing printing trades unions was made in a speech to the convention by Pres. George L. Berry of the Pressmen's Union.

Three other actions were taken by the convention which are expected to upset the AFL national leadership:

1. A resolution opposing all amendments to the Wagner Act.

2. A resolution to place the Mid-Continent Oil Co., now fighting the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union, on its unfair list.

3. A move to arrange further conferences between ITU leaders and those of the CIO American Newspaper Guild.

Bridges' Foes Set Back By Disclosures

'Ol' Man River' Cocks An Ear As Boatmen Meet In Cairo

By BETH MYERS

Cairo, Ill., Aug. 30 — Seventy-six years ago a man by the name of Grant put Cairo, Illinois, on America's map. It was there, in the old Halliday Hotel, that the Union general maintained headquarters during the war to release the people of the South from the shackles of a cruel and moribund slave system.

Last week the same old Halliday Hotel was headquarters for another campaign — a direct descendant of that old one conducted by the man with the pipe, a man who swore and spit and didn't speak politely, but who fought a winning battle for democracy every time.

The Inland Boatmen's Division of the National Maritime Union, CIO, held its second annual conference in Cairo, and mapped out the details for the big fight against that old man, "river boss."

The Inland Boatmen's 50 delegates spoke for 4,000 organized men — river sailors and dock workers. They were from the boats that travel the Ohio and Missouri, the Illinois and Warrior, as well as the Mississippi. They don't yet represent all of the men in the industry, but they soon will.

THEME SONG . . .

The River itself hums the theme song of the CIO these days — "Organize the Unorganized." Men are joining the union by handfuls, contracts are being signed, wages are rising, working conditions are better.

The Cairo conference marked an end to this muddy confusion. Democratically, the delegates thrashed out the petty differences and misunderstandings and recognized their immense responsibilities and grasped their proper perspective. They established true organizational unity and mapped a program for the organization of the 17,000 river men who still are unorganized, and they voted full confidence in the leadership that has served them well — National Organizer Felix Siren, General Organizer Frank Bruno, Sec.-Treas. Fletcher Wilson, and the others.

RIVER PEOPLE

Hardly a soul who lives on the rich flowing artery that is America's middle doesn't love the Mississippi like a mother. River men are river born and their hearts beat in rhythm to the soft wishful music of the river's flow, now punctuated by the screaming shrill whistles of industry.

The IBD's delegates were these kind of people — river men, river born. Daniel Boone's great-great-grandson was one of them, a stalwart young man who guards the Boone tradition proudly, with a union book, marching ahead in the same old spirit of that ancestor of his to whom America owes much.

There were Negroes among the delegates, who brought with them a tradition the River knows well. There was Abe Cook, a man who has spent the whole of his 40 years working on the Mississippi. Vicksburg is his home and it was there, when he was little higher than the sacks that he toted, that he began loading and unloading the river cargo.

MEANING OF UNITY

The meaning of unity took on a deep new significance as the delegates reviewed the changing conditions along the River since "we worked for $40 a month and 24 hours a day." The union has brought wages up to $80, and while conditions aren't yet heaven, they are plenty improved.

The conference took the lead given by National Council representative Frederick Myers, "If any seamen's organization is to survive, all workers in our industry must be organized."

A picture of old Ulysses S. Grant hangs above the bar in the old Halliday Hotel and the general looks pretty serene and confident. It's as if he knew that the work of furthering democracy and fulfilling America's promise to its people is being carried along okay down there, along the River.

Fascist Makes $ $ In Racket

Washington, Aug. 30 — The Dies Committee, making a hop, skip and jump survey of fascist activities in the United States, today made public evidence to show that William Dudley Pelley, head of the fascist Silver Shirts, has netted a personal profit of more than $100,000 from the sale of anti-Semitic literature.

Pelley profited also through dues payments to the Silver Shirts, and the evidence clearly points to the fact that the bewhiskered gentleman from North Carolina has a first-rate "racket" in his hate-preaching organization.

3½ TONS OF HATE

In the last 19 months, evidence revealed, Pelley publications preaching anti-Semitism totaling about three and a half tons have been shipped out of the Asheville, N. C., printing plant of the fascist crew.

Pelley himself failed to appear on the stand, the Dies Committee claiming that it was unable to locate him. But Robert Barker, committee investigator, testified that most check payments to Pelley's outfit are deposited in a bank account of the "Skyland Press," while cash and money orders seem irresistably drawn towards Pelley's personality.

LIKES HITLER

Pelley's magazine, the committee found, boasted in 1934 that its publisher held the distinction of being the first American "to support openly the fight of Adolf Hitler on the German-Jewish reds."

One of the large contributors to the Pelley cause was discovered to be George B. Fisher of New York, a large stockholder in the Crowell Publishing Co. and operator of the dress pattern department for Crowell magazines.

Textile Mills Sign Pacts In Baltimore

Baltimore, Aug. 30. — All three factories of the Mt. Vernon Woodberry Mills, Inc., were working under union agreements today, following signing of a contract with the Textile Workers Union of America, CIO.

Pacts at the Mt. Vernon and Park Mills this week followed by a short time another contract at the Meadow Mill plant, and brought protection to all the company's 350 employes.

Wage increases ranging to 7½%, the 40-hour week, and voluntary check-off were among the provisions in the agreements.

Refused Bribe

ERNEST RAMSAY, victim of the Modesto frameup against West Coast maritime labor several years ago, goes to the recreation room at San Quentin to testify in the Harry Bridges deportation hearing. Ramsay said he was offered a bribe of freedom to perjure himself against the CIO official. He refused.

Attempted Frame-ups Described at Hearing

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 30. — The sensation-studded Bridges deportation hearing moved to San Quentin prison for a day as defense counsel built up their case to show that employers and labor spies were engaged in an effort to deport the West Coast CIO leader at any cost—even frameup.

The witnesses who testified at the hearing at the prison were Ernest Ramsey and Earl King, former maritime union leaders, both sent to jail a few years ago in the notorious Modesto frame-up case, involving Standard Oil.

Both men confirmed previous testimony presented at the hearing on Angel Island in San Francisco Harbor that they had been approached by Larry Doyle, northwest labor spy chief, and alternately teased and threatened to sign affidavits asserting they had attended Communist meetings with Bridges.

Ramsay, dressed in the blue and gray of prison uniform, sat with folded arms on the witness stand and described Doyle's visit to him in 1937.

QUOTE DOYLE

"I'm the guy that's going to send Harry Bridges over the road," Doyle was quoted as having said.

Charging that the fink agent again boasted of representing Gov. Merriam's office (Merriam, a Republican, was defeated in the 1938 elections), Ramsay said Doyle promised that it would be "just like getting up and walking out" if he signed a prepared statement linking Bridges to the communists.

Ramsay told Dean Landis, trial examiner at the deportation hearing, that he himself is not a Communist and had no knowledge of Bridges' membership in that party. He refused to sign Doyle's affidavit, the witness recalled, and was visited a few month later — again refusing.

Earl King, former head of the Marine Firemen's Union and now an honorary president of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific, was the second witness.

"How would you like to get out of here," Doyle asked King when they met at the prison, he testified. Failure to sign the affidavit, Doyle threatened him, would put King in a "tough spot."

King said he told Doyle that "no one can make me perjure myself."

Bridges took the stand for a day to rebut previous charges of Communism made against him early in the hearing, and denied Communist domination or leadership of his union, the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's union.

LEGION ON SPOT

Meanwhile, reverberations from the recent state convention of the American Legion continued to roll throughout California's unions. John Leech, an anti-Bridges witness, and Captain John Keegan of the Portland, Oreg., police department, known as a foe of unions and a hostile witness at the Bridges hearing, were introduced to the delegates by Harper Knowles, himself an ardent red-baiter, union-hater, and stool pigeon employed by the Legion and the Associated Farmers.

Keegan, warming up to his subject, shouted, "We're not half through with Harry Bridges yet."

As a result, the Marine Cooks and Stewards have recommended to the Maritime Federation of the Pacific that it urge all members who belong to the American Legion to protest against the anti-labor resolutions passed by the veteran's convention.

The union also suggested that the LaFollette Committee be invited to "investigate the network of labor spies and stool-pigeons whom Legion officers boast of having planted in the trade union movement."

Sugar Firm Locks Out 1,000 Men

Edgewater, N. J., Aug. 30 — Demands made by the United Sugar Refinery Workers, CIO Local Industrial Union, for a renewal of last year's contract with the National Sugar Refining Company, manufacturers of Jack Frost sugar, were met with a lockout of nearly 1,000 workers employed at the big plant here.

The refining in Long Island City, employing some 1,100, was also shut down.

The lockout followed an overwhelming vote by the workers of both plants to go on strike unless the management renewed a contract which expired July 1, with a union shop clause included, Negotiations for settlement of the dispute have been going on since the plants closed down, but the union reports no progress has been made.

In addition to the demand for a union shop, the workers are asking for a five cent hourly increase in wages and vacations with pay, according to John Burke, president of the CIO local at the Edgewater plant.

Swings to CIO

Bristol, Conn., Aug. 30 — The swing to the CIO United Automobile Workers, which is ending the hopes of AFL leaders to split the worker's ranks, gained further impetus here today as the local at General Motors' Roller Bearing plant affiliated with the UAW-CIO.

Following an address by William Carney, CIO regional director in New Jersey, the local decided to drop its AFL ties and join the CIO. The vote was 285-15.

Pennsy City, CIO in Pact

New Kensington, Pa., Aug. 30— The first union contract with town employes in the history of the community was signed here recently between Local 213, State, County & Municipal Workers and the City Council.

The agreement gives sole bargaining rights to the CIO union, and provides paid vacations, seniority rights and machinery for settling grievances. It was signed by Mayor Dick Reeser and Councilman R. J. Sinclair, for the Council, and by John Haser and Harrison Heidrich for the union.

PUSH BIG UTILITY DRIVE

Chicago Hearst Paper Folds; Strike to Go On

CHICAGO, Aug. 30.—The Hearst-owned Chicago Herald & Examiner has suspended publication—a sacrifice, according to leaders of the striking Chicago Newspaper Guild, of the vicious, unswerving anti-unionism of its management.

Sunday editions of the morning paper will be continued, while the Evening American — also struck by the Guild last October—will henceforth be known as the Herald-American.

Strikers announced that their fight for job security will continue, "no matter how Hearst changes around the structure of his newspapers."

Announcement of the demise of 'Her-Ex' was made to a group of scabs who have been getting out a "ghost paper" ever since the strike began. The announcement came less than three hours after a negotiating session between the Guild and Hearst management representatives who made no indication of the coming event.

GUILD STATEMENT

"Naturally, the strikers' immediate reaction is intense sympathy for ther fellow members of legitimate organized labor — the printing, driving and other craftsmen — whose interests have been sacrificed to years of Hearst mismanagement and fundamental opposition to all organized labor," declared H. Richard Seller, Guild international representative.

"Settlement of this strike would have cost the management a mere trifle, financially, compared to the millions of dollars poured into fighting it."

FLIMSY EXCUSE

Suspension of the Herald-Examiner followed shortly after the management's negotiators had withdrawn a proposal to reinstate all strikers—a move which they attributed to allegedly high wage demands made by the Guild's representatives.

The Guild pointed out, however, that the Hearst excuse was in need of crutches, since wages had not been discussed and were still open for negotiation.

With the strike passing the 270-day mark, the campaign to weaken resistance of the Hearst management was showing good results.

300 Strike At Haguetown Sweatshop

Jersey City, N. J., Aug. 30— Three hundred employes of H. Goodman & Sons, big sweatshop manufacturer here, walked out on strike when the management refused to renew a contract without slashing wages.

The company, maker of "Goody" hair and novelty products, had previously been under contract for two years with Local 421 of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

The workers are firm and determined in their stand that wage cuts will be prevented.

Success in this strike, leaders say, will mean organization for thousands of unorganized workers in Jersey City.

Company products include, in addition to "Goody" hair products, Dry-Fast end curlers, Pyrolite sun glasses, Kant-Slip combs, Fosta-Grand barretts.

CIO Building Local Jumps Membership

BALTIMORE, Aug. 30.—This city's newly-chartered local in the CIO's United Construction Workers Organizing Committee has nearly tripled its membership in the last month, Intl. Organizer G. Pilon reported today.

"At the close of August we've got three times as many members as we had in July," he said, "and by the time the snow flies we're going to have 500 more."

News Guild Wins Scripps-Howard 1-Day Strike

San Diego, Calif., Aug. 30 — The American Newspaper Guild's first strike against a newspaper in the Scripps-Howard chain ended today in a 24-hour victory.

The San Diego Sun, after refusing Guild demands on employment methods and apprenticeship limitations, signed a contract the next day covering both these points. Other provisions include sick leave and severance pay.

AFL Outfit Scabs In Tennessee

Copperhill, Tenn., Aug. 30 — Relying on some 250 armed sheriff's deputies and an AFL strikebreaking union, management of the Tennessee Copper Co. today was attempting to open their three plants near here.

Operations had been halted when the Intl. Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, CIO, struck because the company refused to grant its demands for a contract.

Pres. Reid Robinson of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers is in the district to help direct the strike and lead negotiations for a settlement.

PLOT EXPOSED

AFL plots to aid the company have been repeatedly shown up. One of these attempts was blasted when the three striking locals discovered that AFL phonies had stored three truck loads of hardwood clubs in their headquarters, apparently with an eye to violence.

When a CIO handbill announced this revelation to the community, the AFL leaders secretly moved the "armaments" out of their headquarters and dumped them in the river.

Haywood Predicts Workers Will Beat All Obstacles

NEW YORK, Aug. 30—Allan S. Haywood, chairman of the CIO's Utility Workers Organizing Committee, declared in a special Labor Day message that the industry's employes are "determined" to "enjoy those rights guaranteed to them by the law of the land."

UWOC members, Haywood said, "are engaged in struggles with some of the greatest combines of capital in the country. Resistance has been met at every turn, but in spite of this, the officers and members of local unions affiliated with the UWOC are determined to carry on the struggle under the banner of the CIO, to the end that they will, along with their fellow workers in other basic industries, enjoy those rights guaranteed to them by the law of the land.

OVERCOME OBSTACLES

"In New York City, the Consolidated Edison Co. was compelled to reinstate discharged workers and pay them $22,000 in back pay," Haywood declared. Yet the company is persistently evading the rulings of the National Labor Relations Board as sustained by the Supreme Court; and the IBEW is linking up with them, functioning as a typical company union. Regardless of all the obstacles this combine of the IBEW and the Consolidated Edison Co. have created, the Utility Workers has petitioned the NLRB for an election, which it is very hopeful of winning, aiding them to establish a real union in this system.

"In the state of Michigan the IBEW connived with other opposing forces of real unionism. The UWOC defeated them in an election conducted by the NLRB. Then the IBEW openly played the role of labor-hating employers by obtaining an injunction against the NLRB preventing the Board from completing the election with only the UWOC on the ballot, pursuant to the rules and regulations of the Board. That case is now in the courts.

SPIRIT STRONG

"As a result our officers and members have to battle along against this unholy alliance; but they are determined to keep up the fight to the end that justice shall prevail.

"In Pennsylvania, as well as in Ohio, the same kind of resistance is at work. In the latter state, the workers at Philo, Akron, Youngstown and elsewhere, are rapidly overcoming this resistance.

"Progress has been made in California, and further results are expected there in the near future.

WORKERS DETERMINED

"It is evident that the utility workers throughout the country are determined to have a union in this important industry which will truly represent them. They rejected the AFL-IBEW vassal class B membership, and craft union policies in its application to this industry.

"A spirit of determination and loyalty prevails to which there can only be one answer: building up a powerful national union of utility workers, obtaining for its membership greater security and a higher life, a union free from craft divisions, one for all and all for one.

District 50 Certified

Washington, Aug. 30 — District 50, United Mine Workers, was certified by the Labor Board this week as the sole bargaining agency selected by a majority of the employes of the Alabama By-Products Corp., Coke Oven division, Tarrant, Ala.

District 50, which has jurisdiction over gas, coke and chemical workers in the UMW, defeated an AFL union by a vote of 105 to 94 in an election held among the production, maintenance, shipping and receiving employes of the Alabama corporation.

Vote 5-1 For CIO

Chicago, Aug. 30 — Employes of the Harris Hub Bed & Spring Company and Carl Harris Company voted five to one for the United Furniture Workers, CIO, defeating the AFL Upholsterers 142 to 30.

Results of the poll, conducted by the Labor Board, was the second drubbing the AFL local has received in two weeks, having been defeated at an election held earlier among the employes of Showers Bros., Bloomington, Ill.

CIO LEADERS URGE U. S. TO STAY CLEAR OF WAR

The News In Brief

(See Stories on Inside Pages)

War Profits

Jersey City, N. J.—Shipyard operators must be prepared to bargain collectively and share their fat wartime profits with the workers, Pres. John Green told delegates to the convention of the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers.

War Risk

New York. — Seamen on American vessels entering war areas must receive bonuses, the National Maritime Union is telling ship operators.

Vigilantes

Silverton, Colo. — Federal authorities are investigating a vigilante attack on striking metal miners here. Two officials of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers were escorted out of the town to safety after a mob attacked the union hall.

Jolt Holts

Huntington, W. Va. — Two Holts — Gov. Holt and Sen. Holt — came in for bitter criticism at the annual convention of the West Virginia Industrial Union Council. Delegates accused the two officials of anti-labor activities.

NAM Tie-Up

Akron, Ohio. — The "Civic Unity" campaign being pushed in a number of Ohio cities is closely linked with the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, the United Rubber Workers charged. Purpose of the drive, says the URW, is to weaken labor's power in coming municipal elections.

Aluminum Local Wins

Alcoa, Tenn., Sept. 9—An election struggle extending over two years and requiring four polls was definitely won by the Aluminum Workers of America in a run-off election carried by the CIO union by a vote of 1,707 to 1,602. The poll was held among the employes at the Alcoa plant of the Aluminum Company of America.

The union said it was the largest election ever held by the National Labor Relations Board in the South. The AWA local defeated an AFL union and an "independent" at previous polls, but did not succeed until this election in winning a majority of all the votes cast.

Prize Winner

TOLEDO CIO OFFICIALS awarded a prize to this float which was entered in the Ohio city's Labor Day parade by the Bingham Stamping Unit of Local 12, United Automobile Workers. Fifteen thousand marched in Toledo labor's turnout, while other similarly large crowd raded in cities large and small throughout the nation.

Shoe Workers Ask U. S. Revoke Permit For German Firm

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—Steps to seek revocation of a permit granted to the Bata Shoe Co. of Ziln, Germany, for its new American plant at Belcamp, Md., were undertaken today by the CIO United Shoe Workers.

The union charged that several hundred Czech workmen have been brought to Maryland by the firm, through an arrange-ment permitting them to come in over the immigration quota.

It contends that "the establishment of the factory at Belcamp is an attempt by this firm to transplant foreign standards and foreign working conditions on to American soil."

The union has been told that the firm "tried to pay as low as 20c an hour to the workmen hired to erect the factory buildings," and is apparently set on a similar low-wage policy for the shoe workers themselves. Some 135 Czechs have already been brought to Belcamp, and as a result "few American workmen will be hired for some time to come," the USWA charged.

In a letter to all affiliates of the union, its national officials said the factory is being set up "in an anti-union district under the sponsorship of anti-labor, ultra-reactionary Sen. Tydings." Members are asked to send protests to their Congressmen and to Edward J. Shaughnessy of the Immigration Division of the U. S. Dept. of Labor.

The Bata factory in Europe, which employs thousands of workers at low wages, was taken over by the Nazis when Germany conquered Czechoslovakia, and has since been "co-ordinated" into the Nazi economic machine. The Bata brothers, its original owners, still retain management control.

N. Carolina AFL Slaps Barden

Durham, N. C., Sept. 9 — Rep. Graham Barden of North Carolina, sponsor of AFL amendments to the Wagner Act and leader of the attack against the wage-hour act, has been slapped down by the state's AFL Federation of Labor.

The delegates voted strong support for the wage act, condemned attempts to amend the vitality out of it, and wound up by calling for the defeat of Barden.

Win Poll By 23-1

Philadelphia, Sept. 9.—An election among the industrial insurance agents of the Pennsylvania Mutual Life Insurance Company here was won by the CIO union by a vote of 23 to 1. The poll conducted by the State Labor Relations Board was carried by the Insurance Guild, Local 22, United Office and Professional Workers, CIO.

Lewis Demands Neutrality, Jobs For All

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—Speaking to a nation thrown into anxiety by the European war, leaders of the CIO, in Labor Day speeches, declared that American workers want an end to unemployment and insecurity and avoidance of armed conflict.

Pres. John L. Lewis, speaking over a nationwide radio hookup, declared: "Let those who will seek the votes of the workers of America be prepared to guarantee jobs for all Americans and freedom from foreign wars."

He berated those statesmen who spend "sleepless nights" of worry over the European situation while neglecting the problems of America's standing army of unemployed. "America's number one base problem," Lewis emphasized, "is productive work for its population."

Vice-Pres. Philip Murray, who spoke before many thousand Canadian steel workers at Hamilton, Ont., assured his audience that CIO unions in the Dominion are Canadian institutions and will support that nation in its "great emergency."

Sec. James Carey, speaking from Springfield, Mass., where the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers are holding their annual convention, demanded that labor, farmers and consumers be given places on the War Resources Board, now largely occupied by representatives of the House of Morgan.

Director John Brophy spoke in Des Moines, Ia., General Counsel Lee Pressman addressed a Duluth, Minn., mass meeting and Walter Smethurst, executive assistant to Pres. Lewis, was in Flint, Mich., for that city's Labor Day celebration.

Reports from all sections of the nation indicated that despite the war clouds, organized labor put on its greatest holiday show. Thousands of CIO members paraded in Detroit, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Toledo, St. Louis and other large metropolitan areas.

The celebrations, however, were not confined to the big cities. Picnics and parades were scheduled in hundreds of smaller communities. In Ontario's largest gold mining camps, AFL and CIO unions held a joint celebration, while 5,000 attended a picnic of Trumbull County, Ohio, CIO and AFL unions.

Labor Day Contract Wins 60% Pay Raises

NEW YORK, Sept. 9.—Wage increases of 20 to 60 per cent, two weeks vacation with pay, legal holidays off with pay, time-and-a-half pay for overtime and the closed shop are embodied in a two-year contract signed on Labor Day between the Avenue B and East Broadway Transit Company and the CIO Transport Workers Union, ending a ten-week strike against the bus company.

The strike victory brings into line the last remaining non-union bus company in New York City. The TWU, headed by City Councilman Michael J. Quill, has closed shop contracts with every subway, elevated, trolley and bus company in New York, covering more than 50,000 transit workers.

Drivers on the Avenue B line worked under a contract held by the AFL Amalgamated Association of Street, Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employes, until two years ago, when the Amalgamated deserted the men after an unsuccessful strike.

Wage boosts, written into the contract, elevate drivers from a top wage rate of 65 to 80 cents per hour; mechanics from 65 to 85 cents per hour and maintenance employes from 25 to 40 cents per hour.

Lumbermen Win, 5-1

Tacoma, Wash., Sept. 9.—Members of Local 2-9, International Woodworkers of American, are elated over a thumping victory won by their union at a Labor Board election held among employes of the St. Paul & Tacoma Lumber Company. The CIO union defeated a local of the AFL Carpenters & Joiners by a vote of 738 to 163.

The company's workers have been on strike for four months, following refusal of the E. G. Griggs, head of the firm, to negotiate a contract. The AFL local claimed before the election that it had the majority of the workers.

'Civic Unity' — — More of the Old Stuff

AKRON, Ohio, Sept. 9—Recipe for "keeping labor in its place":

1. Several thousand dollars from men close to the anti-union Natl. Association of Manufacturers.

2. Formation of a phoney "front" organization, the American Economic Foundation.

3. Selection of would-be economists, and trained propagandists.

Stir thoroughly, mix with hot air.

This is the recipe which the reactionaries are trying in a half-dozen Ohio cities after finding that the old brand of anti-labor broth is no longer palatable to thousands of workers who have tasted the fruits of industrial unionism.

The United Rubber Workers of America, which has been carrying on a long campaign to expose the fallacies of the "ghost town" propaganda which was unsuccessful in stopping the march of unionism here, is now warning its members of the new 1940 slick propaganda model.

Several thousand dollars were put up by manufacturers, most of them connected with the NAM, for the experiment in undermining unionism, the United Rubber Workers report.

From these funds was created the American Economic Foundation, Inc., which ample evidence would indicate has little to do with economics, has no foundation except to fight unions, and if anything, is un-American.

FANCY FRONTMEN

To carry out its experiment, the AEF chose the following personnel:

1. Dr. Alfred Haake, managing director of the Nat'l. Furniture Manufacturers' Assn., formerly director of state divisions of the American Liberty League and producer of a "model code for self-governing industries" for the NAM.

2. DeLoss Walker, an associate editor of Bernarr MacFadden's Liberty Magazine, former speaker for the NAM during its 1936 "civic progress" campaign —a campaign which was built on the same lines as the present one.

3. Sherman Rogers, former speaker for the "Crusaders."

4. Fred Clark, independently wealthy oil baron and former commander of the Crusaders—a man who has made no bones about his hatred of unionism.

With this personnel, the American Economic Foundation moved into a number of northern Ohio cities with its "civic unity" program. Ostensibly, the campaign is to bring all elements of the community into a central group where mutual problems can be discussed by leaders of organized groups. Haake and Rogers have used the sugar coating for all it is worth, telling unionists how they have talked employers out of "misunderstandings" about the CIO and suggesting to the union members that employers are pretty good fellows after all.

CAN BE OUTVOTED

Many who have studied the AEF program say that its real purpose is to bring one or two representatives of labor into the central group, where they will obviously be outnumbered by the representatives of anti-union organizations in the community.

Thus, if labor has been induced to swallow the "civic unity" bait, it can be outvoted in the "community" forum or made to appear as a disturber of "civic unity" when it strikes for just demands. For the American Economic Foundation representatives hedge when asked how "civic unity" will help increase the wages paid by a sweatshop boss or shorten the hours of work in a large factory — particularly when the sweatshopper and the industrialist may be enthusiastic and influential supporters of the NAM "civic unity" program.

"In the course of a conference he had with Akron union leaders, the following facts emerged.

"Haake believes that the reason for mass unemployment in the United States is due to 'lack of confidence' on the part of investors. This alleged lack of confidence he attributes to 'increased government control of business' of which he said the National Labor Relations Act is an example.

"He further expressed the opinion that 'we are heading rapidly for Fascism under the New Deal' . . ."

SIGNIFICANCE

"It seems very significant that this type of campaign should be initiated in certain key cities in Ohio just at this time when important municipal election campaigns are being held, just at a time when preparations are being made to organize a nation-wide reactionary fight against President Roosevelt and the New Deal.

"Reactionary strategists know that the working people of our country are the solid organizational bloc supporting the New Deal. They realize that in order to defeat the New Deal in 1940 they must crack this bloc —and what better way is there to do it than for agents of reaction to slip into the ranks of labor in the sweet name of 'civic unity'."

Goons Jailed

Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 9 — A stinging rebuke, a year in jail and a $500 fine were handed out in court last week to two plug uglies who beat up two organizers for the United Automobile Workers, CIO, after a union meeting during the drive to organize automobile workers here.

Terming their gangsterism as "cowardly and Un-American," Judge James H. Anderson, in sentencing the two men, said: "I truly regret that it is not within my power to send you to the pententiary, but I am giving you as severe a sentence as I am able to do."

Fido Can Eat in Peace; Dog Food Union-Made

CHICAGO, Ill., Sept. 9. — Your pooch can exist on a 100 per cent union diet, thanks to the new contract signed here by the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing and Allied Workers of America with the Rival Packing Co., manufacturers of a widely-sold dog food.

A flat ten cent-an-hour raise for both men and women is the outstanding feature of the agreement which includes a guarantee of 32 hours pay per week. The shop committee is fully recognized as the sole collective bargaining agent in the plant and strict seniority provision provide a maximum of job security for the workers. workers.

Under the provisions of the new contract there will be a ten minute rest spell in the morning and afternoon. The vacation clause calls for one week paid vacation after a year's service, and two weeks for those five years with the company.

UCAPAWA Field Representative John Schmies, regards the contract as an outstanding victory in a recently-organized shop, where working conditions have been far below standards in the nearby stock yards.

Armour Backs Down, Union May Strike

CHICAGO, Sept. 9.—Ignoring its solemn pledge to Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, Armour and Company has disrupted contract negotiations with the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee, CIO.

Following the breakdown of negotiations at Chicago, the union moved rapidly to place its case before the federal government.

Charging that Armour broke its pledge to negotiate contracts on a plant-by-plant basis in those plants in which the union has been certified as sole collective bargaining agent by the NLRB, national officers of the PWOC wired Secretary Perkins that a national Armour strike will be called after Labor Day if she cannot effect a joint conference between national officials of the company, national officers of the union, and herself.

STRIKE NOTICE

Simultaneously, the union sent the obligatory ten-day notice of intention to strike to the state authorities of Minnesota. Indication that the strike may spread to all plants of the "Big Four" packers—Armour, Swift, Wilson and Cudahy—is found in the union's formal notice to the Minnesota authorities, which specified "Big Four" plants in South St. Paul, Albert Lea, Faribault and Newport.

Letters, signed by Don Harris, director, and Henry Johnson, assistant director of the PWOC, were also sent to the mayors of principal U. S. cities which would be involved in a strike. The letters told them of the union's demand to meet with responsible officers of Armour and Company.

Unless such a meeting takes place at once, PWOC officials say, the union will be forced to accept Armour's repeated challenge and call a strike—an action which the union has sought to avoid.

Packing Workers Win Omaha Poll

Omaha, Neb., Sept. 9—Meat packing workers have shown Armour and Co., currently stalling in contract talks with the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee, that they back the CIO by rolling up a big majority for the PWOC in a Labor Board election.

The vote, 748 for CIO to 549 against, was recorded in spite of vigorous company efforts to intimidate the workers.

The election was the last in the major Armour plants throughout the country, and indicated that packing workers throughout the country are unanimous in their support of the CIO and its demand for real collective bargaining.

2,000 Strike In Carolina

Columbia, S. C., Sept. 9—Refusal of the company to grant the demands of the Textile Workers' Union of America has precipitated a strike of 2,000 workers in the four big Pacific mills here. The employes walked out an hour after the old contract expired.

The union's chief demand was for elimination of the 12½% wage cut put through last year. A week's vacation with pay, voluntary check-off of union dues, and improved working conditions were among the other points the union sought to include in a new agreement.

The motion to call a strike was unopposed after the union negotiating committee reported that it "ran against a brick wall" during negotiations with the company.

"We did everything possible and it is out of our hands now and in yours," J. W. Johnson, president of the local and chairman of the committee, told the workers.

Auto Union Wins Third Election

Detroit, Sept. 9 — By a sizeable majority the United Automobile Workers, CIO, swept to a Labor Board election victory at the Bundy Tubing Co. plant here, thereby winning its third major poll in less than a month.

The UAW-CIO received 360 votes from Bundy workers, with the AFL outfit getting only 293. As a result, the CIO union will be certified as sole collective bargaining agency.

"This is almost getting monotonous," declared Pres. R. J. Thomas of the UAW. "The auto workers are re-affirming the decision for CIO industrial unionism, which they made a dramatic style in the great strikes of 1937."

Little 6 To Big 4

REPRESENTATIVES of the 'Little Six' meat packing firms get together with negotiators of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee and sign a renewal agreement which the militant CIO union described as a "model contract." Now the PWOC is redoubling efforts to get pacts from the 'Big Four'—Armour, Swift, Cudahy and Wilson.

War Danger Key Labor Day Topic

Speakers Hope For Peace

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9 — Appreciation of the war situation in Europe, together with a determination to uphold our democratic institutions and lessen the shock of war to workers here, marked Labor Day speeches by CIO leaders in various cities of the U. S. and in Canada.

In Hamilton, Ontario, Philip Murray, CIO vice-president and chairman of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, told an audience of 5,000 that the CIO in the Dominion is a Canadian institution, and as such supports the Canadian Government in its national policies.

"PROPER TREATMENT"

James B. Carey, CIO secretary, speaking on a national radio hookup from New York, demanded "proper treatment for labor and its rightful voice in the councils where decisions are made," and sharply criticized the omission of labor, farmer and consumer representatives from the War Industries Board, government control agency in the event war comes to America.

In Des Moines, Ia., John Brophy, national CIO director, told his audience of industrial workers and radio listeners that labor is "profoundly thankful" that Americans are not forced into war at the command of a Nazi-aggressor regime, and "profoundly determined to maintain the democracy and the peace under which our government exists and grows."

In Duluth, Minn., Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, warned against allowing native Fascists to destroy our freedom and lead our people to destruction as Hitler is leading the German people under his regime.

Walter Smethurst, CIO headquarters executive assistant to Pres. Lewis, spoke on industrial and political democracy and the workers' role in broadening social progress to an audience of automobile workers and their families at Flint, Mich. He was joined on the platform by R. J. Thomas, UAWA president; Adolph Germer, Michigan regional director; Roy Reuther, and a local committee of UAWA members.

DEFEND DEMOCRACY

All five speakers held up the record and the program of the CIO as a mainstay of economic and social progress, without which democratic institutions be-

American Labor and the European War-Discussed by Lewis and Carey

Following are excerpts from the Labor Day speeches of CIO Pres. Lewis and Sec. James Carey discussing American labor's attitude towards the European war:

PRES. LEWIS

"Let those who will seek the votes of the workers of America be prepared to guarantee jobs for all Americans and freedom from foreign wars."

* * *

"Labor in America wants no war nor any part of war. Labor wants the right to work and live—not the privilege of dying by gunshot or poison gas to sustain the mental errors of current statesmen."

"Patently an attempt is being made to create the illusion that when war breaks in Europe, the United States in some mysterious fashion will forthwith be involved. Such a concept is of course a monumental deception and amounts to a betrayal of national interest."

"Countries of the Western Hemisphere are self-contained and have no need to participate in the festering intrigue and ancient political quarrels of Europe. The destiny of our own country should be in the keeping of its own people and it should not become a puppet to be pulled by strings from the war-lusting rulers of Europe."

SEC. CAREY

"We of the CIO note with disappointment the recent announcement of a War Industries Board, which is to control the industrial side of the nation's life in case of war. . . . We note that this board, to which so much responsibility and power is given, includes some prominent men who are by no means famous for their sympathetic approach to labor's problems. Nor does this important board include a single labor representative, a single farmer representative, or a single consumer spokesman."

* * *

"In times of crisis, cooperation and helpfulness are especially vital to our America. But this cooperation is not to be imposed on labor; for you cannot get democratic cooperation by the issuance of decrees."

* * *

"If the working people of the European counties has been or now were represented in the governments that are now playing Power Politics with human lives and human civilizations, war would today be far away."

Lewis Demands Jobs

Ogden, Utah, Sept. 9—Heard by thousands of American workers attending their annual Labor Day celebrations in every part of the nation, CIO Pres. John L. Lewis warned "those who will seek the votes of the workers of America" to be prepared to "guarantee jobs for all Americans and freedom from foreign wars."

The CIO leader spoke over a nation-wide radio hookup from Ogden and his speech was rebroadcast at hundreds of meetings.

Lewis' address constituted a reminder to the world that "labor in America wants no war nor any part of war. Labor wants the right to work and live—not the privilege of dying by gunshot or poison gas to sustain the mental errors of current statesmen."

PROPAGANDA

Charging that the nation has been subjected "to an overdose of war propaganda" designed to create the "illusion" that the United States must "in some mysterious fashion" become involved in a European war, Lewis said:

"The country is being told of the statesmen and national leaders who are spending sleepless nights in worry over the situation in Europe. In every way, how much better it would be if the same statesmen would spend a few sleepless nights in devising a way for one-fourth of America's workers to get a job at a wage that would keep them alive."

Lewis called for "modern methods of expanding the export of American surplus commodities," describing the reciprocal trade treaties as a "delusion and a snare."

It is essential that "the trade territory of the Western Hemisphere be preserved and developed for the advantage of American industry," he said. "Central and South America is capable of absorbing all of our excess and surplus commodities if the problem is approached with intelligence and modern methods are pursued."

It was to the staggering do-

Shipyard, Marine Unions Act For Members In War Crisis

Jersey City, Sept. 9—American shipbuilders who anticipate a war boom based on fat orders and low pay, non-union conditions were warned today that the nation's shipyard workers will not tolerate such policies.

The warning was contained in the address of Pres. John Green to the national convention of the CIO Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers. Some 80 delegates from shipyards in the Atlantic, Pacific and Gulf coasts are attending the three-day sessions, the first CIO convention to be held in Mayor Hague's Jersey City.

"As shipyard workers responsible for construction of naval ships, rightly called the country's first line of defense, we are concerned that our country's defense shall be adequate and impregnable," Green declared. "We do not wish to engage in actions that might jeopardize the preparation of our country's defenses at such critical times as these.

"But," he continued, "neither do we expect to supinely submit to the vicious and repressive anti-labor tactics of certain of the large employers in our industry; employers who are already licking their chops

JOHN GREEN
Shipyard Union Head

Washington, Sept. 9—Demands of CIO seamen for adequate war risk bonuses, pay raises to compensate for dangers in sailing to belligerent waters, and insurance moved toward success today as the Natl. Maritime Union pressed its campaign on three fronts.

The demands, based on a 50 per cent wage increase, a $250 bonus per trip, and insurance of $25,000 for unlicensed personnel, have been agreed to "in principle" by the American Merchant Marine Institute, employer organization in the industry.

HEAVY RISKS

NMU leaders pointed out that these demands were reasonable compensation for the heavy risks taken by seamen in manning ships in submarine-infested waters. At the same time, American crews on ships in European ports worked double shifts and gave up their own quarters to anxious citizens fleeing Europe.

In Washington, NMU legisla-

Standard Oil Jockeying Condemned

New York, Sept. 9 — Standard Oil embarked on a policy of hypocrisy in the midst of the war crisis, the National Maritime Union charged today.

The union is conducting consumer action battle against the big monopoly until it signs a contract covering oil tanker crews.

The NMU asserted that when Standard Oil realized the inevitability of a European war, it "immediately began to play the role of a good patriot" by changing some of its ships from foreign flags to the American flags and allegedly replacing fascist crews with Americans.

That, the union said, "was only a side show to try and fool the public."

HIRED BRITISH

When the S.S. L. V. McKnight arrived at Bayonne, N. J., last week to change its crew, the company found it could secure British seamen for half the wages American seamen receive.

"It immediately got busy picking up all the English seamen

River Boatmen Win Pact in Pittsburgh

PITTSBURGH, Sept. 9—River boatmen here affiliated with the Inland Boatmen's Division of the National Maritime Union, have just negotiated the first union contract for boatmen ever signed in Pittsburgh. The agreement is with the Campbell Transportation Company and covers about 150 men employed on all the firm's six boats.

Wage increases ranging from five to eleven per cent are provided in the new pact which becomes effective Sept. 1, 1939. Union officials said that the new wage rates are the highest paid and will benefit not only the 150 Campbell employes directly, but also effect 5,000 workers of two other companies — the Federal and the Mississippi Barge lines.

The present contracts with these two lines includes a provision that the companies will meet any upward revision in wages in the industry.

The new Campbell agreement, in addition to a pay increase, provides 30 days' vacation each year, closed shop, shorter hours, and improved working conditions.

French Labor Asked CIO Support for Peace Pleas

Washington, Sept. 9.—Just before declaration of the second European war, French labor appealed to the CIO for support of President Roosevelt's peace proposals—proposals which were ignored by Hitler.

President Leon Jouhaux, head of the French Confederation of Labor (CGT) sent the following cable to President John L. Lewis on Sept. 1:

"After the appeal of the International Federation of Trade Unions, the French General Conferation of Labor addresses you in these grave hours with an appeal that in united action of the labor organizations of the United States you lend your unanimous support to the so-highly humane action of President Roosevelt in favor of safeguarding peace with honor and dignity. In the assurance of your collaboration for the defense of the right and liberty basic to all civilization, receive our fraternal salutations."

Lewis cabled the following reply:

"Acknowledging your cable, American labor profoundly conscious of gravity of problem now faced by people of the several countries of Europe. Without question, the workers of America approve proposals for honorable mediation or conciliation of dispute. We will yet hope that conflict of major propositions will be avoided. Fraternal salutes to the workers of France."

Labor and the European War

The European war cast a gigantic and horrifying shadow over the recent Labor Day celebrations throughout the United States and Canada.

Speaking to audiences who just the day before had heard of the British and French declarations of war, following the German invasion of Poland, the leaders of the CIO voiced labor's reaction to the international calamity.

"Labor in America wants no war nor any part of war. Labor wants the right to work and live—not the privilege of dying by gunshot or poison gas to sustain the mental errors of current statesmen."

Lewis denounced propaganda designed to involve the United States in war, and emphasized the importance of dealing with unemployment and other pressing problems of social insecurity.

"The destiny of our own country should be in keeping of its own people," he said, "and it should not become a puppet to be pulled by strings from the war-lusting rulers of Europe."

Speaking to a Canadian audience at Hamilton, Ont., Vice-President Philip Murray emphasized that just as the CIO operates as an American institution in the United States, in Canada it operates as a Canadian institution which will support the nation in its "greatest emergency."

Vice-President Sidney Hillman, in a Labor Day message, hit at "autocratic and irresponsible powers that violate the rules of international traffic. The strengthening of democracy in our nation is the great contribution we can make toward international peace," he said.

Secretary James B. Carey, in his broadcast, denounced "the mad and bloodthirsty dictator of Germany, whose power came from the failure of the German people to win for themselves the prosperity the CIO is fighting for."

Pointing out that labor must "bear the brunt of the work and sacrifice" in war, Carey declared that "labor asks proper treatment for itself and its rightful voice in the councils where decisions are made."

Demanding the inclusion of labor, farmer and consumer representatives of war boards and similar governmental agencies, he said that with such representatives seated "in numbers more nearly related to the numbers of people these organizations represent, this nation is more likely to remain at peace, and better prepared in case of war."

The above quotations indicate what is most on American labor's mind at this time of crisis:

(1) That it wants no part in foreign wars.

(2) That it demands proper representation in all governmental agencies, whose decisions and activities so vitally affect the laboring people.

(3) That it believes the cause of peace is best served by the strengthening of our democracy through the building of the progressive labor movement, and through measures to set our own house in order by coping with unemployment and economic insecurity.

League Lists Voting Record of Congress

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9—Labor's Non-Partisan League has just published a special issue of The National Bulletin which contains the most important roll calls of the recent session of Congress.

Measures of vital interest to labor, farmers and progressives are included in the league tabulation. The vote of Senators and Representatives on these issues reflects their general attitude toward pro-labor legislation.

Extra copies of this special issue may be obtained from Labor's Non-Partisan League, Earle Building, Washington, D. C.

Taking A Stand

Looking Ahead

By LEN DE CAUX

Fiction When Facts Fail

TRUTH, as usual, has been the first casualty in the European war. But let no one think that we in America are behindhand in preparedness for massacring the facts.

While the war propagandists of Europe painstakingly try to present their fictions as sober fact, some of our magazines have developed the art of making regular fictional thrillers out of real people and real movements like the CIO.

To illustrate the new technique of such fiction magazines, let us consider the kind of job they might do on the American Federation of Labor if they used against it the same methods of fact-distortion as they use against the CIO.

'Lowdown' for a Nickel'

The AFL is losing ground to the CIO, as Labor Board election results amply demonstrate. It is tending to disintegrate through internal dissension.

You naturally think this is due to the workers' preference for the modern industrial unionism of the CIO. But the magazine implies you are simple-minded to accept such an obvious explanation. The real reason, it claims, is much more exciting.

The magazine offers a Mr. Stoolbird or a Mr. X who for the price of a nickel will give you "the real lowdown" which only he has discovered.

You may have had the impression that the AFL was run by a pink-faced, cherubic and almost painfully respectable gentleman named William Green, assisted by a number of executive council members whose characteristics seem only too obvious.

But fiction in this case is made much stranger than truth by the all-seeing, all-knowing Mr. Stoolbird.

For one solitary nickel you can be told by him that the AFL is really run by the Nazi party of Germany — and thrown in for good measure is a cowboy yarn, a detective story, something about a movie star, an editorial attacking the wagner Act, and Little Lulu.

Your breath is naturally taken away by this revelation exclusively vouchsafed to Mr. Stoolbird. But you'll have to stay breathless for a few minutes more reading time. For the plot gets thicker and thicker.

Green is not really a Nazi himself, it is admitted with a great show of fairness. But he is the willing prisoner of Woll, Hutcheson, Frey, the heads of most of the AFL unions and most of his own organizers—all of whom, you get the impression, are Nazis.

But hold your lawyers, gentlemen of the AFL council. Before you file your libel suits, you will find the magazine has lawyers too, skilled in the art of covering up lies with the whitewash of insinuation.

Contrary to first impressions, you will find that Mr. Stoolbird does not say the AFL leaders and organizers are actually members of the Nazi-Bund. In fact, he says the Nazi rulers of the AFL are so subtle that they require their agents not to be members.

How a man can be a Nazi without being a Nazi is a problem easily solved by Mr. Stoolbird. He invents the words 'Hitlerist" and "Hitleroid," which he feels he can apply with impunity to anyone he chooses.

Resourceful In Outs

Now it so happens that most of the AFL leaders are well known to have no sympathy with nor even knowledge of the doctrines of Herr Hitler. But that doesn't stump Mr. Stoolbird.

If they are not Hitlerists themselves, he says they are surrounded by Hitlerists. And if this still strains your credulity, Mr. Stoolbird speaks vaguely of "fellow-travelers" — people who are not Hitlerists but who share the Hitlerists' taste for such things as liverwurst and lager beer, and who will travel along with them until they get them, if no further.

If, however, your enjoyment of all this fiction is stil spoiled by a haunting sense of unreality—if it strains your imagination too much to think of the work-hating, pinochle - playing, simple - minded old men of the AFL executive council as sinister Hitlerists, associates of Hitlerists or fellow-travelers with the Nazi-Bund — then the resourceful Mr. Stoolbird has yet another out.

He will tell you that the AFL is not really run by its apparent leaders, but by several staff members of devious and totalitarian character who, if they are not Hitlerists, are Hitleristic, or influenced by Hitleroid fellow-travelers, etc., etc.

It Doesn't Make Sense

It's all very involved, contradictory and ridiculous if you try to figure it out. But you can't expect a nickel thriller to make sense.

In any case, the millionaire anti-union interests that run such magazines would never bother to do a job like this on a movement that is innocuous and decaying.

It is precisely because the CIO is growing in strength, vigor and effectiveness, because attacks on it and attempted disruption have failed, and because election results show that the trend is all toward the CIO, that these interests turn to fiction to use against the CIO when facts fail them.

Lewis, In Labor Day Speech, Demands Jobs For All, Freedom From War

(Following are excerpts from the Labor Day speech of CIO President John L. Lewis. Mr. Lewis spoke to the nation over the coast-to-coast blue network of the National Broadcasting Co.)

I am happy to have this opportunity to speak to my fellow Americans upon this Labor Day.

Although the workers of America are celebrating this day, I know that in their hearts there is an anxiety and concern for the future which casts a deep shadow upon every picnic ground and every meeting hall where the millions of labor are assembled. I know that every home and every family is haunted today by the fear, and many of them by the reality, of unemployment and destitution.

This, our holiday, is a time not just for merry-making—although I hope that it is bringing relaxation and recreation into the burdensome lives of our harassed working men and women—but it is our day for stock-taking, for looking backward over the year passed and for surveying, as well as we can, the year to come.

That look in retrospect and that survey of the future give labor little reason for gratitude or for trustfulness, upon this Labor Day of 1939. We see behind us a road made difficult by the callous indifference or the cold brutality of those who rule the nation. Our victories have been won by our own strength and by the justice of our cause; our progress has been slowed down by the antagonism of those upon whom we should have been able to rely for assistance. Looking toward the future, we scan the horizon in vain for any sign that a new intelligence among those rulers, or a new concern for humanity, will reinforce the efforts of labor as we press forward. But we have gone forward, and we will go forward, and neither the antagonism of open enemy nor the faithlessness of false friend shall avail to halt our march.

Progress of CIO

Since our last Labor Day, many thousands of workers who have heretofore been helpless and inarticulate have gained, through organization, a voice in determining the conditions under which they labor. Because of these new unions, democracy today has won a beginning in mills and factories, which, a year ago, were unchecked autocracies. Life has been made easier, and more secure for these workers. That is real progress, and we are proud of every inch of those great gains.

If labor had to survey only the limited field within which its unions function directly, its responsibilities would be less grave. But as American citizens we must look beyond mere organizational activity.

We see clearly that many of the men into whose hands we have entrusted the government of the United States, have lost sight of the fact that the welfare of the people should be the primary objective of government. They seem determined to subordinate human beings to inanimate, material things, as though these were the purposes of government—as though tons of steel, or barrels of oil, or dollars of bank clearings were the sufficient and final test of our national well-being.

Unemployment

Let us consider the plight into which incompetent industrial and political leadership has led this nation. Where does labor stand, where does the nation stand, as the year 1939 enters its final months? Of the many grave economic and political problems confronting us, that presented by our millions of unemployed workers is still by far the most serious. For ten years we have been struggling in the great swamp of the depression. We have sometimes climbed a little nearer solid ground, and at times we have slipped deeper into the mire.

But the net effect of all the efforts that have been made is to leave the number of unemployed not far less than at the worst period of the depression. There has been some resumption of industrial activity in 1939, but it is scarcely enough to absorb the advance guard of the army of our unemployed.

In this wealthy nation, there is no possible excuse for denying to men and women willing and able to work an opportunity to earn their living by working. But not less than ten, and perhaps as many as thirteen millions of men and women are out of work in the United States today.

Young and Old

These unemployed could not be absorbed into American industry even though we returned to the production levels of our peak year. And their numbers steadily increase. Every year new hundreds of thousands of young people reach employment age, joining the milling millions around our factory gates. What are we going to do about these youths? Our schools are graduating more and finer young people today than ever before.

Thus far the plans of industrial managers have gone no further than to make use of the vigor of the young men and women by displacing the older workers, and speeding up machinery and assembly line so that the nerves and muscles of these new comers may be transformed into the mass production of the factories. It is a major test of our civilization to offer opportunities worthy of the youth of America, and a major failure that we have not done so.

At the other end of the age scale, the indictment of our present-day policies is, if possible, more damning. We have put upon the statute books a social security act, a beginning—and a very slight one—toward provision for the aged. In plain truth, that provision is purely nominal.

The depression slashed from our payrolls first of all these older workers, who had already fed into the machines their fine years. Americans in later age brackets found themselves deprived of all income. Those who had savings saw, as though an earthquake had opened a chasm before their feet, their slender resources torn from them in the general crash of the banks. To all of us, the great depression has meant trials almost beyond enduring; to the aged, these ten years have been indescribable tragedy. Each year has made more clear the need for adequate pensions for our older people, but no year has brought more cruel disappointment to them than the year 1939.

The Farmers

The hardships inflicted upon our industrial wage earners have been paralleled upon the farms. The farmer, in fact, has not known reasonably prosperous conditions since the end of the World War.

Production in America proceeds as a partnership between industry and agriculture. Historically, at least, agriculture is the senior partner; our industries find their raw materials and their greatest ultimate market in rural America. But the senior partner is in a very bad way. A nation of free farmers has been transformed into one of tenants and share-croppers, clinging precariously to the land upon terms dictated by remote financial control. The individual farmer, who once held his destiny in his own hands, now rents his farm from a New England life insurance company, buys his implements from an international machinery monopoly, and sells his products upon a market and at a price controlled by a Chicago speculator.

The extreme poverty of millions of American farmers, the insecurity of all farmers, is a national problem which cannot be neglected. In his own right, and by virtue of the heart-breaking labor of himself and his family, the farmer is entitled to economic security, to all the comforts of modern life and to a price for his products not less than their cost of production.

These are our basic economic problems—the unemployment of our workers, the hopelessness of our youth, the helplessness of our aged and the submergence of our farmers. Fhom these fundamental dislocations have flowed a long stream of unhappy consequences, in some manner affecting every American.

Need for Leadership

The solution of the national problems calls for strong national leadership capable of understanding the economic and the complicated integration of the country's productive and marketing facilities.

America's number one base problem is productive work for its population. Solve this and every incidental and collateral question assumes its proper proportions, checks into its own slot and becomes relatively insignificant.

With employment comes buying power, plant operation, fulfillment of obligations, community activity, tax revenue, freedom from fear and individual security.

Displacement and economic abandonment of twenty-five per cent of the adult population able to work constitutes a threat to the stability of the republic. Attempts to maintain alive this population by direct and work relief, while humanely commendable, makes no contribution to solution of the basic problem.

The nation cannot forever continue its appalling drift. Privation is taking a toll from the population that cannot forever be endured. Thoughtless and sadly executed experimentation will not always suffice to beguile a suffering people. The internal national debt has already reached such proportions that it may never be liquidated by orthodox methods.

Labor and War

In the face of the economic debacle in America many of our statesmen are more concerned and agitated over the political quarrels in Europe. War has always been the device of the politically despairing and intellectually sterile statesmen. It provides employment in the gun factories and begets enormous profits for those already rich. It kills off the vigorous males who, if permitted to live, might question the financial and political exploitation of the race. Above all, war perpetuates in imperishable letters on the scroll of fame and history, the names of its political creators and managers.

Labor in America wants no war nor any part of war. Labor wants the right to work and live—not the privilege of dying by gunshot or poison gas to sustain the mental errors of current statesmen.

During the last fortnight our country has been subjected to an overdose of war propaganda. Patently an attempt is being made to create the illusion that when war breaks in Europe, the United States in some mysterious fashion will forthwith be involved. Such a concept is of course a monumental deception and amounts to a betrayal of national interest.

The country is being told of the statesmen and national leaders who are spending sleepless nights in worry over the situation in Europe. In every way, how much better it would be if the same statesmen would spend a few sleepless nights in devising a way for one-fourth of America's workers to get a job at a wage that would keep them alive.

One way to achieve this objective would be for the federal government to institute modern methods of expanding the export of American surplus commodities. Exclusive of supplies utilized in the military rearmament of foreign nations, the export trade of America is diminishing. The completion of Japanese plans in the Orient will drive American exporters from that market. In Europe the German and British influence will substantially accomplish the same result. The American reciprocal trade agreements are a delusion and a snare. They contribute neither whit nor jot to the sum total of our foreign trade volume and, all things being equal, have never put an American to work.

How essential, then, that the trade territory of the Western Hemisphere be preserved and developed for the advantage of American industry. Central and South America is capable of absorbing all of our excess and surplus commodities if the problem is approached with intelligence and modern methods are pursued. Obviously, increased trade volume with the Latin-American countries would result in improved political and cultural relationships and make for increased security for the United States when the day comes that some imperialistic foreign power challenges the Monroe Doctrine.

Countries of the Western Hemisphere are self-contained and have no need to participate in the festering intrigue and ancient political quarrels of Europe. The destiny of our own country should be in the keeping of its own people and it should not become a puppet to be pulled by strings from the war-lusting rulers of Europe.

In the march of years 1940 will be one of the cross-roads of destiny for the people of the United States. Labor must increasingly organize and prepare to participate, upon a scale greater than ever before, in the political contests of the year. Let those who will seek the votes of the workers of America be prepared to guarantee jobs for all Americans and freedom from foreign wars.

Prepare Program For Congress, Unions Urged

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—All CIO affiliates were urged today to start pressing a labor progressive program in the coming session of Congress, either for its regular session in January or a possible special session called to deal with the war crisis in Europe.

They were warned that the tory Republican-renegade Democrat coalition that hacked so much of the New Deal at the last session, will intensify its anti-labor offensive, and were urged to form lines now for coming struggles over the Wagner Act, social security, wages and hours, housing, and the like. The warning was sent in the form of a circular letter from Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, released to all CIO units today.

"It is extremely important," the letter said, "that organized labor in all localities should get in touch with the Congressmen and Senators and let them know what labor thinks about these issues."

SWEPT ALONG

The reactionary coalition, "acting contrary to the desires of the overwhelming mass of people who gave their mandate to President Roosevelt in 1936," was successful to the extent that labor failed to press its program, the letter explains.

"A number of Congressmen were swept along during the past Congress because they did not know exactly whether this reactionary tendency represented the prevailing feeling in their community or not," it said.

"The barrage of the press and the high-powered lobbyists of the big financial interests in Washington confused them. In some cases the absence of any clear and positive communication from the people back home left Congressmen without any guide as to the true feelings of their constituencies."

REACH CONGRESSMEN

Labor's task is to straighten out this confusion in the minds of the Congressmen and Senators, the letter points out. They must be told clearly and positively that labor wants more progressive laws, not less, and wants those now on the books left there unemasculated.

"Those Congressmen who have allied themselves with the reactionary forces in Congress and betrayed the people must be confronted with their record. Liberal Congressmen should receive expressions of support and commendation to assure the continuance of progressive policies," it said.

The letter emphasizes the importance of reaching Congressmen in the home towns now, before they leave for Washington and become necessarily somewhat more difficult to contact. Letters, delegations and personal calls on the legislators in their homes are recommended.

PROGRAM

Discussing the issues involved in the past session and due to come up again in the next, the letter points out that while the Wagner Act was saved at the past session, efforts to preserve it from reactionary attack will have to be kept at the same high level to keep it from annihilation.

On the wages and hours law, the Barden amendments (HR 7133) are cited as the worst danger. This bill, the letter says, "would have practically repealed the protection which the law gives against substandard wages and hours." No hearings were held at the last session on these amendments, and the letter urges labor to demand full opportunity to testify before any amendments are passed in future.

Turning to sins of omission during the past session, the letter cites the collective bargaining guarantee bill (S. 1032) which provides for revoking government contracts to firms violating the Wagner Act, and urges greater pressure than ever before to get it past the House. The bill has already been passed by the Senate, but its companion measure, HR. 3331, was not even reported out in the House.

On social security, the past session did pass some mildly liberalizing amendments, but many more are needed, the letter says. Red tape, inefficiency, and appalling confusion exist in the various laws and their administration, all of which must be simplified and their benefits extended. The letter further cites the CIO stand for $60 a month at 60 years of age for old age assistance.

The need for housing was criminally neglected in the past session, the letter points out, and the work of the U. S. Housing Authority brought almost to a standstill by the refusal to vote $800,000,000 in needed funds. Action to secure this appropriation next session is recommended.

UNEMPLOYMENT

The S. 2507 and HR 6740, both calling for a 3,000,000 job program, are still alive though ignored in the last session and should be pushed, the letter states.

On civil liberties, CIO members are urged to renew the fight for Senator LaFollette's "Oppressive Labor Practices" bill (S. 1970 and HR 6470 outlawing industrial spies, munitions, and use of armed private guards.

Finally, on national health, affiliates are urged to support Sen. Wagner's bill (S. 1620) for a federal program of industrial hygiene, hospital building, etc.

around New York City, with the results that the seven Americans who had been able to secure jobs were paid off. Is it any wonder that American workers are boycotting Standard Oil," the union inquired.

PROFITS CUT

The union noted that consumer resistance to Standard Oil products since the NMU has been fighting the company has resulted in sharply decreased profits for the country. Also on the union's unfair list are Socony Vacuum, Tidewater and C. D. Mallory.

AFL Match Workers Laud Wagner Act

WADSWORTH, O., Sept. 9—Another AFL group has gone on record against Wagner Act amendments.

The National Match Workers' Council, composed of AFL Federal locals in the match industry, passed a resolution at its convention here bucking the federation executive council's demands for changes in the labor act.

Other actions taken by the council included indorsement of CIO President Lewis' attack on Vice-President Garner's tory policies and support for the Wagner Health Bill.

at the prospect of huge war profits at the same time that they continue to defy the law of the land as expressed by the National Labor Relations Act.

WAVE FALSE FLAG

"These employers will not hesitate to wave the false flag of patriotism in an effort to exploit their employes in the shipyard where naval and merchant ships are being built for the U. S. Government."

Green served notice that if employers wish peace in industry, they will have to submit their labor relations policies to drastic overhauling, agree to genuine collective bargaining and grant the workers a "fair return on their labor and a proportionate share of the profits that accrue to the industry."

"These demands are modest," he declared, "and we don't feel that we are holding a gun at the head of the industry or the government when we put them forward."

GOUGED GOVERNMENT

The union president anticipated some measure of government control over the industry "because of the scandalous behavior of the shipbuilding corporations in the last war," when, he charged, "they gouged the government for millions."

"It should be the purpose of this nation," he concluded, "to set an example to the world of how well a genuine political and industrial democracy can function, how we can provide a high standard of living for everyone within our borders, and extend to all that measure of personal liberty and freedom of conscience that is guaranteed in our Constitution."

Seamen Ask War Risk Bonuses

tive representatives reported some resistance from the U. S. Maritime Commission, notorious for its anti-labor, union-busting tactics in the past. Meanwhile, in London. U. S. Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy sent urgent appeals to Washington for American ships to evacuate some 28,000 citizens caught in the war areas.

BESIEGE EMBASSY

All American ships abroad are filled to capacity with Americans alarmed by the sinking of the British liner Athenia, and American lines are experiencing an unprecedented boom in business.

In New York, NMU seamen held up the liner President Roosevelt for six hours to speed negotiations on their demands. They sailed when NMU leader Joseph Curran secured an agreement from the operators that all increases agreed upon would be retroactive for the ship's voyage.

NMU officials point out that the booming business means inflated profits for the companies, that the seamen are entitled to protection for their families in the event of disaster, and that in case of torpedoing, crews are invariably the heaviest sufferers.

come meaningless and pass out of existence.

SWOC Chairman Murray stressed the constructive work of the CIO in contributing to the national welfare. "We work objectively and constructively," he said. "The CIO since its existence has increased the purchasing power of American workers by approximately five billion dollars annually. That is real service."

The social and economic program of the CIO, Director Brophy declared, "represents the will for progress not only of our 4,000,000 members, but of the entire American people." Those reactionary forces that try to block this program, he declared, are "attacking the interests of the entire American people."

Brophy appealed for unity of labor, farmers and all progressive forces in resisting the attacks, by propaganda as well as by political and economic warfare, made on the labor and progressive movement by the common enemies of the national welfare.

CIO CRUSADE

Secretary Carey described the "CIO crusade" as a movement for all the people, dedicated to the welfare of labor, farmers, small businessmen and all who must get their living by working for it.

"If the working people of the European countries had been or now were represented in the governments that are playing power politics with human lives and human civilization," Carey said, "war today would be far away. This Labor Day finds us thinking through the lessons of the past, the lessons of years and decades of struggle for the right to organize, the right to decent living.

"It finds us thinking forward, too, studying the shape of things to come. We want our great nation to be peaceful and prosperous, and that means that we want everyone in it to be peaceful and prosperous."

THREE WANTS

Basic labor needs and desires revolve around three main points, Pressman told his audience in Duluth: "security of jobs, the maintenance and protection of our freedom and democracy, and peace in this world."

Pressman also made the point of the CIIO's service to the whole working population of this country, declaring: "In marching ahead during the past year the CIO has acted not only as a protector of its own members among industrial workers, but has protected the interests of all working people, farmers, small businessmen, and professional groups as well."

Speaking at Flint to a huge Labor Day rally, Walter Smethurst urged his listeners to still greater union and political organization. "Industrial democracy is our goal," he said.

"With increased organization it will be surprising to note the attitude of the boss during periods of contract negotiations. And it is equally surprising the respect that politicians have for the workers when they are organized.

"Every man and every woman who works should be a volunteer in this crusade for industrial democracy, each individual can make a lasting contribution, not only to themselves but to the general welfare of the nation, by joining a union of his trade."

Lewis Asks Neutrality, Jobs for All mestic problems that Lewis devoted the bulk of his half-hour speech.

Recalling that labor's gains have been won only because of labor's strength, he said: "we scan the horizon in vain for any sign" that new intelligence or new concern among the nation's rulers will back up labor's efforts.

ASKS HUMANE APPROACH

He castigated those leaders who "seem determined to subordinate human beings to inanimate, material things, as though these were the purposes of government—as though tons of steel, or barrels of oil, or dollars of bank clearings were the sufficient and final test of our national well-being."

Lewis discussed the growing effects of technological unemployment, the "extreme poverty . . . and insecurity" of millions of farmers, the "hopelessness of the youth" who can find no jobs and the helplessness of the aged," who are dumped out of industry with no provisions for support.

These, he said, are our "basic economic problems" and from these "fundamental dislocations have flowed a long stream of unhappy consequences, in some manner affecting every American." As a nation we are wealthy, the CIO president pointed out, but to preserve our institutions "we must find a way to end the senseless, inhuman degradation of our farm and industrial workers.

STRONG LEADERSHIP

"The solution of the national problem calls for strong national leadership capable of understanding the economics and the complicated integration of the country's productive and marketing facilities.

"America's number one base problem is productive work for its population. Solve this and every incidental and collateral question assumes its proper proportions, checks into its own slot and becomes relatively insignificant.

"With employment comes buying power, plant operation, fulfillment of obligations, community activity, tax revenue, freedom from fear, and individual security."

Oil Union Convention Sept. 11

Hammond, Ind., Sept. 11—Delegates streaming into this city for the annual convention of the Oil Workers International Union, CIO, report growing strength for the D-X-Mid-Continent unfair list drive and increasing consolidation and growth of all local affiliates of the international.

The convention will be highlighted by addresses from R. J. Thomas, president, United Automobile Workers, CIO; Governor Clifford Townsend of Indiana, Congressman William T. Schulte and other prominent labor and political leaders.

WITNESSED PARADE

Delegates who arrived last week witnessed a four-mile Labor Day parade in which CIO and AFL affiliates took joint part.

They also joined the 60,000 workers and their families who attended the CIO picnic after the parade—largest labor gathering ever held in Lake County. Plans are being laid for the formation of an international ladies' auxiliary—first in the history of the Oil Workers. Auxiliaries have played a leading role in the six-months-old strike of oil workers at the Tulsa plants of the Mid-Continent Company, which has been resisting collective bargaining and violating federal and state laws in its attempts to break the union.

BOYS WILL BE GIRLS!—Alluring, charming, divine are the adjectives for these members (male) of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers at the Westinghouse Electric plant in Lima, Ohio. Borrowing their sisters' clothing, they engineered this piece of electioneering previous to a Labor Board election. Result: the union won, and now these boys, who have been paid girls' wages by the corporation, look forward to reclassifications. Cute, aren't they?

Bridges Defense Confident

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 9. The Harry Bridges deportation hearing moved into its eighth week today with a desperate prosecution legal battery bringing to the stand witnesses whom it had previously rejected as unreliable.

Observers judged that the prosecution's first estimate of the witnesses was correct, for they proved a discredited group of men so zealous to "prove" the West Coast CIO director is a Communist that they tripped from one mistake to another.

John A. Kessler, now a cook at Alcatraz prison but formerly chef at Pierre's Chateau—a restaurant allegedly frequented by Communists—failed to advance the prosecution's case.

In his eagerness to identify Bridges as having visited the restaurant, Kessler "identified" everybody suggested to him, until he was thoroughly discredited and had to apologize to the U. S. attorneys for his confusion.

WITNESS REBUKED

Miles Humphrey, ex-Communist and former secretary of a county CIO council until he was expelled from his own union for advocating violence, was another unhappy witness.

Finally Chief Prosecutor Shoemaker had to tell his own witness on the stand that he was not testifying truthfully in regard to his interviews with U. S. Immigration officials.

Murray Offers Facts For Stolberg Fiction

PITTSBURGH, Sept. 9.—"The CIO is fundamentally American, pledged to adhere to American philosophy, doctrine and form of government and will go as far to maintain our institutions as any other group of citizens in America."

This was the reply of CIO Vice-Pres. Philip Murray to the scurrilous, distorted attack on the industrial union movement which appeared in a recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post. Murray's statement was given in a special interview to a correspondent of the Detroit News.

"The record is the best answer that can be made to Stolberg's statement," Murray said.

To illustrate his point, he quoted the CIO's rising membership figure, its highly successful record of organization and contract observance in steel, the growth of the meat packers' union and the steady preference for CIO's rising membership figure, its highly successful record of organization and contract observance in steel, the growth of the meat packers' union and the steady preference for CIO unions which the nation's workers have demonstrated in scores of impartial elections under the auspices of the National Labor Relations Board.

AFL WANTS HITLER PEACE

Of prospects for labor peace—Stolberg had charged the CIO leadership with blocking it—Murray said:

"Like Hitler, the AFL wants peace, but only on its own terms."

Stolberg was putting his money on the wrong horse when he talked about disintegration in the CIO, Murray told the news reporter. Citing the actors' fight, the possible suspension of the Intl. Typographical Union and the long-standing battle of the Brewery Workers with AFL teamsters, he indicated that Stolberg might well look to the AFL for signs of crumbling."

Of CIO membership, Murray had this to say:

"I know of no single union that has lost any membership during the past year to any other union or whose membership has dwindled below the actual dues-paying membership of 1937.

"To the contrary, the records disclose a steady, consistent and almost remarkable growth in membership of 1937.

"To the contrary, the records disclose a steady, consistent and almost remarkable growth in membership."

The CIO vice-president asserted that Stolberg's "red" claims are "baseless," and referred the Satevepost writer to the blessing given by Bishop Sheil to the recent CIO packing meeting in Chicago.

Revives Myths, Thomas Says

Detroit, Sept. 9—Ben Stolberg was taken for a hot ride over the coals today by Pres. R. J. Thomas of the United Automobile Workers, CIO.

"The UAW is in no sense dominated by the Communists, and neither am I," Thomas declared. To revive this myth at a time when Mr. Stolberg's late hero in the UAW has been repudiated even by the AFL shows the Post writer has no sense of reality or fact."

Rubber Union Meets Sept. 11

La Crosse, Wis., Sept. 9.—Members of Local 14, United Rubber Workers, here, are making big preparations for the fourth national convention of their union which opens in this city September 11. Local 19 at Eau Claire, is also cooperating with the La Crosse union, and has planned an evening's entertainment for the delegates during the week of the convention sessions.

Highlight of the entertainment provided for the delegates by Local 14, will be a Winnebago Indian ceremonial dance under the direction of Chief Tom Thunder, a Winnebago chief living in this locality.

CIO Faces Attacks, Council Told

Omaha, Neb., Sept. 9—Labor will face the sharpest attack in its history in 1940, John Brophy, CIO director, told several hundred delegates to the state convention of the Iowa-Nebraska Industrial Union Council, which met here last week.

"The tories are engaged in a deliberate campaign to destroy the social advances made under the New Deal," he said, "but we will not yield to reaction."

Don Harris, president of the Council, was re-elected to head the state CIO for another term. Harris is also director of the Packing House Workers' Organizing Committee, the union which had the largest representation at the convention. Ben Henry, of the United Mine Workers, was re-elected secretary-treasurer.

700 Attend CIO Council Meeting In W. Virginia

HUNTINGTON, W. Va., Sept. 9—Scorching attacks on Governor Homer A. Holt of West Virginia for his anti-unionism were made by several leading speakers at the convention of the State CIO Industrial Union Council which met here last week.

Van A. Bittner, official of the United Mine Workers, which had the largest delegation at the convention, and John Brophy, CIO director, were among the CIO national leaders who addressed the Council.

Brophy praised the work of the council and urged continuation of its efforts.

RAP AT HOLT

U. S. Senator M. M. Neely created a sensation at the opening session by a speech urging the unions to beware of "electing official strike-breakers to office in 1940." Although he mentioned no names, the Senator made plain that he was directing his remarks at Governor Homer A. Holt, who sent out letters last July to 2,500 miners in the state offering them his support if they would go back to work before the United Mine Workers had won union contracts.

President Easton and Bittner also bitterly criticized the Governor for his action. Easton charged that Holt had "deliberately attempted to violate the rights of labor." Bittner was greeted with thunderous cheers when he declared that the recent mine suspension in West Virginia "demonstrated to every labor-hating organization in the country that there is no group powerful enough or influential enough to whip the United Mine Workers."

SCORES GOVERNOR

William Blizzard, vice-president of UMW District 17, and Frank Miley, president of District 31 at Fairmont, also scored the Governor for his attempt to get the miners to go back to work without a contract.

Blizzard declared it was the first time in the history of the state that a governor had ever offered both the national guard and the state police to help the coal operators in their fight against the union.

One of the highlights of the convention here was a testimonial banquet attended by approximately 500 delegates to pay tribute to West Virginia's Grand Old Man of Labor, Ned Sims. For 55 years Mr. Sims has been active in the labor movement and, although a member of the AFL typographical union during all of that time, is a vice-president of the state CIO council and one of the movement's most active and most influential members.

Metal Miners Ask Probe Of Attack

Vigilante Mob Surrounded Hall; Two Men Hurt

SILVERTON, Colo., Sept. 9—The U. S. Dept. of Justice today was considering requests for an investigation of a vicious vigilante attack on striking metal miners and two organizers of the Intl. Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

Intl. Rep. A. S. Embree and Exec. Sec. Chester W. Yates of the local spent the night in a nearby town after being escorted from Silverton by law enforcement officers after a brick-throw-ing, club-wielding mob besieged members of the union in the Miners' Hall and threatened to lynch their leaders.

The vigilante outbreak, formented by persons who were trying to stir up a back-to-work movement for the company, developed at the end of the union's regular meeting.

Pre-Arranged Signal

When it was learned that internal disruption had failed and that the union was solidly united against a company-sponsored back-to-work plan, the mob suddenly began to gather, obviously on a pre-arranged signal. Bricks and stones crashed through windows of the hall as Sheriff Patterson and his deputies held the mob off for an hour.

As it became apparent that they could do so no longer, Embree and Yates agreed to leave town under sheriff's escort provided the ring-leaders of the vigilantes would not molest the rank-and-file unionists or further damage the union hall.

As the union members hurried to their homes, vigilante efforts were made to manhandle Embree. Street fighting broke out and two unionists were beaten and clubbed.

Leaders of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers said the strike would be continued despite the attack. The dispute started in mid-July when the company rejected union proposals for a new contract and led the local to believe it was uninterested in signing a decent agreement.

BACK CANDIDATE

Philadelphia—The Philadelphia Industrial Union Council has endorsed Angelo Pasquarella, long-time member of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, in his candidacy for city magistrate.

100,000 Units Completed By USHA

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9—The number of of low-income families to be rehoused under the program of the United States Housing Authority has now passed the 100,000 mark, according to Administrator Nathan Straus. About one-third of the 101,961 dwelling units now under development or being planned will be occupied by low-income Negro families in 90 communities throughout the country.

Recent loan contracts approved provide for Negro housing projects in Birmingham, Ala.; Tampa, Fla.; Columbus, Ga.; Gary, Ind.; Summitt, N. J.; Kingsport, Tenn., and Austin, Tex.

'Leading Citizen' On The Run

Washington, Sept. 9—Reports from CIO affiliates and progressive groups all over the nation show a rising—and effective—tide of protest against the labor-baiting, "Our Leading Citizen," released by Paramount.

Following labor action in cities as far apart as Los Angeles, Toledo, Madison, Wis., and New York, the misleading production has been withdrawn or has played to two-bit business in scores of Paramount houses.

Latest CIO union to rap the producers, who were repeatedly warned while the picture was still in script form, is Local 16 of the United Office and Professional Workers, whose executive board wrote:

"This film is deliberately anti-labor and distorts and perverts the very principles and motives of the American labor movement. Our union has committed itself to use its influence among its members, their friends and relatives to boycott this film and to urge its immediate withdrawal from circulation."

Leather Firm Rapped By Board

Washington, Sept. 9—The Superior Tanning Company, Chicago, was ordered this week by the Labor Board to stop discouraging membership in Local 43, National Leather Workers' Association, CIO, and to stop giving effect to individual contracts entered into with its employes It was also ordered to reinstate a fired worker with back pay.

The CIO union began a membership campaign at the company's plant shortly after the Supreme Court upheld the validity of the National Labor Relations Act in April, 1937. The company met this by calling a general meeting of all employes and confronting them with individual contracts, which were later distributed by supervisory employes who requested their workers to sign.

The Board found on the basis of all the evidence that "the meeting was a challenge to the attempted unionization of the company's employes, a challenge which was understood as such by the employes and to which they capitulated when they signed the individual contracts of employment." The Board called this a "pretense" at collective bargaining.

HEALTH PLAN

Chicago—The Social Service Employes Union, CIO, has signed an agreement with the Civic Medical Center of Chicago, setting up a health security plan for the union's members.

Eight Shoe Firms Hit By Board

Washington, Sept. 9—Eight major shoe companies in Maine were ordered by the Labor Board this week to bargain collectively with the United Shoe Workers, CIO, and to cease interfering with genuine trade union organization in their plants.

The order came after repeated violations by the companies of the rights of their workers and after long defiance of previous Labor Board decisions, which had certified the Shoe Workers as sole collective bargaining agency as long as 1937.

The companies, all located at Auburn, Me., provoked a bitter strike of their workers at the time, in which many union leaders and active members were gassed, clubbed, and finally jailed by a reactionary court.

CIO Can Aid Iron Range Men—Germer

Ironwood, Mich., Sept. 9—Asserting that "absentee owners and coupon clippers obviously refuse to understand the problems" of the people who live in the Iron Range in Michigan's upper peninsula, Pres. Adolph Germer of the state's Industrial Union Council invited the workers to join the CIO and improve their conditions.

In a half-hour radio address, Germer called the "ghost towns" of the area "living symbols of the greed and inhumanity of these corporations," which have taken great wealth from the earth.

Denying slanders that the CIO is interested in promoting violence, the council leader said that the workers who make up CIO unions are set on winning American standards of living through peaceful methods.

"With cooperation between the miners and timber workers organized into strong CIO unions and all working together with the farmers union and with the national and state CIO organizations, labor can bring new vigor, new hope and new life into the Upper Peninsula," Germer said.

Agreement Puts Leash On 'Yellow Dogs'

CHICAGO, Sept. 9—Leaders of the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee moved today to take advantage of the first big break in the anti-union front of the giant farm implement trust.

Deere & Co., located at Davenport, Ia., last week signed a stipulation with the National Labor Relations Board in which it agreeed to obey the letter of the Wagner Act — understanding that violation of the stipulation will lead to contempt of court proceedings.

By signing the agreement with the NLRB, the Deere firm eliminated long NLRB hearings on unfair practices, and killed its 37-year-old yellow dog contract labor relations policy.

OLD PRACTICE

The company has long followed a practice of forcing each employe to sign an individual contract with the company, under which collective bargaining rights were sharply curtailed. The firm promised the Labor Board not to discriminate in regard "to hire, tenure, terms or conditions of employment" through any yellow dog agreement in the future.

"This opens the way for the establishment of genuine collective bargaining at all Deere Co. plants," commented Joseph Weber, FEWOC assistant director. Plans for a big organizing drive are being rushed.

Stooge, Lawyer Star In Farce Roles

CHICAGO, Sept. 9—Labor Board hearings against the Intl. Harvester Co. took on a Gilbert & Sullivan appearance today, with the company's stooges and $1,000-a-day legal battery playing the comic leads.

Otto Sattler, company union big-wig, admitted under cross-eexamination, that appication cards for the so-called independent union had been printed two days before the mass meeting at which the outfit was "spontaneously" organized.

The company's lawyers took up where Sattler left off by moving for a "mistrial" because of a leaflet issued by the Farm Equipment Workers' Organizing Committee local at IHC's West Pullman plant.

The leaflet, noting company attempts at intimidation, merely told the workers that they did not have to give false testimony for the company at the Labor Board hearing.

Trial Examiner Charles Whittemore, a veteran of several score similar performances by the IHC brain trust, calmly denied the motion to dismiss.

Miners Win Pay For Idle Time

Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 9.—CIO coal miners in the United Mine Workers have won a great victory in the decision of the Unemployment Compensation Board to pay benefits to 15,000 who were locked out by operators during the April shutdown, John Owens, district UMWA president, declared here.

The decision means that Ohio miners will get about $500,000 in compansation, Owens pointed out. "The coal miners did not want to inconvènience the coal-consuming public and they did not want to be out of employment," he said.

"The victory is of benefit not only to the miners but to all workers in Ohio and the nation. The decision stands as an example to anti-labor employers who would attempt to use a piece of social legislation against union members who sponsored its passage."

War!

EFFECTS OF EUROPE'S WAR were quickly felt in the United States.

Pictures show three quick developments as the conflict rounded out its second week. At top, members of the National Maritime Union sign up for work on the S. S. Roosevelt after refusing to do so until they received satisfactory replies to demands for war bonuses and insurance protection. Company agreed to negotiate and to make any benefits retroactive to time of strike.

Government, meanwhile, took steps to prevent profiteering in food — of which there is still an abundance, as the photo taken in New York City's market district indicates.

Profiteering now, as they did in the last war, speculators enjoyed a boom as stock prices swept upwards, reaping huge rewards for the insiders. New York Stock Exchange (shown below) had some of its busiest days in history, with "war baby" issues swinging to new highs for the year.

But American workers and farmers found prices sweeping upward, in effect giving them all a sizeable cut in wages.

PROTECT LABOR, END PROFITEERING, CIO UNIONS ASK

(See Story, Page Three; Editorial, Page Four)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16 — America must stay out of Europe's War.

Profiteering must be stopped.

The war danger must not be used as an excuse to undermine labor's hard-won victories during the past three years.

These are the universal demands of American workers as first effects of the European conflict began to be felt in the United States.

Conventions of a number of CIO unions—shipyard workers, electrical workers, oil workers and rubber workers—demanded labor representation on basic war policy boards of the U. S. government, and warned Tory employers that their members stand ready to protect the advances gained by their organizations.

Similar sentiments were voiced by city and state labor bodies, and in a wire sent to Pres. Roosevelt by Sec.-Treas. Bruce Hannon of the powerful Maritime Federation of the Pacific.

Meanwhile, real wages of the nation's industrial workers skidded as food prices shot upwards—in many cases as much as 20 and 30%—as speculators and monopolies took advantage of the war fears of the people. Consumer and labor groups sent immediate protests to the government, and Pres. Roosevelt, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and Secretary of Interior Ickes promised action.

Whether prosecution of profiteers is possible under existing statutes is being studied by the anti-trust division of the Dept. of Justice.

Textile Workers Press For Pay Increases To Match Price Rise

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—Moving quickly to keep wage rates in line with the soaring cost of living, Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union, CIO, today called a meeting of the organization's national executive board for September 28.

"At this meeting, the executive board of the TWU will consider the possibilities of and the means for securing general wage increases in the textile industries to compensate the workers for the rising cost of living and the increasing profitableness of industry, and to offset the reductions made in textile wages during the spring and summer of 1938."

In issuing the call for the latter part of the month, Rieve said the intervening time would be spent in studying conditions likely to prevail in the near future.

MEET LIVING COSTS

"Every increase in the cost of living must be compensated by wage increases so that the living standards of textile workers are not depressed," Rieve continued. "They are now receiving the lowest wages among the industrial workers of this country, and are living at inadequate levels.

"Substantial wage increases would raise their living standards and assure this country of the best protection against foreign aggression as well as create the well-being which our democracy desires."

The TWU leader said that recent successes in winning a 5 per cent wage increase and vacations with pay in the carpet and rug industry are only a "forerunner to similar advances in all branches of the industry.

"The workers were compelled to bear the burden of unprofitable business. It is now time that they share in the rising profitablenesss of industry."

Andrews OKs 32½c Textile Wage Rate

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16—Overriding protests of southern manufacturers, Wage-Hour Administrator Elmer Andrews today ordered a 32½-cent minimum hourly wage for the textile industry.

Some 650,000 workers will benefit, directly or indirectly, by the order, effective October 24.

Andrews' order backed up the recommendations of the textile industry committee.

CIO WINS

New York — A Labor Board election among editorial and commercial employes of the New York Post resulted in a 338-20 victory for the CIO American Newspaper Guild.

Athenia Survivors Praise CIO Crew

Halifax, N. S., Sept. 15.—Survivors from the torpedoed liner Athenia landed here by the U. S. City of Flint were full of praise for the heroic and self-sacrificing conduct of the CIO seamen who rescued them.

The crew of the City of Flint, 90 per cent organized in the CIO Natl. Maritime Union, worked unceasingly for the survivors' security and comfort, giving up their own bunks and donating clothing and food to the rescued.

These are the men whose union is demanding and winning an adequate system of war risk compensation for travel in belligerent waters. They are exposed to extreme risks as well as hardship in sailing American vessels to Europe at this time.

Four CIO Unions Plan Campaigns

Electrical Union Maps Organizing Drives For Year

By LYLE DOWLING

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Sept. 16.—The fifth convention of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, just ended here, gave special recognition to the new "war situation" in convention actions which indorsed the President's foreign policy, condemned food profiteering, urged Roosevelt to run for a third term, and made organizatoinal plans centering around portions of industry affected by events abroad.

The general officers—President James B. Carey, who is also national secretary of the CIO; Julius Emspak, general secretary-treasurer, and James J. Matles, director of organization—were unanimously re-elected. In their lengthy general report on the past 12 months, the general officers stated that a yearly average of 210,000 workers are now working under the UE banner — under signed contracts, verbal or memorandum and letter agreements. It was stated unofficially that the number of workers thus protected varies seasonably from 190,000 to more than 230,000.

The "third term for Roosevelt" resolution, passed unanimously, not only specifically indorsed the President's foreign policy, but was unusual in that it called on Roosevelt to "spare no efforts in bringing to light the oft-hidden facts about the nature of the reactionary forces that conspire against the common good" and counseled him "to make no compromise with these reactionary groups but on the contrary to provide the people with that clear-cut, vigorous, fighting leadership that he can give."

HIT PRICE RISES

In the midst of reports of unreasonably increasing food prices, Local 730 of Warren, Ohio, introduced and had passed a resolution urging "the establishment of a federal food board to regulate the prices of food and other necessities of life," and urged that the CIO and other labor organizations be represented on such a board.

Sessions from Monday, Sept. 4, to Friday, Sept. 8, were held in the Municipal auditorium here. The bright blue convention caps of more than 200 delegates from more than 100 locals, ranging in membership from 500 to 15,000, filled the city.

The community was especially impressed when all officers and delegates marched in a picket line around the Springfield Upholstery Works, where members of United Furniture Workers are on strike. "Host" locals of the union kept delegates' spare time filled with entertainment and social features.

MOONEY A 'HERO'

From the time he arrived at the railway station until he left after making a moving speech at the convention, Tom Mooney was a special "hero" of the convention. Other notable speakers were Michael Quill, president of Transport Workers' Union; Edwin S. Smith of the National Labor Relations Board, E. L. Oliver of Labor's Non-Partisan League. The general executive board of the union conferred before and after the convention.

Shipyard Union Plans Big Drive

Jersey City, N. J., Sept. 16.—Launching of a campaign to bring remaining unorganized shipyards in the country under the CIO banner was voted unanimously at the national convention of the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers which met in Jersey City last week.

To aid this campaign delegates voted to increase the per capita tax and to seek long-term loans from the larger and more prosperous locals.

Pres. John Green's opening statement that the union would take full advantage of the present employment conditions in the shipbuilding industry to press for genuine collective bargaining and for a higher standard of wages and working conditions, was endorsed by the convention.

COMPLETE PROGRAM

A complete program of demands was adopted looking toward the eventual establishment of a national agreement and standard conditions in all shipyards in the country.

Both Pres. Green and Sec.-Treas. Philip Van Gelder were unanimously re-elected. John F. Dempsey, Local 16, was elected vice-pres. to replace Benjamin Carwardine who declined to run again.

A resolution was adopted by the convention endorsing New Deal accomplishments and policies, but another endorsing Pres. Roosevelt for a third term was rejected.

Officers reported to the convention that the industry is now near maximum employment except for the repair section, and that new shipbuilding yards are being opened in different parts of the country.

Wisconsin CouncilMeets Sept. 29

Milwaukee, Sept. 16. — Wisconsin's Industrial Union Council will hold its 1939 convention at Racine on Sept. 29-30 and Oct. 1, CIO union leaders announced today.

Twice postponed, the convention date was finally set after an agreement which brought a number of previously unaffiliated locals into the council.

"The basis for a truly democratic convention, in which every local union will have its true voice and vote, has been laid down," Sec. Gunnar Mickelsen declared in a letter to member unions.

Rubber Union Asks Protection For Labor's Rights

LA CROSSE, Wisc., Sept. 16. — Demanding that "labor's legal rights should be recognized and maintained" in times of war, delegates to the annual convention of the United Rubber Workers, CIO, demanded representation for labor on the new U. S. War Resources Board.

The resolution, passed without a dissenting vote, warned of the danger that the European war may result "in seriously restricting the civil rights of labor and of the people generally" in this country.

"The best protection against such abrogation of the rights of labor and of the people lies in a strongly-organized labor movement," the convention statement said. At the same time it expressed "warm endorsement of Pres. Roosevelt's patriotic and humanitarian efforts to maintain peace," and endorsed a third term for the President.

Pres. Sherman Dalrymple, in his opening address to the convention, said that "if the New Deal is to continue after 1940, we must build our unions and we must close our ranks.

"We must go forward as a united body determined to make America the leader in a campaign for social progress and freedom."

He said that organization campaigns to complete unionization of the industry's 142,000 workers must be pushed forward, not only to aid the unorganized but to protect gains already made.

The URW paid tribute to the CIO for its defense of progressive legislation.

The convention had gone on record against amendments to the Wagner Act, though expressing accord with an attack on the National Labor Relations Board for its recent "weak-kneed, watery rulings."

Vice-Pres. Thomas Burns, who discussed the Board's recent policies, declared:

"We view with alarm certain recent decisions of the NLRB. In the past few months the Board has interpreted the law in such a way that the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and the AFL won't need amendments.

"We say to the Board: 'We cannot remain your friends unless you return to what Sen. Wagner meant when he wrote the Act."

LEWIS TELEGRAM

Delegates cheered a telegram from CIO Pres. John L. Lewis, which said: "The CIO is very proud of the United Rubber Workers, and watches with deepest interest the growth and progress of your great union. In these tragic days we of the CIO are faced with new and profound public responsibility. We must bend all our energies to keep this country out of war and to maintain here a progressive, democratic way of life."

Other resolutions passed by the convention called for extension of the 30-hour week in contracts "wherever possible," provided for an immediate study of the wage incentive system evil and methods of controlling it, condemned attacks on racial, religious and national groups and support for the unemployed.

Oil Union Supports Tulsa Strike

By FRANKLYN E. WOLFE

Hammond, Ind., Sept. 16.—The tenth annual convention of the Oil Workers International Union opened with delegates representing and embracing all districts spreading from Massachusetts to California.

The session has been marked by the highest degree of enthusiasm and harmony. The delegates stand squarely behind the Mid-Continent strikers in the terrific struggle they have been making. The fight against D-X gasoline and other products has been widespread and effective. A plan has been adopted to extend the fight against the Mid-Continent Company, and ask all union men everywhere that D-X gasoline is used to join in the effort to make the "unfair" listing complete and effective.

Many distinguished officials, including Gov. Townsend of Indiana, Congressman Schulte and the mayor of Hammond, have addressed the convention and all have pledged their support to labor legislation and fair administration of labor laws.

GERMER SPEAKS

Outstanding was the speech of Adolph Germer at a great mass meeting in the civic auditorium on Tuesday night.

Four representatives of the oil workers syndicate of the Republic of Mexico, Federico Azenar and Fernando Labastida, fraternal delegates, and Ricardo H. Guerra and Oscar L. Casso have been with the delegates at the convention. This is the first time fraternal delegates have attended and their presence is regarded as highly significant.

The address of Fernando Labastida brought the delegates to their feet with cheers and prolonged applause. He told of the early organizations and their failure to bring about better conditions through their divided and ineffective efforts. Then they decided to reorganize on an industrial basis. Despite their strong organization they were so mistreated that finally Pres. Cardenas and other government executives put into effect the expropriation of the petroleum properties as a natural resource belonging to all the people.

They told of the boycott the American supply companies clamped down on them, making mechanical replacements impossible.

They were also unable to procure ethyl fluids. Now they are rapidly tooling up machine shops for replacements and preparing for production of ethyl fluid which will be available in a few weeks.

NIGHT SESSIONS

The program calls for an adjournment of the convention by Friday but the present outlook indicates night sessions and late Saturday or Sunday before the delegates may leave for their homes.

Pres. Harvey C. Fremming, who has been on a leave of absence for several months is back in the harness and presiding at the convention.

Expect Auto Union Victory In Briggs Poll

DETROIT, Sept. 16 — Another decisive victory was expected today by the CIO United Automobile Workers as workers at the Briggs Manufacturing Co. went to the polls in National Labor Relations Board vote to name their sole collective bargaining agency.

The voting at Briggs, where the National Labor Relations Board conducted one of its biggest elections to date, followed shortly afte another UAW triumph at the Brewster Aeronautical Corp. in Long Island City, N. Y.

In winning its first NLRB election in an aircraft plant, the UAW-CIO piled up a 3-1 margin over Homer Martin's AFL affiliate. Some 680 workers voted for the CIO affiliate, only 241 for the AFL.

Allan Haywood, New York CIO director and eastern director of the auto union, said he would shortly request the firm to open contract negotiations.

WIN BENDIX STRIKE

At South Bend, Ind., meanwhile, the automobile workers showed that they can win strikes as well as elections when the Bendix Products Corp. came to terms with the union, thereby ending a 10-day strike which had caused halts at Nash and Packard plants in Wisconsin and Michigan.

Three thousand men struck at Bendix on Aug. 31 when the company, which manufactures brake parts, stalled on union demands for settlement of grievances and signing of a contract.

Chrysler's 70,000 employes will pick their collective bargaining agency in an election to be held the latter part of the month. UAW officials predict a smashing CIO victory.

Seamen Win Progress In Confabs

Washington, Sept. 16. — CIO seamen's demands for adequate war risk compensation moved closer to realization today with a major concession won from Standard Oil and the beginning of direct negotiations between the National Maritime Union and the American Merchant Marine Institute.

From Standard, the seamen won an agreement defining the war risk zones to include the North Atlantic, Mediterranean, Baltic and other belligerent seas, and a system of bonus and insurance payments. The bonus will be on the basis of 50 per cent of the monthly wages, and a maximum insurance of $5000.

Personal effects lost at sea will be compensated at the rate of $150 for unlicensed personnel, $300 for licensed officers. Full wages will be paid all seamen from lost ships until they reach the nearest American port.

MEET IN NEW YORK

In New York, U. S. Maritime Commission representatives conferred yesterday with Merchant Marine Institute men representing east and west coast shipowners in an attempt to define the extent of the war zones. A conference between the institute and the NMU concerning a new agreement was expected to follow.

CIO Strike Hits Western Union

San Francisco, Sept. 16 —Cancellation by the Western Union Telegraph Company of pension and sick benefits, added to the other grievances which have been piling up for months, was the last straw for employes in the company's offices here. They walked out on strike last week, following a three-day strike of the messengers.

Members of the American Communications Association, CIO, the San Francisco WU Employes are demanding: Recognition of the ACA as sole bargaining agency; restoration of full sick, death and accident benefits and guarantee against any downward revision of pension, and protection against loss of jobs through mechanization.

SEEK PAY RAISE

They are also asking for wage increases, a shorter work week and their full benefits under the Wage-Hour law.

Local 30 of the ACA which called the strike, said that about 700 operators, clerks and messengers are affected. All the major offices of the company here are being picketed in what is declared to be the opening move of a nationwide drive against the company.

Dan Driesen, legislative representative of the ACA in Washington, said that the strike has a direct bearing on national defense, as "the disregard of its employes and the general public by the WU constitutes a grave threat to the maintenance of a communications system adequate to meet national defense needs."

Walkout Ties Up Bohn Aluminum

Detroit, Mich., Sept. 16—Union, government and company officials were conferring this week in an attempt to settle the strike of 1,400 workers at three plants of the Bohn Aluminum Corporation. The local of the United Automobile Workers which called the strike here, said that it might spread to six other units of the company.

The management charged that the strike was interfering with the government's airplane orders, and demanded that it be called off. Federal Conciliator James E. Dewey of the Dept. of Labor met with the union and company conferees.

Food Price Rise Benefits Trusts, Hurts Workers

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16.—America took a wage cut last week.

Prices on the foods that go into most American homes rose sharply—in three cities as much as 20%. But payroll envelopes contained no corresponding increases; the nation's workers were paying for the price rise out of their own slender resources.

Thus, the first effect of the European war on the United States was to cut the purchasing power of the people.

Many predicted that the price rise had taken place with such startling suddenness that the bubble would soon burst, throwing the country's economic machine into a state of disorder.

Other indications, too, pointed to a boom. Steel production rose to over 70 per cent, the highest since 1937. War industries in general prepared for increased business.

Stocks of the nation's "war baby" corporations skyrocketed on the New York Stock Exchange, rising 10 and 15 dollars a day—to the profit of the speculators.

But, though employment may rise as a result of the war conditions, the increased cost of living is certain to plague many a family budget.

Protests from union groups at the abrupt rise in prices—unnecessary in view of the nation's huge surplus—came immediately from workers' groups and from the unemployed. Near-starvation relief allotments now prevailing will fail even more completely to provide liveable diets for millions who have no jobs.

ENDS SUGAR QUOTA

President Roosevelt, in a move to curb profiteering, announced that the sugar quota plan designed to sustain prices for that commodity, would be lifted until sugar prices came back into line.

Secretary of the Interior Ickes, predicting moves to preserve the nation's national resources from possible war-time profiteers, declared:

"I can see no legitimate reason for the present increase in commodity prices because of the European war."

Abundant supplies of all farm commodities, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace predicted in a radio speech, should be sufficient to keep prices from rising.

"If all other industries will produce as abundantly during the next year as the farmers, we need have little concern with profiteering anywhere in our economic structure," the Secretary said.

Bittner On Agriculture Council

Washington, Sept. 16—Chairman Van A. Bittner of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee was named today to the Agricultural Advisory Council of the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Announcement of the appointment was made by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, who said that a meeting of the group would be held here on September 19 to discuss policies to protect consumers and producers from "harmful" speculation in commodity prices.

Bittner was one of a group of four people added to the previously-named council. Among the appointees are Mayor LaGuardia of New York City and President Daniel Tobin of the AFL teamsters.

No Excuse For War On Labor

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 16—Sec.-Treas. Bruce Hannon of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific has sent the following telegram to President Roosevelt discussing war risk insurance for seamen:

"We cannot allow a state of war or declaration of national emergency to be used as a weapon of union-smashing forces to wipe out the civil rights of the American people, thus denying workers the right to organize and bargain collectively."

Ask Action Against Profiteers

Waterbury, Conn., Sept. 16.—Quick reaction to the dangers to labor in the present war cisis was seen at the meeting of the state CIO Council here when it passed two resolutions calling for labor protection in American war policy.

The first demanded labor representation on the War Industries Board recently appointed by Pres. Roosevelt, declaring that "labor and the people are determined to protect their living standards and the national unity of the U. S. from the special interests that now control the Board."

The second urged Roosevelt "to act sternly and without delay against the war profiteers" who are already "wringing superprofits out of the national and international crisis and the distress of the American people."

Both resolutions were sent to Pres. Roosevelt, to Connecticut Gov. Baldwin, to the Connecticut Representatives in Congress, and to the press.

At the same meeting the date and place for the second annual convention of the state Council was announced. The meeting will take place October 28-29 at the Hotel Elton in Waterbury.

Offer 'Payless' Crews For Refugee Ships

NEW YORK, Sept. 16. — Crews will man without pay any vessels furnished by the steamship operators to bring Americans home from the European war areas without charge, the National Maritime Union announced last week.

The CIO union informed President Roosevelt, Secretary of the State Hull, Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, Secretary of Commerce Harry Hopkins and Chairman Emory S. Land of the U. S. Maritime Commission of the offer by telegrams.

Declaring that the operators are attempting to put the responsibility on the union for the delay in the sailing of vessels without war risk compensation, the NMU pointed out that the operators are reaping a handsome profit for "their alleged philanthropic activities" which they are publicizing as "mercy voyages".

RAP SHIPOWNERS

A statement issued by the union scored the shipowners for trying to make it appear that it is not dangerous to sail a vessel through submarine infested waters, while passenger, cargo and insurance rates are mounting rapidly.

"There are plenty of ships now tied up which could be recommissioned for the emergency, if the operators can be induced to forego their wartime profits," the NMU stated. "There will be no difficulty in securing seamen. All available space, including cargo space, must be utilized for passengers."

In the telegram sent to President Roosevelt and the other government officials, the NMU charged that "shipowners are charging exhorbitant rates to returning Americans and carrying war cargoes at tremendous profit.

"The National Maritime Union proposes as their patriotic duty to man ships without any wages provided shipowners supply free passage to returning Americans and carry no cargo in order to utilize all space for carrying such passengers."

Pritchett Re-Admitted To U. S.

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 16 — Harold J. Pritchett, president of the International Woodworkers of America, returned to Seattle last week from Canada, on a new visitor's permit. He was forced to leave the United States a short time ago, as he has had to do on several previous occasions, when a permit issued by the Immigration Service of the U. S. Dept. of Labor, expired.

Pritchett has charged that anti-labor interests are back of the attempts to have him deported to Canada.

The Enemy Within Our Gates

Foreign powers unquestionably have their agents and spies inside this country, and proper vigilance should of course be exercised in regard to their activities.

But none of these outside agents can do such damage to the national security and welfare as can selfish American interests which take advantage of the country's emergency to profiteer at the public expense and to undermine its liberties.

What could undermine public confidence more than a wholesale assault on the living standards of most of the population?

Yet profiteering interests are doing just this when they manipulate the markets to raise prices of food and other necessities, while at the same time they try to prevent wages from rising in proportion.

What kind of sabotage is worse than trying to destroy the laws which protect the people's security and liberty, at a time when the appeals of patriotism call for the defense of this country and its institutions?

Yet every indication points to redoubled efforts being planned by tory elements to curtail or destroy labor and social legislation, under pretext of the emergency; and propaganda campaigns are already under way to discredit labor unionism and to prepare the way for the suppression of civil liberties.

As against such plots on the part of the enemy within our gates, the CIO advances a program of true patriotism and true Americanism.

It calls for stringent measures against profiteering, and for an extension and strengthening of labor organization, so that American living standards may be preserved through increasing wages in line with increased prices.

It calls for internal security through adequate measures to cope with unemployment and promote prosperity; and through the defense and extension of existing social and security legislation.

It calls for the defense of American democracy, through safeguarding labor's right to organize as embodied in the Wagner act; through securing adequate labor and farmer representation on all governmental emergency boards and agencies; and through resistance to all attempts to curtail civil liberties.

The program of the profiteers and tories is the program of a selfish minority which sets its own interests above the country's welfare.

The program of the CIO is a program of true patriotism because it sets the country's welfare first.

CIO Is Far Ahead

When a man bites a dog, it's news, and on the same principle most of the press considers it news when the AFL scores a victory over the CIO.

For the constant succession of CIO election victories over the AFL has become almost monotonous in recent years. The figures for every month show an almost unbroken record of CIO advance in number of elections won and number of workers who vote their preference for the CIO.

The latest figures, for August, show that in elections in which CIO and AFL unions were opposed, 200% more workers voted for the CIO than for the AFL, the CIO winning eight elections as against only two won by the AFL.

Altogether the CIO participated in 27 elections during August, won 74% of them and received 14,387 votes. The AFL won only 25% of the 24 elections in which it participated and received 4,382 votes. The CIO polled 13,292 votes in the 20 elections it won, while the AFL got only 1,140 in the six elections it won.

In July and in the first and second quarters of 1939, in the year 1938 and further back, the story was much the same—with the CIO far ahead in elections won and the number of workers voting for it. About the only difference is that the proportion has been progressively increasing in favor of the CIO.

While the reactionary press may make the excuse that CIO victories are so frequent and regular that they are no longer news, there is no excuse for the propagandists who say the CIO is slipping—they are just plain liars.

The Pickpocket

Looking Ahead

By LEN DE CAUX

Beware Of Pickpockets

A FAVORITE trick of pickpockets is for one of them to bump into or jostle the intended victim in a crowded street, while another dips into his pockets during this distraction.

A fire, a riot or any other event that absorbs the attention of large numbers of people and shakes them out of their usual habits, presents a golden opportunity to these same light-fingered gentry.

On the same principle, every national emergency, be it plague, pestilence, fire, famine or most of all war, gives shady elements in our social and political life a chance to get away with thieveries of every kind.

In the emergencies which war creates, the attention of millions of people is distracted from their customary concerns. Emotions of hate and fear are aroused by the conflict. Patriotic feelings are stirred. Mass hysteria may be induced by unfounded rumors or unscrupulous propaganda.

Profiteers and Tories

Out of the shadows in which they have been lurking then come pickpockets of a more pretentious kind than the little sneak thieves of the street.

Profiteers begin to rob the people by raising prices and creating artificial scarcities. Wall Street gamblers try to rig the market and through rapid stock fluctuations to make unheard-of profits from the losses of small investors.

In the political field, the tory agents of the profiteers see a chance to steal away the legislative gains made by the common people in more normal times. With specious professions of patriotism, they demand that labor legislation be curtailed or abolished and the workers subjected to a quasi-military discipline; and that funds for unemployment relief and social security be diverted to national defense.

At the same time, the tory profiteers seek to filch the people's democratic liberties. They try to whip into a hysteria the natural fear of foreign spies and foreign agents.

They extend their propaganda campaigns against foreigners and radicals to smear reputable and patriotic labor leaders and all the progressive and democratic forces which oppose profiteering reaction.

Then under cover of the unreasoning hysteria thus created, they seek to pass legislation directed against labor's rights and civil liberties.

Real Wages Cut

The European war has only just begun, and the United States is not involved in it. But already we can see the tory pickpockets at work here, promoting their own selfish and anti-social interests while the public's attention is distracted by the emergency.

Profiteering is already rampant. Prices have begun to soar and stocks to skyrocket. In some cities food prices have already risen as much as 20 per cent.

This means a sharp cut in the real wages of American workers. They need the strength of labor unionism as never before to bring wages into line with increased prices.

But here the tory politicians step in to safeguard the right of profiteers to rob the workers. To weaken the unions, they demand the amendment or abolition of the Wagner Labor Relations Act. They call for the establishment of war and emergency boards, dominated by industrialists, which will rule labor with an iron hand.

A Smear Campaign

While the Smith investigating committee is preparing to whip up a campaign against the Labor Board and the Wagner Act, through its approaching hearings, the Dies un-American Committee has already demonstrated the tory technique for using the present situation to attack labor and liberalism.

Witnesses have been encouraged to make wild charges against outstanding labor leaders, liberals, New Dealers and members of the Roosevelt administration, without advancing any real evidence.

One witness, for instance, was deliberately encouraged to smear CIO leaders, with no further proof than that he had read such charges against them in a slanderous and unsubstantiated article in a fiction magazine.

After the intended damage to the CIO has been done, through the widespread publicity given to such slanders, the Dies Committee then makes a pretense to fairness by saying it will give some of the accused a chance to disprove charges for which no real proof has been advanced.

Contrary to the most elementary principles of justice, it appears to place the burden of proof on the accused, assuring that every labor and liberal leader within reach of the lying tongues of its scallawag witnesses is guilty as charged until given a chance to produce proof to the contrary.

Be On Guard

Labor needs to be vigilantly on guard in the present situation, and above all to build the strength of its unions, if it is not to be robbed of its wages, its right to organize, its social legislation and its civil liberties.

It should be wary of all the propaganda let loose in time of war, and particularly of the internal propaganda campaigns of tory politicians and the tory press.

Remember that the interests which finance these campaigns have their own axe to grind, and they are grinding it to cut off labor's neck.

U. S. Again Urges Armour & Co. To Negotiate

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—Armour and Co. officials were urged once again today by the U. S. Government, prompted by Packing House Workers Organizing Committee leaders, to come to the negotiation table in an attempt to avoid a nation-wide meat packing strike. Their answer was to continue stalling for time.

PWOC Chairman Van A. Bittner, leading a delegation that included Don Harris, director; Henry Johnson, assistant director; James R. Robb, Indiana district director, and John J. Doherty, Missouri district leader, met with Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins to tell her for the second time that either Armour would negotiate in good faith or every major Armour plant in the land would be shut down by the PWOC.

Perkin's wire to Armour President Cabell, urgently requesting him to come to Washington the next day for a further conference with her, was answered by Cabell to the effect that he could not come until later next week—Tuesday, September 19.

Perkins wire read:

"During yesterday and today we have discussed fully with union representatives the present labor situation affecting the Armour plants certified by the National Labor Relations Board. Certain new developments of the situation make it important that I discuss it separately with you before further plans for solution can be made. I am inviting you and appropriate representatives to come to Washington tomorrow."

Frame-Up Victims

In reporting the Harry Bridges deportation hearings, the CIO NEWS incorrectly referred to Earl King and E. G. Ramsay as victims of the Modesto frameup.

King and Ramsay, together with F. J. Conner—all of them members of the Pacific Coast Maritime Firemen, Oilers, Wipers and Watertenders—were sent to prison after the notorious Point Lobos case, which had no connection with the Modesto case.

The three men, all active union members, were arrested in the spring of 1936 and tried for the murder of the chief engineer on the S. S. Point Lobos. Ample evidence that the three men knew nothing about the murder and had no connection with it was presented at the trial, which came at a time of strong shipowner opposition to the union.

Following presentation of the judge's charge to the jury—in which he overlooked most of the defense testimony—the men were convicted of second degree murder and sentenced to from five years to life.

The King-Ramsay-Conner Defense Committee, with headquarters at 112 Market Street, San Francisco, has been assisting the prisoners in their rightful fight for freedom.

Price Rise Hurts U. S. Workers

to lift the retail price to the consumer, at the same time holding down the price paid to the farmer for his products, thereby swelling middleman's profits. Meat packers, too, may increase their earnings with the farmers getting only slightly higher prices for their cattle and hogs.

National, state and city officials were in receipt of hundreds of communications from consumer and labor groups. In New York, Allan Hoywood, regional CIO director, answered sugar trust propaganda aimed at placing the blame for the price rise on the workers, who have been locked out in two important refineries. Haywood suggested that the companies negotiate a union contract and allow the plants, which can supply 7½ million pounds of sugar a day, to resume production.

In Chicago, Mrs. Violet Stewart, head of the CIO Steel Workers Ladies' Auxiliary, called for strong consumer organization to fight the food profiteers.

"The first defense of the American people against the war-profiteering monopolies," she said, "is organization of strong consumer groups in every neighborhood, county and state. The government must take immediate steps to regulate the price of all basic commodities."

Dies

Frank Miley, Mine Union Leader, Dies

Fairmount, W. Va., Sept. 16—Frank Miley, president of District 31, United Mine Workers, died suddenly here last week of a heart attack. Stricken while in a restaurant, President Miley was rushed to a hospital but was pronounced dead upon arrival.

CIO President John L. Lewis, upon learning of Mr. Miley's death, made the following statement:

"As president of the United Mine Workers of America, I desire to express the profound grief which the death of Frank Miley will undoubtedly cause the members of this organization. Mr. Miley made a very great contribution to the labor movement of the United States and to the welfare of his fellow workers.

"I know that his memory will be venerated, as it deserves to be, by each and every member of his union."

President Miley, who had long been identified with the UMW, had served as president of District 31 since 1933.

Lewis Predicts CIO Will Help South Lift Standards

WASHINGTON, Sept. 15.—The CIO offered its cooperation to the South in an article "Labor Looks South" by CIO Pres. John L. Lewis, in the September issue of the Virginia Quarterly Review, published by the University of Virginia today.

Lewis' article, after stating the fundamental aims of organized labor for the South as for the rest of the United States — "a land of happy, secure people endowed with the right to work, to live, to be healthy, to educate their children" — discusses the main problems of the South under three heads.

PROBLEMS

(1) "The South, predominantly agricultural, has been the victim of what might be called a mercantilist policy. It has suffered for many years by the fact that its vast raw materials must be shipped from the area, manufactured afar, and returned to be sold in the South for profits that never have stayed down there.

(2) "The poverty of the Southern people is being exploited by large capital, most of which derives from the great Northern industrial centers. This capital seeks to exploit the poverty of the South by calling its millions to work in factories at sweatshop wages — wages which any decent man ought to be ashamed to pay.

(3) "The output of these plants, created in the main by underpaid workers is placed in profitable competition with the output of better organized and better paid work in the North. The strength and health of Southern workers is sacrificed for this profit, but most of it does not go to the South."

BENEFITS FOR PEOPLE

Solution of these basic problems, Lewis writes, lies in the development of Southern resources "under such conditions that the resultant riches will mean food and clothes and houses and schools for the common people of the South.

"Labor believes," he adds, "that such conditions can only be guaranteed by the organization of labor and by the cooperation of all progressive forces in the South with labor in a common program dedicated to the welfare of the people."

Stating the belief of the CIO "that our economy can be so operated that poverty and unemployment will disappear," Lewis blames the "paradox of plenty" side by side with widespread poverty on "the lack of adjustment between consuming power and productive capacity."

This can be corrected on three bases, Lewis explains, first by organization of the workers for higher wages and shorter hours, second by government investment where private investment fails, third by a rise in farm income at least to cost of production.

Since "the South's future is tied up integrally with that of the nation as a whole," labor's program is a beneficial one for the South. Already there are signs that this program is appreciated in the South, whose progressive leaders "are coming more and more to understand that the future progress of their section is inextricably bound up with the well-being of its workers, organized into constructive, peaceful unions."

Dairy Farmers Urge City Enter Milk Business

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—A proposal that the City of New York take over pasteurization and distribution of milk for Gotham consumers was put forward today by an official of the Dairy Farmers Union, which with CIO assistance recently won a major victory against the milk trust.

Speaking over Station WEVD, Sec. Harry Carnal of the farm organization said the rank and file milk producers are uncompromisingly opposed to the price increase slapped on by the private distributors.

Discussing the recent strike, which cut in half milk deliveries to the city until the distributors agreed to increase prices to the farmers, Carnal paid tribute to the work of the CIO and said that "the benefits of labor-consumer support of the farmers have been proven."

Haywood Derides Sugar Shortage Propaganda; Lockout Closes Plant

New York, Sept. 16—Sweeping government investigation of profiteering in the sugar industry was demanded by Pres. Allan S. Haywood of the New York Industrial Union Council today in wires sent to Sec. of Agriculture Wallace and Mayor LaGuardia of New York.

A thorough probe of the situation, he charged, would include the activities of the U. S. Cane Sugar Refiners Assn. — one of whose member corporations the Natl. Sugar Refining Co., has locked out 2,000 employes at Long Island City and Edgewater, N. J., plants.

"These plants can produce 7½ million pounds of sugar daily. The company has refused union offers to arbitrate all points of disagreement.

"There is no basis for a claim of a sugar shortage. The CIO will cooperate with the government in combatting profiteering."

The lockout, which started early in August, followed the taking of a strike vote by the workers at the plant, who are members of a CIO local industrial union. No strike call has been put into effect.

WHOSE POCKETS —

ARE YOU FILLING? When you buy your clothes do you help pay the wage of a union worker, or do you help swell the profits of a sweatshop boss?

- The Label of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America will give you the answer. When you don't see the label you know that the garment was probably made by an un-American sweatshop chiseler. When you see the Amalgamated label you know that your money will go into the pockets of union workers, earning union pay, working under union conditions.
- Demand the union label in the clothes you buy and insure yourself against sweatshop garments, against sweatshop conditions in industry.

You can find the Amalgamated label in union made suits, overcoats, uniforms, work clothes and overalls, workshirts, dress shirts, underwear, gloves, neckties, sheeplined, leather, and sport coats, children's clothing and wash suits.

Scores of Thousands Marched on Labor Day

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16.—Labor Day celebrations were the most successful in recent years, reports from CIO councils in key cities throughout the nation indicated today.

In San Francisco, 30,000 unionists marched in a miles-long parade up Market Street and before a reviewing stand at City Hall, where Gov. Culbert Olson watched labor celebrating its day of the year. Marching with the CIO were unions from the Maritime Federation of the Pacific and unofficial AFL units.

Down the coast at San Pedro—harbor for Los Angeles—a similar number turned out for the joint AFL-CIO parade, with unions from Los Angeles, Santa Monica and Long Beach joining the demonstration.

"Labor history was made in Portland, Oreg.," reports said, as the city's orkers paraded for the first time since 1918. AFL and CIO unions were represented, with Pres. H. F. McGrath of the Maritime Federation leading the marchers.

At Seattle, AFL unionists defied orders of special representatives of Pres. William Green and marched with their CIO brothers. In all, about 10,000 took part in the city's celebration.

D. C. PICNIC

On the other side of the nation, Washington, D. C., had its first Labor Day turnout in years, with more than a thousand attending the CIO Council's picnic on the outskirts of the city. Reports from mining communities and steel towns throughout a number of eastern states showed that though the Labor Day celebrations were lacking the numbers of the big cities, they produced just as much enthusiasm for the advances of labor under CIO leadership.

Thousands of CIO members in Detroit gathered at Cadillac Square for speeches by Pres. R. J. Thomas of the UAW and Pres. Adolph Germer of the Michigan Industrial Union Council.

Automobile workers, steel workers and thousands of others from the city's varied industries marched in the parade and entered scores of floats. Observers described the demonstration as the greatest Labor Day turnout in Detroit history.

At Tarentum, Pa., near Pittsburgh, 5,000 paraded, with Steel Workers Organizing Committee lodges and Aluminum union locals dividing a number of the prizes among them.

In Toledo, rain cleared just in time to permit 15,000 to march through the down town shopping area. Many colorful floats were entered by Toledo's unions, with the Auto-Lite unit of the United Automobile Workers copping the prize.

INDIANAPOLIS LABOR DAY PARADE featured 2,500 cars, including this float pointing to the evils of slum housing and the benefits of substituting low-rent modern apartments for low income families.

2,500 CARS

Largest of Indiana's 20 Labor Day celebrations was at Indianapolis where more than 2,500 cars were entered in the CIO parade. According to James Robb, CIO director there, it was the largest labor demonstration in the city in many years.

CIO and AFL held separate meetings in Duluth, with the CIO drawing by far the larger crowd, despite the presence of Pres. Green at the AFL meeting in the heart of the city's Gold Coast. Speakers at the CIO demonstration were Lee Pressman, general counsel, and John O'Leary, United Mine Workers international executive board member.

O'LEARY SPEAKS

O'Leary traced CIO progress in the last few years and predicted that few workers will be "fooled" by attacks on the industrial union movement.

"I know that with the hundreds of thousands of union men and women meeting throughout the nation today, you, on this Labor Day, are going to renew your pledge to make the United States a better nation in which to live by building strong labor unions," O'Leary declared.

Fined $5,000 For Pay Law Violation

Boston, Sept. 16 — Bosses of the Adams Shoe Manufacturing co. at nearby Webster dug into their jeans today to pay $5,000 for the privilege of having violated the federal wage-hour act.

The company was assessed $3,000 and three officials an additional $2,000 after they pleaded guilty to charges against them. The defendents were given until October 9 to pay back $2,500 to some 125 employes.

Brophy Nails Lies At Dies Hearings

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16.—This week's barrage of lies, slanders and distortions emanating from the un-American Dies Committee drew a sharp rebuke from John Brophy, national director, CIO, in answer to wild charges by Ben Gitlow, a former Communist.

"Recently Ben Gitlow appeared before your Committee making certain statements concerning me in relation to the Communist Party," Brophy wrote.

"I deny completely and emphatically that I ever received one penny directly or indirectly, either from the Communists or the Communist Party for my 1926 campaign for the Presidency of the United Mine Workers of America. I enter this denial whether that statement was made by Gitlow or anyone else, now or at any other time.

NOT A COMMUNIST

"I am not a Communist; neither am I a Communist agent as alleged, and never have been. I am and always have been opposed to the philosophy of Communism. No one knows this better than the Communists themselves. If at any time they have expressed approval and apparently supported views and policies for which I have stood, they have done so without advice, consultation or permission from me."

Continuing the tactic of smearing the progressive labor movement, the Dies Committee listened with open mouths to the fantasies of the witness, who went on to list other leaders of CIO unions as "Communists" or "Communist agents." Newspapermen and the audience yawned.

Transport Union Delegates Ready For Convention

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 16.—Delegates to the convention of the CIO Transport Workers Union were heading for this resort today for the organization's convention—a meeting which will survey gains during the past year and point the way for further organizing activity.

The report of Pres. Michael Quill to the convention is expected to comment on the union's progress, which has not only consolidated its strength on New York's subway and elevated lines but spread its protection to workers on a number of bus and trolley lines. In addition, TWU representatives have reported considerable success in organizing transit workers outside of New York.

Union membership has increased considerably in the past 12 months, and further additions are expected in the future.

WAGES RAISED

Wage increases, improved job security and a number of service, health and credit facilities have been brought to transportation workers through the efforts of the union, which overcame the long standing hostility of Gotham transportation companies to win contracts and the respect of the employers as a militant defender of the workers' rights and needs.

A number of CIO leaders and government officials will address the delegates at their meeting here.

MICHAEL QUILL

OVERRULE AFL

Indianapolis, Ind., Sept. 16. — Objections by an AFL union to the election won by the United Furniture Workers at the Shower Brothers big plant in Bloomington have been overruled by the Labor Board's regional office here, on the grounds that the AFL had not raised "substantial or material issues."

Department Store Signs With CIO

New York, Sept. 16 — Lane, Bryant & Co., one of New York's oldest women's department stores, joined the CIO parade today, signing a two-year closed shop contract with Local 1125 of the United Retail & Wholesale Employes.

Some 350 employes in the firm's two New York stores, gained 10% wage increases, the 43½-hour week and vacations with pay as a result of the agreement. Wage and hour provisions will be subject to revision at the end of the first year of the contract.

CIO Leads AFL 10–1 In 28 Polls

Washington, Sept. 16—CIO unions won a total of 13,319 votes in 20 elections conducted by the National Labor Relations Board in August, as opposed to 1,277 won by the AFL in eight elections, according to figures released by the Board this week.

The CIO took part in 30 elections, winning 20 of them, while the AFL was on the ballot in 20 cases, winning eight.

Three of the elections won by the CIO involved more than 1,000 workers at each poll. The AFL won only one election of over 1,000.

Largest election won by the CIO was that conducted among employes of the Packard Motor Car Co. at Detroit, where the CIO carried 6,090 out of a total of 8,352 votes cast. The AFL union received 1,547 in this election.

Next in number of workers voting was the poll at the Motor Products Corp., won by the CIO by a vote of 2,033 to 188 for the AFL.

The third poll of over 1,000 won by the CIO was at the Alcoa plant of the Aluminum Company of America, won by the Aluminum Workers of America by a vote of 1,707. The AFL was not on the ballot in this run-off election, having been eliminated at an earlier poll by failing to receive sufficient votes.

West Coast, Missouri Councils To Meet

Washington, Sept. 16 — Two state CIO conventions open today, one in Tacoma, Washington, the other in Jefferson City, Missouri. The second annual convention of the Washington State Industrial Union Council is to convene this morning at ten o'clock in the hall of Local 2-9, International Woodworkers of America, with Richard Francis, Council president, in the chair.

In Jefferson City, CIO affiliates throughout Missouri are holding their first convention, called to set up a state CIO Industrial Union Council. It will meet in the Sellinger Auditorium.

San Francisco, Sept. 16 — The second annual convention of the California CIO Industrial Union Council will meet at Polk Hall here October 6-8, Secretary-Treasurer Louis Goldblatt announced this week.

Previously scheduled to open August 25, the State convention was postponed to the later date after the CIO national convention was set for October 10 in San Francisco, so that delegates attending the state meeting might stay over for the national convention.

A Tale of 3 Union Men:

Brother Boggle And The Pearly Gates

Brother Bill Boggle was a good union man, almost from the day he was born. Everyone in Local 777 respected Boggle for his honesty, capability, and unfailing devotion to organized labor. That's what they said about Brother Boggle when he died, and the members of Local 777 really meant every word of it.

Not long after his funeral Brother Boggle began his climb to heaven. When he reached the pearly gates, he pulled the bell and shortly afterwards was admitted to St. Peter's ante-room. There he filled out an application for Heaven, carefully writing his name, address, social security number, ledger number, local number, age, weight, sex, number of dependents, etc.

Just as he finished writing his mother's maiden name, St. Peter called him into the office for the oral examination and interview. (Brother Boggle had passed the physical examination; he was perfectly dead.)

INTERVIEW

"Brother Boggle," boomed St. Peter, "have you ever been a scab?"

"No," Boggle answered in a clear voice.

"How long have you been a member of Local 777?"

"Forty years."

"How regular have your dues payments been?"

"Before the check-off I always paid on time. My dues book is perfect."

"Did you ever skip picket duty?"

"No."

"Did you attend all your local meetings? How active were you?"

"I never missed a meeting. I have served on the shop committee, have been a shop chairman, was president of Local 777 for many years, and have been a member of the chorus and the bowling team."

"Well," said St. Peter, "that sounds like a near perfect record. There's one more qualification which I'm sure you'll pass. Come here a moment."

ONE FLAW

Brother Boggle stepped forward so that he stood directly in front of St. Peter. The latter grabbed Boggle's coat and looked into the inside pocket. The Saint was angry.

"Boggle," said Peter, "I'm sorry, but you'll have to leave. We can't have you in Heaven."

Boggle paled. "Why?" he asked, "I thought I had a good record."

"Not good enough," replied St. Peter, to the accompaniment of thunder and lightning. "You're not wearing union label clothes. You certainly ought to know better. What would happen to the labor movement if every union man bought clothing without the label of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, and the printers' label would not be called for on printed matter, and so on? The sweatshop would come back to industry. Good-bye, Boggle."

Brother Bill Boggle, formerly of Local 777, slid pass the pearly gates and dropped down to join the open-shop bosses and the scabs.

CIO Social Security Group Issues Leaflet

Washington, Sept. 16.—A new four-page leaflet by the CIO Social Security Committee, "How to Get Federal Old Age Insurance Benefits," tells workers of 65 or more how to get their old age pensions July 1, 1940.

Besides explaining who is eligible to get pensions, the leaflet lists the chief requirements which must be met by applicants.

Copies may be ordered from the CIO Publicity Department, 1106 Connecticut Ave., N. W., Washington, D. C., and cost 40c a hundred; $3.75 a thousand. This is CIO publication No. 33.

Steel Union Progressing

Reading, Pa., Sept. 16 — Rapid progress in winning new contracts and consolidating locals in this district of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee is reported by George Medrick, SWOC subregional director.

A contract signed with the Penn Hardware Co.—first in its history—gives 1,000 workers increased wages, grievance machinery, seniority rights, check-off and 100 per cent union shop.

At the Warren Foundry in Phillipsburgh, Pa., 270 out of 295 workers have shown the company they want the check-off by signing union cards to that effect. Negotiations are under way.

At American Steel and Wire in Allentown, Pa., a new dues collecting system headed by 22 committeemen is bringing the local very quickly up to 100 per cent.

Plans are being laid by Reading SWOC lodges for a fall mass meeting to honor Philip Murray, SWOC chairman and vice-president of the CIO. Steel Workers throughout the district will rally to hear Murray and further strengthen the union in the area.

Triple Trouble

New York, Sept. 16—The Burndy Engineering Co. today had triple trouble — a strike by three CIO unions which followed the failure of negotiations for a joint union contract.

Provisions for a closed shop, seniority rights and dismissal arbitration included in a recently-expired two-year agreement were opposed by the management.

The three unions involved are the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians, and the United Office & Professional Workers.

WON'T TALK

Washington—Leaders of the United Federal Workers, CIO, have launched protests against the refusal of Russell H. Herrell, director of personnel at the Government Printing Office, to meet with union delegations.

ConsiderPlan For Coast Marine Pact

San Francisco, Sept. 16.—Probability of a compromise solution to the dispute over contract renewals between west coast waterfront employers and the unions was seen here today. The agreements are scheduled to end Sept. 30.

An arrangement being worked out through the office of the Maritime Labor Board would involve renewal of the 1938 contracts, with either side being given the right to reopen negotiations on 60 days' notice.

However, if either side is at the time conducting or expecting to conduct a referendum, the notice to reopen the negotiations would be extended until the end of the referendum.

FOLLOWS RESOLUTION

This is said to be in line with a resolution passed by the convention of the International Longshoremen's & Warehouseman's Union, which called for extension of the contracts to permit negotiations in the spring, rather than in the fall. Maritime workers consider this a better time of the year for negotiations, since the Alaska salmon ships sail at that time.

Questions about application of war bonuses and to what date wage increases will be retroactive still remain to be settled.

Sign Contracts

San Francisco, Sept. 16—Union contracts covering employes in two plants of the Boyle Manufacturing Company of Alameda and Vernon, Calif., were announced this week by William Dalrymple, field director for the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

Both agreements provide for an eight-hour day, 40-hour week, time and a half for overtime, seniority rights and other union conditions.

Bridges Hearing Ends; 1,600,000 Words In Record

By MIRIAM ALLEN DE FORD

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 16. — The nine-weeks-old Harry Bridges deportation hearing has ended.

Dean James Landis of Harvard Law School, who presided at the hearing for the Dept. of Labor, returned to the East with 1,600,000 words of testimony taken from scores of witnesses during the sessions at Angel Island, in San Francisco harbor.

As he departed, Landis spoke caustically about Larry Doyle, West Coast labor spy chief and one of the prime movers in the attempt to force the West Coast CIO leader out of the country.

Doyle, an elusive witness, was subpenaed early in the hearing by defense counsel, but was located in Minnesota shortly before the conclusion of the hearings. When Doyle sent a wire announcing delay in arriving here, Landis commented sharply about the stoolpigeon's "complete disregard of the proprieties of the law" and added:

"In the light of Mr. Doyle's record — a record which, with my naive ideas about the importance of citizens' observing the processes of the law in this country, I believe unpatriotic in the extreme," he would have to adjourn the hearing and have Doyle's testimony taken by deposition.

REFUSED TO TESTIFY

Doyle finally arrived in San Francisco, but after being sworn in, refused to testify. However, he was forced to surender to the police on a battery charge brought by Ernest Besig, secretary of the American Civil Liberties Union, who charged that Doyle assaulted him at a demonstration at the German consulate last year. Doyle was freed on $25 bail.

Landis gave counsel for both sides in the deportation case six weeks in which to file their briefs.

MANY SENSATIONS

Up to the very end, the hearing was filled with sensations. In a statement given to defense counsel at the Oregon State Penitentiary, Al Rosser — teamsters union official serving a 12-year term —admitted that during 1936 and 1937 he had "many times" given money to Capt. Keegan of the Portland police to "get" Bridges. He said the amounts ran to "several thousand dollars."

Jack Estabrook, another Oregon teamsters official, said that he had given $1,000 to Keegan directly, and $250 through an intermediary.

Keegan denied both charges.

Final blow of the defense was the introduction of copies of letters to and from Roy Norene, U. S. Immigration director in Oregon. One of these, sent to Dept. of Labor headquarters in Washington, said that two of the prosecution witnesses "were becoming very impatient" and threatened "to tell the complete story to the newspapers."

Observers here are extremely doubtful that the government will win its case against Bridges. The charges — that Bridges is a Communist and that the Communist party advocates revolution by force and violence — were supported largely by labor spies, stoolpigeons and tools of the anti-union employing interests.

West Coast Maritime Unions Conduct Big Education Program

San Francisco, Sept. 16—Libraries, discussion forums, pamphlets and classes for workers on shipboard and ashore feature the new educational campaign just outlined by Council 2 of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific here.

The program, outlined by Revels Clayton, Council secretary, is based on four objectives; 1) "to keep the brothers on the ships well posted on timely developments that affect their wellbeing, 2) promote open discussion among maritime workers of local, natonal and international problems, 3) raise the knowledge and morale of all martime workers, and 4) act as an organizatonal force for all kinds of educational activity among maritime workers."

SUPPLY SHIPS

Under the program, ships are supplied with crew libraries of 28 volumes, weekly open forums are held, plus a monthly forum for longshoremen, union pamphlets and discussion outlines are distributed, and classes in parliamentary law and public speaking, labor history and English are arranged.

"In these times when so many falsehoods are being spread about the labor movement in general and the marime unions in particular, it is extremely important that the truth be known," Clayton wrote. "Education in the hands of the labor movement is a powerful weapon for progress."

ASK ORDER

Washington—The Labor Board has asked the 6th circuit court to enforce the NLRB order against the Ford Motor Co.

Celanese Co. Lockout Ends; Union Wins

CUMBERLAND, Md., Sept. 16. — The month-old lock-out which threw 9,000 employes of the giant Celanese Corporation plant here out of work has ended in a labor victory.

Local 1874 of the Textile Workers Union, CIO, won an agreement providing for wage increases averaging six per cent and dismissal pay ranging from two to ten weeks for workers laid off because of technological improvements at the plant.

The union had previously rejected an offer of a slight wage increase affecting part of the workers only, and making no provisions for employes displaced by technological changes. After the plant had been shut down for 25 days, the Corporation finally agreed to negotiate. Edward MacDonald, conciliator with the U. S. Dept. of Labor, sat in with the union and company conferees.

Before the shut-down, the union had been negotiating for an agreement for more than a year. The union pointed out that Celanese could well afford to give a substantial wage increase as it made more than $3,000,000 in profits during the first six months of the current year.

During the lock-out the union maintained a strong picket line and the spirit of the workers was high. There was no disorder in spite of a "back-to-work" movement started by a so-called "Committee of 115". The movement flopped when the union disclosed that it was tied up with suspicious characters.

Technicians Discuss War Problems

Washington, Sept. 16 — Personnel problems of Navy Yard and Navy Department technicians made more acute by the war situation were discussed at a conference with Navy Department officials here by FAECT President Lewis Alan Berne and other union leaders. Berne pointed out that maximum efficiency in the Navy's emergency program can be reached only if workers operate under progressive personnel policies.

The Navy Department will state its official reaction to the FAECT suggestions when the conference is resumed September 15.

Board Orders $400,000 Paid to 165 Workers

CHICAGO, Sept. 16.—Hope that a $400,000 slap by the National Labor Relations Board will convince the Stewart Die Casting Co. of the value of collective bargaining was expressed today by Sec. Edward Cheyfitz of the National Assn. of Die Casting Workers, CIO affiliate.

The Board order, which directed the money to be paid to 165 union members, is among the most sweeping in its history, and involves a near record in back pay awards.

Company officials locked out the 165 men in March, 1937, when their union—at that time the United Automobile Workers—struck to gain a contract.

Cheyfitz, hailing the NLRB verdict as a victory for "righteousness and justice", predicted that if Stewart will find unionization "truly a benefit to the company as well as to the employes themselves."

Comely Renee Frantz (left), 4 years old, was voted "Miss Union Label" at the Park City, Utah, Labor Day celebration, while Coleen Olson (right) was named her attendant. Contest was sponsored by Ladies Auxiliary 43 of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

Death Robs Four Of Awards

Ironwood, Sept. 16 — Four deaths from silicosis blighted enthusiasm here for settlement of a two-year dispute with the Oliver Mining Co., which resulted in the distribution of $11,800 in back pay to 35 members of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers Union.

Three of the 35 died of the dread lung disease before the settlement was reached, while a fourth passed away four days after signing of the agreement between the company and the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

The settlement, union leaders predict, will benefit organization drives not only in this town but in other iron mining centers on the Michigan peninsula and in Minnesota.

Oil Firm Financed Gas Buying

Tulsa, Okla., Sept. 16—The Mid-Continent Petroleum Corp., now in the ninth month of a vicious fight against the Oil Workers Intl. Union, financed the city of Tulsa to lay in a supply of tear gas and industrial munitions valued at $4,000 just prior to the calling of the strike.

This information was spread on the record at a National Labor Relations Board hearing today by Joseph T. Miller, salesman for the Federal Laboratories, Inc., of Pittsburgh.

Though the purchases were made by Berg Hughes, detective chief of the Tulsa Police Department, Mid-Continent footed the bills—both for a $250 order several months before the strike, and for $3,790 in December of last year.

GAS WAS USED

Other testimony developed the fact that the same tear gas bought by the city with Mid-Continent's assistance, was used against the strikers last December 22, immediately following their exit from the big D-X refinery after completing the shutdown. Gas containers, recovered by the strikers following the barrage, bore the same serial numbers as those purchased by the Mid-Continent Corp.

The strikers have been waging a consumer battle against Mid-Continent, and its chief product, D-X gasoline. The product has been placed on the unfair list of many unions throughout the country.

Workers' Education Program Slashed

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16—Some 40,000 workers who formerly came to their union centers to attend WPA workers' education classes in trade union problems, labor legislation, parliamentary law and other subjects, today are deprived of such opportunities.

Workers' education—the one special service offered by WPA for organized labor—has been beaten down by repeated cuts in the last two years to a shadow of its former self.

In 1937 the program reached 75,000 workers in 35 states and used the services of 900 unemployed teachers. In 25 States there were full-time supervisors of workers' education. Work was headed up at Washington by a staff of eight, with as many as six field representatives helping make the program of practical use to labor.

Staff Cut Down

Today no field representatives are left, while at Washington only one executive and a secretary remain to advise and guide a nation-wide program. Work in the States has shrunk more than half. Only 16 State supervisors are left.

This drastic scaling down has taken place at the same time that more and more unions have been asking for classes. Requests for services are on hand from unions in 18 States, but cannot be met under present limitations.

Many union members also are asking why unemployed teachers and other specialists on WPA can't be used to lead union sports and recreation programs, give health counsel, explain social security problems and the like.

Unions Protest

In New York city, the WPA administration recently decreed that no more classes are to be held in union centers and that labor is no longer to have an advisory voice in formulating an educational program. A group of labor leaders, including President Sidney Hilman, of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, issued a statement contrasting this action with the generosity shown by the government toward the educational needs of other groups.

"Vocational education is maintained for industry," they said. "Education is provided for agriculture through the AAA, and federal subsidies to agricultural colleges. We have every right to expect public support for education oriented to the special needs of labor.

"We assert that workers have a right to workers' education, particularly in times like these."

A number of CIO unions throughout the nation have sent protests to WPA on elimination of the education program, and more will undoubtedly do so as the results of the slashes are seen.

Hosiery Workers Meet In New York City

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—Delegates from every hosiery center in the country are arriving here for the 28th annual convention of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers which opens at the Park Central Hotel on Monday morning, Sept. 19.

Sidney Hillman, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and chairman of the executive board of the Textile Workers Union of America to which the AFHW is affiliated, heads the list of convention speakers.

Others who will address the delegates are Allan Haywood, president of the New York CIO Council and regional director for New York; Frieda Miller, head of the New York State Dept. of Labor, Dr. George W. Taylor, impartial chairman for the hosiery industry, and Roy Lawrence, regional director for TWUA in the South, who is in charge of the southern hosiery organization drive.

Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia of New York City has promised to make every effort to be present, the union reported.

Social high spot of the convention will be the banquet to be held Thursday night at the hotel.

Firm Recognizes Auto Union

Toledo, Sept. 16—A three-year effort by the United Automobile Workers, CIO, to win a contract at the DeVilbiss Co., here, ended in success today.

Local 12 of the UAW signed an agreement under which it gained recognition for its members and those who may become members, and prepared for further negotiations to discuss wages and hours.

Defeated two years ago in an NLRB election, the Local 12 unit at the plant made a comeback and enrolled a substantial majority of the workers.

Vigilante Victim

SERIOUSLY WOUNDED, this agricultural worker, slugged by anti-union vigilantes near Stockton, California, is carried to safety. LaFollette Civil Liberties Committee is preparing to investigate West Coast Tory farm outfits, notably the Associated Farmers.

RAP FIRM

Washington—The Labor Board, acting on a complaint of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, ordered the Ohio Brass Co., at Mansfield, Ohio, to stop interfering with employes' rights to bargain.

TWO CIO UNIONS WARN TORY FOES OF LABOR

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—Two conventions of CIO unions, meeting this week, expressed the feelings of American workers in demands that the United States keep out of war and that reactionaries keep their hands off labor's new gains.

The Transport Workers Union, meeting in Atlantic City, N. J., and the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, convening in New York City, heard leaders of the nation's labor movement warn that the workers' real wages must be preserved, with increases in retail prices being met by greater earnings for the producers of the nation's commodities.

CIO Vice-Pres. Sidney Hillman, addressing the hosiery workers, declared: "American labor hates war!" At this time, he continued, when reactionary industrialists may try to knife the Wagner Act and the wage-hour law in the name of "emergency" workers must resist the attacks on "legislative guarantees which assist labor in its struggle against exploitation."

John Brophy, CIO director, appeared before the transit workers with a similar plea that labor protect itself from possible "flank" actions designed to steal away its new gains.

Discussion of the same problem is expected when the State, County and Municipal Workers Union holds its first convention in New York next week.

Striker

This is Mrs. Ona Briner, member of the American Communications Assn., CIO, now on strike against Western Union in San Francisco.

Says Mrs. Briner: "I am the mother of three children. As such I understand children. For this reason my conscience demands that I support the messenger boys in their fight to get humane conditions and a wage that will make it possible for them to live decently.

"These boys are trying to help support families on the few dollars a week that the company pays them after making deductions for bicycles and other equipment for company use.

"I am not the youngest member of the picket line but I intend to be one of the most militant until Western Union is forced to change the conditions under which we work."

40,000 Shirt Makers Win 7½% Pay Raise

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—Forty thousand shirt makers today had licked the rising level of prices—for the time being, at least—with a general 7½% wage increase.

Won through negotiations carried on by the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the Shirt Institute, the wage raise will go into effect immediately in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, West Virginia, Massachusetts and other North Atlantic states.

Only recently pants makers gained a 10 per cent wage increase, and today ACW officials hinted that other sections of the men's apparel industry may get demands for similar increases to match the rising price level.

President Sidney Hillman and the union's general executive board declared, in making public the new contract terms, that because of the war-influenced price rises union workers must fortify their living standards against cuts in their real wages.

Ban on Super Profits Asked

La Crosse, Wis. Sept. 23—"Drastic punishment" of profiteers was asked by the CIO United Rubber Workers of America convention as it closed its sessions here.

A resolution unanimously adopted calls upon Pres. Roosevelt to propose profiteering-prohibition legislation at the special session of Congress. It also asks the President to demand repeal of the anti-WPA legislation passed by Congress in its last session and to step up Social Security Act payments to meet the rising cost of living.

Pres. S. H. Dalrymple, Vice-Pres. Thomas F. Burns, Genl. Secy. Frank Grillo were re-elected without opposition.

Shoe Union Meeting To Consider Price Rise

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—Faced with the prospect of rapidly rising living costs in a war-scared country, the question of demands for wage increases to keep pace with prices will be one of the major issues to be taken up at the second convention of the United Shoe Workers which opens in Rochester, N. Y., October 2, it was stated at USW headquarters here this week.

Several hundred delegates from the various joint boards and from 80 locals will attend the convention which will be held in the Hotel Powers. Speakers scheduled to address the CIO shoe workers, according to the USW national office, include Mary Anderson, head of the Women's Bureau, U. S. Department of Labor, and Walter Smethurst, administrative assistant to CIO President John L. Lewis.

The USW which has a total membership exceeding 50,000 affiliated with the CIO in February, 1937. Its first convention was held in St. Louis, Missouri, in November of the same year.

Labor Elects Candidates

New Kensington, Pa., Sept. 23—President A. F. Daughenbaugh of CIO Aluminum Workers Local 2 rolled up the highest vote in primary elections here for city council.

Workers' votes in this heavily organized area brought victory for practically all of labor's candidates both in this city and in nearby Arnold. Frank Serene, electrical union member, was nominated as a school director, while in Arnold four unionists were selected for city council and two for the school board.

'Blitzkrieg' Flops In Baltimore

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 23—Taking a lesson from Hitler, the Baltimore Sun tried "Blitzkrieg"—lightning war—tactics against the Newspaper Guild.

Unlike the German feuhrer, the Sun was unsuccessful in its campaign.

When the European war broke out, the Sunpapers decided to restore the six-day week, allegedly because of the rush of war news. Leaders of the Baltimore Newspaper Guild immediately launched an offensive against the decision, pointing out that other papers were either increasing their staffs or paying overtime.

As a result of the Guild's fight against the publishing company, which is one of the nation's wealthiest, the Sun management 14 days later gave up its idea and reverted to the five-day week.

Technicians Told: 'Work For Peace'

New York, Sept. 23—American labor and the American people want no war, and they are determined that the best way to keep us out is to build our democratic institutions and our unions, Lewis Alan Berne, president of the CIO Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians told a special meeting of the union's General Executive Board here.

Construction Campaign

Transit Union Asks Support of Civil Rights

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 23.—Expansion of unionization of transit employes under the CIO, support for a New Deal candidate in the 1940 presidential elections, protection of the Wagner Labor Relations Law and the Fair Labor Standards Act, promotion of the Wagner Health Program and Better Housing for America's workers, and practical day-to-day cooperation between AFL and CIO unions looking toward a "genuinely" united labor movement are included in the program being charted here at the second biennial convention of the Transport Workers Union of America.

As the four-day convention drew to a close, the TWU delegates representing more than 90,000 subway, elevated, trolley, bus and taxicab employes throughout the nation, took cognizance of the European war situation by resolving:

1. That America must stay out of Europe's war.

2. Food profiteering must be stopped by direct government action.

3. Organized labor must be represented on the War Resources Board.

4. The civil rights of the people, and labor in particular, must be protected against emasculation by tory employers and politicians.

President John L. Lewis greeted the convention in a wire addressed to TWU President Quill, which read:

"Please convey my warmest greetings to members of your great union, assembled in convention. Your union has a notable record of achievement. You now stand at the gateway of vast new opportunities for extending the benefits of or-

Name Walsh To LaFollette Committee

Washington, Sept. 23—Sen. David Walsh of Massachusetts (Democrat) has been appointed to fill the vacancy on the LaFollette Civil Liberties Committee.

The position on the committee was held by Sen. Louis Murphy of Iowa until his death in July, 1936. During debate on the LaFollette Committee appropriation in the Senate this year, some question was raised about the failure to appoint a tthird man to the committee.

Other members of the group are Elbert Thomas of Utah and Robert LaFollette of Wisconsin.

Agents of the committee left for the West Coast this week to start their investigation of Associated Farmers and violations of civil liberties in California, Washington and Oregon.

Ohio CIO Meets Sept. 29

Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 23—The second annual convention of the Ohio Industrial Union Council opens here at the Neil House September 29. Delegates from CIO locals affiliated with the United Mine Workers, United Rubber Workers, Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee, United Automobile Workers, Steel Workers Organizing Committee and other CIO unions throughout the state will attend.

The Ohio CIO Council was formed a year ago last spring at a constitutional convention also held here.

CIO Construction Drive Worries AFL

PhoneyPeacePlan 'Class B' Racket, Show Desperation

By A. D. LEWIS
Chairman, United Construction Workers Organizing Committee

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23. — The progress of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee is driving the leaders of the AFL building trades unions to frantic efforts to meet the competition of this growing CIO industrial union.

The UCWOC is able to report that in addition to the local industrial unions of construction workers which have been transferred to the new organization, charters have been issued to new local unions throughout the country and the UCWOC now has local unions in the following states:

ENTHUSIASM FOR CIO

The growing membership and the enthusiasm with which the CIO has been greeted by the construction workers justify the Committee in feeling that its efforts to date have been most successful.

In an effort to check the sweep of the construction workers to the CIO and to cover up some of the abuses and scandals which the CIO campaign has exposed, AFL leaders have taken the following steps:

1. Amid a fanfare of publicity they announced another plan "to end all jurisdictional disputes" in the building industries.

2. They have expressed alarm at the existence of large numbers of low-paid unorganized building workers, about whom they showed no concern until the CIO started its campaign. In order to offset the CIO organizing drive among these workers, they are making all sorts of plans for giving them Class B membership, with lower wage rates, longer hours and fewer union privileges than are accorded to present members.

These and other similar plans of the AFL leaders are a fraud and a delusion.

DISPUTES CONTINUE

Jurisdictional disputes have by no means ended by the new plan, any more than they were ended by the many preceding plans sponsored by AFL leaders for the supposed purpose of putting an end to the abuse. As this is written, Operating Engineers and Teamsters are engaged in a jurisdictional dispute in Washington, D. C.; in Indianapolis nine buildings are tied up by jurisdictional strikes; in St. Louis buildings are also tied up by continuing jurisdictional squabbles; and there are similar reports from other cities.

Nor are American construction workers likely to be tempted by offers of a Class B status in the old craft unions, when they have an opportunity to join a modern industrial union which will give them the same wages, conditions and union privileges as all other members.

John Coefield, president of the AFL plan to end jurisdictional disputes, at the recent convention of the New Jersey Building and Construction Trades Council. Despite this plan, work has been stopped on many of the big operations in many cities during the last five weeks due to jurisdictional disputes, speakers told the convention.

Admitting there still were jurisdictional disputes, Coefield told the delegates that "there probably always will be."

Most of Coefield's speech was devoted to warning of the progress of the CIO construction workers union.

FEW WERE ORGANIZED

"We must recognize the danger in Lewis' threats," he said. "The small housing has got away from the unions and these non-union workers are the ones Lewis will attempt to organize. In Washington, D. C., alone there are three or four non-union men to every union man working on the small housing projects. We must get after these men and try to bring them into our ranks."

Indications of how the AFL is trying "to get after these men" are given by recent developments in Washington, Pittsburgh, New York, St. Louis and other cities.

In Washington, some of the AFL locals are trying to set up "auxiliary" unions with lower wage scales and longer hour standards for residential construction. The idea appears to be to mulct dues from the workers on private construction, although they will have to work for lower wages and longer hours than on public construction, and will not have the full benefits of union membership.

Aside from constituting a raid on the public treasury, this plan would establish two classes of construction workers, with most unequal rights.

The CIO union, in contrast, will establish scales of wages for the different occupations which will be uniform on all union construction jobs, and it insists that all its members have equal union rights.

A. D. LEWIS

Further particulars about the AFL plans are given in a recent issue of a Washington labor news letter, which declares that AFL international union leaders are advocating alternative schemes for competing with the CIO, as follows:

OFFER 'CHOICE'

Either (1) locals may choose to set up a Class B membership with lower dues, fewer benefits and less voting power, and with lower wage rates for work done on home construction or other non-capital construction.

Or (2) if locals are unwilling to do this, the international union may charter an auxiliary union to cover unskilled or semi-skilled workers or others who have been excluded from the craft unions because of their restrictive regulations.

As illustrations of the changed policy, the news letter cites the above-mentioned Washington plans, noting that the Electrical Workers have already set up a lower rate for work done on house construction; the action of the Bricklayers International in chartering a local union in Pittsburgh to cover house building; and action by the Plumbers in New York City and the Lathers and Laborers in St. Louis in setting up auxiliary unions and lower wage rates for house construction.

NEW PLANS ARE OLD

These plans of the AFL are not unlike the plans with which craft unions in other industries sought to oppose the industrial organization campaigns of the CIO, and they are not expected to meet with any greater degree of success.

For example, one of the biggest factors in bringing the radio and electrical workers and the woodworkers into the CIO, was the fact that the AFL Electrical Workers and the Carpenters Union both sought to impose upon them Class B memberships. The workers in these industries were asked to accept an inferior status, like poor relations, under which about all they could do was to "pay their dues and keep their mouths shut."

The Electrical Workers offered their Class B members only one vote per local, while Class A locals were given one vote for each member; and the Carpenters Union similarly denied the timber workers any kind of adequate representation in the international.

Both of these groups of workers had enough spirit to refuse such Class B status and they are now organized in powerful CIO industrial unions, the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers and the International Woodworkers of America.

TELL OF PROGRESS

The progress of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee is outlined in a recent letter addressed by the Chairman to all CIO organizations. After referring to all the new charters which have been issued in different states, it states:

"It is apparent that this new program of the CIO has met with the approval of affiliated organizations and representatives throughout the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and we are most grateful for the splendid cooperation which we have received from them.

"It is our opinion and belief that this enthusiasm and interest will result in our building a formidable organization by the end of the year, and one which will be a credit to, and an important part of, the Congress of Industrial Organizations."

Washington CIO Council Raps Tories

Tacoma, Wash., Sept. 23—Declaring that there "must be no compromise with reaction" under the guise of a national emergency, delegates to the second annual convention of the Washington Industrial Union Council called for the completion of the New Deal's program under President Roosevelt.

The 222 delegates, representing many thousands of workers in this northwestern state, emphatically endorsed a statement by Secretary-Treasurer Eugene Dennett that "we join millions of other working people throughout this nation in endorsing President Lewis' demand that labor have a full share in positions on high councils of government."

They called upon Attorney-General Frank Murphy to launch a probe of soaring food prices as one way of curbing profiteering in industry, and passed a resolution embargoing shipments of war materials to aggressors, with special emphasis on Japan.

SUPPORT FARMERS, JOBLESS

Helping to build the anti-reactionary front in this country, the convention criticized Congress for scuttling the WPA program, and backed Washington farm organization campaigns against the power monopoly and for cost-of-production for their farm products.

Other resolutions called for extension of the Food Stamp plan, now successfully operating in Seattle, condemned persecution of Harry Bridges, West Coast CIO director, and called for the removal of R. P. Bonham, immigration director in Seatle whose name figured prominently at Bridges hearings.

President Richard Francis, CIO regional director in Seatle, and Secretary Eugene Dennett were both re-elected.

BACK CANDIDATES

Cleveland — Cleveland's Labor's Non-Partisan League has endorsed 24 candidates for city council in the coming election. No endorsement was made in the mayoralty contest.

Sen. Bulow Criticized For Speech

Sioux Fall, S. Dak., Sept. 23—Senator W. J. Bulow of South Dakota, who palmed off on a Chamber of Commerce luncheon here a word picture of CIO President Lewis as "the most dangerous man in America," was attacked today by union leaders here as a traitor to the cause of liberalism.

W. F. Reden, secretary of the Allied Trades Local Industrial Union 844, charged that Bulow ran for office as a New Dealer, only to side with the extreme reactionaries when he won the election.

Bulow, apparently overcome by his own oratory, told the local businessmen that Lewis would "out-Hitler Hitler" if he had a chance, and finished off with a dissertation on "labor racketeers who come into peaceful communities and foment strikes.'"

"I challenge Senator Bulow to show one instance where the CIO in Sioux Falls has ever been guilty of any misdemeanor or any infraction of the law," Reden said.

Advises New Deal Against 'Appeasement'

DAYTON, Ohio, Sept. 24—Addressing a public open meeting here to dedicate the new headquarters of Local 801, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America, CIO, Int'l. Sec.-Treas. Julius Emspak, singled out for special praise "the foresight shown by our CIO president, John L. Lewis, in his stirring Labor Day speech on the subject of labor and world peace."

Emspak said his union is backing the New Deal "just as long as it remains the New Deal—which means, just as long as it maintains and extends its program of friendly aid to the common people, and to labor and its organization.

"We must all view with apprehension any current tendencies, which can be noted in certain segments of the administration to 'appease' the worst enemies of labor and to compromise the interests of the working men and women in a situation where no compromise is needed.

"Labor has no 'stake' of any kind in war," said Emspak, who stopped here en route to the national CIO Convention in San Francisco. "Labor's stake is in peace and only in peace. When Pres. Lewis voiced these misgivings about what he described as attempts 'to create the illusion that when War breaks in Europe, the United States in some mysterious way will forthwith be involved,' he was voicing the deepest and sincerest feelings of the whole labor movement.

"Our membership showed in its convention resolution that while it will not condone 'shirking of our moral obligations,' we energetically oppose any involvement in foreign wars."

Practically Unanimous

BESSEMER, Ala., Sept. 23—314-2!

That was the result of a National Labor Relations Board election here as the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers proved their right to represent employes at the Sloss-Sheffield red ore mine in this city.

The election put an end to corporation efforts to perpetuate a company union type of set-up and called the company's hand on its persistent refusal to recognize the union.

When the CIO group asked for a contract some months ago, the management used its "agreement" with an employe representation plan as an out. But the union victory in the NLRB poll knocked the stuffing out of that argument.

Western Union Co. Tied Up In Knots By 'Frisco Strike

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 23.—The San Francisco Board of Supervisors today called upon the officials of the Western Union Telegraph Company to negotiate with the American Communications Association, CIO, which is conducting a strike against the company. The strike has been on since September 7.

Market Street, the main stem of this city, was taken over today by the strikers who paraded to the City Hall behind a brass band to present their case to the Board of Supervisors.

All 34 branch offices of the company are closed down tight by the strike, the CIO union announced.

10 PER CENT OF TRAFFIC

"Only a handful of company officials and strikebreakers remain to make a pathetic effort to work circuits in the main office, and less than 10 per cent of the normal traffic is being moved," it was said at union headquarters here.

"Attempts by the company to wheedle strikers back to work have failed miserably. The company has offered strikers with previous ratings of $85 an increase up to $125 if they would return to work. There were no takers. The strikebreaking offer was spurned by the strikers who are out to win their demands.

The union is asking recognition of the ACA as sole collective bargaining agency, protection against loss of jobs through mechanization, wage increases, a shorter work week and full enforcement of the Wage Hour Act.

The strike started September 7 by a walkout of all the messengers. Two days later adult workers joined the strike after a four-hour meeting.

The strike has been marked by the usual violent methods employed by union-busting employers. Last Saturday, when 15 striking messengers entered the main office of the company and blew a whistle, they were set upon by Pinkerton thugs and beaten.

Attempting to turn public opinion against the strikers, the company immediately charged that the "loyal workers" had been attacked by the striking messengers.

PUBLIC SUPPORT

The public, however, continues to support the valiant strikers. CIO and AFL unions are giving financial and physical aid to the strike. Reports that arms, ammunition and tear gas had been delivered to the main office of the company Sept. 15 was enough to win the full support of Mr. and Mrs. John Public to the striking workers.

Mass picket lines have been established around the main office of the company and unionists from all over the San Francisco area are doing picket duty. Last Saturday's picket line found Harry Bridges, West Coast CIO director and president of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, leading a contingent of longshoremen in front of the building.

An appeal to all unionists to support the strike financially has been issued by Mervyn Rathborne, president of ACA, who is at the scene of the strike. All contributions should be sent to ACA Strike Committee, ACA, Local 30, 268 Market Street, San Francisco, Calif.

San Francisco—New California head of Labor's Non-Partisan League is Hugh Wilkins of Los Angeles, succeeding A. F. Gaynor of the railway brotherhoods, who resigned because of the pressure of other work.

Seamen Push Fight For Bonuses, Insurance; Rap U. S. Commission

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—Action on the demands of the Natl. Maritime Union, CIO, for adequate war risk bonus and insurance for seamen sailing into belligerent waters moved ahead today with offers of settlement from the American Merchant Marine Institute, shipowners group, and an intervention by the U. S. Maritime Government Commission.

The shipowners' offer, involving a 25 per cent increase in monthly wages, up to $150 in compensation for personal property loss, and payment of full wages and bonus in the event of loss or internment of a ship, was submitted to the NMU Negotiating Committee and adopted as a temporary basis of settlement after prolonged discusssion. The Negotiating Committee recommended acceptance by the NMU membership.

This offer, tendered after the U. S. Maritime Commission made public a similar set of conditions for war risk compensation, was described as "temporary," and accepted as "the first concrete offer the shipowners have made after three weeks of negotiations."

INTERVENTION

At the same time, NMU leaders characterized the announcement of terms by the U. S. Maritime Commission as a direct intervention on the side of the shipowners. All during the three weeks of negotiations with the private shipowners, they pointed out, the Commission refused to announce its terms for war risk payment, claiming that the question was an affair between the NMU and the private owners, that its hands were tied by Congress, etc.

Now, NMU officials assert, the Commission comes forward with an offer below the legitimate demands of the seamen, which the private shipowners immediately seize as the basis for their offer to the NMU Negotiating Committee.

PRESS CONGRESS

The Commission's offer, NMU officials add, omits any reference to the question of life insurance for seamen, one of the demands put forward by the union. NMU plans now call for pressure at the present emergency session of Congress for a bill providing adequate insurance.

While accepting the shipowners' offer as a temporary basis, NMU officials pointed out that they would continue to negotiate until all demands were met satisfactorily.

Charges against 61 seamen for refusing to sail under foreign articles without adequate compensation will be dropped, the union announced, as a result of an agreement with the Bureau of Navigation and Inspection of the U. S. Commerce Dept.

Delegates All Set For CIO Convention

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23—A steady trek of union leaders towards San Francisco will be starting in the next few days as the date for the CIO's second annual convention draws near.

The convention itself will open at 10.00 A. M. on October 10, though the general executive board—on which all international unions and organizing committees are represented—will have held sessions the previous week.

The sessions will be held in Polk Hall in the San Francisco Municipal Auditorium, while convention headquarters will be located in the Hotel Whitcomb.

CREDENTIALS RECEIVED

Large numbers of delegates' credentials have already been received in Washington, and a considerable quantity of resolutions for consideration by the convention.

Whether the number of delegates will be as large as at Pittsburgh last year has not yet been determined, but many councils and local industrial unions which were not represented last year—largely from the Pacific coast and other western states—will send delegates to the San Francisco meeting.

FIVE YEARS AGO

The Golden Gate City was last host to a major labor convention in 1934, when the AFL met there. It was at that time that the question of organizing the nation's unorganized workers into industrial unions became the all-important issue in the federation. Promises to organize some of these non-union workers were made at the 1934 meeting by Green and his lieutenants — but their failure to do so led to the acrimonious debates at the 1935 Atlantic City convention and the eventual establishment of the CIO.

Armour Agrees To Negotiate

Washington, Sept. 23—Action of Armour and Co. officials in agreeing to negotiate today with representatives of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee has averted an industry-wide strike, Van A. Bittner, PWOC chairman, told the press here after a series of meetings with U. S. Labor Department officials and with Secretary Frances Perkins.

The agreement to negotiate in three main Armour plants—31st Street, Chicago; Indianapolis and Kansas City—came after two days of conferences by PWOC officials with the Secretary of Labor, in which they reaffirmed the union's stand that failure to negotiate would cause a nation-wide Armour strike.

STALLING ENDS

Armour officers, informed of the union's stand by the Labor Department, agreed to talk business with the union after many weeks of stalling and other delaying maneuvers.

The PWOC has an overwhelming majority of the workers in Armour's plants organized, and has been certified as sole collective bargaining agency in 17 of the major Armour units. In addition, it has won close to 50 contracts from other meat packing concerns throughout the country.

'S(m)oak The Poor!'

MADISON, WISC., Sept. 23—(FP)—Wisconsin consumers have begun paying a 2c sales tax on cigarettes.

The workingman's smoke was described as a luxury by Gov. Julius Heil, Republican, in advocating the tax, but an amendment to the bill to tax cigars costing 10c or more, offered by Andrew Biemiller, Socialist legislator, was shouted down by the conservative coalition.

Heil smokes 50c Corona-Coronas.

Earlier in the session Heil sponsored a bill to tax beverages containing a syrup—children's soda pop, for example—but exempted from taxation were champagne and the sodas that are mixed with Scotch and Bourbon. Heil was later persuaded to abandon this bill.

Ask War Insurance

CONFERRING WITH UNION MEMBERS, Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union, CIO, discusses seamen's demands for war bonuses and adequate war risk insurance for crews entering the danger areas. Steamship companies, holding out against the workers' demands, have been unable to round up crews for voyages. Hearings are being held by the Bureau of Maritime Inspection and Navigation in New York.

Ask Place For Labor On War Board

New York, Sept. 23—President Roosevelt has been asked by the New York Joint Council of the United Office and Professional Workers to add representatives of labor and consumer interests to the recently created War Resources Board.

In a letter to the President, signed by Louis Lehman, Council secretary, the union called attention to the fact that as now composed, the Board represents those who would ordinarily profit most in case the United States were drawn into war.

Look Beyond the Headlines

A recent headline in the New York Times reads as follows: "CIO Unions Lag In SLRB Elections. Lost More Often Than They Won In First 8 Months Of 1939, Record Shows."

Anyone who read no further than this headline would have got the impression that the CIO was doing badly as compared with AFL and independent unions.

But if he took the trouble to read carefully the figures given in the news item which followed, he would have found that the very opposite was the case.

The figures of that State Labor Relations Board quoted in this same item show that in elections in which CIO and AFL competed, the CIO won seven victories as against only one for the AFL.

They also show that the CIO led in the total number of workers' votes cast for it. CIO unions received 6,628 votes in the 58 elections in which they participated; independents received 5,849 votes in 46 elections; while AFL unions, although they participated in as many as 103 elections, received a total of only 3,734 votes.

While the CIO thus led in New York State, its record here is far excelled by its record in the country as a whole. Election results reported by the National Labor Relations Board have for a long time shown the CIO far ahead, and increasingly far ahead, both in the number of elections won and still more in number of workers' votes cast for it.

Yet we don't seem to remember any headlines in most of the daily papers playing up CIO victories in these far wider and more significant election trends. Which only goes to show that if all you know is what you read in the business-controlled papers, you won't know half the truth about labor.

Classes in Craft Unions

The old crack about there being "no classes in America, outside of the public schools" might be amended by adding the words, "and AFL craft unions."

For craft leaders have for some time been busily engaged in trying to create class distinctions within their own organizations.

The AFL Carpenters and Electrical Workers, for instance, some time ago created divisions between a supposed ruling class of skilled craftsmen and full members who were allowed a vote once in a long while, and a subject class of Class B members who were given little or no representation in the affairs of the organization.

The lumber workers and the radio and electrical manufacturing workers, however, didn't care much about being Class B subjects in AFL craft unions, when they could be free citizens with full and equal rights in CIO industrial unions of their own. Hence the rise of the International Woodworkers of America and the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of the CIO.

Now that the CIO has entered the construction industry, the AFL building crafts are seeking to appeal to the unorganized construction workers by offering them Class B membership, with lower wages, longer hours and fewer union rights than Class A members.

Once more, it is not difficult to predict that the construction workers as free Americans will reject such servile status and prefer the full citizenship and equal union rights offered them by the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee of the CIO.

Looking Ahead

War Planners

WASHINGTON is full of sinister rumors and reports about what is to happen to labor in the event of the United States becoming involved in war.

Some of these are merely wishful thinking on the part of certain interested parties; some are trial balloons to test how people will react to various proposals, and others are based on plans which are being actively promoted.

But all of these rumors and reports are sinister in their implications.

They are sinister, in the first place, because they reflect the wishes and intentions of interests which may seek to push the United States into war, for their own special advantage.

They are sinister because all of them envisage varying degrees of servitude for labor, curtailing the workers' civil and legislative rights and binding them to a war chariot which others will drive.

Finally, they are sinister because all of the plans rumored and reported have been prepared without consultation with labor, and on the assumption that labor must like them or lump them.

Their Big Idea

The general idea which emerges from the various plans advanced by tory and industrial interests is that control over labor affairs should be vested in special boards which would include big industrialists but would give no representation to labor.

They would like to curtail or scrap all existing legislation dealing with the right to organize, mediation of labor disputes and the protection of working conditions, and to supersede such democratic measures by dictatorial regimentation from above.

Wishful Dreamers

All such plans represent the wish-fulfillment dreams of tory financiers and industrialists, who think of war as an opportunity to make great profit for themselves and to "put labor in its place."

Like the undertaker who married a midwife, "to get them coming and going," these gentlemen have golden dreams of exploiting half the American workers at home while the other half fight and die for their profits abroad.

While American labor is being stirred to fight for democracy in the abstract, they dream of destroying democracy in every concrete form in the United States.

Reckoning Without Labor

The only hitch in all these carefully-laid schemes of the war-planners is that they have reckoned without their host.

They have proceeded on the false assumption of the jingle, that:

"The masses are asses,
"Who do as they're told;
"They're ridden to market
"And traded for gold."

The war-planners have sought to dispose of labor without reckoning with labor as an organized force with ideas and plans of its own.

Labor's Ideas

American labor, however, has some very definite and deeply-rooted ideas of its own on the whole subject under discussion.

It is also sufficiently organized and vocal to be able to express these ideas in such a way as to wake the tory war-planners from most of their dreams.

In the first place, American labor as one of the largest segments of American democracy is vitally concerned with the welfare of our country and the preservation of its democratic institutions.

It not only expects, but it demands as its democratic right, a voice proportionate with its numbers in determining the major policies of this country.

It is not willing to delegate this right to any minority of financiers and industrialists who are so eager to lay down the law.

United Against War

In the second place, American labor is united in its opposition to any involvement of the United States in the European war.

It looks with justified suspicion at the clamorous scheming of war-mongers who seek to profit from the calamities they would provoke.

Finally, if the uncertain state of world affairs demands that plans must be made for a possible emergency of national defense, American labor demands that these plans include provisions for adequate labor representation on all emergency bodies; for the preservation of labor and social legislation, and for the safeguarding of democracy in the United States.

Rhode Island Unions Fight Profiteering

Providence, R. I., Sept. 23—CIO unions in every important Rhode Island community today are setting up committees to investigate food profiteering, and are planning a conference with Gov. William Vanderbilt to determine methods of coping with the situation.

"Profiteering does away with the benefits of high wages for workers,'" Joseph Mayo, CIO sub-regional director, declared. "Labor in America does not want any war profiteers. Labor in America wants no war or any part of war."

FIVE CONTRACTS

San Francisco—Five concerns have signed contracts with the Filling Station Employes Union, CIO affiliate.

Missouri Council Formed

Jefferson City, Mo., Sept. 23 — A CIO State Council for Missouri was formed at a constitutional convention held here September 16-17, attended by delegates from scores of CIO locals in the coal, steel, glass, auto, shoe, metal and other industries.

Delmond Garst of St. Louis, regional director for the United Automobile Workers, was unanimously elected president. D. H. Watkins, Excelsior Spring, was chosen as vice-president, and James T. Nash, CIO field representative in St. Louis, was elected secretary-treasurer.

HARMONIOUS SESSIONS

Delegates adopted a constitution to govern the Missouri Industrial Union Council, and passed several resolutions bearing upon the coming Presidential election and the question of America's stand on neutrality in the present war situation.

President Roosevelt was called upon "to again carry the banner of the New Deal to victory in the 1940 elections," and his program on lifting the arms embargo was unanimously endorsed.

Big Aircraft Firm Accepts Board Order

Washington, Sept 23—Thoughts of juicy profits to be reaped in the boom in the aircraft industry, may account for the meekness with which the Douglas Aircraft Company, Inc., Santa Monica, California, today suddenly ended its long fight against the Douglas local of the United Automobile Workers.

At any rate, the company — which has been thriving on war orders—has consented to a court decree enforcing an order of the National Labor Relations Board to stop fighting the CIO Union, and to throw over a company dominated union.

The case began in 1937 when the UAW filed charges of anti-union practices against Douglas and accused the concern of dominating the Aircraft Workers Union, a so-called independent group, set up after a strike at the Santa Monica factory in February and March, 1937.

Under the consent decree, in addition to refraining from discrimination against the UAW and from recognition of the company union, Douglas agreed to reinstate Harlin Tanner, an employe, discharged for joining the UAW, and to pay $650 to 11 other workers for time lost between their discharge and their final reinstatement.

'Scabs' Can't Win

BROWN CITY, Mich., Sept. 23—"Scabs" can't win, not even at baseball. A team with that name tailed the local softball league this season, coming in far beyond its three rivals, the No-Accounts, the Hoboes and the Killers.

Sidney Hillman — A Great American

By John L. Lewis

(The president of the CIO reviews in these columns a new biography of the head of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers—"Sidney Hillman" by George Soule. MacMillan Co., New York, $2.50).

It is hard on the author of a book about Sidney Hillman to have me comment on it. That is because in a good many years of close association with the man I have grown to know him and to feel a respect and affection for him that no author could easily express in a book.

Nevertheless, I feel Mr. George Soule has written a good book about Mr. Hillman. It gives a sense of the greatness of the man. Sidney Hillman is one of the great Americans of this generation. To tell the reasons why was the task Mr. Soule took upon himself.

He has pointed out emphatically, and I would agree, that it has been one of the great qualities of Sidney Hillman that never has he separated the interests of himself as a man from the interests of his union. The rise of Sidney Hillman and the rise of the Amalgamted Clothing Workers of America is one and the same story.

'Success' Story

The author is right again when he says that Sidney Hillman "represents something essentially American, the best in the American spirit." It seems to me that this man's life is a typical American success story. But it is the story of that kind of success that is far greater and more important than the achievement of those who have sought their success in terms of personal fortune. Sidney Hillman's success is written in terms of dollars and cents, but not for himself. His success is measured by dollars and cents of hundreds of thousands of Americans who work for their living. His success is engraved forever in the lives of American workers, constituting a monument more lasting than any of granite.

Of necessity the book has treated in a few paragraphs episodes in the history of American labor and of Hillman which in themselves deserve volumes to recount. This man was, after all, the driving force behind many of the measures which are attributed to the New Deal.

If it had not been for him, there would probably have been no Fair Labor Standards Act. His union pioneered, under his leadership, in the establishment of employment offices and unemployment insurance long before he and others prevailed upon the U. S. Government to establish such systems upon a national basis. The Amalgamated established, under his leadership, a pioneering venture in housing for workers, a function now taken up by the U. S. Government. Each of these achievements and Sidney Hillman's relation to them are worthy of a volume.

Chaos Cleaned Out

Even so, the extent of Sidney Hillman's achievements must be measured first in terms of the union which claims him. The early history of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers is strewn with obstacles of the most heartbreaking kind. When the young man, Sidney Hillman, sat at a bench in the workshops of a big Chicago clothing firm, the men's clothing industry was in chaos.

Cut-throat competition was the order of the day. Terrible seasonal variations annually threw workers out upon the streets for many bitter months. Most of the wages were fantastically low. The hours the clothing workers labored were terrible to think of. The union in the industry was narrow and ineffective, ridden by the same reactionary officialdom that still prevails in the councils of the American Federation of Labor. The workers were gathered from the four corners of the earth, speaking a babel of languages, divided, unhappy, hopeless. Out of these things Sidney Hillman and his people created one of the world's greatest labor unions, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America.

To do it they had to stabilize an industry and reform its production methods. They had to fight long and bitter strikes, faced on one side by anti-union employers and on the other by the unfair tactics of reactionary AFL officials who preferred to have no union in the industry if they could not control it. They had to carry their people through depressions, through the searing fires of unemployment. Yet today there stands the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America with a record of constructive, peaceful relationship to the industry and economic and social benefits to its members that is unexampled in history.

Monuments

The CIO and the great Textile Workers Union of America are further monuments in the labor movement to Sidney Hillman. If I were to criticize Mr. Soule's book, I would say that he told too little about the part that Hillman played in the creation of the CIO and of the Textile Workers Union of America. Those are achievements which in no man's life should be passed over with a few paragraphs. In this class also is that feat of negotiation and statesmanship that was accomplished when Sidney Hillman and Philip Murray went to help the United Automobile Workers bring peace and progress to their union.

Mr. Soule devotes a chapter to discussion of the personal qualities which have made Sidney Hillman what he is. This chapter constitutes high praise indeed. Were I to write it, my endeavor would have been only to make it more fulsome.

It is a happy thing that this book has been written because it makes available to all Americans, and especially to members of organized labor, the history of a man whose life can only inspire them to greater efforts on behalf of the thing we call American democracy. With that in mind I would commend this volume for all to read.

Propose CIO Ladies Group

New York, Sept. 23 — A proposal to form a permanent organization of CIO women for active participation in labor and civic affairs was made by Miss Kathryn Lewis, daughter of CIO President John L. Lewis, at a luncheon given in her honor at the Capitol Hotel here.

Some 200 active trade union women attended, including Mrs. Bessie Hillman, wife of Sidney Hillman, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Mrs. Hillman is educational director of the Laundry Workers Union, an affiliate of the ACW.

The women trade unionists voted to take action on Miss Lewis' suggestion.

"DON'T LOSE RIGHTS!"

Urging women to take a more active interest in public affairs, Miss Lewis warned of the possibility of America being drawn into the war. She declared that it was the duty of women as citizens to take a definite stand on the war issue.

"I appeal to you not to take your rights for granted," she said. "If you do, you may lose them. If we want to keep our rights we must continue to exercise them as citizens."

RESPONSIBILITIES

Mrs. Hillman also stressed the need for women at this time particularly to "assume greater responsibilities than ever before."

Miss Ruth Young, educational director of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, presided at the luncheon, and Dorothy Kenyon, Municipal Court Justice in New York, greeted those present.

James B. Carey, president of the UERMW, and CIO Regional Director Allan Haywood were the two male representatives of the CIO present at the gathering. Carey who is secretary of the CIO, told the women that they deserve their place in the sun but they would have "to fight for that place themselves—it cannot be made for them by men."

Haywood pledged the support of the CIO in developing a movement for a more active role for women, and said that a CIO State Women's Auxiliary would be organized in New York.

N. Y. Convention Postponed

New York, Sept. 23—Date of the annual convention of the New York State CIO Industrial Union Council has been postponed from October 27-28 until November 17-18, Council President Allan Haywood announced this week.

AFL Brewery Union Supports Wagner Act

NEW YORK, Sept. 23—(FP) —A resolution "to vigorously support the principles of the National Labor Relations Act and oppose all efforts to undermine or destroy it" was adopted by the United Brewery, Flour, Cereal and Soft Drink Workers, AFL, at its triennial convention here.

The resolution puts the union in sharp conflict with the AFL Executive Council on the Wagner Act issue.

CIO Auto Union Shows Its Strength

Election Victories Embarrass Coughlin, AFL 'Organizers'

By R. J. THOMAS
President, United Automobile Workers, CIO

DETROIT, Sept. 23—The preponderance of war news that jams the press these days has obscured the details of one of the biggest labor stories of the year, second only to the winning of the union shop by half million of the United Mine Workers of America.

That unpublished story is the re-emergence to a position of secure strength and unquestioned labor leadership in the auto industry, of the United Automobile Workers of America, CIO.

The story is all the more remarkable because less than six months ago the UAW-CIO had its energies dissipated and its resources endangered by a bitter internal fight.

During the last few weeks the returns have been coming in on Labor Board elections, the first plebiscites of the auto workers in more than two years. Six elections have brought six victories, by ever-increasing majorities, for the UAW-CIO. The workers at the Briggs Body in Detroit and Evansville, Indiana, hold the record thus far with a 13-to-1 victory for the CIO over the AFL.

Here is the way the score stands to date:

COMPANY	CIO	AFL
Packard	6090	1547
Motor Products	2033	188
Bundy Tubing	360	293
Mich. Steel Casting	111	68
Brewster Aircraft	680	241
Briggs Body	13,301	1052

The largest election, to be held among 55,000 Chrysler Corporation employes on September 27, is still ahead but there is no doubt of the outcome. Meanwhile, the UAW-CIO has petitions for elections among three other auto companies on file with the NLRB.

The result of the polls has thrown the remnants of the AFL group into hasty retreat on all fronts.

MARTIN ALIBIS

The day before the Briggs election, Homer Martin, who carries the title of "president" of the AFL faction, asked to have his name removed from the Briggs ballots. He stated at the same time also that he would not take part in the Chrysler elections, giving as his alibi the unfounded charge that the Detroit office of the NLRB is so biased in favor of the CIO that no fair election is possible.

How false this charge is may be seen from these facts: in all five of the elections prior to the Briggs poll, AFL watchers and canvassers certified the honesty of the election and the count; in the Briggs election, from which AFL agents were absent, the company certified the returns and election as fair and honest; and in the Brewster Aircraft poll, which was held in New York, the AFL went down to defeat just the same.

R. J. THOMAS

In the elections held in the Detroit areas, the auto workers performed a service for all Americans who believe in democracy, which is another angle that has not received its proper share of public notice. From one viewpoint, the elections were a test of what influence Father Coughlin has among Detroit auto workers, his chief and closest audience.

LITTLE AFL STRENGTH

The AFL opposition to the CIO locals in the polls was negligible, being limited largely to the appearance in the city of 30 AFL "crack" organizers (three of whom were arested by Detroit police for carrying guns and other concealed weapons). Father Coughlin and his supporters carried the ball for the AFL in daily broadcasts and in the columns of his paper. They argued and pleaded nightly for votes for the AFL. The returns, as can be seen from the above, were a tremendous turn-down for Coughlin in his home bailiwick.

Now Coughlin states publicly that he has never "taken sides" in internal auto union affairs, although there is a thick file of recent issues of the Coughlin publication to refute him.

AFFIDAVIT

Coughlin's sudden conversion to "neutrality" came by way of reply to references to him in a sensational affidavit by one Harry A. Elder, of St. Louis, who was Martin's bodyguard in the recent tumultuous months.

Elder links Martin and Coughlin and would-be Fascist leader Gerald L. K. Smith, and Martin and Harry Bennett in a series of unsavory relationships.

Anxious as the UAW-CIO has been to obtain peaceful adjustments of its differences with employers, it has nevertheless been forced, in some cases, to strike and to take to the picket lines. The first test came last June when, after a strike, the Briggs management, employing 21,000 workers, was forced to concede the UAW-CIO Briggs local sole bargaining rights, as well as some 20 other important contract improvements.

Most important of all was the UAW-CIO's successful five-weeks strike in behalf of General Motors tool and die makers, maintenance and engineering workers. The strike, as is known, brought the UAW-CIO exclusive bargaining committees in 42 GM plants, thus sealing the doom of the AFL in the largest of the auto companies.

STRIKE STRATEGY

The strategy of this strike has not yet been appreciated. The UAW-CIO called out less than 8,000 skilled key-men at a crucial point in GM's 1940 tool and die program. By not directly involving the more than 100,000 GM production workers in Michigan, the union did not interfere with their right to collect unemployment insurance, and such payments were made despite frantic arguments and pressure by GM.

Within the last fortnight, the UAW-CIO has also carried through successful strikes in Indiana, one against the Bendix Products Company, at South Bend, and the other against Warne Gear, at Muncie. Meanwhile, for the last six months, scores of contracts have been renewed or signed for the first time without strikes, and the list of UAW-CIO model contracts grows longer and longer.

NO "WILDCATS"

One fact stands out which is particularly satisfactory to the members and leaders of the UAW-CIO: for almost nine months now we have not had a single unauthorized strike in the industry.

This has been accomplished, not by threats or browbeating of the membership when they had legitimate grievances, but by seeing to it that the officials and staff of the union moved hastily and effectively to win adjustment of those grievances.

Through all this period of stabilization and renewed growth of the auto workers union, probably our greatest single element of strength has been our affiliation with the CIO.

Affiliation and loyalty to the CIO, represented directly by the advice and help of CIO Vice-presidents Philip Murray and Sidney Hillman, decided the issue against Martin and the AFL. Close cooperation with the CIO has since given the auto workers assurance that the UAW-CIO is devoted to the single task of serving the auto workers without regard to outside interests.

The year 1937 brought the lightning growth of the new CIO unions. The last two years have tested the ability of these organizations to survive. As far as the UAW-CIO is concerned, we have come through that test with flying colors.

State, County Union Lists Important Gains

By ALEXANDER TAYLOR

New York, Sept. 23. — In fighting trim after a strenuous tussel with the political spoilsmen in Pennsylvania, and flushed with victory after winning nearly two million dollars' additional increment pay for New York City employes, the two-year-old State County & Municipal Workers of America will hold its first annual convention here at Manhattan Center, on September 27-30.

Chartered two years ago in July by the CIO, as a handful of locals numbering only a few thousand members, it revolted from the deadly embrace of the American Federation of Labor, the SCMWA will go into its first convention with well over two hundred locals in 24 states, and with its membership rolls around the 50,000 mark.

The tremendous spurt in the SCMWA's growth after joining the CIO is shown by the fact that during the first three months under the CIO banner it had chartered 99 locals in 14 states, from West Virginia to California and from Alabama to Minnesota. That scorching pace has continued unabated. The AFL's crippling influence had previously made itself felt in a miserable failure to do any real organizing, in the grabbing off of locals by non-government-service craft union, and in the rest of the AFL's well-known bag of obstructionist tricks.

But seeing the rapid growth and victorious campaigning of the new SCMWA, one after the other of the remaining AFL locals, which had not joined the revolt at first, broke away and joined hands with the husky CIO youngster. One of the first cases of this kind was that of the great Los Angeles County Hospital, where a splendid organization of many hundreds of members had been blighted almost unto death by AFL mishandling. One of the latest examples is in the street-cleaning division of Buffalo, where an AFL chapter of several hundred members has just revolted to SCMWA after it had been subjected to what it regarded as a violation of union democracy and a raid on its treasury.

ABRAM FLAXER
President, State, County & Municipal Workers.

BACK MERIT SYSTEM

An outstanding feature of the SCMWA program is the furtherance of civil service status and the merit system in the public service, which places it squarely in alliance with the good-government forces everywhere. So long as the public service is based on the discredited spoils system, SCMWA believes, just so long will the jobs of public servants be insecure. Thus a basic demand of the government workers—Job security—dovetails into the public demand for a government service hired upon a merit basis on the civil-service principle, and therefore not a catspaw of politicians which wastes taxpayers' money.

Because of this identity of the staff interest and the public interest in good government, SCMWA has from the beginning understood the need for vigorous participation in politics—not the behind-the-scenes ball-playing of the old-type "staff association," which inevitably finds itself the tail to some politician's kite, but forthright public campaigning on issues and platforms, educating whole communities to the principle that only progressive government can be clean government, and that liberal, pro-labor candidates are the only ones who can be trusted to institute honest and efficient government.

Where reactionary city and state administrations have come into power, as in Ohio, Minnesota, Michigan, and Pennsylvania, they have, of course, tried to let the SCMWA feel the lash of their whip. But a vigorous counter-attack has been able to stave off the attack, as in Pennsylvania, where political dismissals by the James administration were checked and reinstatements won after a great public campaign.

8-POINT PROGRAM

Basic tenets of the SCMWA program include: (1) permanent tenure, with dismissals only for just cause and reviewable by a hearings board which includes SCMWA representatives; (2) a "career service" in the public service so that all government employes have the opportunity, through competitive examinations, of being promoted to the highest jobs in the service; (3) regular salary increases within each job classification; (4) adequate retirement pensions for all public employes; (5) a minimum wage of $1200 a year; (6) five-day week, six-hour day, and ample paid vacations; (7) recognized grievance machinery; (8) establishment of these principles by law, and not by administrative discretion.

HENRY WENNING
Secretary-Treasurer, State, County & Municipal Workers.

A young organization, born in the sudden upsurge of organization that followed the national swing to the New Deal, SCMWA is led by officers who are also young, products of that same awakening.

Abram Flaxer, president, and Henry W. Wenning, secretary-treasurer, are both on the sunny side of 35, and both came from the ranks of the government service. Appointed to their offices by the CIO, they will bring to their organization's first annual convention a report which will record both a rich record of SCMWA achievement and a need for further growth to meet adequately the needs of the government workers in the states, cities and counties of the nation.

The convention will adopt a national constitution, elect a slate of national officers, and work out a program for the future.

BELIEVE IT OR NOT, this is a group of strikers! Accompanied by some fancy banjo playing, the boys and girls sing "We'll have a barrel of fun" between picket line shifts at Armour's plant in West Fargo, N. Dakota. Walkout started when the big meat packing firm fired two members of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee and instituted the speed-up. Strikers say they'll hold out until Armour signs a contract.

Pay Law Enforcement Due to Improve; Legal Suits Advised

(This article was prepared by the Wage-Hour Bureau of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the Textile Workers Union, CIO, which maintains offices in the Earle Building, Washington, D. C.)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23—With the recent addition of 38 litigation lawyers to the previous staff of seven, the Administration is expecting to get down seriously to the business of enforcing the Wage and Hour Law.

At present complaints are coming in at the rate of about 250 per week. Settlement of complaints through court action is at the rate of about four a week with about four times as many being closed by negotiation or otherwise. The result to date has been an accumulated back-log of over 10,000 complaints.

It is hoped that this increase in the litigation section together with the addition of about 100 inspectors by Oct. 1 will improve the situation.

WORKERS' LAW SUITS

It is doubtful, however, whether with the limited funds provided by the "whirling dervishes" of the last session of Congress, any great improvement in this picture can be expected. The workers themselves will have to act if the law is to be properly enforced.

This can be done by a more general use of employe suits as provided under the law by means of which employes may recover double the wages due. All court costs in such cases, including the employes' lawyer's fee must be paid by the employer.

To date the Wage and Hour Division has taken court action on 75 complaints, and has settled by negotiation over 200. Injunctions to restrain violators have been granted in 35 cases. Fines totaling $71,000 have been paid by 24 employers who pleaded guilty to criminal charges.

A $7,500 fine, the largest yet, was imposed last week on the Fownes Bros Co., Inc., of Amsterdam and Gloversville, N. Y., on a plea of guilty to charges of failure to pay the minimum wage and overtime to 600 employes, falsification of records, and the shipment of goods produced in violation of the law. The Lawrence Hat Company of Chicopee, Mass., was fined $6,000 when it entered a plea of guilty to faking its books and failing to pay the required wage.

The Camilla Hosiery Co. of Camilla, Ga., was convicted on criminal charges for paying less than the minimum and keeping false records of hours worked and wages paid. Part of the fine was suspended on condition that the company make up back wages to its employes.

In the first case of this kind, the Consolidated Trimming Corp. of New York City was forced to pay $5,000 last week in back wages to the employes of another company from whom they had purchased goods produced in violation of the law. Criminal charges are being brought against Mr. Harry Edelman, the contractor producing these goods, whose employes were paid from four to 11 cents per hour.

A similar suit is being fought by the Montgomery Ward mail order house. This company refused to permit the Administrator to examine its books to see whether the goods they were selling were produced in violation of the law. The company claims that this is an unconstitutional search and seizure. Argument on this case is set for November 8.

14c AN HOUR

Over $6,000 in back wages was ordered paid to the employes of the Earl J. Scott Company of Indianapolis, Ind., in settlement of a complaint filed against this company. Some workers were paid as low as 14 cents per hour.

The Diamond Mop Company of New Orleans thought it could beat the law by setting up a dummy company, the Squeez-Ezy Mop Selling Corp. The fact that this new corporation was chartered on October 24, 1938, the day that the Wage and Hour Law went into effect, was a dead give-away.

Upon investigation it was found that both companies had the same officers and that it was merely a subterfuge to escape payment of the minimum wage. Both companies were charged with failure to pay the minimum wage and for shipping "hot goods."

Analysis of the complaints received so far shows that about one-third report violations of the hours provisions, about one-quarter complain of minimum wage violations.

Hosiery Workers Warned of War 'Scare' Dangers

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—Determination that the United States shall keep out of war and that American workers' wages shall not be outstripped by war-inspired price increases were expressed by all speakers at the 28th convention of the CIO American Federation of Hosiery Workers, in session at the Park Central Hotel here.

The convention was addressed by Sidney Hillman, head of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and chairman of the executive council of the Textile Workers Union, with which the hosiery workers are affiliated.

"What must be the position and program of American labor in the face of the new world and national situation which confronts us today?" Hillman asked.

'LABOR HATES WAR'

"American labor hates war. American labor hopes, expects and will bend its every effort to prevent our nation's involvement in war. American labor will resolutely oppose American participation in war or any action which might lead to war, except only as a last measure to preserve our people and our institutions against foreign domination."

The war abroad, he continued, makes it all the more imperative American workers guard their recently-won gains against those who would utilize the war issue to deprive them both of their organization rights and their wage standards.

"American labor must demand and receive wage increases which keep pace with price increases and the growing profits of industry," Hillman declared. The workers of this country, he added, must continue to resist attacks upon the Wage-Hour law, the Wagner Act and other "legislative guarantees which assist labor in its struggle against exploitation.

COMPLETE OUR TASKS

"Above all, we must complete the task of organizing the unorganized. This is our primary obligation, not alone to the workers but to all the American people for whom a strong, united and constructive labor movement is the best guarantee against reactionary threats at home and from abroad. . ."

President Emil Rieve of the AFHW, who also heads the Textile Workers Union, took a similar stand, warning the convention delegates that "the natural American abhorrence for the methods of Fascism should not provide the springboard to throw this country into a European war.

"We cannot, and dare not, allow for the same solution of the unemployment problem in this country as the Fascist countries of Europe have forced upon that continent," Rieve stated.

"The regimentation of labor into war industries, the conscription of labor into armies and the killing of millions offers no solution."

Rieve's report said that the newly effective minimum wage level of 32½c for seamless workers and 40c for full-fashioned workers should be of great value to the union. He called for strong resistance to reactionary attacks against progressive legislation.

Settle Strike

New York, Sept. 23—A strike called by the United Furniture Workers against the Breakfast Room Furniture Manufacturers' Assemblers' Association was settled this week by the signing of an agreement granting all the union's demands.

About 300 workers involved in the strike have all returned to work under the new contract which calls for wage increases and a week's paid vacation.

Basic Pay In Effect

Washington, Sept. 23 — Eleven months after the wage-hour law came into effect, the first special minimum pay rates for special industry went into operation today.

As a result, full-fashioned hosiery workers may be paid not less than 40c an hour, while employes of firms producing seamless hosiery enjoy a 32½c hourly minimum.

BETWEEN THE LINES

By Cecil Owen

Washington—National unity is a good slogan and one which most Americans endorse wholeheartedly, but labor cannot be blamed for being just a little sceptical.

There was considerable palaver about national unity in 1933-34 when the New Deal first unfolded. The NRA was supposed to represent a united national effort to bring recovery. It held forth benefits for labor, business and consumers.

What happened, however, was that business cooperated only so far as NRA served its ends, while the labor and consumer gains were sabotaged. Just as soon as NRA tried to make good on its pledges to labor, business lost all its enthusiasm for that agency.

WHO'S TALKING

Perhaps what chiefly accounts for labor's crossed-finger attitude on this subject is that the unity talk is coming from those well-known Tory columnists and Big Business spokesmen who have never missed a chance to torpedo laws of benefit to the people.

National unity can only be obtained when special interests recognize the principle of majority rule on which the nation was founded. The plain fact is that a large majority of the people voted for a program of social legislation loosely known as the New Deal. Much of this legislation was years overdue.

NEVER ACCEPTED

Yet this program, endorsed by the majority in two Presidential and at least three Congressional elections, has never been accepted by the minority that is Big Business. The minority are represented in Congress and have ample channels for voicing their views so no rights are denied them. Yet, as in the case of the Wagner Act and the Wage and Hour Act, they have openly defied the law. Their spokesmen have even gone to the length of ignoring United States Supreme Court decisions.

Let's have national unity by all means, but on an honest basis of observance of majority decisions in the true American spirit of fair play. Labor wants no forced unity at the expense of the New Deal. A unity that would mean scrapping the Wagner Act and the Wage and Hour Law would not be unity — it would be surrender.

GARNER EXPOSED

A recent article in the Saturday Evening Post purports to be a boost for John N. Garner's Presidential ambitions. It was printed by this Big Business organ in an effort to offset the expose of Garner by John L. Lewis.

Readers of the article will find, however, that it more than confirms all of Lewis' charges and offers details. The article makes clear that Garner has always been a henchman of the big ranchers and oil interests of Texas. It shows how he has manipulated legislation in Congress from behind-the-scenes and confirms labor's charge that a handful of reactionaries run the House machinery.

'Waste' Seen Threat To U.S. Democracy

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23—American democracy is being placed in jeopardy because of our failure to use the nation's resources for the benefit of all the people.

This is the alarming warning sounded here in a 369-page report issued by the government's National Resources Committee, which has just completed a study on The Structure of American Economy.

Estimating that the depression cost the country some 200 billion dollars over an eight-year period because of idleness of productive men and machines, the committee expresses surprise that a nation which prides itself on administrative, organizational and management efficiency should permit "such tremendous waste of resources" to occur.

"The abundance of natural resources and the continental pioneering that has been necessary for their development may in part account for the past waste," the report says. "With the continent spanned, the frontier shifts from the bringing of new resources into control to the more effective use of resources already controlled.

"Here is the great challenge of today.

MUST FIND SOLUTION

"How long this opportunity will be open to the American democracy involves a serious question. The opportunity for a higher standard of living is so great, the social frustration from the failure to obtain it so real, that other means will undoubtedly be sought if a democratic solution is not worked out.

"The time for finding such a solution is not unlimited."

PLENTIFUL MARKETS

Other points noted by the report:

1. If American consumers had sufficient money income, they would form a market capable of absorbing all the goods produced by American industry.

2. In 1933, 200 of the country's largest corporations controlled about 20 per cent of the national wealth, 49 per cent of the industrial wealth and about 60 per cent of the physical assets of all non-banking corporations.

Transport Union Takes Stand

ganization to the unorganized transportation workers of the nation."

References to the war situation were made by Michael J. Quill, international president of the Transport Workers and a Councilman in the City of New York, and Edwin S. Smith, member of the National Labor Relations Board.

John Santo, international secretary-treasurer, reading the report of the union's officers, warned that the transit workers will not tolerate union-busting under the cloak of "protective legislation" or by government-owned or controlled industry.

Referring to impending merger and unification under municipal ownership of New York City's major rapid transit lines and the recently-enacted state Wicks Bill designed to destroy collective bargaining under the unified system, the report stated:

"Let no one believe that we have weakened one iota in the basic principle enunciated when the first Wicks Bill was introduced; namely, not a job, not an hour's seniority, not a single worker's pension and one of the collective bargaining rights shall be lost as a result of unification."

The TWU has 50,000 members under closed shop contracts in Greater New York.

BROPHY SPEAKS

John Brophy, national CIO director, speaking to the convention Friday, warned against attempts by anti-union forces and their agents to disrupt the unity that had made the CIO and its affiliated unions the strong, successful labor force they constituted today.

"But the enemies of our movement do not rely on frontal attacks alone. Our greatest defense is our industrial unity. If this unity cannot be breached by frontal attack, it remains to try the flank attack, and the attack from within, the attempt to weaken our resistance by agents placed within our own ranks, as spies and disrupters are placed on the flanks and within an opposing army's ranks in time of war.

Loudest and most enthusiastic ovation of the convention followed adoption of a resolution urging the re-election of Quill this November to the City Council in New York.

Advice to Consumers: Wait for Fall in Prices

NEW YORK, Sept. 23—Six points for the nation's consumers to keep in mind about prices were suggested here today by Prof. Colston E. Warne of Amherst College, writing in the current issue of the Consumers Union Reports.

Here's what Prof. Warne advises:

1. Do not stock heavily with foodstuffs at present advanced prices. Remember the large surpluses in many agricultural fields.

2. Don't be rushed into the purchase of mechanical or electrical equipment by the argument that we're headed for inflation right away. Prices can't be kept at high levels in competitive lines until there's "substantial re-employment."

3. Watch the clothing and shoe markets with great care, as dealers are variously situated as far as their inventories and their commitments to sell at certain prices are concerned.

4. Expect price declines in a number of fields in which European countries will be unprepared to take their usual quota of exports.

5. Don't speculate in commodities. You may be burned.

6. Keep an eye out for sudden price rises bearing the marks of manipulation; and give whatever support you can to efforts toward making the government afford protection against price manipulators.

SHORT-TERM ADVICE

"These short-term suggestions," Prof. Warne noted, "should not imply that America is likely to stay exempt for many months from the same inflationary forces which during the last war caused retail prices eventually to go to the high heavens."

Looking back to the last war, he pointed out that from 1914 to 1916 prices stayed fairly even, and that the war boom with its accompanying inflation got under way two years after war broke out.

Of the results of the present conflict, Prof. Warne had this to say: "If the war continues and we ship extensive supplies to France and England, it is likely that we shall have marked inflation even without war. But this time the speed of inflation is apt to be more rapid and its results more devastating."

Funds For Jobless Workers Still In Treasuries

Washington, Sept. 23—For each dollar collected in taxes, state unemployment compensation agencies paid out to jobless workers a mere 58 cents, a survey made by the Social Security Board revealed today.

The report, covering the first half of the year, showed these general figures:

Collected, $440,000,000; paid out, $260,000,000; still in treasuries, $180,000,000.

Joseph Kovner, secretary of the CIO's Social Security Committee, said the statistics back up labor demands that benefit payments under the unemployment compensation acts in practically all the 48 states could be liberalized with no injury to the entire plan.

"In only two places, Alaska and Idaho, have payments exceeded current tax claims," Kovner said, "while in 17 states, less than half of the accumulated funds has been paid out.

"The CIO Social Security Committee will continue to press for improvement of the handling of these funds in order that workers may receive further protection during periods of idleness."

Nebraska AFL Flays Sen. Burke

Lincoln, Neb., Sept. 23 — Sen. Edward Burke of Nebraska, darling of the National Association of Manufacturers, today received a stinging slap from the Nebraska federation of labor, AFL affiliate.

The labor group, meeting in convention here, expressed approval of the "aims and objectives of the New Deal" and pledged itself to oppose actively renomination of Burke, who slipped into office on a quickly violated platform of adherence to progressive legislation.

During the last session of Congress, Burke was the leading Senate advocate of amending the Wagner Act, differing with AFL top leaders only on the extent to which the labor law should be weakened.

RapSweeping Injunction In Detroit

Detroit, Mich., Sept. 23—A vicious strike-breaking injunction was issued here today against members of District 50, United Mine workers who struck the plant of Frederick Stearns & Co., manufacturers of Astringosol, Trokeys and other drugs, on August 28.

Judge Arthur Wester of the Wayne County Circuit Court granted the company a temporary injunction restraining the 250 strikers from effective prosecution of the walkout. Only two pickets are permitted and they are not allowed to come closer than 20 feet of the entrance.

The strikers are also forbidden to tell the story of the strike near any drug store where Stearns' products are sold.

Lumbermen Get 16 New Contracts

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 23—Contracts with 16 timber operators covering 1,800 workers have been signed in recent weeks, the International Woodworkers of America announced this week.

The agreements which cover all employes in the logging operations of the companies, except supervisors and office employes, provide for an eight-hour day, 40-hour week, time and a half for overtime, preferrential hiring, basic minimum wages and seniority.

The IWA is recognized as sole bargaining agency in all the contracts, which are hailed by the union as marking "a major step in the steady, consistent drive the IWA has made during recent months to organize the unorganized and sign contracts to better wages, hours and working conditions of workers in the lumbering industry."

'OK TO ORGANIZE'

Moline, Ill.—Deere & Co., farm implement makers, followed out the terms of a Labor Board stipulation today by sending notices to its employes that anti-union terms of former "yellow-dog" contracts no longer appl.

CIO AUTO UNION WINS AT CHRYSLER

AFL Heads Attacked On Policies

Atlantic City, N. J., Sept. 30.—Concluding its second biennial convention here, the CIO Transport Workers Union of America, by acclamation re-elected all of its international officers, including Michael J. Quill, persident; Douglas L. MacMahon vice-president and John Santo, secretary-treasurer.

The elections were held amidst a four-hour demonstration of enthusiasm and approval probably unparalleled in the history of organized labor. The entire TWU international executive board was re-elected. Added to the board was Robert Wihler of Detroit, Mich.

In their four-day session, TWU delegates representing more than 90,000 transit employes, mapped plans for further unionization of transit workers under the CIO banner and took cognizance of the European war situation by resolving that the President and Congress of the United States must keep America out of entanglement with European nations and must protect the civil rights of the people at home.

Elmer Brown, president of the New York Typographical Union, largest AFL printing trades local, told the convention of the desire of the AFL rank and file that there soon be created central councils in all cities, consisting of CIO unions, progressive AFL unions and other legitimate labor organizations.

Expect 500 Delegates At Ohio Meet

Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 30 — Between 500 and 600 delegates from CIO locals, councils and joint boards are expected to attend the 1939 convention of the Ohio Industrial Union Council, which opens here at the Neil House September 29, Ted. F. Silvey, secretary-treasurer of the Council announced today. The convention will last three days.

John Owens, Council president, will preside at all sessions. Speakers who will address the convention include Sherman Dalrymple, president of the United Rubber Workers; R. J. Thomas, president of the United Automobile Workers; and E. L. Oliver, executive vice-president of Labor's Non-Partisan League.

WEST COAST HEAT WAVE, which almost ruined thermometers, didn't dent the American Communications Assn. strike against Western Union Telegraph Co. in San Francisco. Messenger boys stopped only long enough to cool off with some iced coffee before going back to the picket lines. The strike, involving several hundreds, tied up the company's business. (See Story Page Three)

Canadian Auto Union Fights Tory Drive

WINDSOR, Ontario, Sept. 30—Canadian CIO auto workers today called upon all labor forces throughout the Dominions to stand guard lest democratic gains be snatched away during wartime.

The resolution said that these "democratic privileges . . . are now, apparently, about to be placed in jeopardy."

Labor, it warned, is being placed in a position "rapidly becoming unbearable unless alleviating measures are adopted forthwith." The resolution, which was passed by the District Council of the United Automobile Workers, spoke of "encroachment" on living standards "by reason of the increased cost of living and the apparent encroachment of their personal democratic liberties through legislation or contemplated legislation."

Denounce Profiteers

Trenton, Nova Scotia, Sept. 30—War profiteers were denounced in a resolution passed unanimously by Local 1231, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, at a meeting held here at which figures were quoted to show that staple commodities had already risen 10 per cent, not counting the special taxes levied by the government to pay the cost of the war.

This spread was called excessive and unwarranted by the local, which proposed that labor be represented on committees set up in each town to survey wholesale and retail prices.

Wins Over 80% Of Total Vote; Seek New Pact

(See Story and Tabulation of Votes on Page Three)

DETROIT, Sept. 30 — Fifty thousand employes of the Chrysler Motors Co., voting in the largest National Labor Relations Board election ever held, showed a sweeping 81% preference for the United Automobile Workers, final returns from the 13 elections showed today.

The voting record:

UAW-CIO	40,564
Neither	4,426

In trouncing Homer Martin's AFL union by this thumping 9-1 margin, the CIO auto workers fully justified their claims of leadership in the industry and gave another blow to the AFL's already badly-dented boasts.

All major Chrysler plants went CIO by tremendous majorities. In four Detroit elections, the UAW-CIO rolled up 6,087 votes, while the AFL was able to muster only 224. At the main Dodge plant, the CIO won by an 18-1 margin, with 18,000 votes involved; and at the Los Angeles plant, the AFL could claim only 5 votes out of 600.

The two elections lost by the CIO union were in Kokomo, where a majority voted for no union, and at Evansville, Ind., where the AFL outfit won a 2-vote majority.

Pres. R. J. Thomas, pleased that the voting had borne out his predictions, said immediate steps would be taken to negotiate "a new and satisfactory" contract with the Chrysler Corp.

Shoe Union, Three Councils Convene

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30—A CIO international union—the United Shoe Workers—and three state industrial union councils are holding conventions this weekend and during next week.

The USWA meeting opens in Rochester, N. Y., on October 2 with several hundred delegates expected. Ohio's Industrial Union Council convention opened in Columbus yesterday, while the Wisconsin CIO meet convened in Racine on the same day. California's Industrial Union Council meets in San Francisco on October 6.

Several prominent speakers are scheduled to address the shoe union sessions — Deputy Wage-Hour Administrator Paul Sifton, Mary Anderson, head of the Dept. of Labor Women's Bureau and Walter Smethurst, executive assistant to CIO Pres. Lewis.

Principal issues before the shoe union delegates will be the problem of lifting wages to meet rising living costs, and of fighting the plan of the German Bata Shoe Co. to open an American plant paying starvation wages to imported workers unaccustomed to American standards.

STRIKERS CONTINUE their month-old fight for a contract at the Burndy Engineering Co. in New York City and for rehiring of several dismissed workers. The three CIO unions involved: Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians; the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; and the United Office & Professional Workers.

Clothing Workers May Seek Wage Rate Revision

NEW YORK, Sept. 30. — Notice was served on organized clothing manufacturers this week that the Amalgamated Clothing Workers reserves the right to request an upward revision in wages for 150,000 workers in the men's and boys' clothing industry, in the face of rising living costs precipitated by the European war.

Sidney Hillman, president of the Amalgamated, advised the manufacturers, who represent 90 per cent of the industry, that the union would hold its demand pending further study of upward trends in prices in American industry generally, as well as in the men's clothing industry, but he urged them to make no commitments to retailers for the coming season without a proviso for an increase in labor costs.

Unilateral action by any section of the clothing industry has always been frowned upon by the union, Hillman said, as it was held that the greatest good for all elements could be achieved only by joint action. He pointed to the union's 25-year record in this direction, stressing its stabilization program of the past six months, in which enlightened employers participated.

Indication that the Amalgamated was seriously considering an upward revision in wages in men's clothing followed a 7½ per cent wage increase it obtained for 40,000 shirt makers and a 10 per cent increase for 15,000 pants makers.

The ACW's position in the face of rising living costs was approved by the union's scale committee, which met in the national office, and was ratified at a meeting of New York shop chairmen, at which President Hillman spoke.

Ask Votes In 9 Steel Plants

Pittsburgh, Pa., Sept. 30—A petition for an election in the nine plants of the Crucible Steel Company of America has been filed with the National Labor Relations Board, Clinton S. Golden, regional director of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, announced today.

Golden said the election was asked because Crucible Steel has refused to recognize the SWOC as sole bargaining agency, although it signed a contract in 1937 which expired in 1938, and has since been continued on a day-by-day basis.

In a letter to Raoul Desvernine, president of Crucible Steel, Golden asked a conference to negotiate a new contract, to be held not later than October 10.

Contract Brings Pay Increases

Providence, R. I., Sept. 30—Wage increases and improved working conditions were won in a contract signed between the United Baking Powder Workers, CIO, and the Rumford Chemical Works of East Providence, it was announced today by Joseph Mayo, state CIO director.

The agreement, which covers 100 employes, also carries a clause under which further pay increases may be negotiated if deemed advisable.

Davis Named To Succeed Frank Miley

Morgantown, W. Va., Sept. 30.—Fremont Davis, former secretary-treasurer of District 31, United Mine Workers, has been chosen to serve as District President, to succeed Frank Miley, former district head, who died recently of a heart attack.

Davis, who has been active in UMW affairs for many years, served as secretary-treasurer from 1926 to the present time.

Four-Day Strike Lifts Wages

Eau Claire, Wis., Sept. 30—CIO unionists at the Refrigerator Industries, Inc., here required only four days to bring the management to terms.

A strike of that duration won a new contract, featuring the preferential shop.

Success was due to a large extent to the cooperation of the Eau Claire CIO Council, which mobilized powerful support for the strikers, members of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee. Other gains won included the 40-hour week and a 5c-an-hour wage increase.

Armour Parleys Get Under Way In Three Cities

CHICAGO, Sept. 30—Long delayed contract negotiations by Armour and Co. with the CIO Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee began here, in Kansas City and Indianapolis with an important concession by the company and an assurance to Labor Secretary Perkins that Armour was "sincere" in its desire to reach an agreement.

The concession came with a company agreement to assign responsible national officials from headquarters to talk with the union, eliminating the previous trick of "buck-passing" on the part of local superintendents.

"Two Armour vice-presidents heard what Miss Perkins had to say and then decided that it would be wisest to see things the way the union does, and that is to sign contracts," PWOC Director Don Harris said after the latest visit by PWOC officials, led by Chairman Van A. Bittner, to Washington.

THE REAL THING

"Although we do not have too much confidence in this company's promises," Harris added, "nevertheless it looks like the real thing this time because conciliators from the Labor Dept. will attend all negotiations. Equally important is the fact that a third party, the government, will put its signature to the contracts when they are negotiated."

Assistant Director Henry Johnson laid the change of heart by Armour and Co., which has been using stalling tactics on the union's demands for a contract for months, to four basic reasons.

First in importance was the strength of the PWOC, which was "prepared for a 100 per cent shutdown of all Armour operations." That, plus universal CIO support, aroused public opinion in favor of PWOC, and the intervention of the U. S. government, "was a clear warning to the company that strikebreaking is an impossibility," he said.

Pontiac CIO Goes To Bat For Teachers

By SWANSON C. SHIELDS

Pontiac, Mich., Oct. 1—In a move that won them friends from many professional and civic groups, the CIO unions in Pontiac recently launched a drive against salary reductions for local school teachers.

Through the Pontiac CIO Industrial Union Council, over 40,000 workers were mobilized for a fight "to protect the teachers from physical starvation and the students from mental starvation."

Even the local newspapers, notorious for their anti-labor slants, carried items that one of the most forceful speakers at a Board of Education meeting protesting salary cuts was Tucker P. Smith, executive secretary of the Pontiac CIO Council.

"Labor has an important stake in education," Smith declared, in pointing out that not only does labor build and operate the schools, but it is "the sons and daughters of working people that make up the class-rooms."

Cleansed of the disruptive Martin element, the CIO forces here have been frowing both in membership and effectiveness. The CIO here has taken the lead in fighting retrenchments in other municipal services, such as relief and WPA.

Holding the Line

STRIKING MEMBERS of the CIO Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee completely closed the huge Ottumwa, Ia., plant of the Morrell Packing Co. when the management arbitrarily fired 15 workers for alleged infraction of rules. The plant stayed closed until the men were reinstated. Fifteen "loyal workers" stayed in the plant, which normally employs 2400.

A Spotlight On The Special Interests

"THE PRESSURE BOYS, The Inside Story of Lobbying In America," by Kenneth G. Crawford. Julian Messner, Inc., publishers. $3.00.

By GARDNER JACKSON

Kenneth G. Crawford, brilliant and conscientious correspondent for the New York Evening Post, tells in his new book the disturbing story of why our government too much of the time does not operate in the public interest. The story is particularly pertinent in a crisis such as that in which the world now finds itself.

For labor and those thoughtful citizens who see in an expanding labor movement the chief hope for retaining the democratic processes in this country, Mr. Crawford has drawn in smooth-running prose a sharply-etched picture of the factors labor must overcome if it is to survive.

This picture appears not only in those chapters dealing directly with labor — "The Labor Front," "Finks, Spies and Girdler," and "Un-American Activities." It is implicit in all the other chapters detailing episode after episode of selfish property and money interests seeking to have their way in Washington and frequently succeeding.

NAMES NAMES

Mr. Crawford names names, places, dates, amounts of money and females involved in these episodes. He pulls no punches at any point in the book. Parading across his pages are political figures, men and women of finance and industry, publishers and public relations artificers whose names have become familiar to most of the American public through constant mention in the press.

Toughened by greed and self-seeking must be the hides of these individuals if the facts about their efforts to corrupt the making and administration of laws as set forth painstakingly but lustily by Mr. Crawford do not get under their skins. My prediction is that there will be yowls of pain if this volume gets the circulation it deserves.

THE BIG PARADE

Donald Richberg, the "glamorous" Katherine Connor, Democratic National Committeewoman from Kentucky; Tom Girdler and his Hills and Knowltons, George Sokolskys and Sam Joneses; Senator Millard Tydings and his self-serving skullduggeries; the Liberty Leaguers and their DuPonts; the sentimental Jo Tumulty and his sugar papas; the ineffable Martin Dies and his John P. Freys and J. B. Matthewses; Evelyn Walker Robert, "by all odds the best-looking blonde in Washington society," and her hubby "Chip;" Carl Byoir and his Chester Wrights; Senator Bennett Clark and his Listerine — these and scores of others, with an illuminating array of incident and money facts attached to each, provide the subject matter for the most exciting reading turned up from the Nation's Capitol since before the New Deal gave them their stage.

In his chapter entitled, "The Sutlers," Mr. Crawford performs a special service by going back to study the influence of the lobbyests in dragging this country into the Great War.

He describes his book in the foreword as "the unrepressed personal bias of a professionally impartial observer with no political affiliations and no doctrinaire axes to grind." It is the kind of "bias" which every trade union local in the country should read and all citizens concerned with the fate of our country.

Union Leaders Head Towards San Francisco

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30.—Leaders of the CIO's powerful international unions and organizing committees were San Francisco-bound today, while hundreds of delegates to the convention opening Oct. 10 are preparing to leave for the West Coast city next week.

The CIO's executive board meets Oct. 5, and more than 42 union presidents and CIO headquarter staff officials will be on hand for the sessions.

'Frisco will indeed be a CIO city from Oct. 5 on. California's Industrial Union Council will meet here on Oct. 6, 7 and 8, in the same Polk Hall where the national convention will be held two days later.

Final details for the convention program will be worked out at the executive board meeting.

Local union officials are making plans for a big public mass meeting at which Pres. John L. Lewis and other national leaders will speak. No definite arrangements have yet been completed, however.

Presidents of a number of international unions with substantial membership groups on the West Coast have made plans for meetings with these union locals both before and after the convention. Pres. R. J. Thomas of the United Automobile Workers, Pres. Lewis Merrill of the United Office & Professional Workers and Pres. Lewis A. Berne of the Federation of Architects, Chemists, Engineers & Technicians are among those planning to combine the convention with visits to affiliated locals.

Back Liberal For Mayor In 'Frisco

San Francisco, Sept. 30. — All labor and progressive groups in this city today started putting their shoulder to the municipal campaign wheel in a determined effort to unseat Mayor Rossi in the next city elections.

Just before flying back to Washington for the special session of Congress, Rep. Franck Havenner, Democrat, filed papers for the mayoralty contest.

The Congressman is endorsed by Labor's Non-Partisan League and by CIO and AFL unions. All these groups will wage an active fight for Havenner and against Rossi, who has constantly served big business and actively opposed the city's labor movement. He won the enmity of the maritime workers during the 1934 strike and has done nothing during the intervening years to change their opinion of him.

"There can be no security for labor unless it has confidence in the city's chief executive," declared State Senator John Shelley, head of the city AFL group and a leader in the local Labor's Non-Partisan League.

See AFL Final Split With Typos

Washington, Sept. 30 — Indications that the AFL will expel or suspend the Intl. Typographical Union were noted today when an ITU check for monthly dues was returned by AFL Secretary-Treasurer Frank Morrison.

The AFL executive council previously voted to accept no further dues from the ITU until it paid a special assessment levied to fight the CIO.

In the September issue of The Bulletin, issued monthly from the office of ITU President Claude M. Baker, an unsigned statement referring to the return of the ITU's check for payment of the August per capita tax on 78,498 members says:

"Thus after four years of continued controversy, affiliation with the American Federation of Labor apparently has been severed."

At its convention held last month in Fort Worth, the ITU delegates again voted, as they had at the previous convention, to refuse to pay the special assessment.

Automobile Union Wins Biggest Board Poll In Chrysler Plants

By EDWARD LEVINSON

DETROIT, Sept. 30.—The United Automobile Workers CIO, swept through this week to an overwhelming victory in the largest employe representation election ever held by the National Labor Relations Board.

The UAW-CIO won majorities in 11 of 13 bargaining units into which the Labor Board has divided the Chrysler Corporation, third largest auto company in the country.

RESULTS OF THE VOTES:

PLANT	CIO	AFL
Dodge	17,654	837
Jefferson-Kurcheval	7,209	391
Dodge Forge	1,065	33
Dodge Truck	1,523	38
Amplex	156	3
Plymouth	5,585	2,771
Highland Park	1,917	96
De Soto	1,582	57
Marysville	519	30
Kokomo, Ind.	173	17 (a)
New Castle, Ind.	2,277	60 (b)
Evansville, Ind.	307	355
Los Angeles	585	5
TOTAL	40,564	4,744

(a) Neither union received 343 votes, a majority.
(b) A non-AFL company union received 722 votes.

'END OF AFL'

"The result of the Chrysler poll," said R. J. Thomas, international president of the UAW-CIO, "finishes the destructive efforts of the AFL in the auto industry. It establishes the UAW-CIO as the unquestioned spokesman of the auto workers."

One result of the election gives the UAW-CIO sole bargaining rights in the 11 Chrysler plants.

"Our victory in Chrysler is our greatest and most important triumph since the 1937 strike, which established our union in the auto industry," Thomas continued. "We have shown that despite the heaviest pressure of the AFL in combination with the Chrysler corporation, the workers want the CIO to speak for them. We have answered our enemies and the doubters on the issue of who speaks for the Chrysler workers."

Richard T. Frankensteen, director of the Chrysler department of the UAW-CIO, said that the election result would be interpreted as instructions to the UAW-CIO to negotiate, at once, a "new and improved Chrysler agreement."

The significance of the election for the 57,000 Chrysler work-

'Frisco Wire Strike Still Going Strong

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 30.—Delay by the National Labor Relations Board in handing down a decision on the case filed against the Western Union Telegraph Company by the American Communication Association, CIO, is being used as a basis for refusal by WU officials to negotiate with their striking employes, Mervyn Rathborne, ACA president, said this week.

A Board trial examiner recommended nearly a year ago, Rathborne said, that the company be ordered to abolish the Association of Western Union Employes as being dominated illegally, and that its contract be cancelled. The recommendation was based on a five-week hearing in New York City during the summer of 1938. So far the Board has not acted on the examiner's report.

Meanwhile the ACA strike against Western Union which started Sept. 7, is holding firm, with the strikers receiving aid and support from numerous West Coast unions, both CIO and AFL. A 24-hour picket line is being maintained in front of the main company offices, and enthusiastic meetings and parades are being held.

Last week the San Francisco Board of Supervisors recommended that WU officials meet with strikers to draft a working agreement, but the company ignored the request.

War Bonus Victory Spurs Negotiations For Maritime Pact

NEW YORK, Sept. 30.—Contract renewal negotiations between the CIO Natl. Maritime Union and the shipowners, begun early this week, got under way with a union victory on the war risk bonus issue and a preliminary basis of six points for the talks.

The bonus victory, won last week, gave the CIO seamen and other unlicensed marine workers a 25 per cent increase, property indemnity up to $150, transportation back to the U. S. from lost ships, and continuing wages for internment on all ships entering war zones.

The six points of negotiations were worked out in a preliminary meeting as follows:

Halting of discrimination against active union members, increased use of union hiring halls, overtime for holiday and week-end work on coastwise ships, wage increases of $10, general overtime increase from 70 to 80 cents per hour and definite rules for war risk bonus payment.

The present contract, which expires September 30, covers 19 to 44 shipowners in the American Merchant Marine Institute and three lines not belonging to the employers' association.

UNITY RE-ESTABLISHED

In announcing the six-point basis for renewal talks, the union negotiating committee declared that greater unity and the exposure of employer subsidized disrupters and spies would make for many improvements in the renewed agreement.

"At the time the present agreement was negotiated," the committee said, "there was a smattering of internal dissension within the union, created, it was learned later, by a group subsidized by certain ship operators.

"This group has been since exposed and eliminated. Most of the offensive features of the present contract, therefore, are expected to be replaced by more agreeable ones."

Transit Union Convenes

War Board To Go, Says F. D. R.

(By Federated Press)

Washington, Sept. 30.—Dissolution within a short time of the War Resources Board, bitterly attacked by organized labor because of the failure to include labor representatives was announced here by Pres. Roosevelt.

In response to a press conference question, the President said the work of the War Resources Board would be completed within the next 10 days by the filing of its report, that he would thank them for a very fine job and that the board would then disband.

His remark that the board would disband caused some surprise as it was generally assumed that the board would continue in existence, becoming a War Industries Board in the event the U. S. becomes involved in war.

Inspiring Victories

The spectacular victory of the CIO United Automobile Workers Union in the Chrysler Co. election is a good omen for the whole of the CIO on the eve of its second national convention.

The auto workers turned out by tens of thousands, in the largest Labor Board election ever held, to register their preference for representation by the CIO union. The majority for the CIO as against the AFL was as much as nine to one.

The Chrysler victory followed a whole series of CIO election victories in the Briggs, Packard, Motor Products and other large automobile plants.

Not only in the automobile industry, but in dozens of other industries as well, the trend of all recent elections has been emphatically toward the CIO.

In the past year, the CIO has won far more elections than AFL or independent unions, and it has polled many more workers' votes than all other unions combined. And the tendency has progressively increased in favor of the CIO.

The coming San Francisco convention of the CIO will review this and other evidence which proves that the majority of American workers prefer the modern and progressive type of industrial organization offered by the CIO.

The recent victories will lend new impetus and new enthusiasm to the big forward drive of union organization which will be planned at the convention.

A Catspaw Commission

Collective bargaining is a democratic procedure which has been repeatedly approved by Congress, is embodied into law and is part of the public policy of the United States.

But there is one government body, namely the U. S. Maritime Commission, which has presumed to differ with and oppose this public policy.

This Commission seems deliberately to have set out to break down collective bargaining in the maritime industry.

It has instigated and upheld the refusal of government-controlled companies to bargain with the maritime unions, and it has made a number of attempts to destroy the union hiring hall system established by the unions through collective bargaining.

The Maritime Commission is now accused by the National Maritime Union of acting as a catspaw for private shipowners in the current dispute over war risk compensation. In the midst of negotiations, it decreed rates on its ships far lower than the union's demands, thus supporting the shipowners' resistance to adequate compensation.

The NMU as a result is calling for a Congressional investigation of the anti-labor practices of the Maritime Commission.

The least that can be expected of a government agency is that it itself comply with the letter and the spirit of the laws enacted by Congress, and it is high time that a stop be put to the Maritime Commission's campaign against labor unionism and collective bargaining.

Paper Says Bridges' Foes Came Out Second Best

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 30. — The stoolpigeon witnesses trotted out at the Harry Bridges deportation hearing in San Francisco failed to make much of an impression on the Montgomery Advertiser, which discussed the issues involved in a recent editorial.

"If there are any Californians who know of an actual infringement of law by Bridges," the paper declared, "it would be well for them to come forward right now and present their case to a proper court.

"Those who have just finished trying to assail him have come off second best."

The editorial charged that the "California interests which instigated the hearings were not particularly interested in political philosophy, but felt it as good a way as any. Bridges offended them by being a very capable labor organizer."

The Winner!

Looking Ahead

By LEN DE CAUX

Democracy Preferred

THE automobile workers never do things by halves; they seem to go out for the record in whatever they undertake.

The speed with which the CIO United Automobile Workers union was organized a year or two ago broke all records in the history of the labor movement.

Hundreds of workers never before organized joined the union in the space of a few months.

And now that the auto workers are called upon to vote in Labor Board elections, they are not content just to roll up safe majorities for the union of their choice, but are breaking all records again.

In the biggest elections ever held, the auto workers are doing the spectacular thing once more, by rolling up the largest majorities ever recorded.

The majorities for the CIO are so huge and so overwhelming that they bury once and for all the hopes of AFL and company disrupters to turn the auto workers away from the modern, democratic industrial unionism of the CIO.

When Mussolini Meets

When Mussolini holds a cabinet meeting, he is said to place himself in a belligerent posture in the middle of a three-sided tailor-shop mirror.

The Duce can then turn to War Minister Mussolini on his right, or Navy Chief Mussolini on his left, or stick out his jaw at Secretary of the Interior Mussolini in front of him.

By a little adjustment of the mirrors, Prime Minister Mussolini can have a whole series of Mussolinis with and without portfolio nodding their heads or shaking them vigorously whenever he does.

Such cabinet meetings are reliably reported to result most satisfactorily for Mussolini, with consistently unanimous votes for the policies which he advocates.

Mirror Illusions

Enlarging upon this principle, the AFL officialdom this year, it is reported, is holding its annual convention in the Hall of Mirrors of a midwestern hotel.

If the mirrors are rightly placed, Big Bill Hutcheson and the other half-dozen big shots whose votes count more than those of all the other delegates combined will be able to see their nods and shakes of the head duplicated many times.

This will doubtless create an atmosphere as democratic as that of a Mussolini cabinet meeting. And with a little liquid assistance, the assembled international officials and business agents will be able to look around at their reflections and imagine their number multiplied into quite a host of labor.

Class B Members

Most of the AFL bosses, like Mussolini, get their mandates for the policies they advocate by going into a huddle with themselves.

Holding no conventions of their unions for decades at a time, they have little difficulty in obtaining from themselves a unanimous "Aye" vote, since those opposed are given no opportunity to say their "Nay."

Against the evil day when they might be compelled to hold a union convention, many of the AFL craft bosses have in recent years devised an almost foolproof system.

The AFL Electrical Workers, Carpenters and a number of other building crafts now nave Class B locals, whose members are to all intents and purposes disfranchised.

The original idea was to put new members into such voteless Class B locals, to prevent any sudden influx from dislodging or disturbing the existing leadership.

But now there are reports of even old locals being reduced to Class B status. If this process is continued, many of the AFL craft bosses will be able to "regularize" their dictatorships, by reserving Class A membership for themselves and making all the rest of the members voteless Class B subjects.

39 Years Without Convention

The AFL Tobacco Workers International Union has recently furnished a choice illustration of the "democracy" prevailing in the Federation.

For 39 years this organization has held no convention, its officials preferring to officiate without advice from the rank and file.

In recent years, however, some of the locals of this AFL union have had the audacity to ask for a convention. Upon being turned down, one of them went to court and obtained an order requiring the holding of a convention.

The latest word is that the international officials are appealing to a higher court to set aside this order—and it looks as if they'll be able to round out their 40th year without a convention.

The above are just a few among many reasons why the automobile workers and so many other groups of workers are giving such huge majorities to the CIO, when they have a chance to vote between it and the AFL.

In so doing, they are expressing their preference for vigorous, modern, democratic industrial unionism, as against craft division and decadent dictatorship.

Gov't Union Plans Campaign

New York, Sept. 30.—Greeted by national leaders in public affairs, the labor movement delegates to the first convention of the State, County and Municipal Workers, CIO, set themselves to the task of charting future organizing drives for their fast-growing union.

"You and the men and women whom you represent have achieved splendid results," CIO Pres. John L. Lewis wired the convention. "You have been pioneers in a new field, but in only a short time you have won over much of this territory."

Other greetings came from Pres. Roosevelt and Mrs. Roosevelt, Sec. of the Interior Ickes, and CIO Vice-Presidents Philip Murray and Sidney Hillman.

OFFICERS REPORT

The officers' report, submitted by Pres. Abram Flaxer and Sec.-Treas. Henry Wenning, discussed the growth of the union since its beginning in 1937 and revealed that it now has about 50,000 members in 231 locals spread out through 25 states.

"No advance towards war" was the keynote of the officers' suggested platform for the immediate future.

"War, with all its horrors," the report continued, is already having repercussions in this country. Pointing to quick-rising food prices, the officers called for "effective measures" by the labor movement to "curb the greed of war profiteers.

PROTECT SECURITY

"The spectre of war must not wrest from us those things for which we have fought so well . . . For his own security, the government worker must bend his every effort to see to it that there is no advance war and no retreat in legislation that will ensure and extend social services to the people of this country."

LIST PLATFORM

The SCMWA program calls for a $1,200 annual minimum wage for government officials, plus annual increases within each classification and opportunity to compete for promotion to higher ratings. It calls for greater democracy in public labor relations policies and demands the removal of the "semi-citizen" status of government workers, barred as they are at the present time from enjoying the benefits of Wagner Act, wage-hour and social security legislation.

A. D. Lewis Cites Gains Of Drive

New York, Sept. 30. — "It is doubtful, at least to my mind, that the employes of the construction industry will agree to a Class B status" as suggested by certain AFL building trades union chieftains, Chairman A. D. Lewis of the CIO United Construction Workers Organizing Committee declared today.

Addressing convention delegates of the State, County & Municipal Workers in the Court of States at the World's Fair, Lewis pointed out that only one-half a million of the construction industry's three million workers are "in any kind of an organization," and for that reason "we can see the necessity for a modern organization such as has been set up by the Executive Officers of the CIO."

Enthusiastic reactions to the announcement of the CIO drive, which has already led to the chartering of 48 local construction unions, is proof, Lewis asserted, that the industry's workers are "anxious to join a modern type of organization that will relieve them of the many evils that have beset the industry in the past — high dues and exorbitant initiation fees."

COMPLIMENTS SCMWA

SCMWA delegates were complimented for their achievements during the two years the union was organized under CIO auspices.

"I confidently predict that it will press on from this point to cover the workers employed in all political subdivisions of this great country," he declared.

The time will soon come, Lewis predicted, when all government workers will be able to say:

"I have the right and am unafraid to express my opinions regarding the manner in which my government shall be operated. I have the right and am unafraid to express my opinions as to whom I shall vote for in the coming elections. I am as free as any man in the expression of my opinions, because I belong to the State, County & Municipal Workers."

Auto Union Sweeps Chrysler Poll; To Seek New Contract

ers is the fact that their collective bargaining rights are restored. When Homer Martin was expelled from the UAW-CIO last Spring, he presented the Chrysler corporation with a demand for recognition.

Given an easy alibi by the AFL, the corporation said it did not know whom to deal with and would therefore recognize neither union. Bargaining was stymied for almost six months, and the best the UAW-CIO could do was win monthly extensions of the old agreement.

The UAW-CIO petition for the election asked that the employer unit be the basis. Apparently attempting to appease the AFL, the Labor Board ordered elections on plant units. President Thomas will petition at once, since the UAW-CIO has won in all plants, for a reversal of the NLRB decision.

The UAW-CIO triumph in Chrysler is the latest of six straight election NLRB victories for the union, President Thomas pointed out. Three weeks ago, Briggs Local 212, UAW-CIO, won a 3-to-1 victory over the AFL. Previous to that, the UAW-CIO won polls in the Packard, Motor Products, Michigan Steel Casting, Brewster Aeronautical and Dundy Tubing companies.

Demoralized by its constant thumping defeats at the hand of the auto workers, the AFL this week withdrew its petition for an election among workers at the Motors Metal Manufacturing Co., Detroit. As a result, the corporation has granted the UAW-CIO sole bargaining rights.

The UAW-CIO has a petition pending for an immediate poll in the Kelsey-Hayes Wheel plant, Detroit. The AFL refused to put in an appearance at NLRB hearings on the petition. An election has also been requested in the Detroit Midland Steel plant.

There are also 43 GM plants in which the UAW-CIO has the only bargaining committees.

HOT CAMPAIGN WAGED

The Chrysler victory was aided by a streamlined election campaign put on by the UAW-CIO and its Chrysler department. Union leaders were on the air every night for a week in radio broadcasts.

A series of three broadcasts presented, in play form, the history of the UAW-CIO and its difficulties with the AFL. Members of the union acted the roles of John L. Lewis, William Green, William S. Knudsen, Governor Frank Murphy and others who have played parts in the history of auto unionism.

Never, since the great 1937 victories, has enthusiasm for the UAW-CIO run so high among the auto workers. In a larger sense the Chrysler vote was a vote on the work of the CIO. The result is an overwhelming endorsement and vote of loyalty for the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Architects To Study Labor Set-up

Washington Sept. 30.—A proposal that the nation's architects study labor relations in the building industry with the consideration that the "whole procedure of building is one process in which many contribute, rather than as a series of separate contributions to a large whole," won unanimous acceptance at the convention of the American Institute of Architects, in session here.

The resolution, offered by Robert Kohn, suggested that some type of relationship involving "not only . . . labor with labor, but the architects with labor" should be found which would lend itself to the industry, which was viewed as integral process.

Kohn's suggestion followed discussion of the effects of craft unionism on the building industry, a problem which Kohn said the architects cannot afford to neglect.

The AFL buildings trade unions have recently been under government investigation and public criticism because of charges of racketeering, jurisdictional disputes and high initiation fees, all tending to weaken the entire industry.

CIO Backs Auto Union Request

Washington, Sept. 30. — CIO intervention in behalf of the United Automobile Workers, seeking employer-wide certification in Briggs Manufacturing Co. plants, was asked of the National Labor Relations Board today.

The UAW's petition was filed by Pres. R. J. Thomas, who said that on the basis of recent Labor Board votes in which the CIO union emerged an overwhelming victor, the UAW is "clearly entitled to certification as sole collective bargaining agent in all Briggs plants."

IMPORTANT ISSUE

The CIO request to intervene in the case was explained by Lee Pressman, general counsel, as based on the desire to "present to the Board its views on the importance of this issue in order to promote collective bargining and the purposes of the Wagner Act.

Discuss Farm Prices

PRICE LEVELS of farm products came in for discussion as Sec. of Agriculture Henry Wallace called together his new Agriculture Advisory Council to discuss new developments arising out of the war situation. Chairman Van A. Bittner of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee represents the CIO on the board.

Ohio Valley Unions Discuss Plans

Cincinnati, Sept. 30—Over 100 delegates from dozens of important unions discussed new problems and organizing plans at the CIO Ohio River Valley Conference here.

Paul W. Fuller, CIO regional director, was chairman of the meeting. Reports were heard from Lee Hall, CIO representative in the paper industry, who urged cooperation in organizing that field; George Moses of the Inland Boatmen's division of the National Maritime Union; T. Louis Majors of the steel union and Jack Kroll of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Secretary David MacDonald of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee was guest speaker. He listed recent gains in the nation's No. 1 industry and urged the various union leaders to fight to protect labor's gains in the months ahead.

Resolutions backed the CIO drive in the construction industry, pledged support to the wage-hour act, National Labor Relations Act, and the Wagner Health Bill, and listed a program of opposition to profiteering, to encroachments on democratic rights and for greater internal security in the United States.

Glass Union Wins Company Wide Bargaining Rights; Leiserson Dissents

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

Washington, Sept. 30.—The Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company this week was ordered by a majority decision of the National Labor Relations Board to bargain collectively upon request with the Federation of Flat Glass Workers, CIO, as representative of its employes in all of the six plants comprising the firm's flat glass division.

The Board's decision followed an earlier ruling that the appropriate bargaining unit should consist of the flat glass division, including the Crystal City, Missouri plant—largest in the divisoin — and held that the company's refusal to bargain with the FFGW on division-wide basis was an unfair labor practice.

The company had refused to include the Crystal City plant in its agreement with the CIO union, on the basis that it recognized the Crystal City Glass Workers' Union, a so-called "independent," as the bargaining agency. The Board charged that this union was dominated by the company and ordered it abolished on September 22, 1938. The Board's order was upheld by the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on January 14, 1939.

LEISERSON IN MINORITY

William M. Leiserson dissented from the majority decision on the basis that past contracts between the company and the union did not include Crystal City and that as no poll had been held there, a bargaining agency was "imposed" upon them. Evidence, however, had shown the "independent" was dominated by plant officials.

53 REHIRED

Washington—The National Labor Relations Board has ordered the Majestic Flour Mills, Aurora, Mo., to rehire 53 workers whom it locked out in August, 1935.

Lewis' Labor Day Speech Available

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30—Transcriptions of Pres. John L. Lewis' Labor Day address, which was broadcast on a coast to coast network of the Natl. Broadcasting Co., have been made and are available at the National Office of the CIO.

Local unions desiring to play this transcription should write to the Publicity Dept., CIO, 1106 Connecticut Ave., NW, Washington, D. C.

Swarm of Fake Unions Knocked

Washington, Sept. 30 — Nine company unions maintained by the Corning Glass Works at its Macbeth-Evans Division, Charleroi, Pennsylvania, were ordered abolished this week by the National Labor Relations Board.

The company was also ordered to reimburse its employes for all dues or assessments deducted from wages by check-off, to cancel its contracts with the nine departmental labor groups, and to stop interfering with the right of its employes to choose their own union agency.

Fourteen shipping and trucking department employes fired in August 1937, were ordered reinstated with back pay.

The Corning company which acquired the Macbeth-Evans Glass Co. in December 1936, directed the formation of six of the nine company unions, the Board found, while the other three were formed at meetings held in the plant during working hours with the permission of foremen.

McKeown New Hosiery Union Head

New York, Sept. 30 — Resolutions demanding a curb on war profiteers and condemning the Dies Committee for its attacks on labor were passed in the closing sessions of the 28th convention of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers held here last week.

Alexander McKeown of Philadelphia was elected president of the Federation to replace Emil Rieve, who resigned to give his full time to the Textile Workers Union of America of which he is president. The hosiery federation is affiliated with the TWUA.

SUGGESTS RAISES

In his closing speech, Rieve said that as soon as practical, the union should reopen its wage clause for pay increases to keep pace with the rising cost of living, and should be prepared to meet demands of manufacturers for a revision downward in the wage scale for work on synthetic yarns, which he said have improved much lately, and will probably replace silk.

The newly elected president McKeown, is a pioneer in the hosiery union and has worked closely with retiring president Rieve for many years, at one time being employed on the same loom with him. He was formerly president of District 1 in the Philadelphia area, and at the time of his election as president was first vice-president of the Federation.

Labor and the Law

By Lee Pressman

CIO General Counsel

The Labor Board's recent decision in the Pittsburgh Plate Glass case is one of deep importance to organized labor. The Federation of Glass Workers (CIO) over a period of years organized into the union an overwhelming majority of the employes of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company. This company operates seven plants.

In a previous order the Board had designated all of the plants of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., including Crystal City, Mo., as the appropriate bargaining unit and certified the Federation as the union having a majority of all the employes. Upon the company's refusal to bargain with the Federation for the Crystal City plant the Federation filed unfair labor charges against the company. The Board in its present decision reaffirmed its previous order that all the plants of the company constituted a single bargaining unit and held that the company committed an unfair labor practice in refusing to bargain with the Federation for its employes at its Crystal City plant. Dr. Leiserson entered a dissent against the majority opinion.

The issue presented in this case is simple and clear. The purpose and intent of the National Labor Relations Act require that the unit designated by the Labor Board for collective bargaining should be one that grants the maximum economic strength to the union for the purpose of engaging collective bargaining with the company.

No one can deny that in this specific case the labor policy as to wages, hours and conditions of employment for the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company are not controlled or rest in the discretion of the management of any particular plant but is definitely in the hands of the President and Board of Directors of the company. In other words, as far as management is concerned its economic strength for collective bargaining stems from its very centralized control.

ACT WOULD BE FRUSTRATED

If the union representing a majority of the employes of that company is to be decentralized in its collective bargaining by being compelled to negotiate with separate plant managers, the purpose of the Labor Act is being frustrated.

The only argument that is offered in the dissenting opinion of Dr. Leiserson is that the employes in the Crystal City plant are not being afforded an opportunity to designate their bargaining representatives because admittedly a majority of the employes in that plant were not members of the Federation of Glass Workers Union. But this point evades the basic issue involved in determining the appropriate bargaining unit under the National Labor Relations Act.

There is no question that the Federation represented a majority of all the employes throughout all the plants. Carrying Dr. Leiserson's argument one step further, it would mean that wherever a minority in any appropriate bargaining unit did not care for the bargaining representatives, it would have the right to exclude itself from the bargaining unit.

Unfortunately, the Labor Board has not carried into effect the full meaning of its decision. The same principle of assuring to the workers the strongest possible collective bargaining strength should apply in the cases where craft unions seek to carve up an industrial unit. If a majority of the employes of any industrial unit desire a particular bargaining agency craft units should not be carved out. The Labor Board in so doing, is decreasing the economic strength for collective bargaining of all the employes in the industrial unit.

The decision in the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company case may reflect a renewed appreciation on the part of the Labor Board as to what its function is in administering the Act, namely, to really afford the workers an opportunity to choose the type of union which can meet management on an equal basis for collective bargaining.

The Wildcat and the Union

A Story

By TOM LAWRENCE

I'll say this for Jonesy — he did get both of us jobs on an oil-drilling outfit at Casper, Wyoming. He took me out to the new oilfield at Cow Creek and got us on as roughnecks, and from then on while the job lasted we looked at each other across the drillpipe on the working floor of the derrick.

It sure was a laugh to work across from Jonesy. There is something funny about two guys like Jonesy and me doing the same kind of job. He used to drill geysers, the fellows say. He's old as a buckpole fence and his wife is fat, and they got five (count 'em) kids.

Well, this was my first job, and I had never been married any either, until Kitty said yes to this job at six bucks a day. I was a hothead, and since it was my first real job, I thought it ought to be union. You see, I was raised on that idea by my Pa, who was a carpenter once. I didn't talk union at first. I was so het up, I couldn't tell what was right or wrong about the job.

Most of the crews stayed at Sunset, which is a little town near where the field was. Jonesy had a big house and a barn to fill with his kids, and I got a little place next door. I am still glad there was a strong chickenwire fence in between us. Jonesy's kids were kind of like Jonesy. They were old hands at making a racket.

Right away Kitty and I started paying on a Chevvy, so I wouldn't have to sponge off the other fellows for a ride to the lease. I told Kitty that having a car was like equipment for the job, and other things would have to wait till later.

Lots of Fun

It was a lot of fun. Getting a check with a long line of stuckout numbers. Stopped in and had beer on the way home sometimes. Going to all the dances with Kitty exactly like you want it when you first get married. It was even fun going around in the car on Saturdays and paying the bills. And coming home from night shift after a night's work, you could eat a breakfast six times bigger than if you'd just got up.

We worked seven days a week and that was tough after awhile. Never a day off. I started talking to the fellows about how a union would change that, but Jonesy says: "You got paid for every day, ain't you? What's the matter with this job?" I guess by now Jonesy and the rest of them know what.

Six bucks a day. After three or four months I was still wondering if we had any use for a union. You get to ache for a day off. The most time we ever had off, was for 36 hours, when we had long shift.

And sick leave maybe. I busted my ankle and had to go back with it bound up busted. The State would have given me half wages but the job wouldn't have been there if I'd stayed home like Kitty wanted. You should have seen the look on the foreman's face when I busted it. "You hillbilly," he says, "can't you stay on your feet?"

Nothing much seemed wrong with that job — while it lasted After seven months, this wildcat well was getting down about five thousand feet, and there was signs of oil. But everybody went around all red and sicklooking, like they had TB. Jonesy was awful glum on the way home to breakfast, and they were only half as noisy next door as usual. I was going kind of crazy myself. I told Kitty it was because we would know pretty soon, and if we didn't strike oil we would be out of our jobs. But I didn't know the half of it.

All the time I was coming home like a happy pigeon, Jonesy and the rest had begun to think where they'd get their next job. I didn't know, like they did, that the Company had brought in another wildcat up North, and they had sealed it up. For reserves.

And then we struck it. Jonesy yalped like it was his own well. "I always brung them in before," he says. He says it over and over like he was braggin about a sixth kid or something. Yeah. And the same day the Company had us seal it up, and our job was over.

It was a pretty nice job at six bucks. Do you need a union for a job like that? We talked about it some, that last day. Jonesy wasn't telling me to shut up or I'd lose my job. We figured it out. One thing was all we needed—so we could hold onto a job that's a job, not a disappearing act every six months.

Making Millions

The Company was always drilling wells — and making millions —all over the country. Well, they could drill all over the country with us. Make it a steady union job. Six bucks a day. You see?

Losing a job wasn't so good for a guy like Jonesy, with his Mrs. and five (count 'em) kids. I told Kitty when I came home the last day, think how bad it is for Jonesy and all the noise over there.

"Well, what are we going to do?" said Kitty.

"We ain't going to keep our trap shut after this," I said. "One word I ain't going to keep [illegible] of my teeth is 'union'."

Your WPA Job

By Ralph Hetzel

CIO UNEMPLOYMENT DIRECTOR

(WASTED MANPOWER, By Corrington Gill. Norton Publishers, New York. $2.75).

Corrington Gill, Assistant Commissioner of the WPA has just written a book which is the best available statement of the unemployed problem and of what this administration has tried to do about it. If there is any material which should be required reading for those in charge of unemployment and welfare programs, this is the book.

Mr. Gill writes in a very straight forward and simple way. He avoids writing political speeches or high-flown abstractions. He tells the facts as he sees them. He tells things that CIO people will want to know. We do not care to read heart-breaking stories of the suffering of WPA workers and unemployed. We know about those things because we meet them every day. What we want to know is what are the facts, what has been done about it, what can be done about it.

DISCUSSES FACTS

Mr. Gill's book starts out by telling how much unemployment there is and what kind, and what it is caused by. He discusses very simply and briefly the worthwhile parts of the theories about what causes unemployment. Labor people will probably agree in great part with Mr. Gill's point of view about the causes of depression. He does put less emphasis than does labor upon the central importance of purchasing power. But he certainly does not slight the subject. He is properly contemptuous of those theorists who say that everything will adjust itself properly in the long run, quoting Mr. J. M. Keynes as saying that "in the long run we are all dead."

One of the most insistent problems that faces labor is that of unemployment rising out of the replacement of men by machines. To this subject Mr. Gill devotes a whole chapter. He reacts to the suggestion that in the long run there is no technological unemployment much as labor did. He says the knowledge that this might be so "offers the unemployed neither spiritual consolation nor material assistance. The all important problem is to obtain jobs quickly."

USEFUL FIGURES

The part of Mr. Gill's book which deals with the causes and extent of unemployment is concluded with a study of the actual figures on unemployment for the past ten years. It is probably the most straight-forward and useful statement about the number of unemployed and what these figures actually mean that can be found anywhere. There are in the libraries shelves of volumes about the number of unemployed, but they all boil down to the fact that nobody really knows how many unemployed there are or who is unemployed. All that is useful to the layman in these volumes Mr. Gill has summed up in a chapter of twenty-five pages.

For those who have not followed the picture day by day since 1933, it is most confusing to enter into the small wilderness of agencies which have been and are now set up to deal with relief and unemployment. For such readers Gill's discussion of the whole attack in this country upon unemployment and relief since 1933 is a very helpful and illuminating statement.

A SAD STORY

In many ways though it is a sad story because it is strewn with evidences of failure to meet the problem of unemployment full on and courageously. On the other hand it is a story in which there are many elements of courage and real pioneering spirit. The history of the WPA is, after all, the history of a pioneer experiment, the greatness of which will be better realized long after the politicians have finished howling about it.

Some profoundly important principles on unemployment have been established by the federal government and the fact that these principles have not been carried out in practice cannot wholly dim the advance which they mark in the national thinking about unemployment.

Mr. Gill devotes only one chapter to telling what he thinks ought to be done in the future about unemployment. In that chapter he outlines the kind of program which can be quite accurately described as the best kind of what is called a New Deal program. From that chapter, one can get a fairly clear picture of what a real New Deal program might be if its execution were unhampered by hesitancy politics, and reaction. In many ways it is a sensible picture.

LABOR'S ROLE

In one fundamental, however, it seems to be lacking, and that is in the recognition of the role which organized labor must play in the establishment of a sound economic program in this country. Perhaps Mr. Gill could not say what he thought about the part which he thought organized labor must play. The fact is that any discussion of unemployment cannot be fully realistic unless it discusses the fact that organized labor above all other forces in the country must bear the brunt of any drive to put into effect such a program as Mr. Gill has outlined.

No such program can ever be realized or enforced without the vigorous support of a powerful organized labor movement.

CIO President Lewis repeated a challenge on Labor Day that he has made several times before. He said "America's number one basic problem is productive work for its population." Mr. Gill's book does much to illuminate the real significance of that challenge.

It is a book that no one whose duty it is to concern himself about the problem of unemployment in the United States can afford to neglect.

Textile Contract Aids 3,000

Boston, Mass., Sept. 30 — More than 3000 workers are covered by an agreement signed today between the Textile Workers Union of America and the Naumkeag Steam Cotton Company for the Pequot Mills in Salem and the Danvers Bleachery in Peabody, Mass.

The CIO union is recognized as sole bargaining agency for all the company's employes in the contract which runs for one year. Other terms provide a 40-hour week, time and a half for overtime, seniority rights, grievance and arbitration machinery and no strikes or lockouts during the duration of the agreement.

Packinghouse Workers Issue New Pamphlet

Chicago, Sept. 16—Speeches of President John L. Lewis, Bishop Bernard J. Sheil and Alderman Wm. A. Rowan at the national policy convention of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee, held here this summer, have been printed in a new pamphlet just released by the union.

The speeches are not printed in full, but significant quotations from each are given.

Canadian Steel Unions Fight War Profiteering

TORONTO, Ont., Sept. 30. — Anxious over soaring prices which have eaten deeply into the static wage levels of employes, officers of SWOC Toronto lodges have asked the federal government to take measures to "guarantee the right of employes to bargain collectively with their employers for higher wages as the cost of living continues to rise."

The SWOC executives met to pledge "cooperation with the government in its measures to protect the nation against fascist aggression."

The steel union leaders, however, urged the government to make this cooperation possible to the "fullest degree by taking measures to guarantee labor rights."

WORKERS MUST PAY

"We will do our share," said the message to the Ottawa government, "but the war budget taxes places the major burden of paying for the war on the backs of those least able to pay while the corporation interests are granted many privileges and exemptions."

Canada's war-time parliament in an emergency session authorized the government to spend $100,000,000 for war needs. The government will raise this money by special taxation which includes coffee, tea, tobacco and other staples.

Labor circles estimate that prices of food commodities have risen by 15 to 20 per cent in the past two weeks while wages have remained static. This situation, fraught with profiteering, is working considerable hardship on the wage workers.

RAP BIG BUSINESS

The SWOC leaders hit big business circles who were said to have refused to tender for government orders at a set profit of 5 per cent. Transport Minister Howe was said to have stated that despite all appeals to patriotism not one Canadian manufacturer would accept a contract from the government unless the 5 per cent profit limitation was abolished.

Under these circumstances the government was said to have capitulated. Its taxation on big business only applies to excess profits. The little fellow and on the man on the street, however, felt the effect of soaring prices in the first days of the war.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Sept. 30.—While he sat talking with three companions in a parked car, Phil Carey, 27-year-old official of the National Maritime Union in the Gulf District was suddenly attacked by three unidentified men and murdered. Two of the men approached Carey and began beating him in the face with heavy chains. As he rose from his seat crying, "don't do it, Scotty!" the third shot him in the back. The men fled in a black car.

Members of the NMU here believe that Carey's murder is the result of an exposure of spies within the union and the expulsion of those implicated. A new committee was elected in the Gulf district during the national convention held in New Orleans some weeks ago. The day before he was murdered, Carey was threatened by one of the members of the expelled committee.

One of the 11 children in an Irish family, Carey went to sea after his third year in high school, and had been long a tireless union worker. He was elected from the Steamship Uruguay to the New Orleans convention and was chosen by the delegates to serve on the new Gulf District Committee which replaced the ousted committee.

Labor Candidate Elected

FORT SMITH, Ark., Sept. 30—(FP)—Lyman Mikel, caked by labor, was elected to the State Senate in special elections here, defeating the incumbent, Paul Gutensohn, who had been appointed by Gov. Bailey to fill a vacancy.

The new State Senator is the son of Elmer Mikel, long-time secretary of District 21 of the United Mine Workers.

Suggest Settlement Of Board Cases In Crisis Period

NEW YORK, Sept. 30.—An open bid for settlement of more than 30 cases still pending before the National Labor Relations Board was made this week by the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, CIO, on the basis that the war situation in Europe makes it "greatly to the interest of both management and labor in the United States to establish harmonious and stable collective bargaining arrangements."

In a letter sent out to the companies involved in the cases, James J. Matles, director of organization for the union, urged that company, union and NLRB representatives "meet soon in joint conference for the purpose of settling pending litigation."

The UERMW already has agreements with firms manufacturing nearly three-fourths of all Federal Government purchases of electrical goods, Matles stated, which "now enjoy smooth production and complete harmony with their employes."

COMPANIES SCATTERED

Companies to which the letter was sent are scattered through New York and other eastern states and the middle west, and include such well-known concerns as Radio Corporation of America, Emerson, Stromberg-Carlson, Westinghouse, National Cash Register, and others.

Four-fifths of all electrical goods manufactured in the United States are covered by agreements with the CIO union, it was stated at union headquarters.

West Coast Longshore Talks Adjourned After 2 Weeks; OK Pact Extension

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 29.—Negotiations between the International Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union and the Waterfront Employers Association for a revised contract which have been held continuously for the past two weeks, have adjourned for the time being.

The Maritime Labor Board is acting as mediator in the conferences at which the union and the employers are seeking to reach an agreement on changes to be made in the contract expiring September 30.

So far the desired amendments submitted by the ILWU have been met by the association with a flat rejection, or with the reply that they will be taken under consideration, reports Rosco G. Craycraft, secretary of the union committee.

Both sides have agreed to an extension of the September 30th contract pending the outcome of negotiations. This was rejected by the association when it was first proposed by the union, but was agreed to later.

ASKED INCREASES

In a draft proposal submitted to the employers' group on August 3, the union asked for a wage increase to compensate workers for increased efficiency in methods of operation and increased cost of living, calling attention to the fact that present rates were established in 1934.

Other demands were for a straight six-hour day instead of the present practice of working six hours within an eight-hour period; clarification of amount of benefits workers should receive from introduction of labor-saving devices, and elimination of penalties on locals or individual longshoremen for work stoppages over which the union has no control.

SHUTDOWN WAS THEATENED

The employers replied with a proposal to make no changes in the contract, and implied a threat to shut down steamship services on the West Coast when the contract terminated September 30 if the proposal was rejected.

Then the ILWU committee refused to accept and, on August 12, withdrew from negotiations, the employers wrote to the union proposing a number of amendments and requested that they be submitted to Dean Wayne L. Morse for immediate arbitration. Among the amendments proposed by the employers were a reduction in wages and a lengthening of working hours from six to eight.

LABOR BOARD HELPS

These proposals were flatly rejected by the union and an offer to continue negotiations for a fair settlement of the dispute were made. Early this month the Maritime Labor Board offered its services as mediator. Again the union accepted the offer, while the employers replied that they would accept it only on condition that the union agree in advance to a blanket arbitration of all issues in dispute.

After more prolonged arguments, the employers finally agreed to meet with the union with the Maritime Board acting as mediator, in another attempt to draw up a revised contract.

'NO PROGRESS'

After two weeks of continuous negotiations, the ILWU committee reported last week that no progress had been made and that the employers were definitely stalling negotiations. The meeting adjourned with the understanding that the employers were to draft a summary of their proposals and then notify the Maritime Board, after which negotiations would be resumed.

Wire Firm Rapped In Board Order

Dixon, Ill., Sept. 30 — An order against the Reynolds Wire Company for discriminating against the CIO union in the plant, was recommended to the National Labor Relations Board in a report filed by the Board's trial examiner, the Steel Workers Organizing Committee announced today.

The report also recommended that the firm be ordered to stop dominating and supporting the Reynolds Wire Employes Association, and offer reinstatement with back pay to George Carlson, recording secretary of the SWOC local, whom the union charged was fired because of his union activity.

Southwestern CIO Meets Despite Heat

Los Angeles, Sept. 30—Blistering heat failed to stop the third quarterly conference of the Southern California CIO.

Two hundred delegates from scores of unions met under the trees in a park overlooking the Pacific Ocean and discussed problems facing the unions in this area.

Speakers included Congressman Lee Geyer, liberal Democrat; Theodore Dreiser, noted author, and Carey McWilliams, head of the State Department of Housing and Immigration.

McWilliams, author of a recent book on California farm problems, described how the reactionary Associated Farmers organization controls police forces in a number of the state's communities, and warned that it is endeavoring to defeat all progressive forces in the region.

Renew Contract

Indianapolis, Ind., Sept. 30—Renewal for the third time of a contract between the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, and the Rockwood Manufacturing Company here was announced today by James Robb, CIO regional director. The agreement runs for a year and provides a 2½c hourly pay increase.

Order 11 Rehired In Richmond

Richmond, Va., Sept. 30 — Eleven workers of the Planters Manufacturing Company here were ordered reinstated with a total of more than $5,100 back pay in a decision issued by the National Labor Relations Board, Ray Thomason, CIO regional director, announced this week.

The company was one of a number of plants in the South paying wages of 10 and 15 cents an hour before the Wage-Hour law went into effect.

The NLRB also ordered an election in the plant, which Thomason said the CIO union was confident of winning.

File $100,000 Suit For Loss Of Liberties

HUNTINGTON PARK, Calif., Sept. 30.—Officials of this Los Angeles suburb are learning that violations of civil liberties are apt to be costly.

Striking members of the Los Angeles Newspaper Guild have sued Mayor Elmer Cox and Police Chief W. Hulquist, as well as Publisher Max Ward of the Huntington Park Bulletin for $100,000, charging conspiracy to deprive the unionists of their fundamental civil rights.

The suit asserts that the city officials refused to issue the strikers a permit for a sound truck and then arrested the strikers when they tried to tell their story to the public.

Court Report Bares Giant AFL Vote Tampering Deal

NEW YORK, Sept. 30. — One of the biggest jobs of vote tampering in AFL history—whereby thousands of nay votes became thousands of ayes—has come to light in a report prepared here by a court referee appointed to investigate charges against AFL Carpenters union president, Wm. L. Hutcheson, by New York Local 2090.

The report deals with a union-wide referendum held in 1937, the results of which were contested at the time by Local 2090 and other Carpenters affiliates. It shows that the vote on two of the most important provisions was deliberately reversed by the Hutcheson - appointed tabulating committee.

The two provisions strengthening the autocratic group of Czar Hutcheson on the union by providing severe penalties against any member "preaching, advocating or counseling disorder, dissension or disobedience" of union authority, and by forcing new members to swear they would never join "any revolutionary organization." Both were obviously intended to terrorize the rank and file, as Hutcheson attempted to intimidate them into voting for Tory Landon in the 1936 Presidential compaign.

According to the report 13 locals voted 3636 against the two propositions, 76 for. The Hutcheson tabulating committee made this 3654 for, 185 against—almost an exact reversal.

Local 2090 was promptly expelled by boss Hutcheson for its charges. Now it is seeking an injunction to restore its charter, stating that members have lost jobs as the result of the Hutcheson blackslist.

3 Textile Mills Must Bargain

Washington, Sept. 23—Three textile mills in Georgia were ordered by the National Labor Relations Board this week to bargain collectively with the Textile Workers Union of America, CIO, and to stop interfering with their employes' rights to belong to the union of their choice.

The companies involved were the Scottsdale Mills, Scottsdale, Ga., and the Whittier Mills Co. and Silver Lake Co., Chattahoochee. The Board held that the textile concerns' failure to inform or consult with the union on wage reductions, constituted a refusal to bargain.

200 Strike In Cleveland Parts Plant

Cleveland, Ohio, Sept. 30. — Bosses of the Bishop & Babcock Co., manufacturers of automobile accessories, were greeted by a singing, cheering picket line of more than 200 workers when they entered the plant one morning last week. The strike was called by Local 217, United Automobile Workers, CIO, after the management had refused to grant a pay increase.

A six-point grievance list drawn up by the union asks for a 15c hourly increase; a 65c minimum rate for women, 75c for men on piece work; timing of piece rates to permit workers to earn at least 20 per cent above their day rates; improved seniority rights; preferential shop, and minimum hiring rates for beginners of 45c an hour for women and 50c for men, with a 2½c increase at the end of three months, and a 5c increase at the end of six months.

The present strike is the second called against the company since was organized two years ago.

CIO Official Named To California Office

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 30. — Germain Bulcke, president of Local 1-10 of the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, was named today to the state Fish and Game Commission by Gov. Olson.

Besides administering laws on fishing for sport, the commission also holds jurisdiction over commercial fishing, a large industry whose workers are almost entirely members of CIO unions.

Bulcke was named to a position on the state San Francisco port authority soon after Olson took office, but reactionary opposition from shipowners and farm factory groups prevented his appointment from going into effect.

CIO BOARD MEETS IN SAN FRANCISCO

Textile Union Moves To Win Wage Increases

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—Notice that it would request an immediate and substantial wage increase for more than 200,000 textile workers was served this week on the leading manufacturers in the synthetic yarn and the woolen and worsted industry by the Textile Workers Union of America. The CIO union has contractual relations with most of the important mills in the country.

The TWUA executive council voted at its first session held at the Hotel Plymouth here, to ask for immediate conferences with American Woolen Co., Princeton Worsted, Berkshire Woolen, Kent Manufacturing, and the Arlington, Uxbridge, Stevens and Pacific Mills, in the woolen and worsted industry. In the rayon industry, the union will ask to meet with the American Viscose, Bemberg, and other outstanding firms.

Emil Rieve, TWUA president, said the union will ask for prompt restoration of wage cuts given during the 1938 recession, as well as for advances justified by the rise in prices. Declaring that the union had accepted reductions during the depression without attempting to dislocate the industry, Rieve said that the woolen and worsted industry must be prepared to share the benefits of the present upward movement.

STRIKES NOT NECESSARY

Appropriate collective bargaining machinery now operating in the industry, he pointed out, should assure the manufacturers that no recourse to strikes will be necessary if the mills "desire to be reasonable."

President Rieve also stated that the request for an upward revision in the woolen and worsted industry will be supplemented by similar request in the cotton and other branches of the textile industry, covering 1,250,000 organized and unorganized workers. He noted that as a result of the enactment of the 32½ cents minimum wage in the textile industry set under the Wage-Hour Act, pay will be raised on October 24 for about 175,000 cotton textile workers.

LIVING COSTS UP

"In order to maintain an adequate differential between skilled and unskilled workers," Rieve said, "there must be a higher wage level above the minimum for the skilled branches of the industry, if fair employers are to maintain their competitive position."

Undue price advances in consumers' goods have and are continuing to increase the cost of living, the union's executive council stated. "The rising cost of living means a real reduction in the buying power of labor, and wage increases must balance this development," it declared.

Union Heads Prepare For Convention

(See Story, Page Three)

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 7—As delegates gather from all over the country for the national convention of the CIO which opens here October 10, the executive board has been meeting since Oct. 5, to plan the program and expedite the convention proceedings.

Reports of CIO international officials show the tremendous progress being made by CIO unions. R. J. Thomas, president of the United Automobile Workers, reported on the filing of a petition for a Labor Board election to determine representation for some 130,000 workers in 60 General Motors plants.

Samuel Wolchok, president of the United Retail and Wholesale Employes Union, told of the signing of a closed shop pact in New York with the Saks Company, covering 650 workers.

CIO "Going Concern", Says President Lewis

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 7. — Reports at the CIO convention opening Oct. 10 will show that the CIO "is a going concern, that it has made marked progress despite severe economic conditions," John L. Lewis, CIO president, told newspapermen here in a preliminary press conference.

"More than ever the CIO has established itself and has become an influential factor in national affairs," Lewis said. "Plans will be laid at the convention for active organizing efforts in various industries.

"As employment increases, there will be greater opportunity to enroll new members in the CIO. Obviously men cannot be organized in idle factories, but as employment rises, CIO enrollment will rise in direct ratio."

ON LIVING COSTS

Turning to cost of living problems raised by sharp price increases in recent weeks, Lewis declared that the convention would go into this situation and would recommend remedial action.

"In many industrial areas where price hysteria was high," he said, "merchants marked up prices over and above replacement costs — in some instances up to 40 or 50 per cent. Of course this was unwarwanted. Certainly there are ample supplies of all commodities in the nation."

Lewis said that he "was glad to be in San Francisco again" and looked forward to his stay during the convention. He indicated that the convention might be concluded by the weekend of Oct. 15.

Asked by reporters about the European war and the neutrality revision debate in Congress, Pres. Lewis withheld comment "until the convention has had time to crystallize its views" on these subjects.

New York, Oct. 7—Lane, Bryant & Co., big women's department store, has signed its first contract with the United Retail and Wholesale Employes of America.

Unions, Councils Hold Meetings

Shoe Workers Demand Increases

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Oct. 7—Wage increases to offset the rising costs of living and protection of wage standards and working conditions of the American shoe worker from the low-wage feudalistic policies of the Bata Shoe Company were demanded at the convention of the United Shoe Workers of America, CIO, meeting here.

Both Powers Hapgood, National Director, and Frank McGrath, General Organizer, in their reports to the delegates proposed action to develop an effective program looking to wage increases in all districts and sections of the industry.

Secretary-Treasurer Mitchell revealed to the delegates that Senator Wagner wired officials of the USWA that he had taken their protest against the granting of a permit to the Bata Shoe Company to import alien shoe workers, "directly to Secretary of Labor Perkins."

He promised the union officials to cooperate further in any way possible.

SMETHURST SPEAKS

Walter Smethurst, Executive Assistant to John L. Lewis, told the delegates last night. "We can feel the surge of greater organizational efforts throughout the country." He predicted that the CIO is heading into a period of major expansion. Stressing the importance of political activity of labor, Smethurst said that it is "surprising the respect that politicians have for the workers when they are organized."

"There will be a renewal of this opposition with the convening of the next Congress. We must therefore give greater attention to our political possibilities."

Ohio Valley CIO Confab

UNIONS IN THE OHIO RIVER VALLEY sent representatives to Cincinnati recently for a conference to discuss regional problems. Shown addressing the meeting is Sec. David J. McDonald of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee. Others at the speakers' table include Harry Doll; T. Louis Majors; Lee Hall, CIO director in Cleveland; Paul W. Fuller, regional director in Cincinnati, and Mrs. Fuller, secretary of the meeting.

Ohio Convention Delegates Hail Owens' Attack on War-Mongers

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Oct. 7—A warning that the American people want no war and want no war profiteering was sounded in the keynote speech to the annual convention of the Ohio Industrial Union Council, by Pres. John Owens.

The council executive won resounding cheers when he told the more than 350 delegates, who represented almost every CIO union, that: "We might as well serve notice now that if our wage standards will only purchase 50 per cent of our necessities, we will not stand for artificial purchasing power. We will demand higher wages."

Owens was sharply critical of the war makers, adding:

"The best blood in every nation will be spilled because we have not yet developed intelligence enough to solve our economic existence in any other way than wiping out millions of men."

"We want to resolve as parents, citizens and producers that no American life will be sacrificed to preserve some ideology predicated on preserving the resources of the wealthy in other parts of the world," he continued

Pres. Owens, who also heads the Ohio district of the United Mine Workers, was re-elected to his office, as was Sec.-Treas. Ted Silvey.

Delegates in large numbers were sent by miners, steel workers, rubber workers, shoe workers, aluminum workers and gas, coke and chemical workers in this heavily-industrialized state.

MANY SPEAKERS

Heads of two CIO international unions—Pres. Sherman Dalrymple of the United Rubber Workers and Pres. R. J. Thomas of the United Automobile Workers; E. L. Oliver, executive vice-president of Labor's Non-Partisan League; and Len DeCaux, editor of The CIO NEWS, addressed the delegates during the three-day session.

"The CIO has come unscathed through a period of depresion, unemployment and virulent attacks on both the industrial and legislative fields," DeCaux noted in his speech.

"It has not only maintained but increased its membership, has prevented the wrecking of the Wagner Act and every one of its unions has successfully beaten off the attacks of disruption and dualism launched by the AFL and anti-union employers.

"Election figures for the past year show that the CIO has won many more elections than either AFL or independent unions, and has received more workers' votes than all other unions combined."

He urged building the labor press and support for The CIO NEWS as methods of counteracting the propaganda campaigns launched against the CIO."

CRITICIZE GOVERNOR

A high point of the convention came in the form of a report from a delegation which had asked Governor Bricker, Republican, to call a special session of the state legislature to cope with Ohio's serious relief problem.

Jack Kroll of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, who headed the delegation, reported the governor had termed the calling of the legislature a "useless" proposal.

"We pleaded with the governor in behalf of hungry people who face a black winter and told him there would be hunger riots," Kroll said. In Toledo, all relief payments stopped September 16.

State, County Union Elects Officers

By ALEXANDER TAYLOR

New York, Oct. 7—Confirming the judgment of such CIO leaders as A. D. Lewis, chairman of the United Construction Workers' Organizing Committee, James B. Carey, national CIO secretary and president of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, and Michael J. Quill, president of the Transport Workers Union, the delegates to the First National Convention of the State, County & Municipal Workers of America unanimously elected Abram Flaxer and Henry W. Wenning, president and secretary-treasurer, respectively.

Flaxer and Wenning were incumbents in these offices as CIO appointees, and received the warm praise of A. D. Lewis, Carey and Quill in speeches made at the convention. The elections were the first held under the new SCMWA constitution, adopted at the convention to replace the "Policies and Principles" which had been the basic law of the SCMWA since it was chartered by the CIO in July, 1937.

A national organizing drive in private as well as public hospitals was approved by the convention in a resolution asking the CIO to grant formally the jurisdiction in the private hospital field. The SCMWA has already organized certain private as well as public hospitals, and bases its claim to jurisdiction on the fact that today private hospitals are largely supported by public funds.

Moreover, the resolution pointed out, the field is almost totally unorganized, with the workers, many of whom receive as little as $20 per month plus miserable maintenance, eager for unionism. Better pay and conditions for hospital workers, the union pointed out, will eliminate the present disastrous labor turnover of 300 to 400 per cent a year, which makes it almost impossible to serve public health needs with a stable, experienced personnel.

At Ohio Convention

Posed between President John Owens (standing) and Secretary Ted F. Silvey of the Ohio CIO Council, is Delegate Lena Buck from Retail Employes, Local 201, on strike at Akron, following acceptances of her report to the convention. Miss Buck was secretary of the Officers' Reports Committee. The convention was held in Columbus the weekend of October 1.

Unity Keynote Of Sessions in Wisconsin

RACINE, Wis., Oct. 7—Delegates to the second convention of the Wisconsin Industrial Union Council returned to their homes today after having worked out an internal unity program aimed at increasing the power and influence of CIO unions throughout the state.

The convention, which met for three days in this city, elected new officers and adopted resolutions aimed at protecting America from war and American democratic rights from possible Tory onslaughts.

Unanimously elected to the council presidency was Harvey Kitzman, president of the auto workers local at the J. I. Case plant here and head of the tri-state district council of the United Automobile Workers. Named secretary was Walter Burke, 28-year-old representative of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in Fond Du Lac.

Both men were nominated for office by their predecessors, retiring President Emil Costello and Secretary-Treasurer Gunnar Mickelsen.

NEW OFFICERS PRAISED

Costello was greeted with loud cheers when he concluded his opening address to the convention with the prediction that "when we emerge from this convention, newly unified and solidified, we of the CIO will speak as one person. Victory for us in the economic and political fields depends upon it."

Choice of the new state CIO officials won general acclaim from speakers, as did the work of Costello and Mickelson in paving the way for election of officials representing two of the state's largest CIO unions.

Guest speakers at the convention included President R. J. Thomas of the United Automobile Workers, George A. Nelson of the Farmers Union and Len DeCaux, editor of the CIO NEWS.

The UAW leader said peace will come to the American labor movement when the AFL leadership is prepared to take back into "a unified organization all the workers who have been organized by the CIO."

AUTO AND RETAIL UNION HEADS TELL BOARD OF GAINS WON

AFL Splitters Smash Unity Of Canadian Labor Movement

(Special to The CIO NEWS)

LONDON, Ont., Oct. 7.—Browbeaten and intimidated delegates to the 55th convention of the Trades and Labor Congress voted today 230 to 97 to approve the executive council's suspension of the CIO unions from the ranks of the Congress.

The roll call vote was preceded by a heated three-hour debate in which most of the 26 delegates who took the floor protested against the expulsion of the industrial unions and warned that the split, engineered by agents of the AFL executive council, would harm Canadian labor, particularly when the country is at war.

Delegates of at least five central labor bodies, the Canadian Seamen's Union and the Textile Workers Union, voted unanimously against the ouster. Prominent against the expulsion were a number of delegates from the Brotherhood of Railroad Carmen locals, Maintenance of Way men, Brotherhood of Railroad Clerks, Jewelry Workers, restaurant workers, garment workers, street railway men and carpenters.

There were no delegates from the CIO unions, since they were debarred from attending the convention. Delegates of the garment workers abstained from voting.

The debate began when the resolutions committee brought in a recommendation that the CIO unions be expelled, despite the fact that there were 42 resolutions urging the reinstatement of CIO unions and only one urging their expulsion.

As soon as the convention began agents of various AFL international unions called caucuses of their respective delegations and ordered them to vote for the expulsion. Those who dissented were given hints that their positions in their unions or in their employment might be jeopardized. Many of the rank and file delegates who wanted to vote for unity as they did in the past three conventions were thus intimidated.

A sensation was created by one delegate when he quoted a letter from the convention arrangements committee addressed to certain manufacturers. A part of that letter revealed who desired the split

Strike Shuts Nash Plant

Kenosha, Wis., Oct. 7—The big plant of the Nash-Kelvinator Co. closed down here as a strike of the CIO United Automobile Workers for a new contract became 100 per cent effective.

The company employs 3,100 workers. Delay in effecting a settlement may result in closing the Seaman Body Co. plant in Milwaukee, which supplies Nash with auto bodies.

Negotiations for a contract to supplant an old working agreement broke off last week and the workers voted to strike. The union is asking a 75c hourly minimum wage and a minimum of 24 hours employment in any scheduled work week.

Brewery, Typo Unions Hit By AFL

Cincinnati, Oct. 7—Carrying out their splitting policy, the AFL's executive council has recommended suspension of still another international union, the industrially-organized brewery workers' union.

The brewery workers have been in a long-time fight with the AFL teamsters over jurisdiction of brewery truck drivers, and early this year took its fight into the courts. The case, which involves a possible injunction against the teamsters, is being argued in the District of Columbia U. S. Court this week.

To be decided during the two-week AFL convention in the "Hall of Mirrors" at a local hotel is the status of the Intl. Typographical Union, which has also been threatened with suspension for its refusal to pay a cent-a-month assessment for fighting the CIO.

Between them, the two unions have a membership of well over 100,000 workers.

Attacks on the CIO and its leadership, continued opposition to the Wagner Act and changes in the make-up of the National Labor Relations Board were also contained in the council report.

Seek Sole Rights at 60 GM Plants

Detroit, Oct. 7—Fresh from its sweeping 9-1 victory over the AFL at Chrysler, the United Automobile Workers, CIO, today turned its attention to General Motors, requesting the nation's largest auto maker to grant it sole bargaining rights for 130,000 workers in 60 GM plants.

Walter Reuther, head of the UAW's General Motors department, said the request had been made because the union has "clear and overwhelming majorities in the plants."

The corporation was asked to "indicate to us whether you will recognize the union as such exclusive representative."

Get Pay Raise

Baltimore, Oct. 7—Close to 500 employes of the Locke Insulator Corp. today won wage increases and sole bargaining rights for their union, the United Brick & Clay Workers, CIO.

The contract, which provides for vacations and extra wages for night work, followed a Labor Board poll won by a 332 to 23 margin.

Convention Coverage

The October 16 issue of The CIO NEWS will carry 12 pages, in order that readers may be kept fully informed of activities of the convention.

Full coverage will be given to the report of Pres. Lewis and to decisions of the delegates during the first few days of the meeting. The CIO NEWS will also carry exclusive pictures of the convention at work.

The October 23 issue will carry stories on the final days of the meeting as well as the texts of important resolutions.

Important Issues Face 2nd CIO Convention

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 7. — How to preserve democratic rights and labor's gains in the United States and Canada during the next critical years will be one of the key discussions among delegates to the second annual convention of the CIO, which opens here Tuesday, Oct. 10.

Questions dealing with representation on war emergency boards, curbing of profiteers and extension of union organizing campaigns to bring benefits to exploited workers will occupy important places on the convention agenda, it is expected.

The general executive board, composed of one representative from each of the CIO's affiliated national and international unions and organizing committee, assembled here for its pre-convention meeting at the Hotel Whitcomb on Thursday, October 5.

California's CIO council opened its convention in Pork Hall at the Civic Auditorium yesterday—the same hall where the national convention will be held starting October 10.

MANY DELEGATES

Delegates, expected to number over 500, were flocking into San Francisco today from all parts of the country, with especially heavy representation from CIO affiliates up and down the West Coast. This is the first visit in recent years of President John L. Lewis to the Pacific Coast, and it is expected that a large number of visitors will be present in Polk Hall to hear his address to the delegates and to observe the convention sessions.

Textile Local Plans Classes

Cumberland, Md., Oct. 7—Plans for an extension educational and recreational program during the winter months have been made by the big Celanese local of the Textile Workers Union of America.

The CIO union won an agreement with the Celanese Corporation recently granting pay increases and other benefits. More than 8,000 workers are employed at the giant plant.

Large numbers of newly recruited active workers, who came to the front during the stoppage of work which preceded the signing of the agreement, have shown much interest in the plans for educational activities and are helping in various ways.

Bowling leagues for both men and women, and a public speaking course, have already been formed, with plans for other sport and cultural activities under way.

'Constitutional' Judge Rules In Wage Law Test

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7—The U. S. Wage-Hour Administration has had its first constitutionality test—and won!

Judge Robert Cooper of the United States Court for the District of Puerto Rico ruled last week that the wage-hour law is a valid and constitutional exercise of the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce.

His ruling over-rode claims of the Eastern Sugar Associates, a corporation operating in the U. S. possession, that it had been deprived of property or of liberty of contract without due process of law.

Successful outcome of this first test of the law was "gratifying" and should clarify enforcement problems, George A. McNulty, wage-hour chief counsel here, declared. It is not yet known whether the sugar firm—which maintained that its refinery employes were agricultural workers and hence exempted from the law's provisions—will appeal the issue to the U. S. Supreme Court.

The wage-hour administration will round out its first year of active existence on Oct. 24, when, under the terms of the act, minimum wages for the nation's workers will rise to 30 cents an hour and maximum hours will be cut to 42. About two million workers are expected to benefit directly from the changes.

130,000 GM Workers To Vote on CIO

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 7.—The United Automobile Workers, CIO, filed a National Labor Relations Board petition today for the largest collective bargaining election ever held, in 60 plants of the General Motors Corporation throughout the nation. The election, announced by UAW-CIO President R. J. Thomas at the CIO Executive Board session here, will cover more than 130,000 workers.

"The corporation has given its consent to an election," President Thomas said, in announcing filing of the petition. "The AFL previously has given its consent. We want to see whether they will consent now.

"Recent elections in the plants of Chrysler and Briggs have ably demonstrated that the UAW-CIO is the only organization for collective bargaining in these plants. We have won in all Labor Board polls thus far, including Chrysler, Briggs and Packard.

"We take the position that we want the workers to decide by democratic processes which union they want for collective bargaining purposes, and to demonstrate their choice to the management by such polls.

"Before these recent elections the management of Chrysler and General Motors said they did not know what the union was, or which one they should deal with. We will prove to General Motors, as we have proved to the others, which union the workers want in their plants.

"Before the present election Chrysler was the biggest vote held by the National Labor Relations Board. This poll will be even larger."

Retail Contract Gives $100,000 Wage Increase

San Francisco, Oct. 7. — Ratification of a closed shop contract with Saks, 34th St. in New York City, was announced here today by Samuel Wolchok, president of the United Wholesale and Retail Employes, who is here for the National CIO Convention.

President Wolchok said that the contract, in addition to the closed shop feature, included raises totalling close to $100,000 annually for the 650 workers covered; time and a half for overtime and other union benefits. He also stated that Pres. Sidney Hillman of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers would sign the contract in his capacity as chairman of the Department Store Workers Organizing Committee, CIO affiliate formed to organize retail workers throughout the country.

The union has similar contracts with Bloomingdale's, Hearn's, Macy's and other large department stores in New York and other cities.

Opportunity and Danger

The second constitutional convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations is held at a time of great opportunity and great danger for American labor.

The great opportunity which presents itself is due to the fact that the CIO has developed a stronger and more progressive labor movement than ever existed before.

In most previous periods of business upturn, labor got little more than the crumbs that fell from the rich men's table. Rising prices outstripped rising wages, and the great mass of unorganized workers retained no substantial benefits when depression returned once more.

In 1936 and 1937, however, the door of a new opportunity was opened to millions of workers. The CIO organized them for the first time into strong industrial unions.

As a result, they were able to take greater advantage than ever before, in terms of better wages and conditions, of such business upturn as there was at that time.

More than that, when depression set in toward the close of 1937, the CIO enabled these workers to retain most of these gains through years of acute unemployment. The CIO, for the first time in history, prevented wholesale wage cuts from accompanying a business depression.

So now that there are signs once more of a certain pickup in business, American labor finds itself with a powerful industrial union movement, which has proved its strength in the hardest of times, and is ready to take full advantage for the workers of every opportunity that presents itself for further organization and better conditions.

Reports to the CIO convention tell how the movement has gained membership and strength throughout a period of sharpest and most concentrated attack.

Not only has the CIO had to withstand the natural ravages of unemployment and depression, but it has also been subjected to strong union-busting drives; to widespread attempts at disruption and dualism by the AFL and anti-union employers; to a legislative campaign against the Wagner Act designed to put industrial unions out of business; and to wholesale propaganda attacks.

The CIO has beaten off every one of these attacks and has come through with flying colors. Its unions are stronger not only numerically but also in the proved and tested loyalty of their members. Labor Board elections show the CIO far outdistancing all other organizations, and the San Francisco convention is expected to give the word for a general advance.

The great danger that confronts American labor at this time is one that comes from outside, from the new forces set into motion by the European war.

Labor's enemies are hoping to use the talk of a war emergency to distract attention from domestic affairs; to cut real wages through profiteering price increases; and to curtail or abolish labor and social legislation and civil liberties.

As against such plots and plans of labor's enemies, the CIO emphatically opposes the involvement of the United States in the European war; calls for the protection of real wage standards against profiteering; demands adequate labor representation on all emergency bodies; and will defend existing labor and social legislation and democratic liberties against attack on any pretext.

The strength of the CIO, as revealed by its convention, is the best guarantee that American labor can ward off the dangers that confront it and can make good use of the present opportunity for further progress.

Looking Ahead

Cross Sections Of The CIO

IT TAKES a trip across the continent to make one fully conscious of the vast extent of North America.

In the same way, one may know all the facts and figures about the CIO and its affiliated unions and councils; but it is necessary to visit many different industrial centers and all kinds of conventions to get a really vivid impression of the magnitude and strength of the movement.

Each union, each city and state industrial union council has a vigorous, pulsating life of its own. But the problems, struggles and triumphs of each are usually considered by the daily press as purely state or local news. So the rest of the movement is little conscious of them, except insofar as the national CIO press can keep it informed.

When the national convention of the CIO is held, however, all of these rivulets and streams of union life converge into one broad and mighty river of labor opinion and purpose, which has its source in the varied experience of millions of unionists in every part of the United States and Canada.

State Conventions

Two state CIO conventions held on the eve of the national convention, in Ohio and Wisconsin, furnished an opportunity to see representative sections of the CIO in action.

Ohio is perhaps the most typical American industrial state. There is hardly a single important industry that does not operate extensively within its borders.

The Ohio CIO therefore represents the most typical cross-section of the whole movement. At its convention were coal miners, clothing workers, steel workers, auto workers, rubber workers, oil workers, glass workers, electrical workers, maritime workers, packinghouse workers, transport workers, textile workers—men and women from America's basic mass production industries.

Coming from cities large and small, the delegates also represented white-collar and manual workers from newspapers, stores, offices, construction jobs and all the miscellaneous establishments that produce the goods and services on which our urban civilization depends.

A New Movement

Significant for a picture of the present labor movement throughout the United States is the fact that in such a typical state, the membership of the CIO far exceeds that of the AFL.

With the exception of coal mining and clohing, nearly every one of the main industries in Ohio was organized for the first time by the CIO. In the old AFL days, the labor movement there consisted of little more than a small nucleus of building, printing and a few other skilled crafts in the bigger cities.

But now a whole new and much more typically American labor movement has come into being through the CIO. Its characteristics, judging from the Ohio convention, are youth, vigor, progressiveness and a most vital and practical spirit of democracy.

Democracy the Keynote

Anyone who has been familiar with the heavy-handed and bureaucratic conduct of most AFL union affairs, and the resultant indifference or listlessness of the delegates that attend their gatherings, is bound to be impressed by the alertness and active participation of the rank and file delegates at CIO conventions.

In Wisconsin, as well as in Ohio, the prevailing note was youthful vigor and enthusiasm, coupled with vitally democratic procedure.

There too, as in Ohio, the delegates in their bearing and behavior, as well as in their speeches, reflected the self-confidence of men and women who have recently succeeded in bringing collective bargaining and union conditions to their industries for the first time in history.

Auto workers, steel workers, electrical workers, rubber workers, farm equipment workers, packinghouse workers, and other mass-production industrial groups, appeared to predominate. But there was also a wide enough representation from nearly all other industries and service groups in the state to make it evident that this convention spoke with authority for most of Wisconsin labor.

Unity Achieved

Particularly noteworthy at the Wisconsin convention was the spirit of internal unity in a state movement which had suffered for some time from the growing pains of factional division.

Nearly every CIO union in the state was represented at the convention and to cement this unity the delegates concentrated on electing a harmony slate and adopting a harmony program acceptable to all parties.

In this spirit, all leaders present subordinated personal considerations to achievement of this main end in a most exemplary fashion, and all minor frictions were finally overwhelmed by a regular floodtide of unity sentiment which swept the convention. The concluding demonstrations and ovations, in which all participated, were among the most enthusiastic ever to occur at a union gathering.

Anyone fortunate enough to attend these and other CIO conventions in the recent past cannot fail to be impressed by the vigor, the extent, the democracy, the internal solidity and the progressive purposes of the new labor movement, whose common policies will find expression at the second constituitional convention of the whole CIO in San Francisco.

BETWEEN THE LINES

By Cecil Owen

WASHINGTON.—If there is to be any really effective check on profiteering as a consequence of the other fellow's war it is up to labor, farmers and consumers over the nation to get busy.

This is the conclusion that stands out clearly after a checkup here of what Washington proposes to do to prevent high-jacking of the public by profit-hungry business.

Real wages were slashed by one-third in the last war due to unjustified price increases. The government then did not plan ahead on this subject and consumers were among the first victims of war.

Today, the situation differs somewhat in that there are men here who realize the importance of this problem. But when it comes to doing something about it, opinions vary widely.

Attacks on the profiteer are on two fronts here: Legislative and Administrative.

Any immediate legislative remedy against profiteering seems doubtful. Action on the Administrative front appears a little more hopeful.

ADMINISTRATIVE ATTACK

Three government departments, Labor, Agriculture and Justice, are concerned with this problem, but only Justice has a weapon with any real striking power.

Thurman Arnold, in charge of antitrust law enforcement in the Justice Department, is the man behind the gun. Here's what he says:

"We have just gone through a sudden and unjustified rise in prices of food. During this rise the Anti-trust Division found itself on the front line. For the past three weeks we have been receiving complaints at the rate of 250 a day. They have been coming in so fast that it has been impossible to answer them, let alone investigate them."

These complaints, Arnold adds, came from farmers, citizens' groups, trade unions, business men's groups, women's clubs, state and federal officials, Congressmen, retailers, manufacturers, wholesalers and jobless persons. Nearly all appear to be from responsible sources and few can be lightly dismised.

Existence of such wide-spread protest indicates to Washington the gravity of the problem.

LEGAL WEAPON

Under the anti-trust laws, Arnold can move against any price rises that appear to be the result of collusion among business men. If prices on similar articles rise all at once and in stores generally there are grounds for an antitrust law inquiry. Arnold's sleuths are watching for this and are all set to crack down.

The public is warned, however, that anti-trust laws cannot reach al kinds of profiteering and that Arnold is handicapped by a small and already overworked staff. About the best he can do is pick a few glaring cases and make an example of them—if he can prove collusion.

Simply investigation by the Justice Department has a wholesome effect. It is worth noting that four commodities at present the subject of anti-trust law inquiries have not gone up. These are: Steel, newsprint, potash and sulphur.

The two other government agencies concerned with this problem are limited to reporting the facts and warning the public against profiteering. There is no law under which they can prosecute and Washington opinion is doubtful whether an effective anti-profiteering law can be written.

NEED FOR ACTION

Right here is where the people outside of Washington enter the picture. Action by them is imperative if consumers are not to be gouged and labor forced to take a wage cut because of skyrocketing prices of what the workers must buy.

Labor's Non-Partisan League units over the nation are being advised in the curent issue of the League's Organizing Letter to set up consumer committees to tackle profiteering. The Letter sets forth a program of action for these committees.

First step is to investigate prices in each section and to report any profiteering to Washington and to local U. S. District Attorneys for possible anti-trust law action. Local city governments have certain powers to check profiteering and League units are advised to get after local officials. A third angle is to obtain information from government agencies here on supplies and prices generally so it will be possible to know whether any increases are justified or not.

FOOD PRICE SITUATION

On food prices considerable data is available here. An article in the current Consumers' Guide, Agriculture Department publication, tells the story under the heading: "We'll Have Enough Food Next Year."

The article lists food supply data for a number of leading commodities, among them meats, poultry, eggs, dairy products, lard, wheat, rice, fruits, vegetables. Here is their conclusion:

"Housewives have little reason to fear that food supplies this season will be less plentiful than they have been in recent years. Estimates just completed reveal that supplies of most foods for next year will be equal to, or larger than, supplies during the past three years. In some cases they will also exceed the average level of 1925-29."

What this all boils down to is that any unusual price rises are unjustified by the supply situation, but that Washington has only limited power to check profiteering and not much prospect of getting more from Congress right away. Therefore, action by labor and consumers outside Washington is the thing that's needed.

Piano Firm Plays New Tune As Union Wins Poll

New York, Oct. 7—Collective bargaining negotiations between Steinway & Sons, leading piano manufacturers, and Local 102, United Furniture Workers, began this week, the CIO union announced today.

The piano company agreed to negotiate after the union won an election conducted by the National Labor Relations Board among some 725 employes of the company to the tune of a 60-40 margin.

An independent union at Steinway's merged last August with Local 102, and was an important factor in the union's victory.

Use Radio For Alaska Drive

Seattle, Wash., Oct 7—Use of the radio for union organization is to be tried out in southeastern Alaska, the Washington District Council of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific announced here.

A radio station in Ketchikan, Alaska with a suitable frequency and capable of reaching most of the southeast portion of the territory in the daytime, will be used, according to the plan. At night it can be heard all over Alaska. Affiliates of the MFP will be able through this medium to reach workers in the most remote districts, the Council stated.

Conrad Espe, representative of the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers, declared radio broadcasting, "will be more effective than a dozen paid organizers, due to the slow means of transportation and communication in the territory." The CIO cannery union, and the United Fishermen & Allied Workers, are both active in the territory as well as unions affiliated with the MFP.

AFL Heads Split Labor In Canada

in the Canadian labor movement. It read:

"Many important matters are on the agenda for deliberation, some of which have been subjects for recent newspaper reference, such as the major issue of confirming the action of our executive in expelling from the organization all Canadian affiliates of the CIO, thereby carrying out our promise to our industrial friends that we would accomplish this fact."

This, delegates showed, was the real reason for the expulsion of the CIO unions to keep a promise to the employers of this nation and not as charged that the CIO unions were dual in character.

Earlier in the day, the convention, by a vote of 163 to 133, decided to expel all CIO affiliates from the central labor bodies throughout Canada.

None of the opponents of the CIO had anything against it when they argued for expulsion. Congress Vice-President P. R. Bengough said: "We have nothing, or very little, against the CIO, only that they became a permanent organization."

Joseph Corbett, general vice-president of the Brotherhood of Rairoad Carmen, paid a tribute to the CIO unions in Canada. He said the CIO unions "had played the game."

"Why throw them out?"

He suggested a referendum vote on the expulsion be held among Congress affiliates to let the membership decide. This suggestion was not accepted by the chairman.

The Road to Recovery? Try the 48-Hour Week, Advises Big-Shot Tory!

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7—The U. S. Chamber of Commerce delivered itself today of a program for American labor—a program as attractive as the nearest end of a torpedo.

Speaking on a national radio hook-up, Pres. W. Gibson Carey, Jr., of the Chamber, offered—in the name of "balance, tolerance and more and more good will"—the nation's workers the prospect of the 48-hour week, suggested that we "avoid" raising wages "too rapidly" and tossed off the thought that "we, as a nation, have been sentimentally ridiculous in our cry for more and more leisure."

Plunging into his subject, Carey told his radio audience that "we have our tails in the illusive but attractive circles of purchasing power, shorter hours and higher hourly rates."

"These are all right in their place," Carey condescended to admit, but the "abnormal" emphasis on this sort of "unsound" idea has kept millions jobless, he related.

Increased business, the CofC head promised, will mean lots more jobs for the unemployed—but there's a catch to the offer—provided the skilled work somewhat longer hours.

Offering evidence that the big businessmen haven't retreated from their idea that the wage-hour law ought to be repealed or amended out of existence, Carey declared:

"With machinery to help us, we shall not have to work abnormally long hours," but definitely "there will have to be a relaxation of the control of hours."

From the CofC intellectual grab-bag Carey then proceeded to pull this advice:

"We shall also have to appreciate that the working of certain groups, at, for instance, 48 hours instead of 40, does not necessarily reduce the number of people employed. In many, many instances the exact reverse is the truth!"

Carmody Backs Health Drive

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7—(FP)—Steps toward agreement among all "responsible groups" for a program of health conservation were urged by Federal Works Administrator John M. Carmody in a speech prepared here for delivery at the Texas Public Health Assn.

"We starve one-third of our people, keep them in shacks, dress them in rags and call it democracy," Carmody said. "Let's stop talking so piously and beautifully about democracy and really make it work. . . .

"Let's honestly agree that if we are to go on calling ourselves civilized, decent people, we will have to do more than we have been doing to make democracy work as a scheme of day-to-day living."

CONTINUE WORK

Recalling the work already done by the PWA and WPA, and recounting how that work has been curtailed through lack of funds, Carmody asserted:

"First, we have got to continue in the work we have already started. Second, we have got to expand some of the work—community sanitation, for example, provision of rural health centers, for another example—clinical services, case-finding services and many other similar services. . . .

"Until we have a national movement for the conservation of the health of our people, we will still be nothing but menders and patchers. . . . I wonder if you cannot begin now to bring about an agreement among all responsible groups for a national program of health conservation that will achieve the results we all so earnestly desire."

Hearst Strike Going Strong

Chicago, Oct. 7—American Legionnaires, who took over Chicago for their annual convention, were told plenty about conditions on the Hearst-owned Herald-American by members of the Chicago Newspaper Guild, whose strike is now in its 43rd week.

The Guild sound truck roved the downtown loop area, carrying announcements for the Legion delegates interspersed with pleas not to buy the Hearst paper. While Army planes engaged in maneuvers for the benefit of the crowds, the Guild also took to the skies with airplane advertisements of their strike.

Meanwhile, injunction proceedings are being heard by Judge Lupe. The Guild is asking for vacating of the injunction and of the $500 contempt of court fine handed down recently for alleged violation of the decree.

Strikers' attorneys charge that Hearst is attempting to use the courts as a strikebreaking agency.

New York—(FP)—The Women's Trade Union League School for Workers will open here Oct. 11, for its 17th year with an enrollment of about 300.

SUPPORT CHARGES

Washington—Acting on charges filed by the CIO National Marine Engineers Beneficial Assn., the Labor Board ordered the San Francisco firm of Swayne & Hoyt to disestablish a company union and stop interfering with its employes' rights to organize.

Compensation Laws Weak In Many States

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Oct. 7—Only four states have compulsory workmen's compensation laws, while all those in the different states vary in almost every respect, it was reported at the 26th annual convention of the International Assn. of Industrial Accident Boards and Commissions held here September 25-28.

It was the first time in the history of the organization that labor representatives were invited to attend the convention. Dr. Walter N. Polakov of the United Mine Workers, represented the CIO.

Considerable discussion was aroused in connection with objections raised by the Bar Association to the appearance of laymen before compensation boards. The contending point of view was that experienced laymen can better serve the purpose. The large percentage of enterprises which do not elect to join the compensation fund was also brought under fire.

DISCUSSES STATISTICS

Dr. Polakov in his speech as official observer for the CIO called to the attention of the convention the nature and deficiencies of Government statistics on industrial accidents.

"The Bureau of Labor Statistics and the Bureau of Mines are the two principal sources of digested statistical material," he said. "No statistics can be better than the records upon which they are based. Yet it can be a great deal worse if, in compilation of data, certain means are resorted to in order to obscure the situation.

"Thus our problem falls into two groups: (1) How accurate are the original records and (2) how lucidly and fully are they worked out.

NEED BETTER DATA

"Any statistical data in order to be useful, must be complete, reliable and immediate. Accident statistics fall short on all accounts. They are not complete, they are not trustworthy and, as we all know, they are but ancient history at the date of publication."

In discussing accidents in the bituminous coal industry, Dr. Polakov referred to a "statistical trick" which he said, by considering the number of fatalities in relation to tonnage produced, gave the public the impression that each million tons of coal represents so many graves of coal diggers.

NO IMPROVEMENT

"By this cheap device," he declared, "the true picture is obscured, namely, that fatality rates per million man-hours of exposure is no better today than it was during 1916-20 and in the interim it was much higher."

Such statistics, he maintained, failed to present the true picture of hazards in industry, since "they are incomplete and misleading, chloroform public opinion and obstruct the efforts toward greater safety," and tend to underestimate the scope and volume of compensation work.

Union Upheld In Armour Case

Indianapolis, Oct. 7—The intermediate report on the complaint to the Labor Board by Local 43, Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee, against Armour and Co. for anti-union activities at the Indianapolis plant, recommends that Armour stop interfering with union activities.

The Trial Examiner also recommended that Marcelus Tyler, fired for union activity, should be reinstated without loss of seniority and given back pay for time lost.

New CIO Agreement Can Be Opened For Pay Increases

NEW YORK, Oct. 7—Agreement to reopen a new contract for discussion of wage increases if the cost of living rises above a stated level, was reached today by the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and the Ford Instrument Co., today.

The special provision, by which the union hopes to keep wage rates in line with possible jumps in living costs, reflects the union's current policy on wages, UERMW officials said. The contract provides, they pointed out, that the agreement cannot be reopened for negotiation of wage cuts.

Increases of 7 cents and 10 cents an hour, the 40-hour week, vacations and holidays with pay and wage differentials for the night shifts are also provided.

The company specializes in manufacture of range-finders and other complicated machinery used almost entirely for defensive purposes.

James Lustig, UERMW international representative, and John Ruby, president of Local 425, headed the union's negotiating committee.

Seattle Campaign Planned

Seattle, Wash., Oct. 7—Concentration of their organizational drive on Seattle to spread affiliations into unorganized industries where the CIO has jurisdiction was announced by Paul Stumpf, executive secretary of the Seattle Industrial Union Council yesterday.

Stumpf declared that at a meeting held this week a committee was set up headed by O. M. Orton, vice-president of the International Woodworkers of America. This committee, known as the CIO Organizing Committee will consist of leading representatives from the 16 international unions belonging to the CIO in this district.

The Dog That Walked Like A Picket

A True Story

By Horace Bryan

MIKE TAWASHA, the tall, raw-boned police captain of San Antonio's west side squad, was feeling himself quite the thing. The chief would probably promote him for the good job he had done, he thought. He flipped his billy back and forth over his arm as he looked over the scarred ground in front of the Moran Pecan Shelling Shop. Ten minutes before his men had scattered several hundred pickets. Not a worker in sight. The chief's orders kept ringing in his ears.

"Get tough," the chief had told Mike. "Get out the water hose and the tear gas. Use your clubs if necessary. Break up the mobs in front of the plants. Arrest everybody with a CIO sign or button."

Seeing Things?

A sound at the corner of the shop attracted Mike. He reached for his club. A shaggy cur dog appeared around the corner and trotted down in front of the shop. Unseen by the police captain, three Mexican boys in their early teens retreated from the corner and behind a board fence. They peeped through the cracks to see what happened.

Mike peered closer at the dog. Was he seeing things? Had he seen so many CIO signs that he was beginning to see them everywhere he looked—even on dogs' backs! The dog was wearing a sign on its back the length of its body with the letters CIO painted on it roughly in red ink.

Mike was befuddled. Picketing was against the law! So were CIO signs! But could you arrest a dog? Was it unlawful for a dog to walk in front of a pecan shop and carry a CIO sign? Mike would have to consult the chief on this. He ran to his car parked at the curb and sent in the call.

"Chief, the dogs are wearing CIO signs! What'll we do with 'em?" he asked.

"Bring 'em in!" the chief ordered curtly. Mike hurriedly sent the chief's orders out to the men at the other shops.

"Round up all dogs wearing CIO signs," he said.

CIO Everywhere

As Mike stepped out of the car another dog, a Mexican hairless, came trotting down the road. It raised its head, looked at him suspiciously, and then trotted on. There it was again. That CIO he was seeing everywhere. Painted around one eye of the hairless was the letter C, down the nose was the letter I, and around the other eye was the letter O. Back in front of the shop a cat scurried across his path, a large CIO sign on its back.

Mike looked about. Cats and dogs appeared as if by magic from all directions; CIO was everywhere! Mike was perplexed, but he was not one to shirk orders. After all, this was the best chance he had ever had, he thought, to do a big job. Hurriedly he ordered the men:

"Round up all dogs, cats and other animals caught picketing or wearing CIO signs."

To the chief he called, "Send out all extra men and wagons."

One thing the chief did not quite understand the meaning of. Mike had added:

"Send one of the cars by the dog yard and bring all available dog-catching equipment."

All wagons and extra men went speeding to the west side strike zone. The dog catching started in earnest. All caught dogs were piled into the wagons and hauled away. More cats and dogs appeared in their places. Fat cops chased dogs and cats up and down the alleys and streets of the west side. Invariably just as the cops were about to make a catch the pursued animal would run up a tree or duck under a floor. The cops were determined. After them they went. Half a dozen cops chased a billy goat for four blocks before catching him, a large CIO swinging from the rear. All the boys of the neighborhood were close behind.

All available door and window space was crowded with the dark faces of Mexican pecan workers, white teeth gleaming out of them. Shouts of laughter rent the air.

Out of Hand

It was too much for Mike. He rushed to call the chief.

"Situation out of hand," he stammered. "All dogs and cats on west side have gone CIO. Need more men to handle them."

The chief cursed. He could imagine all west San Antonio laughing while his men chased dogs and cats up alleys and trees. That didn't create a lot of respect for law and order he thought.

"Call the boys off and bring 'em in," he ordered Mike.

Mike rounded up the boys, gave them the chief's orders and started his car toward the station. As he passed the Moran shop a large group of pickets who had reassembled jeered at him.

A small Mexican boy in short pants rushed toward his car shouting in broken English:

"Hey, you cops better bring my dog back!"

Uncle Sam Finds Peace In Harlan, Drops Cases

VASHINGTON, Oct. 7—(FP)—Charges against 69 persons in Harlan County, Ky., brought by the Department of Justice last year after the Senate Civil Liberties Committee's investigation, were dropped today by the U. S. Government because "industrial peace at last prevails" in the area."

The original charges, brought against 24 mine executives, 23 law enforcement officers and 22 coal companies, contended that the defendants conspired to violate the rights of miners under the Wagner Labor Relations Act. A trial in 1938 resulted in a mistrial when the jury was unable to agree.

Action taken by the Department of Justice followed similar action in Kentucky state courts recently, in which indictments naming 500 persons were dismissed. The cases of these people, most of them members of the United Mine Workers of America, dated from the lockout last spring when the union members resisted attempts to open the mines on an open shop basis. The Kentucky mines subsequently signed the UMW contract.

'CHANGE FOR BETTER'

In papers filed in the Federal District Court in Kentucky, the government contended that a "decided change for the better" followed the 1938 trial and that "the operators and miners made peace and each side after bitter controversy seemed sincerely willing to to work together in harmony."

The department, in ending the case against the operators and their agents, said the Harlan mines "are now reopened, the people are at work. A contract is in full force for a two-year period. Arbitration boards are functioning. The militia has been withdrawn. State prosecutions of the miners is no longer pending.

"Discriminations against the miners and their families have ceased. The right to organize and bargain collectively has been recognized. An impossible and medieval industrial system, which the operators had sworn to perpetuate, is ended.

"The rule of the so-called 'gun thugs' is no more. Since the return of the indictment, death has overtaken several of the ringleaders and others are now incarcerated in state institutions."

Gotham CIO Unions Hold Second Confab On Education

By JOHN MARKEY

NEW YORK, Oct. 7. — The second city-wide CIO Educational Conference to consider ways and means of furthering the educational and cultural work among the local unions of New York City was held here this week.

The very successful conference was held under the auspices of the state committee on Press, Radio and Education of the New York Industrial Union Council.

Thirty-three locals and joint councils were represented by over fifty educational, research and cultural activity directors and persons responsible for organizing such activities in their various unions.

The confab was a busy one, with numerous methods of cooperation and mutual help being put forward for further action by the Conference Continuation Committee.

PROPOSE CIO FORUM

A most important proposal was that for the establishment of a CIO forum where the position of the CIO on vital matters could be authoritatively presented and discussed.

Detailed information on visual aids and movies was discussed, as well as methods of establishing successful circulating libraries in local unions.

Labor legislation and housing was another important point on which the conference recommended that the Continuations Committee provide more detailed information in a bulletin to be issued shortly. The bulletin will present a summary of the conference and give as many suggestions and sources of aid as possible.

This will be the second bulletin issued by the conference. The first, published last spring, dealt with summer sports and recreation facilities.

TO PREPARE DISPLAYS

The conference urged that various locals prepare visual displays to be shown at the coming state convention in November. It is evident from the response to this conference and by the serious discussion and suggestions made that much can be done in the future to further this work and find various ways in which the local unions can be of much help to each other.

Declare 'War' For Higher Pay

Chicago, Oct. 7—Declaration of a "war" for higher wages featured the meeting of the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee board here.

A four-point program calling for extension of union organization and wage increases, contracts with Intl. Harvester and Deere & Co., and activities to protect New Deal legislation was adopted after reports on the FEWOC's progress and condition.

CIO Committee Cites Report Of 'Mix-Up'

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7.—The CIO Social Security Committee today advised workers to request the Social Security Board for their pension credit ratings.

The suggestion was made following newspaper reports of a mix-up in the Social Security files. The story, printed in the Washington Merry-Go-Round column, said the Board has failed to credit between five and ten million wage reports of workers in all parts of the country. These people have paid the social security tax on their wages and are entitled to the credits.

The five to 10 million uncredited wage reports represents a loss of millions of dollars in pension wage credits to workers. According to the news story, all wage reports which the Board fails to credit are referred to by the name of "John Doe."

THREE REASONS

The CIO Social Security Committee has learned that there are three chief reasons for the Board's failure to credit workers with the wages they have earned: (1) the huge amount of "red tape" in which the system is involved; (2) the failure of employers to send in correct reports; (3) the laxness of workers in checking on their wage records.

Part of the fault may lie entirely with the employer who has failed to report the wages he has paid to a worker, either because of a desire to "chisel" on the social security taxes, or because he believes that the work done for him is not covered by the Social Security Act. Part of the fault may lie with the worker in not reporting the correct social security number to his employer.

Every worker who has not already done so should make certain that his wage credit record is correct, the CIO committee declared.

FORM CARD AVAILABLE

Form OAR-7004, obtainable from local or regional Social Security Board offices, should be filled out and mailed to the Board in Baltimore, Md., where the wage records are kept.

When the worker receives his statement, he should check to see if it is correct. If he believes that it is not correct, the CIO Social Security Committee advises him to take the following steps:

(1) File a protest by communicating with the Social Security Board or one of its field offices, requesting a wage record protest form.

(2) Fill out the form as fully as you can. If you believe the protest will get you in wrong with your employer, you can ask the Board not to use your name in talking to your employer.

(3) The form will be used as the basis of an investigation. If the results of the investigation are not satisfactory to you, you can ask for a hearing in order to prove your claim to wage credits.

UNIONS SHOULD HELP

Social security committees in all local unions and councils should undertake to assist members and their families in establishing a worker's proper wage credits. In cases where there is a dispute as to whether or not a worker earned a certain amount of wages, union records or contracts can be used to prove a worker's case. Statements of fellow workers may also be useful.

In cases where there is a dispute as to whether or not the worker was in "covered employment," the union social security committee should immediately take part in the case because the decision may affect the status of all workers in the same job, or doing similar work.

If any questions or difficulties arise, communicate with the CIO Social Security Committee, 1106 Connecticut ave., NW, Washington, D. C.

MAY LOSE PENSIONS

A worker not credited with all his wages may not only receive a reduced pension for himself and his family, but he may lose the pension altogether.

Generally speaking, the amount of a pension depends upon the total earnings credited to a worker's account, relative to the number of months elapsing from 1937 to the time he becomes eligible for a pension, or dies.

But to be eligible for a pension, a worker must have to his credit a certain number of "quarters of coverage," a quarter of coverage being a three-month period in which he has received at least $50 in wages. The number of quarters of coverage necessary to get a worker's pension depends upon his age.

For example, workers aged 65 or more before July 1, 1940, need six quarters of coverage to be eligible for a pension; workers reaching age 65 between July 1, 1940 and December 31, 1940 need seven quarters of coverage.

Workers who have less than the required number of quarters of coverage get no pensions under the present social security system.

Rangers Attack Fishermen

Palacious, Tex., Oct. 7—Texas Rangers and police attacked the picket line of 200 shrimp fishermen now in the second month of their strike for 2½ cents a pound and the right to look at the scale when their catch is weighed. The attack took place after discontinuance of a temporary injunction won by the National Maritime Union restraining city authorities from interfering with the picket line.

The Crawford Packing Co. owns the shrimp cannery and pays fishermen one and two cents a pound. Women and children working inside the cannery get 50 and 75 cents a day.

Marine Pact Extended As Parleys Continue

NEW YORK, Oct. 7—Failing to reach an agreement before the expiration on September 30 of the pact between the National Maritime Union and the American Merchant Marine Institute, both sides have agreed to an extension of the present contract for 30 days.

The first snag was struck in the negotiations between the CIO seamen's union and the Institute, when the operators demanded the abolition of the rotary hiring system. Union negotiators, headed by Howard McKenzie, told the operators that rotary hiring was one of the basic demands of the union, and that it would not be given up under any circumstances.

Chief demands of the seamen are for complete union hiring, a closed shop, adjustment of the medical clause and reduction in the number of exempt classifications.

REJECT COUNTER-OFFER

The union's proposal for strengthening the hiring clause and reducing the number of exemptions was met by the operators with a counter proposal to abolish rotary hiring and to give them the right to hire whomever they pleased with the proviso that the men they hire should join by the end of their first trip.

The NMU committee pointed out that the operators' plan of hiring non-union seamen and bringing them into the union would flood the industry, already overcrowded.

"Don't get us wrong," said Commander Robert C. Lee of the operators. "We are anxious to help you in building a strong union."

"We are completely aware of your anxiety to help us build a strong union," Howard McKenzie, chairman of the NMU committee, replied with marked sarcasm. "In fact we know that it is the policy of the Maritime Commission to destroy marine unions. If what you say is true, then you are at variance with the Maritime Commission.

California Council Meets

San Francisco, Oct. 7. — More than 2400 delegates, representing 100,000 plus CIO members in California, assembled today for the annual convention of the state Industrial Union Council, scheduled to run through the week-end before the opening of the national CIO convention in this city.

Principle items on the advance agenda were labor's attitude to the European war, with insistence on America's staying out, maintenance of civil liberties at home, and the question of Proposition No. 1, variously known as "$30 on Thursday" and the "Ham and Eggs" plan.

CIO officials here indicated support for the Proposition, pointing out that it represented a progressive move toward a measure of social and economic security, and contrasted the attitude of the AFL in first endorsing then welching on the question.

Featured speakers at the convention will include Philip Murray, vice-president of the CIO; Harry Bridges, west coast Regional Director, and Alejandro Carillo, a leader of the Mexican Confederation of Labor, (CTM). Philip M. Connolly, Council president, and Louis Goldblatt, state CIO secretary, will preside.

QUILL PICKETS

New York—Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers Union, and a member of the New York City Council, joined the picket line of three CIO unions at the Burndy Engineering Co. in the Bronx. Production workers, office workers and technicians are seeking a new contract.

Pay Up 38%, Hours Cut 30% In CIO Pact

PATERSON, N. J., Oct. 7—CIO action today had won a 30 per cent cut in hours and a 38 per cent increase in pay for 25 hard-driven workers at the Florida Fruit Co., here.

The produce firm, which had previously worked its employes as much as 95 hours a week, agreed to a 65-hour week and a lifting of minimum wages from $13 to $15 a week. The contract was signed by Local 146 of the United Retail and Wholesale Employes.

Citizens Aid WU Strike

San Francisco, Oct. 7—Western Union has given the striking messengers and operators of the American Communications Association 24 hours to come back to work or be fired. ACA has voted to ignore the deadline and is instead intensifying its mass picket lines.

A volunteer citizens' committee has been formed which seeks to assist in obtaining an early and satisfactory adjustment of the strike. The Committee wired National Labor Relations Board Chairman J. Warren Madden urging speedy consideration by the NLRB of a Trial Examiner's report last year that the Association of Western Union Employes be declared a company union.

"Western Union officials are using the Board's delay as an excuse for refusing to negotiate with representatives of its employes," the telegram said.

Messengers of the Red Arrow Bonded Messenger Corporation, whom it is claimed Western Union was using to deliver messages, have also struck.

Miners Weigh Strike Action In Montana

BUTTE, Mont., Oct. 7.—Two last-minute proposals of the powerful Anaconda Copper Mining Co. were under consideration by this city's thousands of metal miners today following threats of a strike to win union demands.

Butte Local 1 of the CIO Intl. Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers gained from the company an offer to deal with five-man grievance committees at each mine and a withdrawal of a suggestion for a pay day every two weeks.

Two other points were considered unsatisfactory by the union, however—proposed exemption of shift bosses doing maintenance work from union membership and opposition to the workers' demand for an 8-hour collar-to-collar day.

The Butte local's stand was strengthened by decisions of the Great Falls local and Anaconda Local 117 to sign no agreement until Butte Local 1 and the Butte Engineers Local have reached satisfactory understandings with the multi-million dollar corporation.

Utah Miners Turn Down 25c Raise

Salt Lake City, Utah, Oct. 7—"Thumbs down" on proposed 25c-a-day increases was the answer of the Utah District of the CIO Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers to silver mine operators now bargaining with the union for a new state-wide agreement.

The move to reopen the present state agreement was initiated by the union following an increase in the government price for new-mined silver, which materially lifted profits for Utah operators. Since that time the war boom in metal prices has increased their gains still further and holds promise of more and larger profits.

Under the circumstances, the Utah district took the stand that the quarter-a-day raise offer was woefuly inadequate.

700 Lumbermen Win Seven-Week Strike

ENUMCLAW, Wash., Oct. 7.—A strike called at the White River Lumber Company here over a month ago has ended in a victory for the International Woodworkers of America.

The CIO union won a settlement of the grievances which caused the strike and gained a new contract containing important improvement over the former agreement, IWA officials said today.

About 700 men in the mill and woods operations of the company were affected by the strike, which broke August 23, after months of futile negotiations with company officials over violations of the contract. The White River firm is said to be owned and controlled by the giant Weyerhauser interests.

WIN RECOGNITION

The new contract, signed with IWA Local 157, provides full union recognition, complete seniority rights, 40-hour week, eight-hour day and time and a half for overtime.

Rumors had been circulated in the area to the effect that White River, or Weyerhauser, would never sign an agreement with a CIO affiliate, local officials said, in commenting on the successful conclusion of the strike.

Push Strike Against Food Packers

New York, Oct. 7—Fifty members of the United Retail & Wholesale Employes, CIO, pushed a strike akainst the I. Rokeach food product firm today after refusing management demands for a 25 per cent wage cut, abolition of union conditions and a return to the six-hour week.

Arbitration of the dispute, suggested by the union, was flatly turned down by the company.

The URWE has printed 50,000 leaflets publicizing the strike and is urging New York unionists to place the firm on their unfair list.

Appeal Conviction Of Union Leader

Sioux City, Ia., Oct. 7—Defense attorneys today planned an immediate appeal of the "malicious mischief" sentence handed out by a district court jury to James Porter, representative of the CIO Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee.

The conviction of Porter, who as a result faces a possible five-year term in the state penitentiary, dates from the Swift & Co. strike here last year, during which time local labor-haters sponsored an anti-union campaign.

Porter, one of the strike leaders, was accused of stoning the home of a company union leader who was involved in a back-to-work movement during the four-month walkout. Four other union members await trials on similar charges.

'CIRCUMSTANTIAL'

Defense attorneys, in announcing their appeal plans, said the police testimony used by County Attorney Maurice E. Rawlings to get the conviction was based on circumstantial evidence alone.

Officers testified that tires on Porter's car matched imprints on the street in front of the house which was said to have been the target of rocks and bricks. However, the county attorney failed to introduce pictures of the tire imprints, which he admitted having taken.

Porter is at present PWOC representative in Oklahoma, Texas, Kansas, Colorado and Missouri.

ORGANIZE MILLIONS, CONVENTION GOAL

CIO Blasts Labor Board 'Undermining' Of Act's Purposes

(See Story Page 8)

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—In resolutions and speeches, the CIO convention today went on record as unanimously condemning National Labor Relations Board policies "which undermine the basic purposes" of the Wagner Act.

Warning of the appeasement policies which the NLRB has been following in regard to big business and the AFL leadership, the resolution warned affiliates to "make a most sparing and considerable use of the Wagner Labor Act in the future."

A half dozen union leaders took the floor to denounce new trends in the board's decisions which have hurt industrial unionism. Vice-President Philip Murray was particularly sharp in his criticism of William Leiserson, newest board member.

WAGE-HOUR ACT HIT

Another resolution criticized the Wage-Hour Administration for being "inefficient and lax in the establishment of industry committees and in any effective enforcement of the legislation." The department of Labor, another convention statement declared, is in need of over-hauling in order that it may gain personnel and funds—as well as sympathy with labor's problems—to do an effective job for the Nation's workers.

Other key resolutions called for continuation at an accelerating pace of unorganized workers; increasing labor participa-

Delegates Hail Plans to Push Organizing Drive

(See Stories on Inside Pages)

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 13 — The second annual convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations adjourned today with the 400 delegates cheering plans to meet "the clamors of millions" seeking admission into the labor movement following advice from President John L. Lewis to "get to work" on the tasks that lie ahead.

Moving in streamlined style, the convention, during its four-day sessions, discussed both the need for a nationwide unionization campaign and the increased necessity for protecting American workers from Tory attacks.

In line with this, the delegates passed a carefully-worded resolution demanding that the United States Government avoid involvement in foreign wars, to impose taxes on excess profits and take steps to eliminate profiteering and other forms of exploitation under the cloak of "war emergency" excitement.

BACK NEUTRALITY

President Lewis called upon the delegates to support President Roosevelt's neutrality program, but warned against illusions that wording of the neutrality act will alone keep the country out of war.

Living up to its reputation as the guardian of all workers' rights, the CIO called for speedy and adequate assistance to the ten million jobless. Action by the convention followed a dra-

Ovation

San Francisco, Oct. 14.—One of the big ovations of the convention went to Gov. Olson of California at the opening session.

Tall and ruddy, the state's chief executive strode up the aisles between crowds of cheering unionists. The governor received another tribute as he left Polk Hall.

A Peaceful Army Prepares to Advance

CIO CONVENTION DELEGATES LISTENED WITH CLOSE ATTENTION as President John L. Lewis called for an organization campaign that will bring 10,000,000 members into the nation's unions during the next five years. Polk Hall in San Francisco's Municipal Auditorium was jammed to capacity as the CIO leader made his impassioned plea for labor's advance.

A Western Welcome To The National CIO

'60-60' Pension Plan Gets OK Of Convention

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14. — The CIO convention today reiterated its stand for $60 monthly pensions for all persons over 60.

The resolution declared:

"The CIO endorses an old age pension program in cooperation with all progressive and old age groups based upon a flat maximum pension of $60 per month, with supplementary allowances to wives up to a maximum of $90 per month for each married couple, with an age limit of 60 years and eligibility to all persons and administered through a single federal system, and the additional funds for this program should be secured by taxes upon aggregates of wealth and income."

The statement on social security was linked with a number of other resolutions on health, industrial hygiene and unemployment compensation, all of which were passed as a group by the delegates.

"The present dual system" of state and federal pensions and old age insurance "does not take care of our needs in any satisfactory way," the resolution said.

Other sections of the resolution urged expansion of present public assistance to the needy, blind, widows and dependent children; called for federal cash benefits in cases of total or permanent disability as part of the federal old age insurance program; simplification of unemployment benefit laws and increases in the amount paid out.

HEALTH PROGRAM

The delegates called also for a thorough-going federal health program to provide insurance for medical care, free medical treatment for low income groups, cash benefits for temporarily disabled workers, and "the construction of needed hospitals in rural and urban areas throughout the country."

Chicago Guild Plans Hearst Conference

Chicago, Oct. 14—Leaders of the American Newspaper Guild made plans to seek a conference with the national management of the Hearst newspapers, at a meeting of the union's international executive board held here. The CIO union has been on strike against the Chicago Hearst papers for more than 10 months.

The union board also discussed plans for a conference next month of delegates representing Guild units on Hearst papers throughout the country to take up general issues concerning Hearst publications.

'Get Busy', CIO Tells Wage-Hour Division

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—The CIO called today "for the vigorous raising" of minimum wage standards in a resolution which criticized the U. S. Wage-Hour Administration for "inefficiency" in handling its industry wage committees and the "failure of the Administration to enforce the provisions of the Act."

A year's experience with the Fair Labor Standards Act have demonstrated three significant facts, the CIO statement declared:

1. Minimum wage and maximum hour standards of the act are insufficient to guarantee a decent national basic wage structure.

2. Appropriations up till now have been inadequate and the Wage-Hour Administration has been "lax . . . in any effective enforcement of the legislation.

3. Principles of wage-hour legislation have not yet been accepted by reactionary employers and Garnerite legislators "who have threatened the very life of the Act with crippling amendments."

Organize Ten Million Workers, Avoid War, Lewis Urges CIO

CIO Leaders Gather

SEATED ON THE CONVENTION PLATFORM were these leaders of the CIO: Sec. James B. Carey, Director John Brophy, Vice-Pres. Sidney Hillman, Sec.-Treas. Thomas Kennedy of the United Mine Workers, and Vice-Pres. Philip Murray.

'Army of Peace' Must Advance, Delegates Told

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14—In a stirring keynote address to the second convention of the CIO, President John L. Lewis called for the organizing of ten million workers in the next five years as a response to the "millions clamoring for admission to our movement."

"Get to work" at the organizing tasks ahead was Lewis' advice to the more than 400 delegates present in Polk Hall of the Municipal Auditorium.

The CIO leader also called for support of Pres. Roosevelt's neutrality legislative aims, but cautioned that mere change in statutory wording is insufficient to keep the nation out of war—a goal which he coupled with the need for further organization as the two principal tasks of the nation's workers.

The form of America's neutrality laws will "not be the deciding nor controlling factor in the issues as between peace and war," Lewis declared, speaking slowly to let his words sink in.

"The wording of the neutrality act, the classification of commodities and lethal weapons and the question of credit or non-credit to purchasers are questions, which compared to the issue of peace or war, are of secondary importance.

"War will not come because the Congress may juggle words in the Neutrality Act. War for America will only come as a result of developing circumstances which convince the American people that there is no other alternative.

"The President has both the knowledge and the constitutional power to serve best the interests of the nation in this emergency period, the CIO leader continued.

"No other citizen has knowledge which equals the President's knowledge on the facts which concern the issues of peace, war or neutrality.

"The President's program upon neutrality should be supported by the Congress and by the people, and cavilling should cease."

Labor—upon which "is inflicted most of the agony and tragedy of war"—has a "major stake in this problem," he went on.

"Every citizen," Lewis said, "hopes that a practical formula for peace may soon be found, and likewise our own countrymen will unless the primary basic purpose of our great movement is unceasingly carried out—the organization of the unorganized.

"When they are organized, they hope and believe that President Roosevelt will make available his own great influence in behalf of peace, when conditions warrant and justify his intervention."

DOMESTIC NEEDS

From a discussion of the nation's foreign problems, the CIO president then turned his attention to the immediate, pressing needs of labor at home. Speaking extemporaneously—his discussion of the neutrality had been from a formal text—Lewis recalled that five years ago, during the 1934 AFL convention, "my voice was a feeble voice in this hall."

It might have been compared, he added, "to the voice of Rachel lamenting in the wilderness," but today, I come back to San Francisco and behind me is a mighty army of four million men and women, a greater numerical force than ever followed a conqueror in the pages of history.

ARMY OF PEACE

"Not an army of conquest—an army of peace, the soldiers of peace. The men and women of labor, who ask for rectification of their wrongs. who ask

Stop U. S. Contracts To Law Flouting Firms, Lewis Demands

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—Corporations fattening on government contracts while evading and flouting federal laws must be brought up shortly by Congress, John L. Lewis told the CIO convention in supporting a resolution to withdraw federal orders from firms that violate the Wagner Act.

"There is no argument in reason or in logic against this law," Lewis said. "The only reason why it has not passed both houses of Congress is because the corporations don't want it, or because the CIO does want it passed. Certainly the CIO wants this law. I don't know in the AFL leaders ever thought of it. But the men and women of labor who have to pay for war if it comes want it, and the people of America want it."

PASSED THREE TIMES

Pointing out that the law, which only requires beneficiaries of taxpayers' money to obey other federal laws while making enormous profits out of the present emergency, had passed the Senate three times, Lewis asked that CIO affiliates put all possible heat on the lower House when it comes up again.

The present emergency situation, he said, is making a new crop of American millionaires, similar to the crop that came out of the first world war, but let America at least see that they do not flout the law and the labor movement while they make their millions.

"If we're going to produce another crop of millionaires, so be it, if there is no other way," he said. "But if we do, and if the taxpayers are willing to let this crop be raised, let the government see that these corporations out of which will come the new millionaires obey the laws of the Congress of the United States."

Such a law has passed the Senate three times, Lewis explained, only to be held up by reactionaries in the House. "I don't know why Congress or the President tolerate this condition," he said.

"When the President or the CIO called on House leaders to urge action, the greatest barrage of criticism and misrepresentation in decades descended upon him.

"The center of the criticism was the fact that the President of the CIO used the office of the Speaker of the House in urging this bill. Whose office was it? Did it belong to the Bethlehem Steel Corporation? Or to the people of America?"

Such firms as Bethlehem Steel, Electric Boat, Douglas Aircraft, and others, all open violators of the Wagner Act and other U. S. laws, have almost a monopoly of these government contracts, Lewis declared. They are the opponents of this measure, not the people and the workers of America.

Atlas Powder Cited

Washington—The National Labor Relations Board has found that the Atlas Powder Company, Stamford, Conn., hindered the union activities of Dist. 50, United Mine Workers, and has ordered the firm to stop interfering with the self-organization of its employes.

The Board investigation revealed that a company stenographer kept a record of union meetings, that foremen and supervisors went to meetings to discourage attendance by the workers, and that the company interfered with shop gate meetings.

Protect Rights, Defend Gains, Lewis Urges CIO Unions

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14. — Pres. John L. Lewis sounded a warning to the CIO convention that all organized labor must prepare to defend its hard-won gains from tory raids based on the excuse of the European war.

"In this hour of national trial and testing, the CIO is a mighty power for democracy, peace and prosperity," the CIO leader declared in his report, which in its 60 pages covered in detail all phases of the CIO activities during the past 12 months.

Outstanding in this summary of work accomplished was the preservation of progressive legislation despite the attacks of a reactionary Congressional bloc, and the extension of CIO organizing successes which swept past the clamor of the "bankrupt and discredited leadership" of the AFL.

The Wagner Act, the wage-hour law and at least partial preservation of the WPA program were cited by Pres. Lewis as major feathers in the cap of the CIO during the past year.

On the organizational front, definite forward advances were made by the miners, clothing workers, auto, steel, textile, packinghouse and transport workers, he declared, pointing out that "it is impossible to do justice to all the achievements and advances of all the individual CIO unions."

Every one of them, he noted, "has weathered the storm of attack and the difficulties of depression with solid ranks, many membership increases and an imposing list of election victories."

Discussing the additional hazards created for American workers by the European war, Lewis stated a 5-point program for labor:

Education Committee Suggested

San Francisco, Oct. 14—CIO educational work is urged on all affiliates in Pres. Lewis' convention report, and successful projects of several unions praised.

The report recommends that the executive officers be given authority to set up a national committee to study and to suggest ways of coordinating and extending present actvities.

Pres. Lewis also draws attention to U. S. government camps that can be assured by labor organizations for educational and creational purposes, and briefly describes the camp in Pennsylvania that was used last summer by several national affiliates.

LABOR AND THE WAR

By John L. Lewis

We assemble at a time when our nation and peoples of all civilized countries are profoundly concerned with the war in Europe. In many respects this war possesses potentialities that are the most menacing with which modern culture and civilization have ever been confronted. Without question, organized labor and all other Americans are fundamentally and overwhelmingly opposed to any participation in this war on the part of our Government or its military establishment.

The members of the Congress of Industrial Organizations are Americans in principle, in thought and in action. We will at all times give support to our instrumentalities of Government and the political leadership of our country in any crisis or situation which imperils the integrity or existence of the free institutions under our flag.

We do, however, have the firm and unalterable conviction that our nation is not called upon to participate in any manner on one side or the other of a European conflict.

Conceivably, with the maximum employment of modern instrumentalities of warfare by the contending countries in Europe, the civil populations of certain of those countries may be unable to withstand the impact and the ravages of such warfare. Internal confusion and disorder may follow upon such a scale that existing governments may be disestablished and new forms of authority or oppression may appear.

Safety and security for Americans lie in non-participation in this conflict and the addressing of ourselves to the major problems now confronting us in our own internal economy and domestic establishment. Let no one assume, however, that America will not at all times defend its boundaries, its possessions, its government, its citizens and its flag.

The issue of the form of neutrality to be followed by the United States Government during the period of the European war, which is now being debated in the Congress of the United States, will not be the deciding nor controlling factor in the issues as between peace and war.

The wording of the Neutrality Act, the classification of commodities and lethal weapons and the question of credit or non-credit to purchasers are questions, which compared to the issue of peace or war, are of secondary importance. War will not come because the Congress may juggle words in the Neutrality Act. War for America will only come as a result of developing circumstances which convince the American people that there is no other alternative.

If this be true and logic compels the acceptance of the belief, it is then futile and absurd for the Congress of the United States and the population of the entire country to become confused and convulsed in a discussion of the varying definitions of actual or assumed neutrality which emanate from the minds and pens of statesmen of high and low degree. Recognition of these facts by the Congress and by the people will abate much of the confusion and controversy that now exist throughout the country.

After all, the President of the United States is the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, and the republic through its Congress has placed upon him as Chief Executive of the nation greater responsibilities than accrue to any other ruler, king or potentate in Christendom. No other citizen can assume any of the responsibilities of the President. No other citizen has knowledge which equals the President's knowledge on the facts which concern the issues of peace, war or neutrality.

The President's program upon neutrality should be supported by the Congress and by the people, and cavilling should cease.

Labor has a major stake in this problem. In war labor must perform most of the work and do most of the dying. Upon labor always is inflicted most of the agony and tragedy of war. Labor demands and must be accorded its rightful consideration in any emergency which affects national interest.

Labor is not blind to the facts of Europe's problems. It has its own sources of information and does not blindly accept the tortured news stories which flow from the facile pens of governmental censors of belligerent nations.

Every citizen will hope that the present European discussion of a possible peace may eventuate in a practical formula which will achieve the objective before the war assumes more broad and horrible proportions. Likewise our own countrymen will hope and believe that President Roosevelt will make available his own great influence in behalf of peace, when conditions warrant and justify his intervention.

An Army of Peace

The CIO's Stand On War

San Francisco, Oct. 14—Taking the position that "labor's answer to the tragic war in Europe must be the preservation of peace in the western hemisphere", the CIO convention called for efforts to show the "effectiveness of democratic government in promoting life, liberty and happiness for mankind."

The resolution, one of the first passed by the delegates, warned that the present European conflict may "mark the end of freedom and may destroy civilization on that continent."

"Labor's answer to the tragic war in Europe," the resolution went on, "must be the preservation of peace in the western hemisphere, the protection of our democratic institutions, and the extension of the social and economic gains achieved during the past six years."

PARTIAL TEXT

Remainder of the resolution follows:

RESOLVED, (1) Labor wants no war or any part of it and while countries in Europe are engaged in their barbaric orgies of conquest and aggression as they have been doing for centuries, it must ever be the purpose of the United States to remain out of these wars; and

(2) That the CIO offers its support to President Roosevelt's neutrality policy based upon the cardinal principle of keeping America out of war and calls for further legislation to take the profits out of war business by rigorous taxation of excess profits and surplus incomes; and

(3) That this Second Annual Convention of the CIO declares in no equivocal terms that we will defend the free institutions of this Republic, the greatest democracy on earth, under the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, a government of the people, for the people and by the people. It shall ever be our purpose as Americans to defend our country and our free institutions against foreign invasion; and

(4) The CIO will devote itself to continuing the organization of the unorganized American workers, promoting genuine collective bargaining, for the welfare of American labor and the stabilization of industry, and, through the preservation of peace, find a solution of the basic economic ills of this country and bring about a permanent prosperity.

By these efforts we shall prove to the world that the United States is the highest form of democratic government on earth and set the example of the effectiveness of democratic government in promoting life, liberty and happiness for mankind.

Urge Farm, Labor Amity

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14. — Close cooperation between organized labor and working farmers is urged in Pres. Lewis' convention report, and creation of a standing national committee of CIO affiliates for that purpose suggested.

Pres. Lewis, reporting on a study of this field undertaken at the request of the Executive Board, writes: "Results of this survey show favorable possibilities for building a closer amity and cooperative relationship with working farmers whose problems press heavily on them as similar problems press on the industrial workers.

"Such a committee can serve a useful purpose both in bringing a better understanding of our movement to an important section of the population and in aiding them in the solution of economic and social difficulties that affect the welfare of all Americans."

CIO Progress And Problems Discussed By Lewis In Report

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14. — Following is the text of the introduction of the report of Pres. Lewis to the CIO convention:

"The CIO meets for its second convention at a time when the world is in turmoil. Most of Europe is being devastated by the madness of war. Arrogant aggression and inept statesmanship have produced a calamity which has overwhelmed millions of innocent people. This calamity is shaking the old world to its foundations, and its final outcome none can predict.

"In this new world of ours, in the Western Hemisphere, we have a chance to learn from the experience of Europe and to avoid the tragic errors and misguided efforts which have produced such bloody chaos there. The United States has avoided involvement in the European slaughter, but we can continue to escape the misfortunes which have overtaken much of the rest of the world, only if we set our own house in order and build up a bulwark of democratic resistance against all the forces in this country which lead to Fascism and war.

"In this hour of national trial and testing, the CIO is a mighty power for democracy, peace and prosperity. The millions of organized workers banded together in the CIO are the main driving force of the progressive movement of workers, farmers, professional and small business people and of all other liberal elements in the community. They are also the backbone of the resistance to all the forces that threaten our democratic institutions and the liberty and security that Americans hold dear.

Prestige Established

"In the past year, the CIO has established its strength and prestige so firmly that we can now have confidence that all the forces of reaction will not prevail against it.

"The CIO has held its own and maintained its ranks through a long period of bitter unemployment and in face of the most vicious and concentrated attacks of its enemies. More than this, it has not only held its own, but it has also made many organizational advances in industries where it was already established and has pushed forward into new fields.

"The economic strength of the CIO has been reflected in increased political influence, which the CIO has used in recent elections and in the last session of Congress to strike many blows in the cause of liberalism and progress. The CIO has used its political influence to defend existing labor and social legislation; to demand the enactment of new legislation in the interests of labor, the unemployed, the farmers and the great masses of the people; and to protect and expand our democratic liberties.

"Organizationally, the CIO has during the past year beaten off the attacks of disruption and dualism which were directed against every one of its affiliated organizations. These attacks were inspired by anti-Union employers who sought to destroy the new unions of the CIO by devious means after all their frontal attacks had failed. Such employers found a willing tool in the bankrupt and discredited leadership of the American Federation of Labor.

"The AFL leaders gave letters of the marque and reprisal, in the form of charters, to every kind of labor disrupter, to company unions and to every sort of break-away or dual movement they could create.

Submits Report

PROGRESS OF THE CIO during the past year was noted in the 60-page report submitted to the delegates by Pres. Lewis.

These so-called charters were simply a license given to shady elements to privateer against the strong and growing unions of the CIO, and to create whatever disruption they could, without any attempt to organize the unorganized workers.

"But in dealing with the disposing of these many attempts at union disruption, the CIO unions have emerged stronger and more solid than ever before. Their membership have stood the test of internal disruption as well as outside attack and have proved beyond question their loyalty to the CIO."

Unions Forge Ahead

"The magnificent victory of the United Mine Workers of America in winning the union shop throughout the coal industry has made that organization more powerful than ever before in its history. It has also brought new courage and assurance to all sections of the CIO, as a demonstration of the basic stability and growing strength of the movement.

"The Amalgamated Clothing Workers has also reached the peak of its strength in the past year, with renewed agreements bringing many improvements, with increased membership and with a record of constructive contributions to the welfare of this and the workers employed in it.

"In the automobile industry, where AFL and anti-union employes imagined they could split the workers' ranks by sponsoring the disruptive efforts of Homer Martin, the United Automobile Workers of the CIO has emerged from the conflict with a solid and growing organization, which is fast burying the remains of the Martin clique under an avalanche of votes in Labor Board elections.

"The Steel Workers Organizing Committee, with 602 union contracts and 1,100 lodges throughout the United States and Canada, has also consolidated its strength and made great progress during the past year . . . .

"Notable among the achievements of the newer CIO unions in organizing the unorganized is that of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee. This CIO organization, with scores of agreements already won from independent packers, has been certified as the workers' collective bargaining agent in all the major plants of Armour & Co. and is now approaching the biggest corporations in the industry for the union agreements to which its membership entitles it.

"It is impossible here to do justice to all the achievements and advances of all the individual CIO unions. But every one of them has weathered the storm of attack and the difficulties of depression with solid ranks, many membership increases and an imposing list of election victories, new contracts won and contracts renewed.

"Election results in general demonstrate that the trend of the workers is all toward the CIO In the past year, the CIO has won more elections than any other group and has received more workers' votes than all other unions combined.

Fought Tory Bills

"In the past session of Congress, the CIO led the fight for progressive legislation and was the backbone of the liberal resistance to attacks on existing social legislation. . . .

"In general, the CIO has demonstrated legislatively and politically that it is a truly American and democratic movement which works public-spiritedly for the general welfare of our whole country. Besides its efforts on specifically labor legislation, it has advanced a program for social security for all aged Americans, through pensions of $60 a month at 60; it has shown a similar concern for legislation on behalf of youth; it has supported legislation for the benefit of the farmers, and has cooperated actively with farm organizations wherever possible, as for instance in the dairy farmers' strike in New York State; and it has been the bulwark of resistance to all assaults on our democratic liberties.

"In the last session of Congress, the CIO exposed and fought right down the line against the unholy alliance of Tory Republicans and renegade Democrats, led by Vice-Pres. Garner, a combination which was responsible for all the attacks launched against labor and progressive legislation."

Position On War

"Many new problems confront our country as a result of the European war. In coping with these problems, your officers have taken the following position:

"1. That organized labor is emphatically opposed to any involvement of the United States in the European war.

"2. That labor demands the right of adequate representation in all governmental boards and agencies set up to cope with the war situation and to mobilize national defense.

"3. That the real wages of American workers must not be allowed to suffer from rising living costs, and that every effort must be made to stop profiteering and to adjust wage levels to rising prices.

"4. That pre-occupation with foreign affairs must not be allowed to detract attention from unemployment and other pressing problems of internal economic insecurity.

"5. That more than usual vigilance must be exercised to guard existing labor and social legislation and democratic rights against curtailment under the pretext of emergency considerations.

"In general, it is our conviction that the greatest contribution that can be made to the cause of democracy, peace and prosperity, is through the building of the progressive labor movement.

"For in proportion as the workers are made articulate though organization, they will make their influence effective for the preservation of democracy, against the danger of war, and for the establishment of internal security which will make our country immune to the horrors which now afflict so much of the rest of the world."

Results Of War

"When this report was written, there was considerable show of increased economic activity. Such activity has been built in large part upon war and the expectation of war.

"There is a clear prospect of a significant rise in prices and in industrial activity due to the European war. To some extent, labor will benefit from this activity temporarily. There will be more employment, wages will be maintained and employment will be steadier, but these benefits will be temporary and in the large measure, false. For it has always been our experience in wartime, whether that war involved this country or only European nations, that profiteering and monopolies raise prices of the goods that workers must buy, far more rapidly than their wages, so the immediate result for workers is a reduction of their real wages, a reduction of the amount of food and clothing and housing which they can buy."

Highlights of Report

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14. — Highlight flashes from the report of Pres. John L. Lewis to the second convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations:—

THE PLACE OF THE CIO—"In this hour of national trial and testing, the CIO is a mighty power for democracy, peace and prosperity. The millions of organized workers banded together in the CIO are the main driving force of the progressive movement of workers, farmers, professional and small business people and of all other liberal elements in the community. They are also the backbone of the resistance to all the forces that threaten our democratic institutions and the liberty and security that Americans hold dear."

ORGANIZATION — "Election results [in National Labor Relations Board polls] in general demonstrate that the trend of the workers is all towards the CIO. In the past year, the CIO has won more elections than any other group and has received more workers' votes than all other unions combined."

LEGISLATION — "In the past session of Congress, the CIO led the fight for progressive legislation and was the backbone of the liberal resistance to attacks on existing social legislation. . . . The CIO exposed and fought right down the line against the unholy alliance of Tory Republicans and renegade Democrats, led by Vice-Pres. Garner, a combination which was responsible for all the attacks launched against labor and progressive legislation."

LABOR AND THE WAR—". . . Organized labor is emphatically opposed to any involvement of the United States in the European war. . . . In general, it is our conviction that the greatest contribution that can be made to the cause of democracy, peace and prosperity, is through the building of the progressive labor movement."

WAR BOOM—"The illusion of prosperity brought by war is a hateful deception. The rich and privileged profit hugely in a war while labor suffers and its young men are killed."

'ORGANIZE' IS KEYNOTE

Ten Millions In Five Years, Lewis Asks

for participation in the national bounty, merely on the same plane and to the same degree as their neighbors, their friends, and their fellow citizens."

"Four million men and women," he repeated, with their dependents, account for 20,000,000 of the population.

But, Lewis predicted, "when I come back five years from now, as come back I will, I'll come into San Francisco with at least ten million dues' paying members. And when I do, the voice of labor will be stronger in America. That's not a threat, that's a promise."

WORK TO DO

To reach that goal, the CIO leader advised organization — continuous, enthusiastic, concentrated—will be needed.

"So you've all got your work cut out," he told the delegates, "and all I intend to do during the next year is to unceasingly demand that you organize the unorganized.

"It's all right in our organization of labor to have research departments and legal departments, educational departments and unemployment departments, and various other departments, and we do have them, and they are good ones.

"But don't forget that the organizing department is the most important, and that the other departments can't function very well will perfect their arrangements, they will develop their leaders and their leaders will gain in skill, in wisdom and in judgment, as they gain experience, and they will be able through the succeeding years to make constantly their contribution to the well being of the body politic, social and economic. That's the job of our organization."

DISCUSSES UNITY

Lewis then devoted a brief section of his talk to the subject of labor unity—a subject raised a few minutes previously by Gov. Culbert Olson of California.

The only reason the papers talk about the "necessity for peace in the labor movement" is because there is a CIO, and because the CIO does have strength and power, he said. "If it had only a million members, there wouldn't be anything about it in the papers," Lewis remarked.

Governor Olson, he said, can see in "his mind's eye" benefits to all labor through unity of AFL and CIO.

But, Lewis continued, "the CIO had to be organized and functioning before Governor Olson could come here to make a speech"—in other words, only the formation and existence of the CIO made possible the election of a liberal state executive.

"So organize the unorganized," the CIO president exhorted.

"There are millions clamoring for admission to our movement, as economic conditions permit them to hazard their jobs, or to find ways and means to associate themselves with us."

The influence of the CIO has been felt in Mexico and Latin-America, he noted, and in all those countries, "there is a scurrying and a hurrying and an activity that these men and women loving liberty and desiring participation in the reasonable things of life, are resolved to do in the same manner as they see their brothers and sisters in the North undertaking to impress their philosophy upon the public mind."

Concluding his talk, Lewis said the convention "has work to do" regardless of the European war, because "America must prepare for tomorrow.

BLESSING OF "SECURITY"

"The greatest blessing that can come to our own country and to our own government is to achieve security for the future by making the men and women of labor who have to fight its wars of the future so appreciative of the treatment they get that they will be perfectly willing at any time to work and fight and die, if necessary, to preserve the things for which the American flag stands."

In opening his address, Lewis spoke of the CIO's love and respect for the "free institutions" of America, in "orderly processes" and in "an appeal to the intelligence of men and women, and not in any resort to force."

Founded on these principles, the CIO president asserted, the labor movement is making a contribution "which no man may afford to ignore and no man may assail, lest in the end it be proven that he is a foolish man to either underestimate our influence or to assail the sincerity of our principles or the work of our movement."

OF 2nd CIO CONVENTION

Six Vice-Presidents OK'd by Convention

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 13.— Change in the CIO constitution to provide for six vice-presidents, instead of the two former positions, was approved by the convention.

At the same time, the delegates gave their stamp of approval to a plan permitting the general executive board to allot a salary to the CIO secretary when it so sees fit.

Nominations of the officers had not been made when The CIO NEWS went to press. Next week's issue will carry full stories about the final actions of the convention.

Union Label Campaigns Endorsed

San Francisco, Oct. 14 — A brief review of work already done and recommendations for further progress on the promotion of a CIO union label campaign is given in Pres. Lewis' report to the convention.

The report says:

"Many of the affiliated unions of the CIO carry on extensive work in this field through their own departments.

"The coordination of this work might well be carried on by a self-supporting agency within the CIO directed and supported by those international unions which are engaged in making products for which the use of labels is important."

ROANOKE CERTIFIED

Washington, Oct. 14 — United Furniture Workers, CIO, has been certified by the Natl. Labor Relations Board as sole collective bargaining agency for production and maintenance employes at the Johnson-Carper Furniture Company, Roanoke, Va., after a secret election held August 31.

Lewis Refutes Anti-CIO Slanders

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—The resolution of the CIO to stay out of war and to defend American freedom is the answer to those critics who "denounce the CIO and its leadership as representing a philosophy and a concept foreign to America," President Lewis told the convention here.

"I am in complete support of this splendidly phrased document and its splendidly phrased principles," he said in taking the floor to speak on the resolution.

"They are so fine that no one in this country can misunderstand the policy of this organization. It proclaims again what our CIO members have always said—that the CIO is American, that our people are interested in American problems, that they derive their inspiration from American soil and from the American people."

Answering those enemies of the CIO who cry "un-American" at every progressive movement in American life, Lewis turned sharply on them as representatives of "sinister and demagogic forces."

"Our movement and our leaders are the recipients of a great deal of criticism from sinister and demagogic forces" he said. "Again at our convention we will answer these fulminations and these slanders.

"There is no question of what premises this resolution is founded on. The responsibility of peace or war is one this Congress cannot assume—nor any individual. The future will decide whether the American people will have to take up the sword to defend American principles.

"Without question this action should refute and silence those critics who are won to slander the CIO as adhering to a philosophy foreign to Americans. Our movement is committed to no policy or ism that is imported from abroad. Those who say to the contrary are falsifiers."

WHOSE POCKETS —

ARE YOU FILLING? When you buy your clothes do you help pay the wage of a union worker, or do you help swell the profits of a sweatshop boss?

- The Label of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America will give you the answer. When you don't see the label you know that the garment was probably made by an un-American sweatshop chiseler. When you see the Amalgamated label you know that your money will go into the pockets of union workers, earning union pay, working under union conditions.
- Demand the union label in the clothes you buy and insure yourself against sweatshop garments, against sweatshop conditions in industry.

You can find the Amalgamated label in union made suits, overcoats, uniforms, work clothes and overalls, workshirts, dress shirts, underwear, gloves, neckties, sheeplined, leather, and sport coats, children's clothing and wash suits.

WAR PROGRAM

1. Opposition to any involvement in the European war.

2. "Adequate" representatation for labor on all government agencies set up to cope with the war problems.

3. Preservation of labor's real wages, and stern measures against war profiteers.

4. No turning of the government's attention from pressing domestic problems because of the war situation.

5. "More than usual vigilance" to protect civil liberties, social legislation and democratic rights of the people.

The CIO president warned that though war abroad may bring a temporary boom at home, aftereffects of that boom are certain to leave the nation "in worse economic condition" and cause the workers "to suffer worse hardships than before such a boom began."

45 NATIONAL AFFILIATES

Some 45 national and international unions and organizing committees are now affiliated with the CIO, the report showed, as well as 567 local industrial unions and 210 state, county and city industrial union councils. A total of 50 regional and sub-regional officers are maintained in all the major industrial centers of the country.

The CIO president revealed that the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, chartered only recently, is making rapid progress, with "applications for charters being received every day."

DISCUSS LABOR BOARD

Lewis devoted a considerable portion of his report to the Wagner Act and the work of the National Labor Relations Board. He recalled the spirited defense of the Act by the CIO against the onslaughts of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, the Chamber of Commerce and the allied top leadership of the AFL, and said that the CIO will be in a position at the opening of the next regular session of Congress to "resume its attack upon the enemies of organized labor."

On the other hand, the report minced no words in its discussion of some phases of the work of the Labor Board, particularly in many of its recent decisions on the setting up of craft units in industrially organized plants, and of plant units where the overwhelming majority of the units in a corporation system are organized by one industrial union.

He cited specifically the Board's ruling in the Chrysler case, where CIO pleas for the establishment of a company-wide bargaining unit were turned down — a decision which Pres. Lewis warned "is fraught with danger" for industrial unionists.

"The purpose of the Act is to promote collective bargaining through the free choice of representatives", the report declared. "But when the Act is so administered as to thwart the development and maintenance of stable industrial relations, then it becomes necessary to consider and weigh carefully whether the benefits of the Act outweigh the dangers which its administration inflicts upon organized labor."

PRAISES LIBERTIES UNIT

Turning his attention to other federal government agencies, Lewis said that the "outstanding achievement of the CIO in connection with the full use of the various federal administrative agencies" was the creation of a civil liberties division in the Department of Justice.

On the other hand, he declared: "One may seek in vain for appointments of representatives of labor to important policy-determining positions in any of the agencies responsible for the administration of the labor or social legislation enacted under the New Deal."

Discussing bills now in the Congressional hopper, Lewis singled out for special praise the LaFollette-Thomas Oppressive Labor Practices Act, aimed at ending the strikebreaker-labor spy industry. He was sharply critical of various criminal syndicalism and so-called anti-alien bills which have passed through the House of Representatives, basing his objection on the grounds that the bills are essentially undemocratic and so loosely-worded that they "may be used against labor unions when so desired."

IMPROVE SECURITY ACT

Of social security, Lewis said that much can be done to improve administration of the act. The 49 different state unemployment compensation acts, with the complexities which arise from divided authority, are badly in need of simplification and improvement, the report indicated.

The CIO president reiterated his support for the Wagner Health Bill.

"We believe that with the prospect of an increased national income before us, one of the major goals of organized labor must be to utilize this increase for the best interests of the American people by a rapid expansion of the present social security system."

Increased activities of the CIO Housing Committee were reviewed in the President's report and a further study of housing problems was recommended.

DISCUSSES JOBLESSNESS

Another major section of the report was devoted to a discussion of the unemployment problem.

Lewis stressed the continued interest of the CIO in the problems of the jobless, and recounted the day-by-day fight to win the most satisfactory solution possible — a role which he said contrasted markedly with that of the high AFL officialdom on the Woodrum bill.

"They lifted not a hand for a real program," he said. "They condoned the abolition of the prevailing hourly wage. They condoned the breakdown of the building program. They condoned the wiping out of the theatre project. They condoned, in short, by their silence, a bill which has done profound damage to their membership."

BASIC TROUBLE

Noting that the number of WPA workers is in the process of being cut by a million, Lewis spotlighted the basic fault of the government's relief program — "it has not fulfilled those standards called for by the CIO — it has not been large enough, broad enough, flexible enough, courageous enough to do the job."

Lewis was far from optimistic in his views of the economic future.

"The nation's number one problem is work for its population," he declared. "Labor believes that this nation, acting within its democratic tradition, can solve the problem of unemployment.

"The history of the government's attack upon unemployment has been one of hesitant half steps towards solution, hastily withdrawn before they could become effective. If we are to justify the effectiveness of our democracy, of our vaunted leadership in the economic field, then we must prove that we can solve this problem of unemployment."

PROGRESS HALTED

Pres. Lewis charged that the past year has witnessed a "substantial halt in any steps towards a progressive economic program. He saw alarming economic signals in the fact that American industry has been able to reach a stage of reasonably satisfactory prosperity at a time when 12,000,000 workers are idle.

"There is still time for real political and industrial leadership to assert itself" and meet this challenge, Lewis asserted. "The time is short, to be sure. But that is not an obstacle to those who sincerely want to solve our national problems by cooperative effort."

SUGGESTIONS

Other sections of the President's report noted the increased effectiveness of the CIO NEWS as an aid to the affiliated unions; suggested that the officers be empowered to create a committee on workers' education whenever it deemed necessary; asked the convention to approve the establishment of the advisory committee on Latin American affairs; noted the need for creation of a CIO committee for cooperation with farmers, of a department or committee on public relations to work with other liberal organizations, and of an agency within the CIO to spur the use of union label products.

Brewery Union Wins Court Fight Against AFL

Washington, Oct. 14—Passing on a 39-year-old jurisdictional dispute between two AFL unions, Justice Goldsborough of the U. S. District Court here attacked efforts of the AFL to transfer beer truck drivers from the Brewery Workers to the Teamsters as an act of despotism.

The Justice's decision sharply rebuked the AFL for its invasion of the Brewery Workers' jurisdiction which it had expressly recognized many years ago.

The decision, a sweeping victory for the Brewery Workers against the AFL Executive Council, which had sided with the Teamsters, traced the 39-year-old story of the jurisdictional battle which once brought suspension of the Brewery Workers and now threatens to do so again.

In 1887 the Brewery Workers affiliated with the AFL and its jurisdiction was not disputed until 1900 when the newly admitted Teamsters challenged it. The dispute was then settled in favor of the Brewery Workers. But in 1906 the AFL reversed itself and suspended the Brewery Workers for a year as an incident in the same internal warfare.

A LONG FIGHT

The Brewery Workers were restored to the AFL in 1907 and continued to insist on their jurisdiction over beer truck drivers until the next climax in 1933, when the AFL again took the Teamsters side. This action led to the court action and the Goldsborough decision.

Emphasizing the value of the Brewery Workers rights involved, the court said:

"The evidence in this case shows that the unionized workers affiliated with the Brewery Workers Union have property rights, probably the most valuable that unionized workers can have, which would be taken away from them by a transfer to the Teamsters Union. They have sick benefits, death benefits, strike benefits, and what is more valuable than all of the others, the benefit of collective bargaining."

CIO Wins Brass Poll

Torrington, Conn., Oct. 14—Voting two to one for the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union, CIO, as their collective bargaining agent, American Brass Company workers cast 951 ballots for the union to 481 against at the last of the company's plants to be organized in Connecticut.

The election decided bargaining representation for 1,514 workers at this branch of the American Brass Company. Union proposals will be presented to the management this week.

Organizational Activities of CIO

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—Organizational activities, listed in Pres. Lewis' report to the CIO convention, cover progress made in the way of consolidations, new unions set up, charters issued, Industrial Union Councils and Local Industrial Unions, and the like.

Special problems in organizing in Canada and the South are treated in separate sections, as is the establishment of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, newest CIO national affiliate.

The report points out that charters issued by the CIO while it was the Committee for Industrial Organization have been reissued since the establishment of the Congress of Industrial Organizations at the Pittsburgh convention of last year.

TWO MERGERS

It also lists two principal consolidations, the merger of the Fur and Leather Workers and of three fishermen's unions to become the Intl. Fishermen and Allied Workers, as well as the formation of the Textile Workers Union from the former Textile Workers Organizing Committee. Councils, of which 28 are state bodies, is listed. The report praises the work of the councils and urges "renewed efforts" to establish them where they do not already exist.

On the United Construction Workers, headed by Chairman A. D. Lewis, the report declares: "For some time there had been numerous requests from workers in the construction industry from all over the U. S., our territorial possessions and Canada for an industrial union of construction workers affiliated with the CIO which would eliminate and remedy the evils which the workers in the construction industry have so long been remedied.

"Consequently, upon the announcement of the formation of the UCWOC there was an immediate and enthusiastic response from individuals and groups from every section of the country."

Discuss CIO Problems

Treatment of Jobless Held Inadequate

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14. — The past year has seen no improvement in standards and provisions for coping with the nation's overwhelming unemployment problem, Pres. Lewis told the CIO convention in his annual report.

Charging that in many ways handling of the problem has deteriorated, Lewis said that "the plight of the unemployed is in many ways worse today than at any time in the past three years."

WPA employment has been sliced from 3,350,000 to 2,000,000, and will be cut an additional half million by July, 1940, he said, while those still on the government's work program rolls are employed at lower wage rates for longer hours.

IN STATES, TOO

While this condition prevails on the federal government's projects, the state and local situation is continually getting worse, with relief appropriations, "state by state, county by county and community by community" growing constantly smaller.

The trouble with the works program, Lewis charged, is that it "has not fulfilled those standards called for by the CIO—that it has not been large enough, broad enough, flexible enough, courageous enough to do the job."

TELLS OF PROGRAM

The CIO president reviewed at length the activities of organized labor to aid the unemployed. He told of the CIO's constant fight for larger WPA appropriations, its support of the Casey-Murray bill, and its leadership in the battle against the notorious Woodrum bill.

LED BY CIO

"The support of the WPA by labor has been led for the past two years by the CIO," Lewis stated. "A relatively small proportion of those who are on WPA are CIO members, but the CIO has taken the position that the CIO would represent the case of the unemployed to the nation.

"The AFL has received extensive benefits from the WPA. In many places it has been the object of special privileges and favors from the WPA officials. There are a number of important cities in the country where the AFL has prevented the employment upon construction projects of the WPA of any but its own members.

Lewis Warns Of War Boom's Dangers

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14. — The results of a "war boom" will be filled with danger to the nation's workers.

That was the tenor of Pres. Lewis' convention report on the present economic situation throughout the nation.

Reiterating his previously-enunciated warning that democracy must find a way to give every employable worker a job, Lewis challenged government and business to find work for America's 12,000,000 jobless, and promised full labor support to valid efforts to find a way out of the present economic stalemate.

The CIO leader found definite cause for alarm in the fact that American industry has attained for itself a satisfactory operating level while these millions of workers are left outside the industrial economy.

ONE-QUARTER "EXILED"

"It is now clearly evident that through the monopoly control of prices and of the market, and through replacement of men by machines, it is possible for three-quarters of the American population to live in relative prosperity while one-quarter is exiled to economic slavery," he warned. "It is as though we should decide to cut from our nation all the New England States, New York and New Jersey and sink them with their population in an economic sea."

Organized labor, Lewis' report stated, "has outlined a program which it believes can bring a state of secure prosperity. It has never really been tried. That program constitutes a challenge which must be answered by the nation."

WAR "BOOM" NO ANSWER

Parenthetically, he pointed out that a war boom is no answer to our basic economic problem, since "such a boom carries in it seas of a depression made more terrible by the aftermath of war."

In the report to the 1938 convention, Lewis recalled, "an economic program was laid down in broad terms which labor believes would bring economic stability.

"It is with deep concern that we must report no advance of significances toward the fulfillment of that program. To the contrary, there have been steps backward."

Going through the 1938 report suggestions point by point, the CIO leader noted that wages have not been substantially lifted and hours have not materially reduced; that a lower, rather than an increased, proportion of the national income is going to the "actual consumers"; that machines are still throwing workers out of their jobs; and that Federal, State and local governments are drawing a constantly increasing share of their tax revenue "fom the pockets of the small consumers."

It is perfectly obvious, the report concluded, "that the past year has seen a substantial halt in any steps towards a progressive economic program. There is every indication, and labor believes profoundly, that if such a program were tried with vigor and courage and good faith, it would be successful."

Don't 'Appease' Enemies Of Labor, Board Told

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—Five main sections divide the discussion of legal activities in Pres. Lewis' report to the second CIO convention, presented at the opening session here.

Of these, the most detailed treatment is given to the Wagner Act and its administration by the Natl. Labor Relations Board, with briefer sections on proceedings before Federal government agencies, litigation, legal pamphlets and bulletins, and a short section on legislation outlying the work described at greater length in another part of the report.

Pres. Lewis sharply criticized the Labor Relations Board, however, for its policy of "deciding unit cases in favor of AFL craft claims." This policy, Lewis writes, has "diminished the value of the act," particularly in cases involving the CIO's right to employer-wide certification as sole collective bargaining agency.

This policy is particularly evident in the Board decision on the Chrysler case, the report points out, where an employer-wide election was refused and plant-by-plant votes ordered. "As a foreshadowing of a policy on the part of the Board which would cut down hard-won collective bargaining units of company-wide scope, this decision is fraught with danger," Lewis writes.

After listing important decisions of the Board and pointing out that it has been upheld by most courts, the report urges a re-examination of CIO policy in the light of Board practice of deciding against the CIO "whenever the interests of the CIO run into sharp conflict with the dog-in-the-manger attitude of the AFL officials or the carefully nurtured prejudices of the press."

The CIO has opposed, and will oppose, all attempts to destroy or pervert the act, Lewis writes. "But when the act is so administered as to thwart the development and the maintenance of stable industrial relations, then it becomes necessary to consider and weigh carefully whether the benefits of the act outweigh the dangers which its administration inflicts on organized labor."

Describe CIO Publicity

San Francisco, Oct. 14—CIO press and publicity activities are described in President Lewis' convention report under three main headings—presenting the CIO point of view through newspaper and other publicity mediums, the CIO NEWS, and aid and cooperation extended to CIO affiliates.

Legislative campaigns of the CIO, particularly the defense of the Wagner Act, took the chief attention of the department in its general publicity work, the report says.

BETTER TREATMENT

Some improvement in the direction of a "more serious and reasoned treatment" of the CIO in the press is noted, due to the increased prestige of the movement. "But, at the same time," the report says, "the CIO has continued to be confronted with the editorial hostility of most of the business-controlled press, and the very fact that it has so conclusively demonstrated its strength and stability during the past year has led to renewed efforts to offset its progress with misrepresentation and propaganda."

Progress of the CIO NEWS as the official CIO organ is also noted. "The CIO NEWS has firmly established itself during the past year, with increasing circulation and support." Affiliates are urged to subscribe to the NEWS for "at least a representative section" of their membership.

Latin-American Friendship Stressed As Beneficial

San Francisco, Oct. 14—Friendly relations between the CIO and the organized workers in Latin America are stressed in Pres. Lewis' convention report.

The report reminds CIO affiliates also of the warm fraternal relations that exist between the CIO and the Latin American Confederation of Labor, set up at a convention in Mexico City, which Pres. Lewis attended as fraternal delegate.

The report also recommends formal approval of an advisory committee on Latin American affairs, whose secretary is Miss Kathryn Lewis.

CIO Active On Two Fronts In Legislation

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—CIO legislative activity centered on two main fronts during the past year — defending progressive legislation already on the books and pushing for new labor laws — according to Pres. Lewis' report to the second CIO convention here.

The main attack, the report says, came from a coalition of reactionary Congressmen and top leaders of the AFL, and directed its heaviest fire on the Wagner Act and the wages and hours law. Thanks to CIO rallying of its own affiliates and progressive forces in other movements, neither law was scuttled or amended as anti-labor forces hoped.

On the role of the AFL leadership, Lewis writes: "It is perfectly clear that if the AFL Executive Council had not sponsored any amendments to the Wagner Act, the proposals of the Natl. Association of Manufacturers would never have reached the stage of serious consideration.

"From the very beginning of the drive to amend the Wagner Act, it was evident that the anti-labor forces were willing to let the AFL Executive Council do the job of paving the way for the destruction of the Wagner Act."

CIO IN THE LEAD

This attack was turned back, the report explains, and today the CIO is ready in the next session of Congress "to lead off in the attack against the enemies of organized labor." First step in this coming campaign was the success of the CIO in securing an amendment to the Walsh-Healey Act in the Senate, whereby government contractors found guilty of violating the Wagner Act will lose their contracts until they agree to abide by federal law.

Following this gain, the CIO was able to stave off numerous other assaults on workers' rights and civil liberties, notably in the defense of the wages and hours law, in pushing for the LaFollette civil liberties bill to curb oppressive acts by employers, and in fighting against a flood of anti-alien bills ostensibly directed against "foreign influences" but actually designed to curb labor.

CHIEF DANGERS

Chief dangers, Lewis' report found, were in the revival of attacks on labor laws and in the threatened spread of repressive statutes in the individual states, where a number of restrictive laws have already been passed.

"We are faced with the task," Pres. Lewis writes, "of finding the means to bring about the full use of our men and machinery in order to provide for the American people out of the abundance of wealth with which this country is so richly endowed.

"It is time now for the government to take the lead and with the aid of labor unions, farmers and other progressive organizations, put an end to idleness of tools and men with its consequent want and deprivations for millions of our American people."

SOCIAL SECURITY

On social security, unemployment compensation, old age pensions, and similar social problems, Lewis' report reaffirms previous CIO policy of broadening benefits and reducing administrative delays and confusions. The CIO stand for old age pensions of $60 at 60 years of age is restated from the resolution of the June, 1939 Executive Board meeting.

"We believe," Pres. Lewis writes, "that with the prospect of an increased national income before us, one of the major goals of organized labor must be to utilize this increase for the best interests of the American people by a rapid expansion of the present social security system."

Save Timber Lands, CIO Asks U. S.

San Francisco, Oct. 14—A national program of "efficient and adequate reforestation" to protect the country's great natural resources was demanded today by the CIO.

A resolution predicted that "virgin commercial timber will have disappeared in from 30 to 50 years" unless steps are immediately taken to reforest the timber country.

Harold Pritchett, president of the Intl. Woodworkers of America, took the convention floor to speak in behalf of the resolution and to warn of the dangers, not only to the men in his union, but to the nation as a whole, unless a thorough-going conservation policy is adopted.

Timber Union Convention Meets Oct. 18

Seattle, Wash., Oct. 14. — The third annual convention of the International Woodworkers of America, CIO, beginning October 18 at Klamath Falls, Oregon, is expected to draw the largest representation of IWA membership since the union began, IWA headquarters announced here.

The delegates will hold their sessions which are expected to last four days, in the big armory.

Some 313 delegates from the United States and Canada will be seated, Secretary-Treasurer B. J. McCarty said.

Convention Sidelights

One company which didn't welcome the CIO to San Francisco was Western Union Telegraph, whose operations here are at a standstill as a result of a CIO strike. Scab Western Union messenger boys who tried to deliver telegrams to the delegates were turned back at the Hotel Whitcomb desk with the warning: "The CIO people refuse to receive messages sent via Western Union."

There were lots of visitors in the back of Polk Hall to watch the convention's opening session. Youngest spectator: a babe in arms:

Movie cameras took shots of Pres. Lewis reading excerpts from his speech, then swung around to snatch glimpses of the delegates.

San Francisco lived up to its reputation as a friendly city. Convention delegates were taken around to see the sights and toured down the bay in a chartered ship. "Welcome CIO" banners were strung up all along Market Street.

The San Francisco "Labor Herald," official CIO organ in the city and Bay area, had a special convention issue and distributed them at each seat on the opening morning of the session.

Gov. Culbert Olson, California's leading liberal, received a mighty ovation from the delegates as he strode down the aisle to the convention platform. Local reporters said the governor's speech—a stirring defense of progressive policies—was one of his most important.

Investigators for the LaFollette Civil Liberties Committee are back in San Francisco, to carry on the investigation of the Associated Farmers organization where they left off after a brief look-see last spring.

George Wilson, a member of the Newspaper Guild and head of the San Francisco Industrial Council, got the convention ball a-rolling with an address of welcome. During the course of the first morning, the convention was successively chairmanned by Wilson, Harry Bridges and Pres. John L. Lewis.

Tom Smith, white-bearded charter member of the United Mine Workers, was on hand—spry as usual—for the sessions. A little girl spied him in the lobby of the Whitcomb, ran over and asked: "Mister, are you Santa Claus?"

Cheer Plan for Drive

Murray Urges U. S. Confab On Jobless

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—Technological unemployment is the outstanding problem confronting America, Philip Murray, CIO vice-president and chairman of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, said to the convention here in a speech on the second day of the meeting.

One plant alone of the U. S. Steel Corp., the continuous strip mill in Pennsylvania, has displaced more than 20,000 workers, since 4200 produce in three shifts what 25,000 used to produce in one, he explained. This plant has created five ghost towns in its vicinity, making workers' homes, businesses, stores, all property valueless.

He urged an immediate conference of government, labor, business and other groups in Washington to deal with this menacing situation. "The CIO has a problem here," he said. "The U. S. government has a problem. The day of awakening must come, and the needs of these outcast workers must be considered by the U. S. government."

As yet no action has been taken, he declared. "Don't corporations have some responsibilities — definite public responsibilities — as well as to their stockholders? Shouldn't they be recognized as having responsibilities, or should they just stop with scrapping of lives and communities?"

NLRB Policies Condemned In Resolution

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14.—The CIO is on record unanimously condemning the National Labor Relations Board for policies which "undermine the basic purposes of the Act," and urging all affiliates to make "a most sparing and considered use of the Wagner Labor Act in the future."

Convention speakers all advised the unions to reply on organizing the unorganized to achieve their goal of collective bargaining for all industrial workers.

The delegates rose and cheered a resolution that sharply attacked the board for its recent policy of appeasement of AFL and employer interests in the expense of the CIO and in violation of the basic purposes of the Wagner Act. The convention resolved as follows:

UNDERMINES ACT

1. The CIO condemns without qualification the policies of the National Labor Relations Board which undermine the basic purposes of the Act to strengthen organized labor and advance the practice of collective bargaining; and

"2. The CIO likewise and as fully condemns the administrative policies of the board which have resulted and continue to result in the displacement of unbiased personnel in favor of personnel antagonistic to the CIO and the elimination of personnel not fully sympathetic to the doctrines and interpretations of law herein condemned; and

"3. The CIO brands the adoption of such policies and such displacements of personnel as an unwarranted and unworthy retreat by the National Labor Relations Board under fire from the reactionary officials of the AFL and the most powerful and dangerous corporate employers of the land"

BOARD IN RETREAT

They listened to leading officers of the CIO review and analyze recent board decisions which, the resolution said, "have without question been determined upon as part of a policy of appeasement toward the reactionary AFL bureaucracy and some of the most powerful and dangerous employers in the country."

They cheered Philip Murray, James J. Matles of the Electrical and Radio Workers, Van A. Bittner, and Sidney Hillman for speeches that stressed one common note—criticism of the board and its new member, William Leiserson, leader of the anti-CIO policy, and the assurance, as Bittner said, that "there's not enough power on earth to destroy industrial unionism.

It was made clear by all the speakers and by the resolution that no attack on the basic purposes of the Wagner Act was made or intended, but that the board which was trying to pervert these purposes must change its policy or the act would be in danger of becoming an anti-labor law.

PERMITTED CRAFT RAIDS

The resolution, described by Murray as "one of the most important the entire convention has to deal with" declared that board policy has allowed craft units to "raid established industrial unions," is breaking down multi-plant employers units, preventing disestablishment of company unions, and indulging in a wholesale purge of board personnel that fails to show anti-CIO and pro-AFL bias.

First speaker on the resolution was Philip Murray, who drew attention to board policy as it affected steel workers and automobile workers as typical of its harmful effects.

He cited the case of the Walworth Steel Co., where the SWOC has 1900 members and an AFL craft splinter group 28. The SWOC had a contract, the AFL nothing. The AFL petitioned for a craft election—and got it.

"The SWOC protested," Murray said. "So did the corporation. But the board said there must be an election. Twenty men voted—10 of them for the SWOC; the craft unit didn't even represent a majority of its own membership. We had to restrain our men from a strike against the National Labor Relations Board."

IN AUTO INDUSTRY

Similar cases in automobiles, where the CIO has been winning elections by ten to one and bigger majorities are producing a state of rebellion against the board, Murray pointed out.

"The workers in the automobile industry are in rebellion against the board," he said. "Too much heed is being given to a few malcontents who represent nobody, but who always get consideration. The AFL is in automobiles only to promote dissension, to cause disorganization, to cause strikes, to bring about bloodshed. Yet they are heeded by the board when they ask for separate elections.

"Don't these actions show the folly of their position? If the National Labor Relations act was passed to promote industrial peace, why is the board interfering with National collective bargaining? Do these things promote peace or confusion? Do they tend to cause or prevent strikes?"

UERMW COMPLAINT

Matles, pointing out that his organization, the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, has won 89 per cent of board elections, has received 70,000 votes, cited a board order for a hearing on the petition of "two and a half AFL workers—two pattern makers and an apprentice," as evidence of the damage the board is trying to do in his industry.

Sidney Hillman, CIO vice president, emphasized as did Murray and the others, that the CIO was not attacking the basic purposes of the Wagner Act, but was attacking the policies of a board that was perverting and distorting the act.

HILLMAN AND BITTNER

"We're not fighting the act," he said. "We didn't criticize the board for a long time. But now the very purpose of the law is being defeated by the board. And we must not merely protest here, but we must increase our organization, so that the enemies of labor will know they can't attack labor laws so effectively."

Bittner took a similar line, declaring: "the report of committee on resolutions is in fact a defense of the act. It is an attack on an administration that is distorting the act. We have not changed our opinion on the fundamental value of the act.

"All we want is a 50-50 break and we'll shellac the AFL and the employers wherever we meet them. We want no favors from the board but we hate to have two strikes on us before we come to bat."

Beaten by Thugs

FRANK PATEK, GLASS UNION MEMBER at Crystal City, Mo., was in the condition shown above after being beaten by a deputized thug from a company union. A strike against Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. to bring collective bargaining to the Missouri plant was postponed after U. S. Dept. of Labor conciliation service entered the situation.

CIO Shipyard Workers Win Big Pay Boost At Key Plant

Signing Shipyard Pact

Representatives of Local 1, Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, are shown as they signed the agreement with the New York Shipbuilding Corp., Camden, N. J., which called for a general wage increase of 6 per cent, said to be the highest in the industry.

CAMDEN, N. J., Oct. 14—The highest wage scale in any major shipyard in the United States was negotiated in an agreement signed between Local 1, Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, CIO, and the New York Shipbuilding Corp., here.

The agreement provides for a general six per cent wage increase, which, combined with adjustments in certain classifications and higher ratings of some trades, will result in increases ranging up to 38 per cent in some instances.

Close to 5,000 production workers of this company, all members of the CIO union, benefit by the increase. The general 6 per cent raise represented a zero hour, 2 per cent concession by the management, which had previously offered only 4 per cent, as it faced a showdown with its employes, who had also previously rejected the lower offer.

A ZERO HOUR SETTLEMENT

The agreement on the wage offer was arrived at while the members of the local were assembled in this city's huge Convention Hall to take final action on the report of their negotiating committee. The situation had been growing increasingly more tense through over 30 day and night sessions of negotiations, as the old agreement expired here on October 3.

The temper of the men was keyed at at high pitch when their met them at the shipyard gates and instructed them to go to work until the membership meeting took definite action.

In the meantime, the negotiators returned to the zero-hour conferences with the management which resulted in the acceptable wage offer, the latter capitulating in a "war of nerves" arising from the union's unspoken, but constant, threat of a walk-out.

The effect of the wage increase will be felt throughout the industry, said John Green, national president of the IUMSWA, who predicted that other shipyards would follow suit. He pointed out that the Camden yard is the key plant in the industry, by virtue of the fact that it is the most strongly organized and the pioneer both in organization by this Union and in collective bargaining with it.

Gov. Olson Describes Liberal Aims

Praises CIO Industrial Unionism

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14—A fighting liberal praised the CIO for its contributions to American "industrial, social and political" democracy at the opening session of the second convention here.

The man was Gov. Culbert Olson, California's first liberal chief executive in almost a half-century, and to the delegates he explained his faith that the government can serve the interests of the people without departing from the ways of traditional American democracy.

HAILS CIO PRINCIPLES

The governor paid a stirring tribute to the principles of industrial unionism, and said the time will not be long in coming when those who now fight that principle will regard it as "necessary and vital to a well-ordered society."

While the CIO philosophy is new, Olson said, "it is not at all difficult . . . to perceive that certain economic forces have brought industrial unionism into being and breathed life into it.

"It is easy to perceive that these forces grew out of the concentration of industry into fewer and larger units; and out of the streamlining and mechanizing of manufacturing operations; developments which have so subdivided labor operations that some of the old crafts have almost gone out of existence . . . Here, therefore, are the forces that have created and that will finally weave industrial unionism firmly into the fabric of the national life. Realization of this fact will bring unity."

NOT STATIC

"Democracy is not a static structure like a house, but a living, moving organization that requires to be kept alive and can live only on and among the living. It can live only where there are those who practice and strive to maintain it. The struggle for democracy must be won in each and every generation."

That was the keynote of the Governor's address, and from that paragraph he went on to an outline of his plans for California and to an appeal to the nation's workers to support those who seek to make democracy work.

"Labor leads in that struggle," he said. "Ever since I can remember, organized labor has been the outstanding practitioner and militant force for democracy. You are here carrying on that struggle with growing strength and vigor; and with every appearance and much promise of success in the achievement of industrial democracy.

"It is you who feed and re-invigorate the blood stream of democracy because labor's objectives, labor's organizational practices, labor's needs are all geared to and dependent upon democracy."

To the organized workers the Governor gave credit for its "leading and highly constructive part in this political upheaval which has forced a most decided change in the State administration."

Describing some of the changes that have taken place in the California government since reactionary Merriam was ousted last year, Olson noted that "for the first time in many years, the Dept. of Industrial Relations is being run by labor men for the labor movement. As a direct result, workers are coming to the Department for help in ever growing numbers because they know their complaints will be treated honestly and with confidence."

NAMED LABOR MEN

"Our appointees to responsible and policy-making positions are outstanding tried and true liberals and labor leaders who owe their appointments to no other influence than their own abilities and records of sincere devotion to the principles of honest, progressive democracy," he said.

The statment was particularly significant in view of Pres. Lewis' complaint—in his report to the convention—that labor men are not being placed in any key positions in the federal administration.

STATE'S PLAN

What the state government has in mind for the future was explained to the convention.

"This state administration wants progressive labor legislation," Olson continued. "We want a minimum wage law to cover the areas not covered by the federal law. We want the state to monopolize the writing of Workmen's Compensation Insurance in order that workers may enjoy the maximum benefits of this law without increasing its burden on the industries.

"We want more effective laws protecting better safety laws. We have sponsored and supported a long list of legislative reforms beneficial to labor.

"We want consumer education and consumer protection. We want progressive farm legislation, protecting and advancing the interests of small farmers, encouraging agriculture as a way of life, rather than a highly commercialized industry resting upon the backs of over-exploited farm laborers."

Speaker

Fighting Liberal

PRAISE FOR THE CIO'S CONTRIBUTION to U. S. democracy came from Gov. Culbert Olson of California. In a speech repeatedly interrupted by cheers, Olson told his plans to make democracy work in the western state.

CIO Helped Elect Liberals, Says Bridges

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14. — Existence of a progressive administration in the State of California is a direct result of CIO activity and organization, Harry Bridges, west coast CIO director told convention delegates as he introduced Gov. Culbert Olson.

Pointing out that there has been a "complete turn in the wheel" of California politics since the AFL met here for its 1934 convention, Bridges said:

"We saw vigilante groups, controlled by vested interests, beating, clubbing, thugging labor organizers. Nothing was done by ex-Gov. Merriam.

"Without the CIO, its help, support, and finances, we would not now have the progressive administration in this state."

tion in politics that liberal government policies may be continued; for better social security legislation and a national health program under government auspices.

Action of labor unity—which followed receipt of a message from President Roosevelt — was left in the hands of the CIO's negotiating committee of three—President Lewis, Vice-Presidents Philip Murray and Sidney Hillman.

The problem of unemployment must be tackled speedily and thoroughly, the convention said. endorsing a proposal of Murray for a government "gold fish bowl" conference at which labor, agriculture, business and the Government can discuss and study the nature of the unemployment problem and chart steps to solve it.

Study Made Of Shoe Earnings

Washington—A study of earnings and hours made by the Bureau of Labor Statistics in the boot and shoe industry shows that weekly hours averaged between 38.5 and 40 cents, and weekly earnings were between $18.79 and $32.93.

The study says that wide fluctuations in hourly earnings were revealed. An important factor influencing wage levels was found to be the extent of unionization.

matic proposal by vice-president Philip Murray for a national "goldfish bowl" conference in which Government, labor, agriculture, and industry will seek solution of America's most serious problem.

Aid for the farmers, whose essential interest lie with the industrial workers, was also demanded by the convention.

Officers Report CIO Gains

San Francisco, Oct. 14 — Surveys of CIO accomplishments and recommendations for more and harder work in organizing the unorganized by the committee on officers' reports drew praise and support from leading CIO officials in the convention here in Polk Hall.

"We shouldn't let this opportunity pass," Pres. Michael Quill said. "We should do some sound thinking and taking stock. If there is any force in America that can keep us out of war its the CIO."

Philip Murray, CIO vice-president: "We should take stock and go down to the roots of our movement. We should find out what it has done for the people of the U. S."

RECITES GAINS

Answering his own question, Murray briefly recited the gains of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in the three years it has been in existence.

"Today in every steel center of the nation, we have collective bargaining agreements — 614 of them, covering 620,000 workers. We have 1200 lodges, 11,000 lodge officers, 8200 grievance committeemen functioning in every steel center every day. We've increased steel wages an average of 23.5 cents per hour, including common and semi-skilled labor.

"We take pride in our record. Let our enemies think about that. There's our root, our foundation."

THE SOUTH

Emil Rieve, president of the Textile Workers Union of America: "For 50 years the AFL tried to organize textile workers—and had 50,000 members and no contracts. Today we have 1100 contracts covering 300,000 workers. For the first time the South has been penetrated. We can't have a modern labor movement without organizing the South."

Sidney Hillman, CIO vice-president and president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers: "The mere fact that we meet after a year of sharp depression with our organization intact and with greater gains is proof of our vitality. We can now move forward in a way not only to shock our enemies but also to surprise our friends."

Van A. Bittner, chairman of the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee: "The PWOC was was founded two years ago. Today we have in every meat packing center a lively, militant, progressive union. In every center where we held elections we've won."

Mrs. Howard Makes Brief Address

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 14—A guest of the convention at its second day afternoon session was Mrs. Charles P. Howard, widow of the former secretary of the CIO, who died last year.

In a brief talk, Mrs. Howard told of her late husband's interest in the welfare of the workers over a long period of years.

CIO ORGANIZATION DRIVE UNDER WAY

Woodworkers Plan Organizing Drive At 3rd Convention

KLAMATH FALLS, Oregon, Oct. 21.—The third annual convention of the International Woodworkers of America, CIO, convened in this city October 18. "Organize the unorganized" was the main concern of the 225 delegates, representing 100,000 woodworkers in 22 states and three provinces of Canada, as they entered into their deliberations.

Demands to be made upon the operators, enjoying vast profits from a booming lumber market, for a dollar-a-day raise in wages were also considered by the delegates.

The major internal problem, which the IWA hopes this convention will take the first steps toward solving, is the sorely-needed raise in per capita tax to finance the extensive organizational drive among the unorganized wookworkers of the United States and Canada. The question of per capita boost will be referred to the membership

Chrysler Workers Strike

By EDWARD LEVINSON

DETROIT—Refusal of the Chrysler Corporation to concede its workers the right to bargain on the speed of production lines led to a strike this week of 22,000 Dodge workers.

R. J. Thomas, international president of the UAW-CIO, authorized the strike following almost a week of futile negotiations, during which the corporation refused to bargain on speed of operations and rejected requests for reinstatement of more than 100 workers fired because they could not meet the speed-up requirements.

The strike was preceded by a lockout, Richard T. Frankensteen, director of the union's Chrysler department, stated. For almost two weeks the men reported to work, but they were promptly sent home when they

All Affiliates Ready To Push Campaigns

(See Stories On Inside Pages)

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 21—Every CIO affiliate today was launching a huge organizing campaign aimed at following the goal set by the second annual CIO convention here of organizing millions of unorganized workers.

The need for increased organizing activity and the enthusiasm of the unions for such campaigns was by far the outstanding note of the convention, which adjourned here on Oct. 13.

Immediately after the convention, the CIO general executive board met at the Hotel Whitcomb and discussed the organization plans.

Final day of the convention saw a tremendous 33-minute ovation for Pres. John L. Lewis when his nomination for re-election to the presidency was made by Pres. Sidney Hillman of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. Lewis was unanimously chosen by the delegates, as were the candidates for all other offices.

Vice-Pres. Philip Murray and Vice-Pres. Hillman were both re-elected, along with Sec. James Carey. Elected to fill four new vice-presidencies were heads of four CIO affiliates: R. J. Thomas of the United Automobile Workers; Sherman Dalrymple of the United Rubber Workers; Reid Robinson of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers; and Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union.

CIO Delegates Cheer Their Leader

REELECTION OF PRES. JOHN L. LEWIS brought on a tumultous 33-minute demonstration by delegates to the CIO convention, which ended in San Francisco last week. Bands played, people cheered themselves hoarse as they marched around the convention hall to honor the CIO's great national leader.

Democracy and Right To Work Are Tied Together, Says Murray

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 21. — The ultimate salvation of America is wrapped up in the solution of the problem of technological unemployment, Philip Murray, CIO vice-president, told delegates to the CIO convention here.

No agency in the United States Government, he said, "has any reliable information concerning this phase of our industrial situation."

Philip Murray

Drawing on his own experience in the steel industry, Murray told of the situation in Newcastle, Pa. where the U. S. Steel Corporation built a continuous strip mill costing about $66,000,000. That plant employs 4,200 men to do the work formerly produced by 24,000.

He described the havoc to the community since the strip mill has gone into operation and said: "The steel workers of that community have erected and purchased their own homes. The homes are now of no value. The thousands of workers who have been cast out on the streets have nowhere to go. They are done. They are looking for the dole, they are looking for some WPA work. They are carrying their market baskets to the commissaries to get relief. Destitution is widespread. Poverty, misery, degradation trail in the wake of the community and its people."

CIO STRESSED PROBLEM

The CIO has tried to bring this problem to the attention of the nation, Murray said, recounting numerous attempts by President Lewis, Sidney Hillman and himself to get Congress and the President of the United States to "do something about this technological situation in America."

The gravest threat to American institutions is the havoc and personal suffering of millions of our citizens who are the victims of technological advance, Murray declared.

"There must be some remedy to this problem of the displacement of men and women. You cannot everlastingly, even in America, keep 11 million idle men and women and 22 million dependents through various forms of taxation," he continued.

"If anything in the United States might cause unrest, might bring about eventual disaster, it is this problem and the obvious unwillingness of the leaders of industry, leaders in the field of statecraft to join with labor in a healthy, constructive, practical, logical solution of America's No. 1 problem."

CALL FOR CONFERENCE

A national conference including representatives of industry, government and labor is the first step in the solution of this problem, Murray told the delegates.

"I would like to meet some of the leading industrialists of this country in a conference of that description. I would like to ask them what they intend doing about these people whom they have thrown out in the streets. Or is there not some very definite public responsibility here that necessitates their cooperation with us in formulating a constructive solution to the problem."

It is not enough, he said, that the convention adopt a resolution embodying this policy. The affiliated unions, the members of the CIO throughout America, must be awakened to the need of solving the problem, and supporting the national CIO in its campaign to bring about such a conference.

The convention voted unanimously to have the verbatim report of Mr. Murray's remarks reproduced in pamphlet form for distribution to all CIO members.

Perth Amboy Smelter Workers On Strike

Perth Amboy, N. J., Oct. 21—Two thousand workers at the American Smelting and Refining Company here struck when the 8 o'clock whistle blew last Tuesday, after long refusal by management to negotiate an agreement with Local 365 of the Intl. Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, CIO. The strike is 100 per cent effective.

The company fired an active shop steward the day before the strike, and earlier refused an effort at mediation by the Department of Labor.

A previous contract expired two months ago, and the company consistently turned down the union's demands for wage increases, paid vacations, the union shop and seniority rights.

CIO Agrees to 2nd Armour Election

Chicago, Oct. 21 — Although it won the first election by an overwhelming majority, the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee has consented to a second Labor Board poll among the 5,000 workers of the big main Armour & Company plant here.

Secretary of Labor Perkins urged the PWOC to consent to the election to settle the claim of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters, AFL. After the CIO union and the company had agreed to the poll, the AFL union withdrew its petition. The NLRB thereupon ordered a hearing held on the proposed election.

Results of the election at the Oppenheimer Cashing Co. won by the PWOC over the AFL union 77 to 2, are believed to be behind the AFL's withdrawal of its demands.

Celanese Union Opens Vote Drive

Cumberland, Md., Oct. 21—A campaign to get all its eligible members registered and able to vote in the 1940 elections has been launched by the big Celanese local of the Textile Workers Union, Business Manager Clyde D. Lucas announced.

A series of three radio broadcasts by President James A. Dundon is scheduled as part of the drive. The local is distributing thousands of forms which voters must fill out in order to cast their ballots in the next elections.

Many workers who have moved to Maryland in recent years and are unfamiliar with state voting procedures are receiving special attention by union committees.

Explaining why Local 1874 considered this registration drive necessary, Lucas said: "Only too often we wait until election time is almost upon us and then discover large numbers of our people are unable to vote by reason of their own neglect. In view of the importance of the 1940 campaign, and, in fact, all election campaigns, we call upon our members to check up on their friends' eligibility."

Retail Union Signs 2-Year Pact for 500

NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—A two-year closed shop agreement with the Davega-City Radio, Inc., was announced this week by the United Retail and Wholesale Employes, CIO. The contract covers 500 employes in 30 stores, the main office and the warehouse of the company.

A large part of the employes covered by the agreement will receive wage increases retroactive to September 5, 1939, in addition to 15% won under a previous agreement and maintained in the present agreement.

Terms of the contract also provide two weeks' vacation with pay; a 40-hour week for office employes, 44 for warehouse and service employes, and 48 for store employes; time and a half for overtime; seniority rights, hiring from the union; protection of the shop chairmen from being laid off and arbitration of all disputes.

A joint statement issued by H. M. Stein, president of the company and Nathan Solomon, business representative of the union declared: "Negotiations for this new agreement were marked by a spirit of friendliness, goodwill, and the utmost desire for cooperation on both sides."

The agreement was ratified enthusiastically at a meeting of the employes, union officials said.

Ford Rehires Unionists

Detroit, Oct. 21—Richard T. Leonard, regional director of the United Automobile Workers, CIO, announced today that all 23 of the Ford Motor Company employes fired two years ago for membership in the CIO union are now back at work. Percy Llewellyn, president of Ford Local 600, was on the list of those taken back.

Leonard hailed the re-employment of the 23 men as "a clear-cut victory for the UAW-CIO, which will enhance our organizing efforts among Ford employes."

The Labor Board previously ordered the company to reinstate the men with back wages. The workers have not yet received this pay due them. The Board has an application for an order compelling compliance with this provision now pending in the U. S. Circuit Court in Cincinnati.

Canadian CIO Unions Form National Council

HALIFAX, Oct. 21.—A national co-ordinating committee has just been formed by Canadian regional directors of unions affiliated with the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Announcement of the formation of this council was made recently in Windsor, Ontario, by George Burt, Canadian regional director of the CIO United Automobile Workers.

The council selected as its chairman Silby Barrett, Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, international board member for District 26 of the United Mine Workers of America and director of the Congress of Industrial Organizations in Canada.

Representing thousands of Canadian workers in vital war industries—rubber, steel, clothes, coal, automobiles, airplanes—the council plans as one of its first steps to go to Ottawa to pledge their aid to the government.

Mr. Burt said the council would suggest definite efforts be made by labor and industries and governments to ensure the greatest possible industrial efficiency in Canada's war efforts.

"All members of CIO unions will do their share in this war and we hope, and expect, industry will do likewire," Mr. Burt said.

Steel Unions Plan United Action

Halifax, Oct. 21 — A policy for united action on a joint demand for standardization of wages, hours of labor and conditions in the steel industry of Nova Scotia has been decided upon by steel workers' organizations in Trenton and Sydney, centres of the industry in the province.

Announcement of the policy was made by SWOC Local 1231 of Trenton and said in part:

"At a meeting held here a delegation from Sydney SWOC Local 1064 and the executive of Trenton Local 1231 hammered out a policy for united action on a joint demand for standardization of wages, hours of labor and conditions in the steel industry of this province.

"It was decided that a joint council representative of both unions will be set up whose duty it will be to initiate and conduct a campaign for the above mentioned aims. The decisions arrived at by the conference are to be submitted to the general membership for ratification and immediately after acceptance to be put into effect.

"Present at the meeting were George McEachern, Don McKay, John Johnson, James Nicholson, representing the Sydney Local; and Richard Scott, Bernard Wilcox, Ernest Oakes, Cyril Bransfield and Chad MacMillan for the Trenton executive."

A further meeting to complete details will be held in Sydney. The statement was signed by Richard Scott, president, and Chad MacMillan, recording secretary.

Baldwin SWOC Signs Contract

Bethlehem, Pa., Oct. 21—A sole bargaining agreement with the Baldwin Locomotive Works covering all employes in the company's Baldwin - Southwark shops in Eddystone, Pa., has been signed by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, Jack Lever, SWOC Bethlehem director said today.

The company has a record of 130 years of hostility to organized labor, Lever declared. In 1869 it destroyed the old Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union and later fought all efforts of the Knights of Labor and the AFL to organize its plants.

Conn. Elects 2 Pro-Labor Mayors

Washington — Labor in Connecticut won two important political victories in local elections in Norwalk and Torrington, Labor's Non-Partisan League announced here.

Mayoralty candidates endorsed by the League were elected in both cities. In Norwalk labor hailed the reelection of Mayor Frank T. Stack, Democrat, who credited the League with decisive influence in the campaign.

Stack was endorsed "for his advocacy of housing, his progressive and liberal record, and for his support of labor." Stack is an official of a local hat company that has had a pro-labor policy.

Torrington voters gave victory to the League-endorsed candidate, William A. Patten, Democrat. Reasons for League support of Mayor Patten were his defense of civil liberties and labor's rights, his support of WPA and the New Deal, and his decision to extend health services.

Nationwide CIO Organizing Campaign Moves Into Action

Announce New Set-up Of Staff

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 21 A number of changes in the organizational set-up of the CIO were announced by President John L. Lewis here, following approval by the executive board.

The office of Director has been abolished. John Brophy, who has held that position, was named Director of the Department of Local Industrial Unions. In addition he will act as a liaison officer and assistant for the CIO president.

NAMES HAYWOOD

Allan S. Haywood, previously CIO regional director in New York, has been named National Director of Organization, and will be in the national CIO office in Washington. Michael S. Widman, heretofore New England CIO director, will move to Washington to become Assistant Director of Organization.

Adolph Germer, previously CIO director in Detroit, is being shifted to New York to fill the position left open by Haywood's transfer. No appointments have yet been made to the vacant Michigan and New England CIO directorships.

On the Pacific Coast the office of West Coast CIO director has been abolished, and Harry Bridges, who held that position, has been named CIO director for the state of California. William Dalrymple, Steel Workers Organizing Committee director in San Francisco, was apointed to a new position — CIO regional director in Oregon. Richard Francis is named as CIO Director for the State of Washington.

EXPLAINS MOVES

In announcing the personnel switches, Lewis explained to newspapermen that the changes were made in line with the convention's decision to speed a great organizing campaign. The west coast, he added, is too large an area for one regional director to function adequately, and with three directors now working on the Coast, organization campaigns can be more concentrated.

"It is our intention to set up in Washington a bigger staff that will be more efficient and provide for more comprehensive organization," Pres. Lewis declared.

He pointed out that the CIO has "ample funds" and "unlimited credit" with which to finance its organizing drive. The campaign will be carried out by all CIO affiliates.

NLRB Bulletin On Newspaper Field

Washington, Oct. 21 — The acceptance and extension of collective bargaining in the newspaper industry has resulted in a decrease in industrial strife, a bulletin issued this week by the National Labor Relations Board notes.

The bulletin, "Collective Bargaining in the Newspaper Industry," reviews attempts of newspaper printing employes over a period of 100 years to organize into labor unions. It was prepared by the Board's Division of Economic Research.

Tribute To Lewis

Summary of Session's Key Resolutions

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 21—More than a half hundred resolutions were passed at the CIO convention here. Following are brief summaries of the more important statements of policy:

LABOR AND WAR: Asserts American labor wants no part in the European war, supports the President's neutrality program, and demands defense of democratic institutions and protection for labor's rights.

TECHNOLOGICAL UNEMPLOYMENT: Urges Federal government make a survey of unemployment causes looking towards full employment, the 30-hour week and collective bargaining.

WAGNER ACT & LABOR BOARD: Condemns Labor Board policies "which undermine the basic purposes of the Act", describes recent Board actions as an "unwarranted and unworthy re-

Convention Calls For Intensive Drive by Unions

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 21—The Congress of Industrial Organizations today was embarked on a giant organization drive with the five-year goal of bringing an additional 10,000,000 workers into the CIO's powerful industrial unions.

Given an enthusiastic, unanimous "go ahead" signal by the CIO convention, the general executive board met here immediately after convention adjournment and devoted several hours to discussing plans for the new forward march of "labor's peaceful army."

Ringing in each delegate's mind was the oft-repeated command of every convention speaker—"Organize the Unorganized."

For that was the theme of this convention, expressed in the report to the convention of Pres. Lewis, in the speeches of the CIO leaders and delegates, and in the resolutions passed during the four-day session at Polk Hall.

"When I come back five years from now, as come back I will, I will come into San Francisco with at least ten million dues-paying members of the organization. When I do come back, the voice of labor will be stronger in America," Lewis told the convention.

"So," the CIO president continued, "you have all got your work cut out for you and all I intend to do during the next year is to unceasingly demand that you organize the unorganized."

In turn, leaders of the steel, auto, clothing, textile, packinghouse, metal miners, and other unions took the floor to describe the immense forward steps that must be taken by the CIO

STATE CIO STAND

The resolution on organizing reiterated the CIO position—

"That the primary purpose of the CIO during the months and years immediately before us, as in the past, must be the advancement of the basic task for which the CIO was created and to which it is dedicated, the organizing of the unorganized millions of American workers on an industrial basis."

But that was not the only resolution of the convention which discussed the need for accelerating the organizing drive to bring in the millions of non-union workers. Specific statements on a number of industries called for intensive action to build the unions in those fields.

RE-ELECT OFFICERS

That the CIO has complete faith in its leaders and praise for the work they have already accomplished was seen in the re-election of all the officials named at the 1938 convention: Pres. John L. Lewis, Vice Pres. Sidney Hillman and Sec. James Carey.

FOUR NEW OFFICERS

In addition, the delegates unanimously named four new vice-presidents elected to fill positions provided by a change in Section 1 of Article IV of the constitution. Those elected to office were:

Pres. R. J. Thomas of the United Automobile Workers.

Pres. Sherman Dalrymple of the United Rubber Workers.

Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union.

Since the new vice-presidents became ex-officio members of the CIO general executive board, elections to that body by the various unions revealed four new members: Sec.-Treas. George Addes of the auto workers; Vice-Pres. Thomas Burns of the rubber workers; Tony McTeer of the metal miners' general executive board; and William Smith of the textile workers.

Lewis Wished To Retire; Board Demanded He Run

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 21—Pres. Lewis revealed here that he came to the CIO's San Francisco convention prepared not to run for re-election.

In his speech of acceptance of another term as head of the CIO, Lewis declared:

"It is no secret to some of you that I came to this convention with the hope that you would select another President in lieu of myself. Those of you with whom I conferred declined to be guided by my wishes, and they said that what they believed was also believed by you, all of you.

"So I bow to the sentiment of our delegates and our people as expressed by this representation, and I again become your servant, to do those things that you want me to do, as I understand what you want me to do. I have no other motive, no other impulse and no other ambition."

Lewis' desire to retire from the CIO presidency was made at an executive board meeting two days before the convention, it became known, and came as a stunning blow. After many pleas for a continuance of his leadership, Lewis bowed to the demands and consented to accept the presidency once again.

In his speech of acceptance, Lewis took issue with those foes of the CIO who have called him a dictator. He pointed to the unity and democracy evident throughout the convention's proceedings, and declared:

"Therein lies the power of the leadership of the CIO. Therein lies the factor and the influence which make my voice, whein I speak for labor, a voice of some importance, of some influence and of some power!

REASON FOR POWER

"But only because of those things I have said in our convention before, and I repeat now, because it is an elemental truth, that if the day ever comes in the councils of labor when I cease to truly represent what is in the hearts and the minds of our people, and to give voice to their yearnings and desires, their needs and their ambitions, then just that day my voice loses its power, my tongue loses its cunning, and the people of the United States will pay no more attention to me than they will to the street-sweeper on Market Street outside that door."

Delegate Killed In Accident

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 21—Tragedy befell one delegate to the CIO convention.

Arthur Page, 30, secretary and organizer of the Los Angeles Newsboys' Union, was killed in an automobile wreck two miles north of Goshen, Calif., as he was returning home from the CIO convention.

AN AMERICAN INSTITUTION

By John L. Lewis

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 21—Following is the complete text of Pres. Lewis' closing speech to the CIO convention:

The business of the convention has been completed. Every resolution submitted has been considered and passed by the convention. Every committee has reported. It has been a most remarkable demonstration of the efficiency of our organization for any one who cares to analyze the work of this convention. Every delegate who desired to talk has talked. No delegate has been interrupted. No points of order have been raised. The convention has been a living exemplification of democracy in a deliberative body. Every delegate has conducted himself with the utmost decorum and consideration for all others. There has been no bitterness of debate, no motive to impugn, and no individual was maligned.

When one stops to consider that remarkable record he again comes to have an understanding of the great potent force that springs from the well springs and sources and sentiments of our people. We have been here to work, to take counsel with each other, to consider the work of yesterday and outline the work of tomorrow. The job has been done in a most magnificent manner.

I extend to the delegates, to every officer of this convention and each member of each committee, the secretary, the ushers, and all those who contributed to this remarkable record in a deliberative body, my profound appreciation, personally and officially.

FUTURE LOOKS BRIGHT

I think this work and this performance augers well for the future of our Congress. It refutes those who would believe that labor, unable to govern itself, will be unable to assume increasing responsibilities in the future. To the organization of four million men and women in voluntary forms of organization there come great responsibilities. There comes the necessity of exercising restraint; there comes the necessity of considering the effect of the policies of this organization upon our fellow citizens and upon our form of government. As through the years we grow and expand, as grow and expand we will, millions more will be added to the rolls of our membership. This demonstration of efficiency and this record of performance is an achievement that will be accepted as being that of American people who will recognize that, as increased power and influence accrue to the labor organizations of this country, labor will have a responsible membership and a loyal membership; that labor may be relied upon to follow at all times the policies and to take at all times actions that fully consider not alone the rights and desires of members of our own organization, but the rights, the desires, the privileges, the dreams and aspirations of all Americans.

With great influence comes these great responsibilities, and there need be none here in America who need have apprehensions about the future as the power and influence of labor expand.

I am sometimes asked by skeptics and critics, "What guarantees can labor give to the American people that if, as and when it comes into great membership and exercises increasing economic and political power, labor will not undertake to do things that represent extremes of thought or excessive actions as compared with the rights and privileges of all citizens?"

I cannot guarantee what labor may do tomorrow, next year or ten years from now, for the same reason that I cannot guarantee what a church, a fraternal organization, a school board or a state legislature may do next year. No citizen may underwrite the future conduct or actions of the Congress of the United States, because these instrumentalities are founded upon our concept of democracy and our concept of government through the representative form of government.

SOUNDNESS OF DEMOCRACY

As an American, I must have confidence that the voluntary associations of men and citizens in this country, through the years to come, will at all times exercise reasonable restraint in the adoption of their policies, and be ever considerate of the rights of those who are non-members. As an American I must have confidence that the elected representatives in Congress and the executives of this nation whom we elect through the years will be men of sufficiently sound judgment to guide the ship of state in an ever-increasing efficiency as respecting the well-being of the American people.

But who can guarantee me that? What guarantees can be written that the Congress of the United States, five years from now, will not enact a statute that will trespass upon the rights of minorities of the population?

We have had 150 years of government in this Republic that demonstrate the soundness and permanence of our position and our form of government. The labor movement of this country is just another segment of our population, composed of the same type of

By LEN DE CAUX

The CIO Convention

THE San Francisco convention provided a wealth of evidence that "the CIO is a going concern", as Pres. John L. Lewis put it.

The 1938 CIO convention in Pittsburgh was formative in character. It set patterns and precedents, adopted a constitution and laid down general policies to chart the course of the new labor movement.

This year's convention was the first to be held under established rules and precedents. It was the policy-making gathering of a movement which has attained maturity, which is sure of its direction and united in its general purposes.

Organize the Unorganized

It was nothing new that organization of the unorganized should be the keynote of a CIO convention. That has been the main purpose of the movement since its inception.

But what was new was the fact that the drive planned at San Francisco starts from a base of 45 established industrial unions with four million members; whereas the first CIO drive was started by some half dozen unions with less than a million members and had to break entirely new territory.

A new degree of emphasis was also placed on organization by the San Francisco convention. The past year or so has been devoted by many of the unions, with certain notable exceptions, more to consolidation, negotiation and administration than to new advances in organization.

During this period, each one of the new unions, like the CIO as a whole, has become a "going concern." Constitutions have been adopted, officers have become trained in administering union affairs, internal problems have been solved, and membership loyalty has been proved and tested.

But now that a certain pickup in business and employment presents a favorable opportunity for a new advance, the San Francisco convention has resolved on a sharp turn in the direction of concentrating on new organization.

The enthusiasm with which the delegates took up Pres. Lewis' slogan of ten million members in the next five years, was an enthusiasm bred of confidence that the CIO is now a going concern which is fully equipped to achieve this and even more ambitious goals.

Harmony and Unanimity

Another aspect of the San Francisco convention which drew considerable comment was its harmony and unanimity.

The convention was a model of orderly and democratic procedure, with full opportunity for discussion of every major issue. Yet there were no sharp debates and disagreements on the floor, and most of the votes were unanimous.

No movement has ever been subjected to more attempts by its enemies to create division and disruption than has the CIO. Every minor difference of opinion that might arise from time to time has been pounced upon for the purpose of exaggerating it into a split; and every attempt has been made to turn one section of the membership against another on any available issue.

But the San Francisco convention was such a magnificent demonstration of the basic unity of purpose and solidity of the CIO that it has made such enemy prophets of division and dissension look ridiculous indeed.

An American Movement

Another form of propaganda attack on the CIO was also effectively answered by the San Francisco convention.

The CIO has from the first been a typically and fundamentally American movement. It grew out of the needs of workers employed in the mass-production industries for which America has set the pattern to the rest of the world.

Not only has the CIO form of organization been created to cope with peculiarly American industrial conditions, but all of the policies of the movement have grown out of the social and political concepts associated with American democracy.

The CIO convention was one of the most truly representative American gatherings ever to assemble. It democratically expressed the wishes and objective of millions of Americans. And anyone who will take the trouble to study the policies laid down at this convention cannot fail to be impressed with their fundamental affinity with all that is best in what is known as true Americanism.

A Great Leader

No reference to the San Francisco convention would be in any way adequate that did not call attention to the extraordinary degree of confidence which reposes in Pres. John L. Lewis.

Democracy and representative government call for far higher and more complex qualities of leadership than are necessary for kings or dictators. It is hard for the voice of one man to sum up and express the wishes and aspirations of millions of his free and independent fellow-countrymen.

But the enthusiastic, unanimous and conclusive expression of confidence in the leadership of Pres. Lewis which marked the San Francisco convention reflect the fact that his voice has become the voice of millions to a degree never equalled by any other leader of American labor.

Convention Keynote

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 21—Following is the text of the most important resolution of the CIO convention:

WHEREAS, (1) The self-organization of American workers into modern labor unions, capable of dealing with vast combines of industry and capital, is the fundamental and unalterable purpose of the CIO, the cornerstone of its economic, legislative and cultural activities, and the very reason for its being; and

(2) During the last two years of adverse economic conditions, the CIO has forged steadily ahead with its all-important organizing work and has met with a success which augurs well for the results to be achieved during the period of more promising economic circumstances which lies directly ahead; now, therefore, be it

RESOLVED, That the primary purpose of the CIO during the months and years immediately before us, as in the past, must be the advancement of the basic task for which the CIO was created and to which it is dedicated, the organizing of the unorganized millions of American workers on an industrial basis.

citizens, of the same form of men and women who represent us as in the Knights of Columbus, in the conclaves of the Methodist Church, in the meetings of the Prohobitionists, in the women's organizations, in the state legislatures, and in the Congress of the United States.

If we have faith in our form of government, then, by the same token, we must have faith in the discretion, in the judgment and sound common sense of those Americans who compose, next year or ten years from now, the membership of the labor unions of this country as represented by the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Labor appreciates its responsibilities, labor appreciates the necessity of discipline and orderly conduct and orderly procedure in every consideration of every phase of the day's activity as it affects every man. Labor proclaims that the way to have orderly consideration, peace and tranquility in our labor unions and in our Republic is to have the right to meet and assemble and be a member of a labor organization, free from coercion, free from oppression, free from that bitter, belying criticism that emanates from certain quarters of the country, constantly seeking to sear and blight and destroy and vilify the labor organizations of our time and our day.

So I am happy here today to point to the discipline and orderly work of our movement, made possible by a membership whose understanding is constantly increasing, who are gaining knowledge and experience by being privileged to participate in the reforms of labor, to there advance their ideas, to there receive the criticisms of their contemporaries and to there crystallize what is, after all, a composite viewpoint of millions and millions of men and women.

NO REASON FOR FEAR

Let no man be afraid of the Congress of Industrial Organizations because it is not an American institution. No policy that it has ever espoused was originated or was conceived from any source or within any source, or within any group, except a group of Americans; just as proud of their Americanism as any industrialist who ever received a corporate bonus; just as proud of their Americanism as any hired lecturer who ever trod a public platform; just as proud of their Americanism as any falsifying publisher who ever dipped his pen in vitriol.

There can be no gainsaying those things, because those things are self-evident! Those things are self-evident!

Vice-President Murray said from this platform, "If danger ever comes to America it will not come from the external pressure of a foreign foe; it will come from those who seek to undermine our institutions, or who seek to take our institutions and mold them for their own individual policies and their own selfish aims."

Against those things labor will ever be on its guard, and against those things labor will ever fight. The best insurance policy that the patriots of America can ever take out is to see that labor in America has the right to organize and the right to be happy with their fellow citizens.

So do not be discouraged, my friends, by the criticisms of those who do not understand, and by the fulminations of those who do understand and who only desire to exercise their great influence to confuse and sear and to destroy. Labor has to fight and establish its organizations, and there will never be a time when you will not have to fight to preserve these unions of ours. You need not look forward to being in a comfortable position tomorrow as an executive of an organization affiliated with our Congress and not have to worry what you have to do, because every day that you live representing labor you will have problems to meet and decisions to make, and you will have to hurry hither and yon to carry out your duties and discharge your obligations.

We must not assume the attitude that because we have a great, mighty army of men and women in our organization that all is well. We cannot permit ourselves to get in that attitude and we must not work ourselves into a mental state where we believe that our enemies are asleep merely because for a day they are inactive. That goes for all of our opposition, and it goes for all of our enemies, and it goes for the American Federation of Labor, just as it goes for the National Association of Manufacturers.

Don't let this soft feeling of fraternity that may come into some communities as between membership in our organization and a rival organization lull yourselves into that state of mind, into that state of passivity, or into that state of inactivity where you forget to go out and get some more dues-paying members for the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

As you grow in strength and as you increase numerically, you will find more and more people wanting to be friendly with you. And that goes for the American Federation of Labor as well as other organizations.

I shall not say any more. I am afraid I have burdened you too much with the sound of my voice in this Convention. I marvel at your patience, your cooperation, your loyalty. Accept my appreciation! I express my appreciation from the bottom of my heart for your own testimonial of confidence in me. I only hope that I can continue to warrant that confidence, and that the day will never come when you think you have made a mistake.

CIO Launches Drive For 10,000,000 Men

vention, Pres. Lewis hailed the CIO for its past achievements and spoke of his faith that even greater victories lie ahead. He replied to the slander and the calumnies of the enemies of organized labor.

"The best insurance policy that the patriots of America can ever take out," he said, "is to see that labor in America has the right to organize and the right to be happy with their fellow citizen."

WHY FEAR CIO?

"Let no man be afraid of the CIO because it is not an American institution," Lewis continued. "No policy that it has ever espoused was originated or was conceived from any source or within any source, or within any group, except a group of Americans; just as proud of their Americanism as any industrialist who ever received a corporate bonus; just as proud of their Americanism as any hired lecturer who ever trod a public platform; just as proud of their Americanism as any falsifying publisher who ever dipped his pen in vitriol.

"There can be no gainsaying these things, because these things are self-evident."

Merely because the CIO has come ahead fast in its brief existence, Lewis emphasized, its membership and leaders should not allow themselves to take refuge in an attitude of false security.

"We cannot permit ourselves to get in that attitude and we must not work ourselves into a mental state where we believe that our enemies are asleep merely because for a day they are inactive," he warned.

"That goes for all our opposition, and it goes for all our emenies, and it goes for the American Federation of Labor, just as it goes for the National Association of Manufacturers."

DISPLAY UNITY

The unity of the CIO forces was well displayed when Vice-Pres. Sidney Hillman took the floor to nominate Pres. Lewis for another term in office.

"What can I say to this convention in any measure to describe the qualities for leadership of one who has impressed himself on our generation, whose presence has done so much to change the old structure of organized labor and who has, in a most constructive manner, affected the life of our people?" Hillman asked.

The delegates, however, had their own method of expression.

As soon as Hillman mentioned the name of John L. Lewis, the delegates rose to their feet with a thunderous cheer, and touched off a mighty ovation that defied efforts from the speaker's chair to halt it before more than half an hour had passed.

Led by a nine-piece band, the delegates marched through the aisles, tore paper into bits, rattled noise makers, tore CIO banners from the walls and held them high aloft as they paraded through Polk Hall. After the secretary had been instructed to cast a unanimous vote for Pres. Lewis, the delegates rose to their feet for another ovation—more brief but just as enthusiastic.

The same type of ovation greeted each of the other national officers as their election took place.

Lewis, in responding to the cheers of the delegates, paid tribute to the wholesome unanimity and devotion to duty of the CIO convention. Out of it, he asserted, "will come a crystallization of policy and solidifying of our ranks, the creation of a determination to go out and do the real, continuous, necessary work of expanding the numerical strength of our far-flung organizations.

"There is an opportunity here now . . . I am going to stress one note. I am going to stress the note of organizing the unorganized. Just that!"

WHOSE POCKETS —

ARE YOU FILLING? When you buy your clothes do you help pay the wage of a union worker, or do you help swell the profits of a sweatshop boss?

- The Label of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America will give you the answer. When you don't see the label you know that the garment was probably made by an un-American sweatshop chiseler. When you see the Amalgamated label you know that your money will go into the pockets of union workers, earning union pay, working under union conditions.
- Demand the union label in the clothes you buy and insure yourself against sweatshop garments, against sweatshop conditions in industry.

You can find the Amalgamated label in union made suits, overcoats, uniforms, work clothes and overalls, workshirts, dress shirts, underwear, gloves, neckties, sheeplined, leather, and sport coats, children's clothing and wash suits.

Hillman Hails Lewis As Great Leader of Men In Nominating Speech

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 21—Interrupted by a spontaneous outburst of applause, cheers and vocal good-will which lasted for three quarters of an hour, the nomination of John L. Lewis as president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations was brought to the second CIO convention by one of its founding fathers, Vice-President Sidney Hillman, who is also president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America.

In a moving tribute to President Lewis' qualities of leadership, Mr. Hillman said:

"What can I say to this Convention in any measure to describe the qualities for leadership of one who has impressed himself on our generation, whose presence has done so much to change the old structure of organized labor and who has, in a most constructive manner, affected the life of our people?

"I am happy for our country that in this great crisis one of the greatest leaders of men is given to the country by our movement."

The gravity of international affairs makes it all the more urgent that the unsolved problems of our democracy be settled constructively, he declared.

"It is my conviction that a lack of vigorous leadership in the democracies abroad is, more than anything else, responsible for the things that are going on there, things from which we pray that we may be spared in this country."

In the person of John L. Lewis, Mr. Hillman said, the CIO offers to the nation "one who cannot merely bring forth a great movement, but hold it together, utilize its greatest effectiveness for the benefit of labor."

Postal Signs Agreement With Union

New York, Oct. 21 — Benefits totaling about $1,000,000 for the 17,000 employes of the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company will be gained as the result of an agreement on the application of the Wage-Hour law, reached between the company and the American Communications Association, CIO, the union announced today.

The terms of the agreement, effective Oct. 24, reduce the work week to 44 hours for day workers, 42 for early night workers, and 41 for late night workers without reduction in the net weekly income. Time and one-half is to be paid after 42 hours work per week.

The weekly wage for all employes working the new hours will be the same as they previously received for 48 hours work. The agreement further guarantees the 30-cents hourly minimum wage to telegraph messengers as provided by the increase under the Wage-Hour law effective Oct. 24.

Previously the company had filed a request for exemption on application of the minimum wage provision to messengers, but withdrew this after signing the agreement with ACA. For the first time in the history of the industry, the messengers, like adults under the Postal-ACA contract, are given a guaranteed work week.

CIO Votes Leave AFL Far Behind

Washington, Oct. 21.—CIO unions are still leaving the AFL far behind in number of collective bargaining elections won, figures released this week by the National Labor Relations Board reveal.

About ten times as many votes were cast in elections won by the CIO as were polled for craft unions in elections won by the AFL. A total of 21,759 workers voted for industrial unions in 30 elections carried by the CIO, as opposed to 2,353 who voted for craft unions in 20 elections won by the AFL.

In a few instances where the workers were split into craft groups for purposes of voting, both the CIO and the AFL won part of the divided poll.

In 30 elections in which the CIO and the AFL competed against dependent group as a third union, the CIO won 20. In the other polls CIO won 20. In the other polls either the CIO or the AFL competed with an independent union or with no other union on the ballot, giving workers the opportunity to vote for no union representation if they chose.

The CIO was on the ballot in some 50 polls, the AFL on 48, according to the Labor Board figures. Most of the elections listed were held in September, with a few returns from earlier months and several in October included.

Many of the elections won by the CIO involved a large number of workers, while the AFL elections were for the most part among smaller groups. In the election won by the CIO auto workers at seven plants of the Briggs Manufacturing Co., for example, more than 13,000 CIO votes were cast.

Electrical Union Calls Conferences

New York, Oct. 21—Two special organizing conferences of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, were called this week by James J. Matles, director of organization. They will be attended by international representatives, field organizers, district and local organizing staffs, for the union's four eastern coast districts will meet for a two-day session, here, starting Nov. 4.

PowerStrike Settlement Ratified

Detroit, Oct. 21 — Terms of the settlement of a two-week strike of 1,000 employes against the Consumers Power Company in 15 Michigan cities has been ratified by the workers. The agreement recognizes the Utility Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, as bargaining agency for its members, provides wage increases, improved working conditions, paid vacations and other benefits.

The strike was called by the UWOC Sept. 22, after negotiations for a contract were stalled.

COUNCIL FOR N. C.

Raleigh, N. C,—CIO unions in North Carolina are planning the establishment of a state industrial union council, E. L. Sandefur, CIO Regional Director, announced, here.

Clothing Workers To Have Traveling Trade Union School

The latest wrinkle in streamlined methods of trade union education, a travelling training school, is being offered to local unions of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers by the national office of the union through its Department of Cultural Activities.

The Active Workers School will go to each city arranging for the course, conduct 25 days of intensive work, and then move on to the next place.

Four courses will be offered: Public Speaking; Collective Bargaining; Labor History, 1929-1939, and Aims and Purposes of Democracy. By holding all the classes within a short space of time, greater concentration and effectiveness of study will be guaranteed.

Adequate advance preparation to ensure full enrollment will be made by the organizer in charge of cultural activities. Joint Boards of the Amalgamated in each city will urge shop chairmen, committee members and other active workers to sign up for the course.

FEATURE DISCUSSION

An important feature in the conduct of the classes will be emphasis on group discussion to bring out the ideas and points of view of the students themselves. "No one will be lectured to death," the Department promises.

Interested Amalgamated locals and union members are urged to write immediately to the Department of Cultural Activities, Amalgamated Clothing Workers, 15 Union Square, New York City.

Billings Wins Long Fight For Freedom

SACRAMENTO, Calif., Oct. 21.—Labor's long fight against the worst anti-union frame-up in California history neared complete victory this week when Warren K. Billings, arrested with Tom Mooney in 1916, left prison a free man after Governor Culbert L. Olson commuted his sentence to time served. Mooney was freed nine months ago.

In freeing Billings, the Governor told him, "I believe you have served a prison sentence for a crime you did not commit. I wish it were a pardon instead of a commutation and I hope I can issue a pardon at a later date."

Convicted with Tom Mooney for the San Francisco Preparedness Day bombings in 1916, on perjured testimony, Billings cannot receive a pardon without consent of the State Supreme Court. Despite two refusals by the Court to recommend such action, both Governor Olson and Billings' attorney, George Davis, will again request the Court for a favorable decision.

Only 22 years old at the time of his arrest in 1916, Billings saw active duty in the trade union movement. President of the shoe workers local, he had been shot in a 1912 shoe workers strike. Refusal of a $5,000 bribe in return for which he was to help frame Mooney was reported to have been one of the reasons for including Billings in the frame-up fabricated by anti-union employes interests.

Maryland CIO Meets Nov. 27

Baltimore, Md.—The largest meeting yet held by state labor organizations is expected for the third annual convention of the Maryland-District of Columbia Industrial Union Council, beginning Monday, November 27, 1939, at Moose Hall, 410 West Fayette Street, Baltimore, Md.

The call for the three-day session, signed by Council President John T. Jones and Secretary-Treasurer Sidney R. Katz, was sent to CIO affiliates this week.

Executive board members of the council will gather in Baltimore before the convention opens to prepare and approve convention reports.

The call reiterates the objectives of the council: "Through United action to protect, maintain and advance the interests of all working people in its territory, to extend unionism on the basis of industrial organization, to secure and enforce legislation in the interests of the working people, to promote recognition and acceptance of collective bargaining in industry, and to increase public understanding of the labor movement."

Connecticut CIO Council To Meet

WATERBURY, Conn., Oct. 21—The second annual convention of the Connecticut Industrial Union Council will meet here at the Hotel Elton, Oct. 28, John J. Driscoll, secretary-treasurer of the Council said today.

The Connecticut CIO Council was formed last October at a constitutional convention held in Bridgeport. Thomas Malloy was elected President.

Open Shop War Looms In Chicago

Chicago — (FP)—Communications sounding the call for an open shop offensive against labor unions were published here by "The Daily Record." The letters were addressed to Chicago employers by the fink Pinkerton agency and the Employers Assn. of Chicago.

The association letterhead carries the names of many notorious union busters, including R. E. Donnelly, who has been fighting the Intl. Typographical Union for years. The letter, signed by Pres. R. J. Koch read:

"This is a personal and urgent invitation to you to place your company in the membership of this association. 'The war is not here,' but its effect upon our economy will be increasingly apparent within the next very few weeks.

ATTACKS UNIONS

"Labor, particularly that of an organized nature, will try to sweat out of the situation everything possible toward economic and political advantage. This will lead to organization drives, strikes and other disruptions of productive effort. Subversive forces, covertly and openly, will undermine industrial stability wherever opportunity offers.

"If employers do not avail themselves of organization for self-protection and do not meet these conditions through intelligent and effective unity their influences as individuals will be of little account.

"Are you interested enough to correspond with me about this matter, or to permit some staff member to discuss it with you personally?"

OFFERS SPIES

The Pinkerton letter made an offer to supply labor spies under the pretense of preventing sabotage. It read:

"Future, perhaps early, developments in international affairs may make necessary the adoption of unusual measures for the protection of your plant, equipment and products against sabotage.

"In addition, there is the necessary service of investigating new employes to detect wilful misrepresentation of their identity and antecedents.

"This agency is equipped with experienced personnel of the required capacities to meet your particular needs."

Pay Goes Up For 690,000 U. S. Workers

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21—Wage increases for American workers estimated to number 690,000 go into effect at midnight Monday, the Wage and Hour Division, U. S. Dept. of Labor said today.

A total of 2,382,500 workers employed in every state of the Union, will at the same time have their hours reduced from 44 to 42 per week, or will receive overtime pay at the rate of time and one-half the regular wage rate for hours worked over 42.

These changes are statutory provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act which automatically increase the minimum wage from 25 to 30 cents an hour beginning Oct. 24, and reduce the regular work week from 44 to 42. Higher increases in wages have been established for the hosiery and textile industries upon the acceptance of recommendations made by industry committees.

A wage order effective Sept. 18, set the minimum of 32½ cents per hour for all employes in the seamless branch of the hosiery industry, and a minimum of 40 cents per hour for all employes of the full-fashioned branch of the industry.

HIGHER MINIMUMS

A second wage order, effective Tuesday, establishes a minimum wage of 32½ cents for all employes in the textile industry. These wage orders increase the minimum wage of 221,000 workers above the statutory 30 cents an hour.

Under provisions of the Act, industry committees must as rapidly as possible without causing curtailment of employment increase the minimum wage level, industry by industry, until the minimum of 40c an hour is established for all industries.

The Act sets October 24, 1945, as that statutory date on which 40 cents an hour must be paid to all workers engaged in interstate commerce or in the production of goods for commerce. According to revised estimates, the number of workers covered by the Act total more than 12,600,000.

One third of the 690,000 who will receive increases in wages are located in Southern states and are employed in sawmills, textiles, cotton seed oil and fertilizers.

CIO Signs 64 Liggett Drug Stores

NEW YORK CITY, Oct. 21—A sole collective bargaining agreement was signed here this week by Local 1199, Retail Drug Store Employes Union, CIO, covering 850 workers in the 64 Liggett's Drug Stores throughout the city. The Local now has signed contracts covering all major chains in New York City, in addition to a majority of independent drug stores.

Benjamin L. Gudes, Secretary manager and Leon J. Davis, general organizer negotiated the agreement which provides for wage increases, vacations with pay, sick leave, seniority rights and arbitration of dismissals.

N. Y. State CIO Convenes Nov. 17

Chrysler Auto Workers File Strike Notice

The day shift leaves the Dodge plant in Detroit as the company charges that a union-inspired slowdown made operations impossible. The United Automobile Workers, CIO, denied this and filed the 5-day strike notice required by Michigan's new labor law. Speed-up on new models is the principle union grievance.

District 50 Signs Three Contracts

New York, Oct. 21—The Chemical, Drug and Cosmetic Division of District 50, United Mine Workers, has announced three new contracts covering 350 workers.

The Park Drug Company agreed to give the union a closed shop, check-off, 15 per cent increases, paid vacations, and seniority rights after its employes left the AFL and voted 100 per cent for the CIO in a Labor Board election.

An almost identical agreement was signed with Millerand, Inc., manufacturers of nail polish.

A seven-day strike by 200 production workers at Vadsco Sales Corp. and American Drug Syndicate, drug and cosmetics manufacturers, was concluded with a contract providing 5 per cent increases, the union shop and paid vacations.

Tory Committee Quizzes 6,200 Cops On Wagner Act

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21. — Police chiefs in 6,200 towns and cities over the nation have been asked by the Smith House Committee probing the National Labor Relations Board to give their verdict on workings of the Wagner Act.

A lengthy questionnaire was mailed by the committee seeking the police views through answers to a series of carefully framed inquiries designed to offer an opportunity for police expression of its bias against labor.

The novel idea of going to the police to find out how the Labor Board is functioning is the latest brain wave of the Smith committee which was set up by House Tories to distract attention from the work of the regular House and Senate labor committees.

Assumption behind the questionnaire is that the police chiefs, notoriously anti-labor, are well qualified to act as judges of the Board and of labor conduct. Nature of the questions is such that answers harmful to the Board and labor are certain to be received in large numbers.

Seven main questions and 120 secondary questions are asked of the police. The climax is reached by an over-all question asking for the reaction of the coppers to the administration of the Wagner act. The police are also asked if they were ever criticized by any agent of the labor board.

Typical of the biased way in which the questions are written is this: "Have you any knowledge of employes being coerced, threatened, their families threatened, for failure to join any labor organization?" Reference to strikebreakers is put in terms of "employes that desired to work who were prevented from working."

The questionnaire is certain to offer a field day for anti-labor police to air their views on the Wagner act.

Guild Gets Injunction Against Hearst Paper

CHICAGO, Oct. 21.—An injunction to halt violence against strikers of the American Newspaper Guild was issued here by Superior Judge John J. Lupe against the Hearst newspaper publications, the CIO union announced today.

More than 100 affidavits supporting the Guild's charges of violence sponsored by the management of the newspapers were presented to Master of Chancery Benjamin Cohen, who recommended that the injunction be issued.

The CIO union has been on strike against the Hearst paper for more than ten months.

The injunction bars the Evening American Publishing Co. and the Illinois Publishing & Printing Co., publishers of Hearst's Herald-American, from committing any act of violence against the persons or property of members of the Chicago Newspaper Guild or the American Newspaper Guild.

Judge Lupe previously granted an injunction against the Guild to Swarts Brothers, credit plan jewelers, a firm which the Guild had picketed for advertising in the Hearst paper. A fine of $500 for contempt was also levied against the Guild.

Stamp Plan

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 21—President Lewis praised the Department of Agriculture's Food Stamp plan in his report to the CIO's second convention.

Noting that the plan has so far won enthusiastic support, he said "it seems possible" that such a plan might well be spread to wider areas and to include a larger number of commodities.

by the delegates, it is expected.

Other major points which were given serious consideration by the delegates were:

A program to eliminate the speed, piece-work system prevalent in logging operations.

Keeping the United States out of the European war.

Demand for legislation protecting timber, which has been brutally exploited by the timber barons in their "cut-out-and-get-out" policy.

A permanent and realistic solution to the nation's acute unemployment problem.

The protection of civil liberties, and social, labor and economic legislation as the bulwark against any rising threat of Fascism in the United States.

The IWA International Executive Board met two days prior to the convention. President Harold J. Pritchett presided over the convention proceedings.

OPPOSES SLOWDOWNS

Authorization of the strike by Thomas ended a company propaganda campaign built up around an alleged "slowdown" in the Dodge plant. Through paid ads and other channels, the corporation had spent a slice of its $25,000,000 profits (first six months of 1939) in an effort to poison public opinion against the union.

Thomas accused the company of stalling in negotiations while it carried on its anti-union war outside. He had, therefore, authorized the strike, he said.

"Our union maintains there is a speed-up, while the company insists there is a slowdown.

"The proposal of the union is a cure for slowdowns as well as for speed-ups. We are proposing joint discussions and joint time studies as a basis for fixing production standards. In that way, if either workers or corporation are out of line, they can be straightened out."

Thomas pointed out that UAW-CIO contracts with General Motors, Briggs, Hudson, Willys, Packard and many other companies provide for joint discussion and time studies on speed of operation.

CONTRACT DEMANDS

While insisting that it will not recognize the workers right to a voice on speed of operations, the corporation has also taken an arbitrary stand on the new contract proposed by the union. The contract demands include:

1. Joint fixing of production standards.
2. A 10-cent raise to keep pace with rising living costs; paid vacations.
3. The union shop and an "open union." All Chrysler workers to join the UAW-CIO. The corporation may hire non-union workers and the union will be obligated to accept them into membership.
4. No discharge or discipline before appeal to the corporation is exercised; arbitration where such cases cannot be adjusted.
5. Seniority rights; rehiring in reverse order to layoffs; no loss of seniority because of military service.

AFL May Lose Two Of Oldest Unions

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Oct. 21.—The American Federation of Labor is confronted with the possible loss of about 130,000 members, including two well-established affiliated unions, as result of the action of its 59th annual convention just ended here.

Seventy-nine thousand members of the Intl. Typographical Union, one of the oldest and largest AFL affiliates, were suspended for their refusal to pay the one cent a month assessment to fight the CIO.

Suspension of 50,000 Brewery workers seems assured, if by the January meeting of the Executive Council they do not turn 12,000 beer truck drivers over to the Intl. Teamsters Union. Since the Brewery Workers Union has obtained a court decision restraining the AFL from handing over the workers to the Teamsters, there is not much likelihood of compliance with the Teamsters' demand. The convention sharply denounced the Brewers for resorting to court action to protect their union autonomy.

The Intl. Brotherhood of Foundry Employes, with about 5,000 members, was ordered by the convention to amalgamate with the Intl. Molders Union, even though they are on record against such action.

In contrast to the silence at the 1938 convention, considerable criticism of the AFL campaign to amend the Wagner Act was voiced from the floor this year, a significant indication of widespread dissatisfaction with this particular anti-labor policy, particularly in view of the rigid machine control at AFL conventions.

Huntington, W. Va. — Three wholesale bakeries, here, have signed two-year agreements with the United Retail and Wholesale Employes, CIO, providing for wage increases and the closed shop to 175 workers.

Office Workers School Offers Full Program

NEW YORK CITY. — A varied curriculum offering educational, cultural and sports facilities to its 16,000 members and their friends starts here this month when the New York Joint Council of United Office and Professional Workers opens the fall term of its trade union school.

The courses and activities are planned to cover the varied interests of the members of UOPWA's seven New York locals, which include book and magazine workers, advertising and general office employes, banking and brokerage workers, commercial and fine artists, industrial insurance agents and social service workers.

Many classes are offered to improve the craft knowledge and techniques of the members. Included are forums on such subjects as Dress, with Elizabeth Hawes as guest lecturer, and a discussion by Kathryn Lewis on "Women in Society Today."

SWOC Asks Crucible Steel Poll

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Oct. 21—A petition for an election in nine plants of the Crucible Steel Company has been filed by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee with the Labor Board. The firm has steadily refused to renew a contract which expired last year.

Strikers Bring A Message

STRIKING CIO MESSENGER BOYS, whose walkout has tied up Western Union Telegraph Co.'s operations in San Francisco, brought a message to Pres. Lewis and the CIO delegates at Polk Hall. They called for support in their struggle to win decent wages and shorter working hours from the giant millionaire corporation. Convention gave them a big cheer.

CHRYSLER BALKS EARLY STRIKE SETTLEMENT

CIO Auto Union Accuses Company Of Prolonging Lockout

DETROIT, Mich., Oct. 28.—Chrysler Corporation arbitrariness was blamed today by R. J. Thomas, United Automobile Workers president, for prolonging the present dispute involving more than 50,000 Chrysler workers and additional thousands in other industries.

Describing three offers made by the Union in an effort to bring a speedy adjustment to the dispute, Thomas declared that their flat rejection by the company was "typical of the corporation's arbitrary position throughout more than a week of negotiations, which have been fruitless as far as any major agreement is concerned."

Thomas replied sharply to company charges that the Union had failed to live up to its contracts, pointing out that the workers faithfully followed every provision, even if it worked against the interests of the Union.

"The corporation now admits," he said, "what we have known for some time, that it carried out only those sections that fit in with its current wishes."

CIOPackinghouse Workers Set To Snow Under AFL

CHICAGO, Oct. 28—CIO Packinghouse Workers in the big Armour plant here and in a branch plant in Peoria are ready to snow the AFL under a mountain of ballots in Labor Board elections set for this week.

In Chicago, PWOC officials expect to repeat and better the showing made in a Board election last year, when the CIO union, Local 347, rolled up 2480 votes and the opposition scored only 237.

The AFL is on the ballot in both places. In Chicago, it was put on at the insistence of the CIO, in order to show Armour and everybody else concerned that the PWOC is overwhelmingly the workers' choice. Jeff Beckley, president of Local 347, declared when the election date was announced:

"This is our opportunity to show the public what Armour workers have known all the time, that the CIO is the organization of the packinghouse workers, not the AFL. Their day is done. It was done over 20 years ago. If the AFL leaders had right good sense they would never have stuck their necks out again, because the packinghouse workers are going to chop their heads off."

CRAFT POLICY

In the Peoria plant the CIO will face three AFL craft splinter outfits, since the Labor Board, following its recent anti-industrial union policies, has ruled that three separate bargaining units must have a shot at the election. These are the PWOC, the Amalgamated Butchers and Meat Cutters, AFL, the Firemen and Oilers, AFL, and the Operating Engineers — AFL again.

CIO leaders are confident in Peoria despite this splitting policy, PWOC Field Representative Art Kamfert saying:

"The AFL is thoroughly discredited among Peoria packinghouse workers. All of them are looking to the CIO for leadership in these coming days of high prices under war conditions. It is clear to all, yes — it will be clear to Armour and Co. — that a vote for the CIO is a vote for higher wages and union conditions in the packing plants."

Woodworkers Forge Militant Program At Convention

KLAMATH FALLS, Ore., Oct. 28—In a fiery five-day convention the International Woodworkers of America forged the most progressive and militant program of its career to lead the vast membership of the CIO woodworkers through the coming year.

In a mingled spirit of resolute determination and wild enthusiasm, the delegates to the third annual convention of the IWA pounded out plans to "organize the unorganized," which, in the opinion of many of the delegates assembled here, will see the IWA membership trebled within the coming twelve months.

Augmenting the IWA program for carrying organizational work forward at top speed were plans to bring a dollar a day wage increase to the CIO woodworkers in the industry to off-set the rapidly increased living costs and provide "a decent standard of living for our membership."

The convention lashed out at the profiteering which has resulted from the war abroad and "will undoubtedly continue unless checked by determined government action." It demanded that the Federal governments of the United States and Canada "take appropriate legislative and administrative steps to check and eliminate war-time profiteering." Included in the convention action was the recommendation for effective tax legislation to reclaim excess profits accruing from war-time conditions.

For its action to bring beneficial social, economic and labor legislation to the people of the United States, the IWA convention went on record as pledging continued support of these New Deal policies in 1940.

PRITCHETT NOMINATED

Nominations of officers came late Saturday afternoon, with the result that President Harold J. Pritchett was renominated to oppose A. F. Hartung, President of the Columbia River District Council for the presidency; O. M. Orton, Les Cadieu and Worth Lowry contesting for the vice-presidency (another vice-president post may be created by this same referendum); and Bertel J. McCarty and H. I. Tucker, Aberdeen, are the nominees for the secretary-treasurer position.

Spokane was selected as the 1940 convention city.

Jersey Shoe Workers Win Contract

Jersey City, N. J., Oct. 28—Since this city has come back into the United States after the CIO Supreme Court victory in the Hague cases, shoe workers of the Oxford Slipper Company in the Harborside building, (long known as a haven for anti-union runaway shops) have been able to organize. This week they secured recognition in the form of a union agreement which cut hours to 40 a week, gave a 10 per cent increase to all piece workers and a 10 cent per hour increase to all time workers.

Signing of the agreement came after a short strike and in the face of determined opposition by the bosses.

WIN VACATIONS

Peoria, Ill. — The Caterpillar Tractor Co. has acceeded to the demand of Local 105, Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee, for paid vacations, Directir Frank Sliva announced. Negotiations for wage increases to be opened November 1 are in no way affected by this action, he said.

CIO Wins Westinghouse Victory

Washington—The National Labor Relations Board announced approval of a stipulation entered into between Westinghouse Electric and Mfg. Co., nine locals of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, CIO, and a Board representative wherein the company admits the union's majority in nine collective bargaining units, in as many cities, covering 21,500 employes.

New Steel Union Pacts Provide Pay Increases For Thousands

By HOWARD J. McCARTNEY

PITTSBURGH, Oct. 28—Thousands of dollars in wage increases have been won for union members through new contracts signed in the last few weeks by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

Six steel companies agreed to boost wages, and many more are now writing closed-shop or union-shop rights for the SWOC into union agreements.

Gains for SWOC members are rolling in on the wave of activity created by the campaign now under way to consolidate the CIO's steel union to a closely-knit organization.

The SWOC agreements boosted wages at:

1. Wickwire Spencer Steel Co., of Buffalo where the firm agreed to a raise of over 11 per cent for 1,100 employes.

2. Goldsmith Metal Lath Co., of Cincinnati, O. That company agreed to a blanket wage increase for all production workers.

3. Rockwood Mfg. Co., of Indianapolis, agreed to increase hourly wage rates by two and one-half cents.

4. Dickey Clay Mfg. Co., of Chattanooga, agreed to a substantial pay raise in its first contract with the SWOC.

5. Kerotest Mfg., of Pittsburgh, raised the wage of 175 employes, canceling a wage reduction instituted before the union agreement.

6. Twelve scrap iron firms in St. Paul signed a joint agreement with the SWOC in which wages are doubled in most classifications.

BACK PAY AWARDS

About a thousand dollars is also added to the total amount won for union members by the SWOC as a result of discharge for union activities.

The back pay awards came in the form of cash settlements agreed to by the P. Wall Mfg. Supply Co., of Pittsburgh, and Van Camp's, Inc., of Indianapolis, after the SWOC carried discharge cases to the Labor Board, alleging discrimination against union members.

P. Wall Co. handed over $660 to Rose Magellan, a member of Lodge 1771, as the Labor Board ordered payment. The company waived the right to a formal hearing.

Van Camp's, Inc., also agreed to settle out of court the suit filed by the SWOC which was prompted by the company's refusal to reinstate Floyd Williams, a union member, to his job after an impartial umpire ruled that he was unfairly discharged.

The settlement made Mr. Williams richer by $300.

SWOC ACCEPTED

Closed-shop rights for the SWOC are embodied in 35 per cent of all union agreements in the Detroit area, Charles Kiser, sub-district director, announced. He asserted that membership in that district has increased 50 per cent over last year's figures.

That the steel union is being accepted by management as an integral part of the industry is demonstrated by assertions of Mr. Kiser, revealing that company officials "admit the union has brought about a better spirit of cooperation between employer and employe, which results in a considerable saving in production costs without resorting to wage cuts or speed-up."

"There have been many instances where management has openly stated that from out-and-out skeptics they have become union boosters and would rather have a well-conducted, bona fide union in the plant than be without one."

BALDWIN SIGNS

Out of Philadelphia recently came word that, for the first time in 130 years, the powerful Baldwin Locomotive Company has signed a union contract. It is with SWOC Lodge 1278, covering all employes in the Baldwin-Southwark shops located with its parent plant in Eddystone, Pa.

The contract grants sole bargaining rights; establishes seniority for the first time in Baldwin's long history; confirms the present high wage level, 40-hour week, with a 36-hour week for the third shift; overtime pay; a Monday-to-Friday no-staggered week, and a 30-day escape clause on wages in case the SWOC desires to demand more pay for union members.

The group covered by the contract are highly skilled mechanics, tool-makers and other metal tradesmen who broke away from the Baldwin company union in 1934. They first voted by secret ballot to join the AFL, but in 1936 voted to join the SWOC.

The contract was signed by E. J. Lever and Michael Harris, SWOC sub-regional directors; Ambrose Hinnegan, lodge president, and William J. Pennypacker, lodge secretary.

At Wickwire Spencer Co., in Buffalo, where the wage increase was brought about by the new SWOC agreement, it is estimated that around $45,000 will be added to monthly wages of SWOC members.

A newly-incorporated vacation clause in the agreement also will add an estimated $50,000 income for employes.

Quarry Strike Settled

Barre, Vt., Oct. 28 — Settlement of a strike against the Louisville Cement Company at Akron, New York, was announced here today by John C. Lawson, secretary-treasurer of the Quarry Workers' International Union, CIO.

The agreement provides for the re-employment of Charles Dean, and for the joint formulation of working rules by the union and the company.

Lewis Hits Red Cross Snobbery

Washington, Oct. 28. — Sharp warning to the American Red Cross to democratize its organization by giving labor a voice in its counsels was uttered by CIO Pres. John L. Lewis in a short speech on a convention resolution on the subject passed at San Francisco.

The resolution, after pointing out that the workers were the chief source of support for the Red Cross, called on the organization to "afford suitable representation to organized labor in recognition of its contribution and furtherance of the objectives of the Red Cross."

Speaking in support of the resolution, Lewis declared:

"There are chapters and units of the Red Cross in various sections of our country that are nothing more nor less than exclusive clubs or social organizations from which the average American is debarred and the sacred portals of whose chapter no average American may enter.

"It is time for the American Red Cross to understand that over 40,000,000 Americans earn their living, when they can get employment, and it is time for the Red Cross to understand that if that institution is to be maintained, and confidence and cooperation are to continue in the effective work of that organization, they must consider the views of labor and give labor representation on their governing bodies."

New Wage-Hour Head Succeeds Andrews

Washington, Oct. 28 — Lieut.-Col. Philip Fleming of the Army Engineers, took office this week as successor to Elmer F. Andrews, former Wage-Hour administrator. Harold D. Jacobs was appointed as his assistant to succeed Paul Sifton.

Fleming, 52 years old, is a native of Iowa. He has had New Deal experience as engineer in charge of the ill-starred Passamoquoddy tidal power project in Maine, as an acting deputy administrator of the PWA, and as inspection division head of the former Resettlement Administration.

The new administrator is best known, however, to readers of sports pages. He returned to West Point in 1936 as graduate manager of athletics, and later became president of the Eastern Football Association.

Fleming had an opportunity for contacts with leading industrialists from 1924 to 1926 when he served in Washington as a member of the War Department boards on contracts and adjustments, and on standardization of wartime contracts.

Lieut.-Col. Philip Fleming, army engineer, and Harold D. Jacobs, (left), his assistant, take over administration of the Wage-Hour Act, succeeding Elmer F. Andrews.

Strikers Block Back to Work Drive

PERTH AMBOY, N. J., Oct. 28 — Twelve hundred strikers are blocking a back-to-work movement here at the plant of the American Smelting and Refining Co.

The strike which began October 10, is being led by the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers Union, CIO, which is asking a signed contract with wage increases, seniority rights and a union shop.

With 4,000 citizens watching, the union held a celebration and mass meeting right on the picket line.

Wages Raised In Kerotest Contract

Pittsburgh, Oct. 27—A contract establishing the $5-day rate, with proportionate increases for semi-skilled workers in the plant, was negotiated and signed by SWOC Lodge 1553 and the Kerotest Mfg. Co., Abe Vales, SWOC sub-district director, announced.

Hourly rates for women employes in the plant were set at a minimum of 50 cents an hour. Over 175 employes are covered by the agreement.

The pact was signed for the SWOC by Morris Mallinger, SWOC representative, by Coleman Vaughn, president of Lodge 1553, and a committee of lodge members made up of Mary Marletto, Joseph Miller, John Householder and Charles A. Phipps.

West Coast Furniture Local Certified

Washington, Oct. 28 — The United Furniture Workers has been certified by the NLRB as sole bargaining agency for all woodworking, finishing, trucking and shipping department employes of S. Karpen & Bros., Huntington Park, California.

The Board's action was based on an election held in August, in which the company's employes were divided into three groups. Two of the polls were won by the CIO union over the AFL. Neither union won a majority in the spring, mattress and upholstering departments.

Humble Oil Ordered To Scrap Fake Union

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28.—A company union at the Humble Oil & Refining Company refineries at Baytown and Ingleside, Texas, known as the Employes Federation, was ordered abolished this week by the National Labor Relations Board.

The Board's investigation revealed that in September 1937, H. C. Weiss, executive vice president of the company, wrote an open letter to employes aimed to discourage membership in the Oil Workers International Union, CIO, by calling its methods coercive and its motives corrupt. The letter promised "all possible support" to the employes in combatting "this insidious force."

The Board also found that the company had formed a "Security League" in February 1937, shortly after the CIO oil union announced an organizational drive, to oppose the OWIU. Open meetings were held opposing the union and a petition circulated which stated the opposition of signers to the CIO and John L. Lewis.

ANTI CIO BOOKLET

Four thousand copies of a booklet called "Join the CIO and Help Build a Soviet America" were distributed at the gates of the plant. The Board denounced the booklet as "60 pages of invective and castigation of the CIO as either Communist or Communist-controlled."

After the U. S. Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the Wagner Act on April 23, 1937, the company called a special meeting of its Baytown employes, read to them a prepared statement purporting to interpret the act and to advise the employes of their rights under it.

A few days later, a constitution was drawn up for an "inside union", and an election held in which a majority of the employes voted in favor of the "Employes Federation". The constitution of the new Federation, the Board found, was similar to the Joint Conference Plan, installed at the Ingleside plant in 1932, and abolished in April 1937, except that employer representatives were omitted.

DEEDS DISPROVED WORDS

Evidence before the Board showed that during May 1937 and the months following, supervisory employes were active in aiding the Federation and in running down the union. In answer to the company's contention that it had observed a strict policy of non-discrimination, the Board replied:

"It is true that the respondent frequently reiterated a policy of non-discrimination, but it is equally true that the repetition of the statement did not render less apparent either its preference for an 'inside' organization or its opposition to the union."

Wages Raised In Dickey Clay Pact

Chattanooga, Tenn., Oct. 27.—A substantial wage increase was won for members of SWOC Lodge 2136 through the first contract signed with the Dickey Mfg. Co.

The steel union recently won an overwhelming majority in a Labor Board election among the employes, and as a result is designated as sole bargaining agent in the agreement.

O. S. Baxter, SWOC representative, was in charge of negotiations for the union.

Furniture Union Fights Pay Cut

Jamestown, N. Y., Oct. 28 — Stirring pleas for the continued support of Jamestown workers in behalf of the locked out employes of the Union-National Furniture Company here were made at a mass meeting here attended by some 700 persons.

Negotiations between Local 34, United Furniture Workers, and the company reached a deadlock after long drawn-out conferences failed to bring a settlement of the dispute. The company is seeking to reduce wages at the plant.

Jack Hochstadt, international secretary-treasurer of the union, told the locked out workers at the meeting that the reduction was unreasonable in face of the 10 per cent cut given a few months before.

He said that this wage cut, if accepted, would serve as a wedge for the cutting of other workers' wages in the furniture center, and pointed out that the community of Jamestown owed a debt to the Union-National workers for fighting the fight of all labor in the industry against decreased living standards.

A telegram from CIO President John L. Lewis was read at the meeting, sending greetings in the name of 4,000,000 CIO members.

Mayor Harry C. Erickson reported that the committee he had set up to find a solution to the dispute was at work and hoped to offer a proposal shortly acceptable to both sides.

Rejection of Union's Offers Prolongs Chrysler Strike, Says Thomas

DETROIT, Oct. 28.—Speedy settlement of the strike of CIO automobile workers in the Chrysler Company here was blocked by company refusal to agree to two proposals offered by the United Automobile Workers, R. J. Thomas, UAWA president, announced.

The two proposals were offered as alternatives to the original UAW demand for a union shop, Thomas disclosed. One would have placed employes who drop union membership at the bottom of the seniority list, and would be limited to those workers who signed cards agreeing to the procedure.

The other proposal, already in effect from a recent settlement in the Bohn Aluminum Co., would maintain the same proportion of union members in the plants during the life of the agreement as obtained at its signing.

Thomas charged that the company's attitude was responsible for keeping 50,000 of its own workers away from their jobs, as well as thousands of others in allied industries.

PROPOSALS REJECTED

"Spokesmen for the Chrysler Corporation today rejected two union proposals offered as alternatives to our original demand for a union shop," Thomas said. "These proposals were put forward by the Union in an effort to bring about a speedy adjustment of the dispute by which the corporation, through its lockout of Dodge workers, has brought about the unemployment of 50,000 of its own employes and several thousand others."

After describing the Union's alternative proposals and noting their rejection by the Company, Thomas continued:

"Previously, we had proposed a union shop clause. The corporation has now rejected three union proposals dealing with recognition. This is typical of the corporation's arbitrary position throughout more than a week of negotiations, which have been fruitless as far as any major agreement is concerned.

POISONED OPINION

"We have met the corporation on each of the issues it has raised in its repeated attempts to poison public opinion against its workers and their chosen union. When the corporation charged falsely that the union was trying to run its plants, we proposed negotiation and arbitration on standards of production and grievances. The corporation replied with a flat no.

"The corporation stated it was ready to concede the union exclusive recognition in its 11 major plants. We have that already, by virtue of our overwhelming victory in the labor board elections.

"In other words the corporation was ready to give us what we have already obtained and what the company is compelled by law to recognize."

"LOOSE TALK"

Criticizing "loose company talk" about the observance of the present agreement, President Thomas pointed out that the union has consistently followed out all provisions of the agreement, even if they worked against the interests of the Union.

"The corporation now admits," he added, "what we have known for some time, that it carried out only those sections that fit in with their current wishes."

The joint conference between management and the union will be resumed Monday, October 30. U. S. Labor department conciliator James F. Dewey, said he was hopeful of an early settlement.

Dept. Store Fur Workers Get Pay Increase

Pittsburgh, Pa., Oct. 28 — Department store fur workers here won a five per cent wage increase as a result of arbitration proceedings between Local 69, International Fur & Leather Workers, and the Labor Standards Association, representing the department stores of Pittsburgh. Willard E. Hotchkiss of the Carnegie Institute of Technology was impartial chairman at the hearing.

The Association had disputed the union's claim that in negotiating the agreement in September 1938, an understanding was reached that a general five per cent increase would be granted at the end of one year, maintaining that this increase was to be granted only to those workers who were receiving the minimum wage.

UAW Wins 3-Week Strike at Kenosha

Kenosha, Wis., Oct. 28. — A three-week strike of 3,000 employes of the Nash-Kelvinator Corporation was settled this week by a signed agreement with the United Automobile Workers, CIO. Ed Hall, UAW official, called the contract "the best yet written in the industry."

Terms of the agreement provide a 24-hour minimum work week, the strikers main demand, a five-cent hourly pay increase, time and a half for overtime, new hourly minimums of 65c for women and 75c for men and a war seniority clause.

The strike victory was celebrated by a big parade through the town after the contract was ratified by the workers.

Auto Strikers Win Agreement

Members of the United Automobile Workers, CIO, picketing the Nash plant, Kenosha, Wis., where they have just won a contract after a three-week strike.

'Poetry' on Mine Accidents Hit

The Americanism of the CIO

"The CIO is an American organization," said Pres. John L. Lewis at the San Francisco convention. "Our people are interested in American problems. Our membership is motivated by American principles. They derive their inspiration from American soil and American conditions."

Again, emphasizing the same point, he declared:

"No policy that the CIO has ever espoused was originated or was conceived from any source or within any source, or within any group, except a group of Americans—just as proud of their Americanism as any industrialist who ever received a corporate bonus; just as proud of their Americanism as any hired lecturer who ever trod a public platform; just as proud of their Americanism as any falsifying publisher who ever dipped his pen in vitriol."

Again and again throughout the convention, in speech after speech, the fundamentally democratic, patriotic and American principles of the CIO were emphasized by the delegates and officers.

But even more convincing than the speakers on this subject were the actions of the convention itself. Every resolution was imbued with the spirit of concern for American liberties and with the determination of American organized workers to make their contribution to the security, freedom and general welfare of the whole American people.

This is nothing new in the CIO. From its inception, the whole movement has been grounded in the best traditions of true Americanism. It has been a movement of expanding democracy, seeking not only to raise the American standard of living but also to bring democratic rights and equality of opportunity to millions of workers who have failed to enjoy the full benefits of citizenship through lack of organization.

There has been no policy and no action of the CIO that does not measure up to the highest of what we are proud to call American principles.

Why then so much stress at the San Francisco convention on proclaiming facts that are obvious to any one who will examine the record of the CIO?

It was due to the fact that liars and slanderers have been abroad in the land — hirelings of anti-union industrialists — spokesmen of selfish interests which seek to promote their private profits and special privileges at the expense of the misery of the many.

All of this motley crew have concentrated on vilifying the CIO. They have sought to throw a cloak of spurious patriotism over their own un-American plots and plans by denouncing the democratic aspirations of American organized workers as "un-American."

The San Francisco convention therefore hurled this lie back into their teeth. The CIO, it proclaimed, is an American institution dedicated to the welfare of American labor and American democracy, and it will not allow any gang of tory profiteers nor anyone else to impugn its Americanism.

It Can and Will Be Done

The CIO, again and again, has done what was declared to be impossible.

How often did the AFL leaders declare privately, and even publicly, that it was impossible to organize the giant mass production industries like steel, automobiles and the rest?

Yet the CIO had hardly been going a year before it began signing union agreements with the world's biggest corporations in these industries.

One company that generations of labor leaders claimed to be impossible to organize was the Baldwin Locomotive Works. This company had a record of 130 years' hostility to organized labor. It defeated many attempts of the Knights of Labor and the AFL to organize its plants.

But now comes a proud announcement from the Steel Workers Organizing Committee of the CIO that it has signed a sole bargaining agreement covering all employes in this company's Baldwin-Southwark shops at Eddystone, Pa.

The CIO has never recognized that any plant is unorganizable. With its modern form of industrial organization it has organized the biggest and the toughest in the country. This latest victory is further evidence that it won't be long now before a lot more of the holdout companies are brought into the union camp.

Hard To Scare

Looking Ahead

By LEN DE CAUX

CIO Creates a New Model

THE CIO has established a new model of streamlined efficiency in the conduct of its conventions.

The old-model labor convention was an occasion for a bunch of cronies to get together periodically for a week or two of poker-playing, back-slapping, horse-trading and such amusement and relaxation as might appeal to their several tastes.

Days of long-winded speeches provided plenty of opportunity for doing everything else but listening to the speeches. And in the intervals when convention business was actually transacted, the pace was leisurely, the discussion rambling and most of the decisions were a foregone conclusion.

The CIO-model convention, on the other hand, is so businesslike that it provides no opportunities for a comfortable snooze. Delegates who want to take time out have to do so at their own peril. For every hour of the sessions is packed with pointed discussion of live issues and with important decisions. Actual convention business is transacted almost uninterruptedly from the opening of the session until the fall of the gavel for adjournment.

CIO SPEECHES

Looking back on the San Francisco convention, one is amazed at the volume of business packed into its four days. Yet the record will show that there was full opportunity for discussion of every major issue.

One of the reasons for all this efficiency and dispatch can be found in the new CIO model of convention oratory.

The old-time AFL speaker is apt to start his oration with the days of his childhood. Some go further back to the first origins of the labor movement, or even the beginnings of history itself.

The first hour or so of the speech is devoted to personal history and the like, and by the time the subject under discussion is reached most of the audience have forgotten what it is all about.

At the CIO convention, in contrast, there was not a single speech lasting more than half an hour. Every speaker went at once to the heart of his subject and kept to the points at issue until he concluded.

There is one disadvantage, however, in all of this for those who could not themselve attend the convention.

The limitations of the general and labor press are such that when too many important things happen all at one time, they cannot all receive the full attention they deserve.

A FEW HIGHSPOTS

To list just a few of the highspots of this great Congress of American labor will give some idea of the difficulties of adequate reporting:

The opening keynote speech of President John L. Lewis. His outline of labor's stand on war. His emphasis on the primary importance of organization. His goal of ten millions of members in five years.

The speech of California's progressive governor, Culbert L. Olson, and the emphasis on labor's part in electing him.

The comprehensive report of President Lewis, covering every phase of CIO activity and policy.

The resolution and speeches on the European war, emphasizing CIO opposition to U. S. participation and the patriotic Americanism of its stand.

Vice President Murray's speech on technological unemployment and the action taken to cope with it.

The reports of the leaders of the Automobile, Steel, Packinghouse, Textile, Metal Mining and other unions, recounting records of CIO union progress unparalleled in labor history.

The resolutions covering every kind of labor and social legislation, and presenting labor's demands for security, decent housing, unemployment relief and civil rights.

The resolutions and speeches covering organizing problems and plans of nearly every major industry.

The CIO program for political action, and the enthusiastic support expressed for Labor's Non-Partisan League.

The prograam for labor cooperation with the farmers.

The vigorous criticism of the National Labor Relations Board for departing from basic Wagner Act purposes in its recent anti-CIO policies.

The tremendous ovation for President Lewis upon his re-election, and the confidence evidenced in Hillman, Murray and all the other officers elected.

The closing speech of President Lewis, emphasizing the fundamentally democratic and American character of the CIO.

The constant emphasis from every angle throughout the convention on the basic task of organizing the unorganized.

CIO Speakers List Record Of Success

Wider Use of Radio Urged at Convention; Broadcasts Criticized

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28—Considerable time and attention was given to radio as a means of labor expression by the delegates to the CIO convention, both on the auditorium floor and in a conference of CIO editors and publicity directors held after one of the sessions.

Pres. Lewis' report to the convention, which described increasing CIO use of radio and concurrent attempts by broadcasters to deny this use to labor, precipitated the discussion.

A resolution pointing out the prime importance of radio as "indispensable to the exercise of the right of freedom of speech," instructed the executive officers of the CIO to "exercise constant vigilance over the availability of radio facilities to organized labor and if necessary to press for appropriate legislation assuring the fundamental right of full and equal access to radio facilities for organized labor."

CONDEMN BROADCASTERS

Speakers on the resolution, including Delegate Eagle of the United Rubber Workers and Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, criticized the recent announcement by the Natl. Association of Broadctsers that from now on no time would be sold for radio discussion of "controversial subjects."

They pointed out that this would put labor organizations absolutely at the mercy of broadcasters, who would be left with complete discretion as to what was or was not a "controversial subject," and would make them entirely dependent on free time for radio expression of their views.

Free time, it was pointed out, would obviously be limited at the whim of the broadcasting stations, many of which are owned by newspapers and other interests not noted for their friendliness to organized labor.

The CIO editors' and publicity directors' conference, besides discussing editorial and publication problems, devoted a major part of its time to a review of present CIO radio programs and to plan for further extension.

Paul Ryan of the San Francisco CIO and Robert Cruden of the United Rubber Workers desribed the programs put on in their cities — Cruden noting that already the Akron station used by his union was attempting to deny its facilities to the CIO under the new code.

Main point of CIO radio programs, Ryan said, was to put them on the air as many times during the week as possible, a short five times weekly program being much more effective than longer periods further apart.

'Organize the Unorganized' Keynote of Convention Speakers in Reports

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28 — The CIO convention keynote — organize the unorganized — was dominant not only in the resolutions for future action and in prophecies of greater victories to come, but was recorded as accomplished fact in speeches from CIO leaders reporting on the achievements of their unions in the past 12 months.

Sidney Hillman, CIO vice-president and leader of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, who paid tribute to the millions of CIO members and their leaders for the accomplishments of the past year.

Occasion for listing these achievements was prompted by the reading of the report of the convention committee on Officers' Reports, which concluded:

"We have built well against the storm of the past few years, and with this treasury of strength and experience we can now go forward to resume our major task of organizing the unorganized.

"It was this principle that fired the imagination of the workers and citizens of our nation and it is the hope of your committee that this second constitutional convention will renew the slogan of organize the unorganized and make the watchword of the coming year's history of the CIO.

"There are doubtless many others important functions which this movement must perform. But none of these functions compares in urgency, none of these functions can stand in the way of our re-dedication to the duty of organizing the unorganized."

A RECORD OF ACHIEVEMENT

Led by Vice-President Philip Murray, and Vice-President Sidney Hillman, Emil Rieve, president of the Textile Workers and Vice-President of the CIO, Reid Robinson, head of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers and also a CIO Vice-President, Van A. Bittner, chairman of the Packinghouse Workers, R. J. Thomas, head of the Automobile Workers, and CIO Vice-President, and Wm. Carney, CIO regional director in New Jersey, all stood up to report continued progress over the past year, to praise the correct industrial union policies of the CIO, and to promise greater achievements in the future.

VICTORY IN STEEL

Speaking on the steel industry, whose giant union he heads, Vice-President Murray drew a brief history of steel labor conditions before the CIO was established, showing a basic industry ruled by fear, by the open shop, by political serfdom, and its results in long hours, low pay, semi-slave conditions.

"Today," he said, "we have 614 corporation-wide collective bargaining agreements governing the conditions of employment, hours of labor, and wages of some 625,000 workers.

"The research department established at our headquarters has succeeded in accumulating data which factually proves that the steel workers of the nation have received, since the creation of our organization, annual wage increases amounting to approximately $287,000,000.

"We have reduced the work week from 48 to 40 hours. We have provided overtime for all work done in excess of eight hours in any one day or 40 hours in any one week. We have established definite seniority privileges for all workers employed in that industry.

"We have brought economic liberty into the lives of 875,000 steel workers. And with all of this we have brought positive political freedom to every worker employed in that great industry.

THINK IT OVER

"Now, dear old rusty American Federation of Labor, just mull over that in the city of Cincinnati. Let the reactionary interests that put us on the spot and condemn us think about that."

Vice-President Hillman, stepping down for a moment from the convention chair, urged the delegates to remember the credit due to the "millions and millions of our membership, to the officers of our international unions, and the state organizations" and paid renewed tribute to the leadership of Pres. Lewis as the source of CIO success and promise for the future.

"It is well that at this time the achievements and accomplishments, as brought to your attention in the report, and so splendidly reported to you by your committee, is commanding your attention," he said.

"It is sufficient to say that the fact that we are meeting today, afer a year of recession and depression, with our power intact, with further progress being made, is the greatest compliment to the membership and to the officers of our organization."

KEY TO THE SOUTH

The textile industry, key to the South, is being organized today for the first time in history, and must be organized still further, if the CIO is to make headway in the vast areas of exploitation in the southern states, Emil Rieve, Textile Workers Union head, declared.

For 50 years the AFL tried to organize this industry, Rieve said —by resolutions and by begging for the cooperation of the employers — "with what success you and I know."

CIO Drive in Utilities Planned at Conclave

Washington, Oct. 28.—CIO National Officers were instructed by the San Francisco convention to conduct a "vigorous, nation-wide campaign of organization" to bring the benefits of industrial unionism to all workers in the giant utility industry.

The resolution, presented to the convention by the Utility Workers Organizing Committee, was urged on the delegates by Allan S. Haywood, UWOC chairman and National CIO Organization Director, stated in part:

"This industry is protected against any competition through the medium of legislation and commissions set up in the various states,

"Utility heads have on numerous occasions through their powerful lobbies in every state in the union, as well as in Washington, resisted the efforts of labor to improve its lot, and have spent millions of dollars in seeking to control the legislative halls of the nation by financing candidates for public office, and

"The workers engaged in this industry lack security and are subject to many abuses on the part of management."

Haywood, speaking on the resolution, pointed out that the utilities have a record unparalleled anywhere in industry for the extent of their monopoly power and the strength of their political lobbies — all of which operate against the interests of workers and consumers alike.

Praise CIO Press As Labor Aid

Washington, Oct. 28—Organizing the unorganized, and the part that the CIO press can play in pushing this objective, was the main note in the report of the convention committee on Press and Publicity approved by the delegates in San Francisco.

The committee, headed by Philip Connelly of the Lost Angeles Newspaper Guild, chairman, and Len De Caux, CIO publicity director, secretary, praised the "great improvement, in content and appearance, achieved in the course of this year by the various periodical publications of the affiliated CIO unions" and urged greater efforts to continue and expand this work during the coming 12 months.

HIT AFL, PUBLISHERS

AFL "general denunciation" of the CIO Newspaper Guild as an alleged "propaganda agency of the CIO" was sharply criticized by the Committee as an attack not only on the Guild but on the whole "progressive march" of the CIO.

"We declare that the influence the American Newspaper Guild has exerted in behalf of the CIO has been the example it has offered to millions of white collar and professional workers of America, in its ability to organize a progressive union and to promote the economic interests of its members," the report said.

Even Editor and Publisher, organ of newspaper owners, "has admitted that the quality of news coverage during the past five years of existence of the Guild has noticeably improved," the Committee said.

"The dishonest attack on the Guild in the name of a free press is no longer confined to anti-union publishers of the commercial press. Today we find the AFL joining in the cry. . . ."

AID TO CAMPAIGNS

The report called for dedication of CIO publications and publicity activities to the "great task" of aiding the CIO objectives of organizing the unorganized, and urged special attention to mobilizing "greater progressive labor and middle class participation in political and legislative action to effectuate the general program of the CIO."

The Committee also used a sizable portion of its report in urging greater attention to use of radio by CIO affiliates, condemned the limitations on time for labor subjects now being promoted by broadcasters, and laid out an outline for effective CIO use of radio.

City of Flint's Skipper Figured in Algic Case

New York—(FP) — Waterfront circles are wondering here how Capt. Joseph A. Gainard of the City of Flint reacted to the capture of his vessel by a Nazi warship, which took the American freighter to the Russian port of Murmansk. The ship carries a crew of 38, all members of the Natl. Maritime Union (CIO).

As a contender for the title of most popular skipper, Gainard would run about last in any poll of seamen. He is remembered for his role in prosecution of the crew of the S. S. Algic for mutiny in 1937.

While the Algic was at anchor in the port of Montevideo, the crew declined to work with scab longshoremen. Gainard was unwell at the time, but he got up from bed and went ashore to telephone the U. S. Maritime Commission, his temperature rising by the minute from other than pathological causes.

Joseph Kennedy, now ambassador to Great Britain, was then chairman of the commission. He recommended mutiny charges, which were successfully prosecuted in federal court in Baltimore. A number of the seamen were fined.

Farm Aid Policy, Organization Urged by CIO

BETWEEN THE LINES

By Cecil Owen

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28 — The truce on all legislation except neutrality seems about to be busted wide open in the House while the Senate drones on about foreign affairs.

Under the personal leadership of Speaker Bankhead a group of some 60 House members from southern drought-stricken states are putting on a campaign for drought relief legislation. Unless the Administration can find a way to relieve their farmer constituents under existing law this powerful bloc will force action on new legislation.

Other threats to the peaceful atmosphere on Capitol Hill are Martin Dies' request for more funds and the anti-lynching bill which any one of more than 200 Congressmen can call up at any time. Under the truce proposed by the Administration, anti-lynching has been held in abeyance but some of its proponents are getting restive.

Those who want more money for Dies and those who want anti-lynching legislation may soon come into a head on collision in the House even though there is much overlapping between the two groups. Some Republican diehards would like to call up the lynching bill as a way to embarrass the Administration. If Dies persists in seeking more funds now, the liberals are likely to join in demanding anti-lynching action as a way to head off Dies.

Washington is thoroughly bored with the neutrality issue and Congress may be hard to control if it stays here much longer.

DANGEROUS NOTE

Some of the more war-minded brass hats around Washington are already beginning to see spies under their beds. Here's a paragraph from a recent business news letter that carries a sinister note for labor:

"Industrialists producing war materials are appealing to Washington for protection, chiefly against sabotage. The Labor Board has repeatedly ruled that it is illegal to use 'labor spies.' How protect industrial establishments unless agents can be 'planted' to detect destructive activities?"

If this sort of thinking should prevail in official circles it would mean a return of the company spy system under the guise of protection against sabotage. The truth is that labor has uncovered and reported sabotage only to find company and Army officials lax in going after the real saboteurs. The Justice Department has a file of charges on this subject that were sent in by Harry Bridges' CIOers on the west coast.

WALLACE AND CONSUMERS

Once more Secretary of Agriculture Wallace has been playing ball with big vested interests at the expense of labor and the consumers. This time he has run into a clash with New York's fiery and pro-labor Mayor F. H. LaGuardia and fireworks are likely.

The current incident is an aftermath of the dairy farmers strike, jointly conducted and won by the Farmers' Union and the CIO in New York, which resulted in agreement to pay $2.15 a hundredweight. Right after the strike victory, the big milk companies put over two price increases for consumers blaming it on the strike. Now the farmers find they are only to get $2.08 instead of the agreed $2.15.

What LaGuardia thinks of this is best told in his own scrappy words:

"This is not only disappointing and shocking but it is chiseling in the very lowest sense of that contemptible word. There can be no misunderstanding of the terms of the agreement which took place in City Hall.

"If the U. S. Department of Agriculture is a party to this betrayal of the farmers I want to know it. There is money enough to pay the $2.15 price. The consumers of New York were charged an additional cent and a half per quart for the reason of the added price to be paid the farmers. What now prompts the reduction of the price after it has been collected from the consumers? It looks like the consumers are paying and the farmers are not getting it."

LaGuardia called on Wallace's Department, which has supervision over milk prices, for an explanation.

POLICE CHIEFS' ERROR

Some of the police chiefs' queried by the Smith, D., Va., committee probing the Labor Board have sent their replies to the Labor Board itself. The police apparently don't even know the difference between the Labor Board and the Congressional committee set up to investigate it.

A number of small-town police chiefs are sending in responses that the anti-labor Smith committee will find difficult to use in their campaign against the Wagner Act and labor. These officers are in communities where labor is mighty and they are not anxious to go on record against legitimate union activity.

MURPHY ON CIVIL LIBERTIES

One of the finest speeches ever delivered by a member of the Roosevelt Administration was the talk of Attorney General Frank Murphy to the New York Civil Liberties Conference.

His appearance there brought down in advance the wrath of the Dies committee on his head, but the Attorney General of the United States went ahead with it anyway. This act of loose majeste will probably result in demands for his impeachment, or something, by Dies.

Murphy gave unqualified pledges that the Bill of Rights and labor's civil liberties would not be infringed in the government's efforts to uncover foreign spies. He quoted the Supreme Court as saying:

"The Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people, equally in war and peace, and covers with the shield of its protection all classes of men, at all times, and under all circumstances."

He also said "there will be no alignments with agents of vigilante groups of private industrial organizations which are concerned primarily with industrial disputes and labor problems. Enforcement officials will themselves obey the law of the land."

N. Y. Labor Aids Quill Campaign

New York, Oct. 28.—Formation of a labor committee for the re-election of Michael Quill, CIO Transport Workers Union president running for his second term as New York City Councilman, was announced here.

The committee is headed by Allan S. Haywood, CIO National Organization Director and former local CIO Regional Director, Elmer Brown, president of the N. Y. Typographical Union and Brian Feeney, head of the AFL Compressed Air Workers (Sandhogs).

Quill, who is running in the Bronx, will have the support of more than 3,000 active trade unionists already enlisted, with many hundreds more to come, as campaign aids in a closely contested campaign.

Up to Oct. 24, N. Y. locals of 15 CIO national and international unions had endorsed Quill's campaign, as well as seven AFL affiliates, in addition to the Typographical Union.

Financial and other aid to Quill's campaign has already been pledged in quantity, Victor Bloswick, Transport Workers Union secretary of the committee, announced.

Accuses Shipowners Of Stalling

New York, Oct. 28 — Negotiations between the National Maritime Union and the American Merchant Marine Institute are being snagged by "what amounts to a lockout" for the purpose of defeating the signing of a contract, the NMU said today.

An official statement issued by the Negotiating Committee declared that the operators are deliberately stalling negotiations for a new contract to replace the one expiring this month, as part of a long-range program for destroying the union.

The statement recalls the exposure early this year of a group of disrupters within the union, headed by Ray Carlucci of the Railway Audit & Inspection Company, and Jerome Medeiros, known in the union as Jerry King.

According to confessions by members of the group, the statement said, the group was financed by shipowners, many of whom are represented in present contract negotiations.

MOVES EXPECTED

The moves that the union expects the operators to take in the next few weeks were outlined in the statement. They included a prediction that the operators would stall on the employment clause to confuse the public, which does not realize that union hiring is necessary for the preservation of the union.

With the union destroyed, the shipowners could slash wages and drive the seamen back to the days of slavery, the statement declared.

Further attempts would be made, the committee stated, to weaken the union through paid agents working inside and outside the union, by disrupting meetings, attacking union officials, dragging out the red herring, raising demands for a new "rank and file" committee, and appealing to a government agency, possibly the Maritime Commission, to step in and "restore order."

Convention Outlines Farm Policy; Urges Rural Organization

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28—CIO policy on farm program and the organization of agricultural workers received prominent place in the resolutions at the second constitutional convention just held in San Francisco.

On the farm program, the CIO pledged its full support to fair prices for farm products, to be fixed at "not less than cost of production," hailed cooperation between farm organizations and CIO affiliates during the past year, and urged all CIO officers and members to continue to work closely with farmers in striving to solve problems common to both groups.

For farm workers, which included those in food packing, processing and canning, the CIO outlined a program of union organization and political activity designed to bring them the full benefits already won for millions of industrial workers.

BASIC POINTS

Calling attention to the viciously anti-labor practices of the Associated Farmers, banker-dominated vigilante group with chief strength in the west, the resolution called for organization and legislation to bring about:

"Defeat of reactionary measures to deprive these workers of the benefits of existing social legislation,

"Congressional authorization for larger appropriations to the Farm Security Administration for its labor camp, farm labor housing and relief grant programs,

"Congressional authorization for the Departments of Agriculture and Labor to make studies and gather statistics with reference to farm labor programs,

"Amendment and extension of all state industrial labor laws to provide agricultural labor with protection and benefits now enjoyed by industrial labor."

In addition, the resolution pledged full CIO aid to the Cannery and Agricultural Workers in its campaigns "to organize these unorganized farm workers on the large scale industrialized farms and workers in the food packing, processing and canning industries."

HENDERSON SPEAKS

Donald Henderson, president of the CIO Cannery and Agricultural Workers, spoke on the resolution, describing the situation of millions of poverty-stricken workers in his union's jurisdiction as "a keg of nitroglycerine."

"I sometimes feel, and other leaders of our union feel, as though we were handling a keg of nitroglycerine, where the slightest false step would result in an explosion fatal to both the person carrying it and all the surrounding bystanders," he said.

These people have been almost incredibly patient, he said, but unless some steps are taken soon to show that the agricultural worker is "not a slave, to be starved and exploited as a forgotten man, neither my union nor any union can prevent sporadic outbreaks of mass strikes, blind, leaderless and chaotic."

PRAISES LEWIS

Henderson praised Pres. Lewis for his effective denunciation of the tory coalition attacking the Wages and Hours law in the last session of Congress, and for his blistering expose of Vice-President John N. Garner as leader of the conspiracy against agricultural workers and all labor.

In conclusion, he declared that this problem is not just a trade union concern, but one that "goes right down to the roots of our whole social system here."

CIO Unions in Canada Strike for More Pay

TORONTO, Ont., Oct. 28.—Hard-rock and coal miners, organized in CIO unions, were this week engaged in strikes in three provinces for wage raises to bring pay levels to equal the soaring increases in the cost of living.

Pioneer Gold Mine employes in British Columbia struck for a dollar a day raise to keep step with the increase in the price of gold which advanced $3.50 an ounce since the declaration of war in Europe. The men are members of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union, CIO.

The gold miners struck when the provincial department failed to send a conciliator within three days of notice to strike as required by law. Employes of nearby Bralorne Mines are cooperating with the strikers.

Ten union members went into nearby hills, with permission of B. C. police to hunt deer for families in need.

COAL MINERS STRIKE

In Estevan, Saskatchewan, members of the United Mine Workers of America, struck for a contract with the coal operators. The strike is also intended to eliminate a small company union group known as the Canadian Federation of Labor which is hindering contractual relations between the UMW and the operators.

Several strikes took place in the Nova Scotia mine fields for a wage raise which would cover the increase in the cost of living.

Meanwhile local 29 of the International Woodworkers of America in Lake Cowichan, B. C., is preparing to negotiate for a 20 per cent wage raise.

The IWA is also campaigning against the high accident rate in B. C. logging camps. Forty-nine men have been killed in the camps since the first of the year.

The union is asking the government to take measures to prevent the mounting toll of logging accidents.

Lewis Calls For Expanding Wage Standards in U. S.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28—Recognizing the paramount importance of an expanding share of the products of American industrial wealth for the workers of this nation, the CIO convention went on record condemning attempts to shackle workers to a wage scale limited to the cost of living in a unanimous resolution at the San Francisco convention.

Following are the full text of the resolution and excerpts from Pres. Lewis' speech in support of it:

RESOLUTION

"WHEREAS. (1) The working men and women in the United States do not yet receive a fair share of the results of their own labor; and

(2) It becomes necessary for labor to win wage increases in order to preserve its present inadequate standards; and

(3) An effort has been made to compel the working men and women in the United States to remain chained to their present standard of living by limiting wage increases to increases in the cost of living; now, therefore be it

RESOLVED, That the CIO hereby condemns as pernicious and inequitable the principle that wage increases must be related to increases in the cost of living as simply a way to chain labor forever to its present inadequate share in the wealth of this country."

Supporting the resolution, Pres. Lewis said in part:

"Quite often people whose knowledge of economics is superficial or unsound believe that they are taking a very virtuous position when they say that they are quite willing for the wages of the workers of this country to advance in proportion to the increase in the cost of living.

"That position presupposes that the economic statues of the workers of this country is ideal in relation to cost of production, national income and the other varied factors of consideration.

CONTRARY TRUE

"The contrary is true. The relationship of labor, both to the cost of production, to the total value of our commodities produced, to the total national income and the increasing production efficiency of our producing machine is totally inadequate.

"It is economically unsound, socially unjust and politically unwise. Labor must unceasingly be on guard against the acceptance of this philosophy, because I proclaim that the position of labor in our economy is not ideal, or just, or satisfactory. Labor wants a continuously increasing participation in the increased productivity of modern industry, and a larger share in the bounties of our national wealth.

NO OTHER PREMISE

"On no other premise can employment be maintained; under no other arrangement can national purchasing power be maintained; upon no other arrangement can we care for that element of our population constantly being dispossessed of participation in our internal economy and our productive establishment by the utilization of energy, the application of new formulas, by the use of automatic and semi-automatic machines.

"Labor wants a larger participation, and labor must have an increasing participation in the fruits of our men of genius, of our technicians, of our chemists of high and low degree.

"Labor cannot be a consumer of the products of men and factories unless labor is given a constantly increasing participation in the increasing efficiency of production and in the natural wealth of the nation. I think the presentation of this resolution is most timely.

ON GUARD

"I think it is a very important consideration. I think it is well that our people should be constantly on guard and, without apology, at all times decline to accept that status that is given labor by those who say, virtuously and sanctimoniously, like Pharises in the market places;

" 'Oh, yes! I am perfectly willing that if the price of milk goes up in a community, wages shall be increased so that the worker can still get exactly the same amount of milk for his children'."

Silicosis Victims Die While Board Ponders

DENVER, Colo., Oct. 28.—Fifty out of 500 claimants have died of silicosis while awaiting a decision on charges filed with the National Labor Relations Board against the Eagle - Picher Company in the tri-state area of Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma, according to President Reid Robinson of the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers. The case has been pending for four years.

In a letter to NLRB Chairman J. Warren Madden, made public today, Robinson asked an immediate decision on the case, which was one of the first to be filed with the Board.

"No less than 50 claimants have died from the ravages of silicosis," the letter stated. "We are wondering how many more must die before the Labor Board will hand down a decision in the case.

More than half of the remaining 450 workers named in the charges of discrimination and unfair labor practices have silicosis, Robinson said.

WORST IN NATION

The CIO union blames the working conditions which have made the zinc and lead mines of the Tri-State the worst silicosis breeders in the nation, upon the company's greed for profits.

"A majoritly of the miners become infected with this dread lung disease because of lack of precautions commonly observed in other mining areas," the union declared.

Western Union Strikers Clip "Back to Work"

San Francisco—Quick work by the American Communications on behalf of its members on strike against Western Union here scotched a plan by the Pacific Coast president of the company union, J. H. Pickett, to organize a back-to-work movement at a meeting in the Palace Hotel here.

The messengers threw up a picket line around the hotel and sent a delegation to the manager protesting the use of the hotel as a strikebreaking headquarters. Mr. Pickett was evicted.

CIO Unions Aid Labor's League

Warm endorsement of Labor's Non-Partisan League and its program of progressive political action was voted by the United Rubber Workers at its fourth annual convention at LaCrosse, Wis.

The American Newspaper Guild, meeting in annual convention at San Francisco, similarly voted enthusiastic backing of the League's program and for extension of New Deal legislation.

Text of the Rubber Workers resolution is:

"The elections in many states in 1938 have sorely demonstrated the need for organized labor to extend its activities in politics for the purpose of protection of social and labor legislation, and

"Labor's Non-Partisan League has proven itself a valuable instrument in labor political action; therefore be it

"Resolved, That this convention of the URWA go on record as endorsing Labor's Non-Partisan League; and be it further

"Resolved, That all local unions of the URWA shall be urged by the incoming executive board to affiliate with the state organization of the League."

Frank Grillo, international secretary-treasurer of the URWA, is chairman of the League in Akron and a leading figure in progressive political action in Ohio. The candidate favored by the League recently won nomination in the Akron mayoralty contest.

The Newspaper Guild resolutions listed laws of benefit to labor and the public generally and declared it would use all its political power to prevent any turning back of the clock. The officials of the Guild are making plans to extend Guild participation everywhere in Labor's Non-Partisan League.

Local Gets Short Course In "Justice"

Chicago, Oct. 28—The experiences of Local 120, United Rubber Workers, which filed a charge of assault with a deadly weapon against a scab who dropped a heavy, 12 inch chisel from a fourth story window on the head of a picket at the Rapid Roller Co. here, netted the following course in the administration of "justice" by Chicago police and judges:

The police refused to arrest the assailant, even though witnesses said they saw the scab lean out the window and take careful aim.

The union finally secured a John Doe warrant, which the police then disclaimed knowledge of for five days. Finally forced to enter the plant to serve the warrant, they tried to postpone it till the next day at the company's request.

CASE CLOSED

The judge listened to identification of the assailant by four state witnesses and ridiculed the idea that they could see anyone "away up on the fourth floor." Thereupon he postponed the trial for five days and visited the plant himself, escorted by the president of the struck company.

When the trial was resumed the judge ordered the union lawyer, who acted as state prosecutor, from the court when he insisted on entering exceptions to the judge's rulings. Three different and contradictory alibis were entered by the company which the judge sustained.

The judge "warned" the union attorney to cease "coaching" witnesses, and—acquitted the accused, thus closing the case.

Resolutions On Labor Board And Use of Act

Two resolutions of the CIO convention, one severely criticizing the National Labor Relations Board for its maladministration of the Wagner Act and the other advising more sparing recourse to the Act, are printed here in full. Both resolutions were passed unanimously after detailed discussion by the delegates.

LABOR BOARD

WHEREAS, (1) With increasing frequency the National Labor Relations Board has announced interpretations of the Wagner Labor Act which reflect a diversion of administrative policy from the basic purposes of the act which are to strengthen organized labor and advance the practice of collective bargaining, and such interpretations, if permitted by organized labor to proceed unchecked, may lead to the following results:

(a) Permitting craft organizations to raid established industrial unions and to carve out craft units indiscriminately and arbitrarily from industrial bargaining units,

(b) Breaking down multi-plant employer units, frequently in spite of a definite history of bargaining on the basis of such units and an established practice of membership contracts covering such units, and

(c) A requirement of proof in company union cases of such an extent and such a nature as to prevent the effective elimination of company unions in many obvious cases; and

(2) The Board has likewise in recent months adopted a policy of eliminating from its legal and administrative staffs all personnel which could by any remote possibility be considered as unfavorable to the policies herein condemned, or as wanting in a bias against the CIO and the principles for which it stands; and

(3) A development of such policies, with the concomitant displacement and substitution of personnel, having without question been determined upon as part of a policy of appeasement toward the reactionary AFL Bureaucracy and some of the most powerful and dangerous employers in the country; now, therefore be it

RESOLVED, (1) That the CIO condemns without qualification the policies of the National Labor Relations Board which undermine the basic purposes of the Act to strengthen organized labor and advance the practice of collective bargaining; and

(2) The CIO likewise and as fully condemns the administrative policies of the Board which have resulted and continue to result in the displacement of unbiased personnel in favor of personnel antagonistic to the CIO and the elimination of personnel not fully sympathetic to the doctrines and interpretations of law herein condemned; and

(3) The CIO brands the adoption of such policies and such displacements of personnel as an unwarranted and unworthy retreat by the National Labor Relations Board under fire from the reactionary officials of the AFL and the most powerful and dangerous corporate employers of the land.

USE OF THE ACT

WHEREAS, (1) The administration of the National Labor Relations Act has been characterized from the beginning by delay of such magnitude as to render the benefits of the law problematical in many instances; and

(2) Since the enactment of the Act organized labor has been inclined to rely far too heavily upon the law for the achievement of its purposes in protecting the workers of the country; now, therefore be it

RESOLVED, (1) That for these reasons this convention commends to all CIO affiliates a most sparing and considered use of the Wagner Labor Act in the future; and

(2) This convention calls upon the National Labor Relations Board to revise its methods and procedure fundamentally and drastically to the end that more prompt relief be afforded in its cases.

Political Action Plans Laid at Convention; Labor League Pushed

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28. — Vigorous participation in the 1940 election contests to protect and advance labor's political gains was voted by the CIO convention.

Support of Labor's Non-Partisan League as "an instrumentality for united progressive political action" was reaffirmed by formal resolution.

Talks by League Chairman John L. Lewis, Vice-Chairman Philip Murray and other noted CIO leaders recognized the vital role of the League over the past several years and gave it a clear go-ahead signal for the future. The League Lewis predicted, has "a great political future before it."

Many state League officials who were present as delegates of their unions were asked to rise by Chairman Lewis, who told of the scores of state and local contests in which the League forces have played an important part. Lewis observed there had been a deliberate effort by the press to minimize the League's victories.

WARNING TO POLITICIANS

Lewis served warning on the politicians of the nation that they cannot ignore labor nor betray its trust without paying the penalty on election day. The League, he emphasized, is the official instrument of labor's political action and has the full confidence of the CIO.

The League was given a rousing send-off in a talk by Murray that brought out the broad basis of the League's support not only in the labor movement but among liberals generally. He told of the League's work in keeping labor and its liberal allies abreast of Washington and state political events, and said:

"I know of many civic-minded people who are promoting Labor's Non-Partisan League in their communities. The League is a non-partisan political institution created for the single purpose of promoting the best interests of the workers in the United States."

Introduced by Lewis E. L. Oliver, executive vice-president of the League, prefaced the discussion of political action with a talk in which he hammered home the importance to labor of watching developments in Congress. Referring to the legislative program adopted by the CIO convention, Oliver said:

ANOTHER CONGRESS

". . . many of these resolutions must still be submitted to another Congress; a Congress in which the sympathy for the cause of labor is, to put it mildly, somewhat less strong than it is here."

The League's organizing work for the 1940 campaign, Oliver informed the convention, is already under way in all parts of the nation. Without exception, he added, the CIO is giving unstinting support to the League's program.

Instructions were given the Executive Board of the CIO to coordinate the political and legislative activities of CIO affiliates. The resolution recognized as greater than ever the need of legislative solution of economic problems and called attention to such achievements as the Wagner Act, Social Security Act, Housing and Wage-Hour Acts.

Commenting on the current political situation, the resolution said:

"The past year has witnessed the coalition of all the reactionary forces in the country in both the major political parties in a desperate attempt to defeat all new progressive measures and to repeal existing social legislation."

After noting that the League is an instrumentality for united progressive political action, the resolution concluded:

RESOLVED, (1) The essence of effective political action by labor is predicated upon the strength of labor demonstrated by its numbers in the labor organizations; and

(2) That this convention commends the activities and functions of Labor's Non-Partisan League in its efforts to elect progressive candidates to public office committed to a program of social and labor legislation for the protection of labor; and

(3) That in view of the deep importance to labor of the approaching 1940 national election, the Executive Board take appropriate action to coordinate the political and legislative activities of each of its affiliates and to establish cooperation with progressive groups in support of a constructive program to preserve and extend the political gains and legislative achievements obtained through the efforts and strength of labor for the economic security and social welfare of the American people.

Department Store Workers in Drive

New York City—Citing its contract with Cooperative Distributors here providing a $21 minimum wage and 39-hour week as a model for the organization of small department stores, Local 1250, Department Store Employes Union, CIO, set up a committee to organize 15,000 workers in such stores.

The committee pledged itself to active work to end a situation where $10 a week wages and sweat shop conditions threaten the gains they have made in the large department stores like Macys, Gimbels, Hearns and Bloomingdales.

Firm Flees But Union Catches Up

Fall River, Mass., Oct. 28—The Flint Furniture Company which ran away from New York and discarded its former name, Kass Bros., in the hope of evading union organization, has been forced to sign an agreement with the United Furniture Workers after a five-week strike here.

The strike was called Sept. 4, after the workers had responded to an organizing drive, and charges of unfair labor practices had been filed with the National Labor Relations Board. The Union's charges were based on the company's reported efforts to bribe the strikers to return to work by offering them bonuses and free trips to the New York World's Fair.

The charges were withdrawn after the contract was signed with the union in the Boston office of the NLRB.

Lewis in Review Of League Growth Sees 'Great Future'

Text of Chairman John L. Lewis' remarks to the convention on the subject of Labor's Non-Partisan League:

"Labor's Non-Partisan League was organized in 1936. Mr. Sidney Hillman was one of the founders and is now treasurer of the League. Mr. George L. Berry, who afterwards became United States Senator from Tennessee, was the first chairman of the League.

"The League played a very great part in the presidential election of 1936; it was most active in that campaign. It exercised profound influence and was the deciding factor in thousands of communities in the industrial states of the union. It helped to finance the Democratic Party and it helped to re-elect President Roosevelt.

"Since that time in state after state it has participated in a most effective way in gubernatorial campaigns and in state and municipal and county elections of high and low degree. In great numbers of instances the vote of the League and its membership was the controlling factor in those elections.

LABOR VOTE DECIDING FACTOR

"In those elections where the League was unsuccessful in electing its endorsed candidates, the hostile press of the nation were loud in their condemnation of the League, and in each election predicted that the defeat of the League in that particular election was the proposition that indicated that the League was ineffective and without force.

"In those elections in many great cities of the union where the vote of labor is exemplified by Labor's Non-Partisan League, it was the deciding factor in the elections, and where they were successful in returning to office the liberal candidates endorsed, the press of the nation continuously minimized the effect of those elections and the part played by the League.

"Labor's Non-Partisan League has a great political future before it in this country because as our great units of labor expand in their membership and grow in their influence, so Labor's Non-Partisan League will expand in its numerical strength and grow in its influence in the political elections that interest our people under our form of government.

"I am most happy indeed that the League has such a splendid record, and, more than that, I am most happy in having some knowledge of the part that Labor's Non-Partisan League and labor expect to play in the presidential election in this republic of ours in the year 1940.

"Let no public representative or citizen underestimate the tremendous power and influence now being exercised by labor in the political realm of the nation, and let no politician assume that he can ignore Labor's Non-Partisan League, nor ignore the mandates and the ideals and the objectives of organized labor, without being held to strict accountability in that inevitable day when elections come again.

HAS LABOR'S CONFIDENCE

"So I think it is particularly timely that this discussion should take place here this morning so that there will be clarity of thought and understanding on the part of our own people, and at least they will know that labor has an instrumentality that reflects its political viewpoint wherein the utmost confidence can be had in its representatives and its work.

"There are, of course, some politicians who will accept, first ask for and later accept, the assistance of labor and Labor's Non-Partisan League. We have them in Congress, we have them in the State Legislatures, and we have them in gubernatorial chairs throughout the nation, but they can only play that game once, they can only betray labor during one term of office, and the League and labor ever vigilant will hold them to an accounting.

"More power to Labor's Non-Partisan League as a true expression of the political views of America."

CIO Hits Chiselling Communities For Aid to 'Runaways'

Washington, Oct. 28—Decentralization of industry, whereby chiselling cities offer unfair inducements to runaway corporations to locate in their communities tax-free—and usually with guarantees against "labor trouble"—was condemned by the CIO convention in a unanimous resolution and in speeches by Thomas Burns of the Rubber Workers and Powers Hapgood of the Shoe Workers.

The resolution declared in the "whereases":

"Whereas, certain powerful corporations are moving operations from one community to another, ignoring their obligations both to their workers and to the communities where they have been located; and

"Certain states and communities in our country have offered inducements to such corporations to move operations in the form of free sites, tax exemptions, low wages and in other anti-social forms; and

"These practices are undermining the standard of living of organized American workers and are presenting a threat to fair-minded industry; and

"The continued well-being of countless communities in our nation, as well as the welfare of all working people, demands the ending of these irresponsible practices."

BURNS SPEAKS

Burns, Rubber Workers vice-president, told the story of the city of Gadsden, Ala., which made a deal with three companies to exempt them from all taxes, while giving them increased police and fire protection, changed local by-laws to allow arrest on suspicion, had their cops kidnap and slug the international president, Sherman Dalrymple, and other Rubber Workers' officials and members—all for the purpose of "bringing industry to Gadsden."

In Natchez, Miss., the city went even further. There they cleared ground, built a $350,000 building for Armstrong Tire, gave a 20-year tax exemption, plus 20 years of free water, and at the end of 10 years promised to turn the factory over free of charge to the company.

NOT JUST SOUTHERN

"I ask you," Burns said, "how can decent communities attempt to compete with communities that make that type of offer? Don't become deluded into thinking that this is an [illegible] is only on one side of the Mason and Dixon Line.

"Within the last 60 days the town of St. Marys, Ohio, offered free land, plus $25,000 for improvement, plus the guarantee that no organization would be permitted in the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. in order to obtain some of their work there."

SHOE BOSSES, TOO

Powers Hapgood, of the Shoe Workers, followed to point out that shoe employers were following the same policy—one that was, he said, already an old story to the textile and clothing unions.

"In the city of Portsmouth, Ohio," he said, we had a closed shop contract. When that contract expired the shoe company moved away to another town. Not only did this company receive free rent, but they also received a cash inducement of $30,000 to move."

Harlan, Ky. — (FP) — William Hightower, former president of the Evarts local of the United Mine Workers, CIO, who spent several years in the Kentucky penitentiary after being framed in the Battle of Evarts, has been exiled from his home state because of new charges brought by a prosecution witness.

SWOC DUES PAYMENTS RISE

Cleveland—Since getting back their old jobs at the Otis Steel Company, members of Lodge 188, Steel Workers Organizing Committee, are paying dues for the months when they were exonerated because of unemployment, Financial Secretary Leonard Porto revealed.

The lodge, which has a membership of 1,000, gave another demonstration of true union spirit, when one member, John Krisby, paid his dues for the entire year of 1940.

LIME CO. UNFAIR

Barre, Vt., Oct. 28—The Quarry Workers International Union has placed the Standard Lime and Stone Company of Martinsburg, W. Va., on the unfair list and requests the cooperation of CIO unions in publicizing this. The company has refused to reinstate a large number of workers fired when they took part in a strike for better conditions.

AFL 'Blue Card' Ordered Out, Back Pay Set

By HAROLD ROSSMAN

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4—Benefits to hundreds of Tri-State workers, including back pay awards estimated to total between $800,000 and $1,000,000 have been ordered by the National Labor Relations Board in a sweeping decision upholding claims of the Intl. Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers against two Eagle-Picher companies.

The Board's finding is made in a thorough 116-page report which upholds the ruling in favor of five striking locals of the CIO union in the intermediate report of Trial Examiner William R. Ringer, and goes beyond it to grant additional relief to the complaining locals.

This award brings to a climax the fight against anti-union activity of the Eagle-Picher Mining & Smelting Corp. and the Eagle-Picher Lead Corp in the tri-state area of Oklahoma, Missouri and Kansas which began in May, 1935.

Setting a precedent in Labor Board procedure is the machinery suggested by the Board for indemnifying the men who had been discriminated against by the Eagle-Picher companies in rehiring after a bitter strike struggle.

The two companies are directed to set aside jointly an amount of money sufficient to cover back pay for a number of workers equal to the number hired since the termination of the strike. From this pool of funds, the awards are to be paid to the men named in the order as further inquiry establishes their claims to back pay and fixes the amounts they are entitled to get.

CRACK 'BLUE CARD'

Equally important are the Board's findings with regard to the so-called Blue Card Union, now affiliated with the AFL. The Board finds that the Eagle-Picher companies dominate and control the Blue Card Union and that it is in effect just a continuation of their company union, the Tri-State Union, which was set up for the sole purpose of preventing the workers from joining the CIO.

Therefore the Board declares the companies' contracts with the Blue Card Union null and void. It also orders them not to recognize or bargain in any way with the Blue Card Union as representative of any of their employes unless they give fully equal recognition to the CIO or unless the Blue Card Union can win certification by the Board.

The companies are forbidden to urge or coerce their workers into membership in the Blue Card Union or to urge or coerce them to refrain from joining the CIO.

The Board definitely finds the Eagle-Picher companies and their agents guilty of instigating and encouraging violence against the members and property of the CIO union and forbids future incitement to such violence.

If there had been any doubt as to the true company-union character of the Blue Card outfit, now flying the AFL banner, that doubt has been dissipated by the Board's finding, CIO union officials said.

CONSULT LABOR, LEWIS WARNS 1940 PLANNERS

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4 — Labor's increasing importance in national affairs was reflected in a number of developments of far-reaching significance last week in both the industrial and political arenas.

As Chairman of Labor's Non-Partisan League, John L. Lewis issued a statement expressing League disapproval of the proposed western political conference.

His statement, which caused a sensation in political circles, warned that labor support in the coming elections was not to be taken for granted for any program in the drafting of which labor was not offered an opportunity to participate.

The CIO Maritime Committee meanwhile launched a blistering attack on the anti-labor policies of the U. S. Maritime Commission and the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation (Story page two, editorial, page four).

American seamen are suffering in many ways from the war situation, and the Maritime Committee's attack marked the opening of an aggressive campaign to check the union-busting activities of government agencies and anti-union shipowners and to win fair treatment for the seamen.

Two Labor Board decisions, one on Western Union and the other on Eagle-Picher in the Tri-State area, put an official damper on a pair of company unions that have long harassed the workers in two basic industries. (Stories page one and eight.)

One of them, perhaps the oldest company in the world, has fought genuine collective bargaining since 1918. The other, in the Tri-State, was chartered by the AFL after a long and shabby career of violence and intimidation against the CIO.

Rubber Workers Win Major Board Victory

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4—Recommendations and orders of the Labor Relations Board in the Goodyear Co. case at Gadsden, Ala., were described by United Rubber Workers representatives and by Yelverton Cowherd, CIO regional director in the state, as "a major victory for the URWA and for the CIO."

The Board's recommendations, which include lengthy "findings of fact" and proposed Board orders, are an added step in the long campaign of the union to break a terroristic drive by the company union that brought about the discharge of dozens of workers, the beating of union organizers and members, and a severe assault on Sherman H. Dalrymple, president of the United Rubber Workers.

BOARD ORDERS

The Board's orders based on 99 pages of findings secured after many months of testimony, call on the company to "cease and desist from

1. "In any manner dominatin or interfering with the administration of Etowah Rubber Workers Organization, Inc., and contributing support. . ." (Etowah Rubber Workers Organization, Inc., was a company union.)

2. "Discouraging membership in United Rubber Workers of America . . . by discharging or refusing to reinstate any of its employes, or in any other manner discriminating in regard to their hire or tenure of emplomente . . . because of membership in or activity in connection with any labor organization.

3. "Permitting, encouraging, or participating in physical assaults on, or threats of physical violence to, employes in its plant for the purpose of discouraging membership in, or activities on behalf of, the United Rubber Workers of America.

CIO Building Union Lists Progress

Washington, Nov. 4 — The chartering of four new locals by the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee in New York was anounced today by Chairman A. D. Lewis.

Reflecting the rapid growth of the new CIO construction workers union, this brings to 61 the number of local unions chartered since the organization was formed a few months ago.

The new locals are located in the Bronx, Lower Manhattan, Upper Manhattan and Brooklyn.

At the same time Chairman Lewis announced that Buffalo Local 36 of the UCWOC had just signed a closed shop check-off agreement with a contractor in that city.

He declared that most encouraging reports were being received from the West Coast, through J. Fred Rausch, general organizer in that territory, and that construction workers there were greeting the program of the UCWOC with great enthusiasm.

Progress was also reported from Chicago, where Frank Barnhart, former president of District 11, United Mine Workers, has been placed in charge of the organizing drive.

Lewis emphasized the magnitude of the task undertaken by the CIO in improving the wages and conditions of the great number of unorganized and low-paid workers. He pointed to the great gulf between the supposed union scales and the wages actually paid on non-union jobs.

The Associated Farmers in Madera county, California, are trying to break a strike of cotton pickets against starvation wages by driving them back to work with guns, clubs and wholesale arrests.

Old Golds Branded By Board

Cincinnati, Ohio — P. Lorillard Co., which puts out Old Golds and other cigarets, has been found guilty of unfair labor practices by the National Labor Relations Board, because it refused to bargain with the Pioneer Tobacco Workers Union, CIO, in Middletown, Ohio.

The company has been on the CIO unfair list since last year, when its 1,100 workers returned to work after Governor Martin L. Davey ordered out the National Guard.

Seamen Demand U. S. Probe Of Marine Agencies

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4—Ten serious charges against the U. S. Maritime Commission were made by the CIO Maritime Committee and an "immediate and open investigation" of its anti-labor activities demanded in a pamphlet and statement issued by the union today. The committee, of which Pres. Joseph Curran of the Nat'l. Maritime Union is chairman, represents eight CIO marine unions.

The pamphlet made public by Bjorne Halling, committee secretary, accuses the Commission and the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation of "ocooperation, connivance and collusion with the shipowners to destroy maritime labor's rights." It declares that these agencies are run by people unwilling or incapable of carrying out the administration's merchant marine program.

THE CHARGES

According to the CIO Committee's charges, the Commission has consistently denied seamen their rights under the Wagner Act, has tried to break down the union hiring hall system by substituting the "Fink Hall" system, and has tried to foist compulsory arbitration on the maritime unions.

In addition, it has set up training schools where non-seamen are enrolled for the purpose of breaking the union, has launched wide publicity campaigns against American seamen (notably in the persecution of the Algic workers), has encouraged shipowners to every kind of wild and irresponsible attack on the union, and has allowed them to make extensive repairs in foreign ports, particularly in Germany, in violation of the law.

Finally, the pamphlet says, the Commission intervened directly on the side of the shipowners in war risk negotiations, setting a rate on its own ships far below the legitimate demands of the men.

Turning to the Bureau of Inspection and Navigation, the pamphlet charges that its powers of issuing and revoking certificates have been used to break maritime strikes, and that thousands of dollars in fines levied against shipowners for violations of safety-at-sea laws.

PEOPLE'S RIGHTS

The American people have a right to know exactly what these two agencies, both supposed to be building up the American merchant marine, have been doing with their money, the pamphlet concludes.

"The American people, who foot the bills for shipping subsidies have a right to know what is happening to their merchant marine," it says.

"Considering all the public money that has been pouring into the industry in the form of subsidies, grants, monopoly privileges and bargain sales, the people already own it 20 times over.

"They have a right to know whether the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, designed to stop graft and treasury raids, is being honestly administered. They have a right to know whether the President's program for rebuilding the merchant marine is being carried out."

Copies of the pamphlet, "The Maritime Commission vs. the Seamen," can be secured from the CIO Maritime Committee, 1319 F St., NW, Washington, D. C.

Urges Insurance Investigation

New York City, Nov. 4—In view of the strong anti-labor policies practiced by insurance companies against industrial insurance agents seeking to organize, Leon Berney, general organizer of the Industrial Insurance Agents division of United Office and Professional Workers, urged a special legislative committee investigating insurance companies to back legislation permitting the state to revoke licenses of insurance firms interfering with the self-organization of their employes.

Aviation Jobs Up In California

San Francisco, Nov. 4—A 60 per cent increase in jobs in California aviation plants features the latest report of the state bureau of Labor Statistics just released here.

According to the report, 12 aircraft plants list 16,850 workers in September, 1939, compared to 10,505 listed in the same month of 1938, with payrolls up $200,000 to $503,550 per week. Wages averaged $29.88 per week.

CIO observers recalled the resolution on organizing the aircraft industry at the convention held here, in which Wyndham Mortimer, United Automobile Workers representative in charge of aircraft, pointed out the anti-labor policies of the companies.

Their favorite trick, Mortimer explained, was to hire large numbers of young "graduates" from fake aviation mechanics schools, pay them a minimum wage on the promise of raises when they got some experience, and then to fire them for a new batch of "graduates."

Silverware Pact Covers 425 Workers

Muncie, Ind. — Your hamburgers can now be speared with union-made forks since United Cutlery Workers Local 354, CIO, signed a new agreement with the Ontario Manufacturing Comany, makers of table silverware.

The one-year contract covers a a wage increase for all 425 employes, sole bargaining rights, a strict seniority clause, and vacation with pay for workers who have been with the firm two years.

Inquiries from other silverware plant workers will be welcomed by the Local's president, Clyde Venable, 2308 South Jefferson St., Muncie.

'Mounties' Arrival Protested

Estevan, Sask., Nov. 4—Despatch of 132 Royal Canadian Mounted Police into this lignite mining camp has aroused the ire of the population which fears the presence of the nation's federal police in this strike area might lead to disturbances.

Over 500 members of the United Mine Workers of America have been on strike for the past few weeks for a contract with the Western Dominion Coal Mines and elimination of a small company union, known as the Canadian Federation of Labor Saskatchewan Miners' Union.

PEOPLE PROTEST

Even before the RCMP reached Estevan, the Saskatchewan government received protests against the decision to send them. At Estevan and nearby Bienfait the people immediately circulated a protest petition for presentation to the provincial government.

In seven hours over 2,000 names were affixed to the petition. This is considered a record since these two mining towns are sparsely populated and it takes considerable time to reach the outlying farming communities.

UMW district officials blamed the company for the strike stating the firm signed a contract with the small company union group while being fully aware that the CIO affiliate represented the overwhelming majority of the employes.

Utility Cuts Endanger Service

New York Nov. 4—All the news that's fit to print apparently doesn't include stories of the serious threat to public safety in the mass layoffs of key workers at the Consolidated Edison utility plants throughout this city.

New York commercial newspapers, with one exception, ignored a detailed, careful analysis of these dangers, prepared by the CIO Amalgamated Utility Workers at the request of the N. Y. Public Service Commission. The day the analysis appeared, however, all the papers (with the same exception) printed almost a ful-page Consolidated -Edison advertisement.

Discussing the report, which showed that dangers to the public service and to the city's safety were inherent in the huge layoff campaign conducted by the company, Franklin E. DeLude, union vice-president, declared:

"The mad competition among stations of the Consolidated-Edison system to economize even at the sacrifice of safe operation, has led to the extreme condition depicted here.

"The same conditions prevail throughout every power plant of the Edison system, thus incriminating top management.

"Irresponsible measures of economy have not stopped at generating stations, but have solely affected the transmission and distribution systems, system maintenance as a whole, and the customer services.

"Huge layoffs of employes have occurred on a system-wide scale, and everywhere their effect is felt and reflected in the character of today's service to the public."

The union's analysis showed that while Consolidated-Edison output rose by 300,000,000 kilowatts in a two-year period, workers in the plants were cut from 2,448 to 1,815. This cut, which averaged 25 per cent, was almost tripled in one plant, where the personnel was sliced more than 60 per cent.

Pan-American Union Establishes Labor Division

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4. — Increased recognition has been accorded to labor in the Pan-American Union through the establishment of a Division of Labor and Social Information, to be headed by Ernest Galarza.

The new Division will serve as a center for the exchange of information on labor matters between the countries of North and South America and is expected to be an important factor in the creation of better understanding and more cordial international relations.

The decision to establish the Division was made unanimously by the governing body of the Pan-American Union, on the recommendation of the Mexican, Chilean and Cuban Embassies. Secretary of State Cordell Hull, chairman of the Board of Governors, spoke in favor of the proposal and was active in securing its adoption.

The Latin-American Confederation of Labor, the CTM of Mexico and the labor movements of Cuba and Chile had all made representations to their respective governments on the importance of a labor division in the Pan-American Union.

The representatives of the governments who promoted the proposition were Francisco Castillo Najera, ambassador of Mexico; Luis Quintanilla, counsellor of the Mexican Embassy; Eugenio Anzorena, of the Mexican consular service; A. Cabera, Chilean ambassador; Gulliermo Gazitua, counsellor, and Abelardo Silva, first secretary of the Chilean embassy; and José Baron, charge d'affaires of Cuba.

There has previously been no center for the exchange of labor information between the American countries, and the new Division of the Pan-American union is expected to do much of the work along these lines which the International Labor Office has failed to do, although it is supposed to be a center for all international labor information.

IMPORTANT FUNCTIONS

The committee which recommended the establishment of the Division of Labor and Social Information expressed the belief that "the several labor movements of the American nations are essential to the preservation and extension of democracy within those nations and the defense of democratic institutions." It declared that "such a Division has important functions to fulfill in relation to those movements."

Besides serving as a center of information on matters affecting labor and labor movements of the various countries, the Division is to carry out research on labor problems and to foster their study, to aid in organizing labor congresses, and to maintain contact with leaders of labor organizations.

Ernest Galarza, chief of the Division, was formerly employed in the Intellectual Cooperation Division of the Pan-American Union, and is known as a close student of labor affairs, with wide contacts among the various labor movements.

Cotton Pickers In Talks With "Associated"

MADERA, Calif., Nov. 5.—Small farmers began to pay the union wage scale of $1 per 100 pounds to cotton pickers throughout Madera County, as officials of the Associated Farmers met for the first time in history with representatives of the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing and Allied Workers, CIO, to discuss settlement of the month old San Joaquin Valley strike, against the 80c rate previously paid.

Union leaders pointed to their meeting with Associated Farmer officials as proof of the effectiveness of the strike, which extends over six counties, and has continued to spread in spite of mass arrests, wholesale denial of civil liberties, and cooperation between local police and the Associated Farmers.

THOUSANDS PICKET

Meanwhile thousands of migratory agricultural workers reinforced their picket lines as statewide CIO support rallied to the defense of 22 workers beaten and jailed after armed flying squadrons organized by the Associated Farmers attacked strikers all over the valley. Earlier in the strike 142 pickets were thrown into jail.

Attorney Herbert Resner, sent by the state CIO, came to arrange for release of imprisoned strikers, only to find the District Attorney promising immunity from alleged violations of the law if they would testify against the rest of their fellows.

The union filed suits against local officials for false arrest of strike leaders, and appealed to Governor Ilson to protect civil liberties.

A cotton wage board appointed by the Governor reported that cotton pickers in the San Joaquin Valley live under conditions fully as bad as those described in "Grapes of Wrath" and "Factories in the Field."

Average earnings for a cotton picker have been about 80 cents a day. Out of this he has to pay $5 a month for a single room board shack housing his entire family. He buys his food in stores controlled by members of the Associated Farmers, where prices are 20 and 30 per cent higher than in San Francisco.

Many of the cotton fields are so poor in their yield that 100 pounds of cotton is the most that can be picked in a day.

Lewis Hits Secret Political Plans

Maritime Union Hits Back At Dies 'Smear'

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4. — Martin Dies, the Texas witch-hunter, took two sharp setbacks in his attempt to smear the Natl. Maritime Union, CIO, this week. In fact, Dies had a bad week all around.

The first obstacle to Dies' campaign against the NMU—timed strangely enough just as negotiations with the shipowners are under way—came when Joseph Curran, NMU president, testified bluntly and vigorously that accusations of "red" leveled against the union and its leaders were "lies" and the persons making them "unmitigated liars."

Second setback came with a police search for one William McCuistion, anti-NMU Dies witness, who was wanted by New Orleans authorities for questioning on the murder of Philip Carey, union organizer in the Gulf District who was killed during goon-squad attempts to break up the NMU at its last convention.

STATEMENT

Curran, while he was prevented by Dies from reading a statement during the hearing, (though John P. Frey and other anti-CIO witnesses have been allowed to read enormously long documents into the record,) managed to get the first two paragraphs in before he was cut off.

"In the first place, I want, here and now, to deny any and all charges by any witnesses before this committee that I am, or ever have been, a member of the Communist Party. Any such charge, or any charge of a similar nature, such as signing membership cards for other people, and things of that kind, are outright lies. And I hereby brand the persons making them as liars," he read.

"The sole reason for such charges, it must be obvious, is to try and smear me and discredit the union I represent. I have demanded repeatedly that the committee either try to adduce proof of these charges or have them retracted. So far, however, nothing of that kind has been done."

Curran refused to be intimidated by Dies, who threatened him at one point with a contempt charge if he did not give answers as desired by the committee. "My Americanism is as good as yours or anyone else's," he told Dies. "Am I to be treated as an American?"

Answering repeated questions as to whether the Natl. Maritime Union was a "Communist front" organization, Curran told the committee the story of its foundation by rank and file seamen disgusted with the shipowner collusion of the old Intl. Seamen's Union (AFL) officials, outlined its aims to improve wages and conditions, and told of its democratic control by the members.

The only outside groups that tried to gain control of the NMU, Curran said, were those "employer agents" who made up the so-called Mariners Club — a group that was exposed and thrown out of the union by the membership, and which included McCuistion.

TOO BUSY

Pressed for his views on all sorts of questions that had little to do with the business of leading a union, Curran replied that he was "too busy trying to hold the union together in the face of attacks by the U. S. Maritime Commission, the shipowners, this committee, and others" to keep up on all the latest world events.

This criticism of the committee and the Maritime Commission was too much for one of Dies' colleagues. "Do you mean to say," he roared, "that a government agency would attack your union?"

"I do," Curran replied.

Canadian CIO Council Meets Government

TORONTO, Ont., Nov. 4—Spokesmen for the CIO unions in Canada will meet the federal government Nov. 6 to present their views on the war and seek various legislative measures to guarantee labor rights, increases in wages and prevention of war-time profiteering.

The meeting will be preceded by a one-day conference of the delegates in Ottawa, the nation's capital.

Allan S. Haywood, newly-named national director of organization of the CIO, has been invited to attend the session as a representative of CIO international headquarters.

The decision to meet the Federal Government was reached at a meeting of CIO union leaders held recently in Toronto under the chairmanship of Silby Barrett, chairman of the newly-elected national council of Canadian CIO unions.

HAS 11 MEMBERS

Mr. Barrett announced that the Canadian national council of the CIO is composed of 11 members. They are: Silby Barrett, chairman; C. H. Millard, secretary; and Sol Spivak, Amalgamated Clothing Workers; Harry Hunter, Steel Workers Organizing Committee; C. S. Jackson, United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers; George Burt, United Automobile Workers; Tom Church, Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers; Joseph Mackenzie, United Rubber Workers; Roger Irwin, Newspaper Guild. All these represent unions in Ontario.

D. W. Morrison, president of district 26 United Mine Workers, will represent the maritime provinces and Robert Livett, international board member of the United Mine Workers will represent Western Canada.

LABOR REPRESENTATION

Barrett said the Ottawa conference will ask the government to appoint representatives of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board in every province so that a better check up on food profiteering can be made.

Labor's Political Aid Not Automatic, Lewis Tells Campaign Bloc

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4—Chairman John L. Lewis of Labor's Non-Partisan League wrote a letter this week to Governor Culbert L. Olson of California that caused a national political sensation.

Effect of the letter was to serve notice that labor's political support is not to be taken for granted or assumed without offering labor through its authorized spokesmen a proper opportunity to take part in drafting the program which it is asked to endorse.

The letter called attention to efforts by certain Washington officials, acting apparently without the President's authorization or knowledge, to promote an 11-state western conference in connection with secret plans for the 1940 campaign.

League officials were careful to note that the letter in no way commits labor on the third-term issue, or on anything else pertaining to 1940.

Chief purpose and effect of the letter was to check plans which would take advantage of labor's political strength while at the same time excluding labor from the privilege of making suggestions for a legitimate program.

LEWIS' LETTER

Text of the letter by Chairman Lewis follows:

"During our personal conference in San Francisco on October 15, we discussed the proposed conference of progressive leaders of 11 western states, then being organized by Mr. Norman N. Littell, assistant to the Attorney General in Charge of the Lands Division, Department of Justice, and Mr. Marshall E. Dimock, second assistant secretary of the Department of Labor. You will recall that we were in substantial agreement that these gentlemen were pursuing an unwise course by their secret methods of organization and their exclusion of labor participation.

"Since our conference, Messrs. Littell and Dimock have continued their work in secret and are prepared to issue the call and assemble the conference for some date in January, in Salt Lake City or some other convenient city. The secret agenda for the conference has been completed and the organizers of this Conference are awaiting disposition of the Neutrality Bill by Congress before the issuance of their public call for the conference.

LEAGUE OPPOSED

"Labor's Non-Partisan League is opposed to the holding of this conference for the following reasons:

a. The source of its conception and the surreptitious manner in which its organizers worked.

b. The doubtful source of its finances. An anonymous individual in California is counted upon to provide a plentitude of money.

c. The questionable legality under the Hatch Act of the activities of Littell and Dimock.

d. The slight to Senator Burton K. Wheeler and other great liberals in the West who have not been consulted and who are slated to be excluded from the Conference.

e. The exclusion of labor from the privilege of making suggestions for a legitimate program.

f. The secret plans to use the Conference to launch a third-term boom.

"I doubt that the President has knowledge of or would approve the plans of these overzealous individuals responsible for this program. Aside from his recent public utterances, his rebuke of Secretary Wallace through a White House Secretary, Stephen Early, should carry conviction.

"You are advised that Labor's Non-Partisan League has issued instructions to its various Chairman in the 11 affected states to refrain from any participation in the proposed conference, if later called to assemble in Salt Lake City or elsewhere.

"With my personal compliments, I am

Sincerely yours,

John L. Lewis"

Literary Lights Aid Messengers

San Francisco, Nov. 4.—Leading literary and artistic lights from both coasts are forming the Joint Wage Council for Telegraph Messengers, whose purpose is to help Western Union workers in their two months strike here.

The strikers, members of the American Communications Assn., CIO, walked out Sept. 7 against intolerable pay and hour conditions. They have maintained a continuous picketline ever since, and have had support from all CIO affiliates and from numerous AFL unions.

AFL bellboys at hotels here have refused to act as Western Union scabs, telling the management that they will not deliver hot telegrams to guests.

Fair Electric Products All CIO Made

New York, Nov. 4—All union-made electrical goods are made by the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, CIO, and none by any other legitimate organization, the union pointed out here.

"Of all the electrical goods manufactured in this country, more than three-quarters are made under United Electrical agreements," the union said. "The remaining one quarter are manufactured, for the greater part, under non-union conditions without any union contract, or under non-union conditions in a few cases with the IBEW (AFL) label.

"We point this out because we note that some 'consumers' advice listings, circulated among the labor press, give the AFL label (Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers) as an alternative listing for fair products. This is not the case."

LEAVE SCABS

Adrian, Mich., Nov. 4 — (FP) With 150 vigilantes sworn in by Sheriff R. W. Scott and 50 state troopers sent in by Gov. L. D. Dickinson, 280 women continued their strike against the American Chain and Cable Co. to establish unionism in this town.

The strike was called by Local 280, United Auto Workers, CIO, to increase the hourly minimum from 40 to 55 cents. Five of the women have left home until their husbands quit scabbing and join the picket line.

Seamen Ask Work, Aid For War Idle

Washington, Nov. 4.—American seamen and radio operators are not anxious to starve as the result of restrictions on shipping to war zones, the Natl. Maritime Union and the American Communications Assn., both CIO, said here.

They are demanding severance pay and work projects for the expected 8,000 to 10,000 men who will be thrown on the bench under the terms of the present neutrality bill proposals. In addition, the unions propose that seamen and operators be given unemployment compensation, now denied.

Bjorne Halling, secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee, joint group of all CIO unions in the marine industry, explained the demands in a statement made public here:

"Passage of the neutrality bill will result in loss of employment by some 8,000 to 10,000 seamen," he said. "Congress has authorized the expenditure of millions of dollars for the rebuilding of the American Merchant Marine. The loss of this large number of trained men to the Merchant Marine will be a serious blow to that program.

"Without some provision for a livelihood, these men would face destitution. Their extremely low wages prevent their saving money to carry them over periods of unemployment. We cannot expect other industries, also beset by unemployment problems, to absorb them."

The League Serves Notice

Writing as Chairman of Labor's Non-Partisan League, John L. Lewis had some sharp words to say about the proposed conference of western political leaders, in his recent letter to Governor Culbert L. Olson of California.

He objected, among other things, to the surreptitious methods of its organizers; the doubtful source of its finances; the questionable legality of the activities of two of its promoters; the slight to certain uninvited liberals; the exclusion of labor from planning a legitimate program; and the secret plans to use the conference to launch a third-term boom, without any evidence of the President's approval.

Neither the CIO nor Labor's Non-Partisan League has yet taken any official position for or against a third term for the President; nor have they made any other endorsements for the 1940 national elections.

Chairman Lewis' letter makes no commitments on these points. But it does serve clear notice that the League does not intend to have its decisions prejudiced by premature and ill-considered actions; and that labor support cannot be taken for granted for any program in whose preparation it does not have an opportunity to participate.

A Raw Deal

Maritime workers are one of the first groups to be seriously affected by a war situation in any country.

Their lives are endangered, even though their countries be neutral, when warfare spreads to the seas.

Their jobs are also in jeopardy when sea transportation is restricted on account of war or neutrality considerations.

As a result of the present neutrality legislation, for instance, some 8,000 to 10,000 American seamen will lose their employment, according to Chairman Joseph Curran of the CIO Maritime Committee.

For these and many other reasons, it might be expected that all government agencies would be especially concerned to see that the seamen are properly compensated for the risks and the economic insecurity caused by the war and by matters of national policy beyond their control.

But instead of this we are now witnessing the disgraceful spectacle of a Commission, set up to advance the welfare of the American merchant marine, not only exhibiting callous indifference to the plight of the seamen but actually conspiring with shipowners to restrict their compensation and to break their unions.

The pamphlet entitled "The Maritime Commission Versus The Seamen", just issued by the CIO Maritime Committee, is one of the most devastating indictments of misuse of government authority ever published.

It charges that the Maritime Commission has denied to seamen employed on its ships collective bargaining rights guaranteed them under the National Labor Relations Act; that it has sought to undermine the union hiring halls by reviving what the seamen call the "fink hall"; that it has tried to bring about compulsory arbitration; that it has inaugurated a legislative and publicity campaign against the seamen and their unions; that it has encouraged shipowners in their attacks on union conditions; and that it stepped into the controversy on war risk insurance and took the lead in setting up wholly inadequate compensation.

In general, the seamen charge that the Maritime Commission is a "willing ally" of anti-union shipowners in their drive against collective bargaining and the union hiring hall.

They declare that one of the things they have a right not to expect is that "the supposedly neutral Maritime Commission, established primarily to build up the merchant marine, should seize upon the war situation to hamper further the organizational efforts of the seamen."

The Commission appears to be fostering a peculiar brand of "paytriotism", under which it expects the seamen to pay and pay, while it fosters profiteering and union-busting on the part of the shipowners.

Labor's Awakening

WHEN John L. Lewis registers his objection to anyone trying to dispose of labor politically without consulting labor, it usually causes the same kind of excitement as Gulliver once caused in Lilliputia, according to a previously unrecorded version of the famous story.

The tiny men discovered Gulliver sleeping, it will be recalled. There was much dispute as to what to do with their giant find, in all of which, needless to say, Gulliver was not consulted. And finally the Lilliputians improvised a platform, to which they tied Gulliver and thus transported him prostrate to their city.

The press of Lilliputia was full of the event. The administration of the day pointed with pride to its handling of the situation. It declared itself to be Gulliver's best friend, at the same time assuring anti-Gulliver elements that it would stand for no nonsense if he did not behave. Gulliver should be well satisfied with the platform provided for him, it felt, even if he might be a bit roughly handled at times over some of the bumps.

The opposition, on the other hand, accused the administration of entering into a conspiracy with the "monster" and allowing him too much freedom. It viewed with alarm all the possible and impossible horrors it could imagine.

The Garnercrats of Lilliputia were so impressed with the arguments of the opposition that they joined it in a conspiracy of their own. They climbed all over Gulliver tying knots in his bonds and set up committees to spit in his eye.

Gulliver Stirs

There was amazement, if not consternation, however, when Gulliver began to awaken, to stir about and to find his voice.

Each movement and utterance of his caused widespread speculation. The liberals asked why he couldn't lie still and quiet, and warned him not to turn against his friends. The tories said he might destroy civilization unless squelched. The cynics attributed his moves to all sorts of motives and political machinations. The dopesters made varying predictions as to the effects on the next elections.

But all that Gulliver was trying to get across was that, much as he appreciated the solicitude of his friends and was aware of the plans of his enemies, he did not intend to be treated indefinitely like a load of freight.

He gave fair warning to all alike that he intended to get up and proceed under his own power; that he after all had the most intimate concern in the plans being made for him; and that he expected to be fully consulted in their preparation if he was to cooperate in their execution.

All of which, though essentially reasonable and simple to human beings of normal stature, was shocking and inexplicable to Lilliputians who had thought of Gulliver as something to be disposed of, not somebody with proposals and plans of his own.

Take It or Leave It

Until the CIO came along to organize the unorganized, American labor was traditionally treated in much the same way as Gulliver was treated by the Lilliputians.

Industrialists, philanthropists and politicians would quarrel over the inert body of unorganized labor, each proclaiming that they knew what was best for it. Some would favor kind and liberal treatment, others harsh suppression; some advise increasing labor's rations and freedom, others restricting them.

And when elections came along, labor would even be offered alternative menus by rival political caterers. Labor could nod its head or shake it when offered such a choice. But it was never allowed any real participation in preparing the bill of fare.

Labor's Idea

But with CIO organization there has come a political awakening on the part of American labor. Through the CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League, labor has begun to make demands of its own which astound old-time politicoes.

They do not yet seem to have grapsed the full significance of this new attitude on the part of progressive organized labor.

Each one of the major political utterances of John L. Lewis, leader and spokesman of the new labor movement, has stirred all sorts of speculation and misinterpretation and the most widely varying motives have been ascribed to him.

Yet through all these statements, in the plainest possible English for those who have ears to hear or eyes to read, there runs one very reasonable and simple idea.

It is that labor is the master of its own destiny; that it is not a political commodity to be bartered about, but a free and equal participant in American democracy; that it has plans of its own, and that it demands the right to participate in the drafting of any program or the choice of any candidates it is expected to support.

The Labor Reader

By C. W. FOWLER

The great sun-drenched valleys of California are the richest agricultural land in the world. Year round crops of fruits and vegetables grown in them could feed the United States. Close to a billion dollars a year is taken from these products, by the banks, the mortgage companies, the corporations that own the land of California.

Thirty per cent of the nation's large-scale cotton plantations, 53 per cent of the poultry farms, 40 per cent of the dairy produce, 44 per cent of the general farm produce, 60 per cent of the nation's fruit come from this state.

These are the figures. Back of them lies a story of exploitation, of oppression, of sweating of labor and small owners unsurpassed in any history of human greed and cruelty.

"It is a story," writes Carey McWilliams in his book, "Factories in the Field," "of nearly 70 years' exploitation of minority, racial and other groups by a powerful clique of land owners whose power is based on an anachronistic system of land ownership dating from the creation, during Spanish rule, of feudalistic patterns of ownership and control.

"The exploitation of farm labor in California, which is one of the ugliest chapters in the history of American labor, is as old as the system of land ownership of which it is a part. Time has merely tightened the system of ownership and control and furthered the degradation of farm labor.

"As far as the vast army of workers who operate these great tracts is concerned, their plight is nearly as wretched today as it was 30 years ago."

A DARK RECORD

For example, in Wheatland, in 1913, a hop ranch owner named Durst needed 1,500 workers. Following established practice, Durst advertised for 2,700; 2,800 and more came. Here are the conditions in Durst's camp:

"There were nine outdoor toilets for 2,800 people. The stench around the camp was nauseating; dysentry was prevalent to an alarming degree. Between 200 and 300 children worked in the fields. . . . The workers entered the fields at four o'clock in the morning, and by noon the heat was terrific, remaining, as it did, around 105 degrees. . . Numerous instances of sickness and partial prostration among children from five to ten years of age were mentioned in the testimony."

NO WATER

There was almost no water, because a Durst relative had the lemondade concession at a nickel a glass. Pickers averaged $1.00 to 78 cents a day. Throughout the season over 1,000 workers remained idle in the camp.

When there was a strike, the respectable people of California were outraged. The National Guard was sent in and stayed over a week. Close to 1,000 workers were arrested. One leader was beaten daily with rubber truncheons for a period of several weeks, finally framed on a murder charge for a killing that took place while he was hundreds of miles from the scene.

This happened in 1913. It has been happening ever since, on the same pattern, with a varying degree of violence and bloody repression. The Associated Farmers have taken the place of the more loosely organized pre-war vigilantes. County and municipal authorities do the dirty work for the growers that the state police under Republican governors used to do.

But organization is stronger. In place of the loose, sporadic outbursts of a few years ago, the CIO is building a strong, stable union for the migratory workers under the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing and Allied Workers of America. The most recent strike in the Kern and Madera County cotton fields has forced a favorable compromise offer from the growers, despite the usual violence from deputies and gun-thugs.

The solution still demands a change in the ownership system, McWilliams writes. "But the final solution will come only when the present wasteful, vicious, undemocratic and thoroughly anti-social system of agricultural ownership in California is abolished. The abolition of this system at most involves merely a change in ownership. The collective principle is there; large units of operation have been established, only they are being exploited by private interests for their own ends."

CIO Auto Union Bares Chrysler Plan to Gag Collective Bargaining

By EDWARD LEVINSON

DETROIT, Nov. 4 — The UAW-CIO has forced the Chrysler Corporation to reveal its true objectives in the lockout by which it has plunged more than 50,000 of its workers and many thousands of others into unemployment.

R. J. Thomas, international president of the union, pointed out to Federal Conciliator Dewey and the corporation spokesmen that the union had made several peace proposals, all of which had been turned down. He demanded that the corporation place its proposals on the table.

Backed into a corner, the corporation produced its idea of a "contract." Corporation's counsel Nicholas Kelley, who once traveled under the label of a liberal, was apologetic as he pulled the document from his pocket.

AFRAID TO OFFER IT

"I'm almost afraid to offer it,' said Kelley. "I know you'll turn it down."

Finally, he produced it. After as long as it took to read the corporation's "offer," Thomas termed it a company union arrangement and said the union would not even accept it as a basis for discussion.

The corporation was so ashamed of the proposed "contract," that it refused to give it to the press. A UAW-CIO threat of immediate publication forced it into the open.

The Chrysler offer made the recognition clause dependent on the life of the Wagner act. If the act is abolished, the clause said, the agreement on recognition of the union as the spokesman of the workers becomes null and void.

"The corporation obviously means by that," said Thomas, "that as soon as it and other reactionary employers can succeed in killing the Wagner act it will no longer engage in collective bargaining. Now we know the real reason for the opposition to the Wagner act."

THE CHRYSLER IDEA

The Chrysler Corporation's idea of a model contract is illustrated by others of the proposed clauses. As Thomas pointed out:

"The proposal fails to provide for arbitration of disputes involving speedups and other plant grievances. It does not provide for vacations with pay. It makes no provision for overtime rates, or for night work. It makes no offer on the score of wages, despite the fact that the needs of the Chrysler workers and the corporation's $25,000,000 net profits in six months of 1939 make increased wage rates necessary and justifiable. There is no provision, such as the union has suggested, to protect the jobs of Chrysler workers who may be called for military service."

Aside from the omissions, other features of the corporation's proposal would mean 11 Chrysler plant contracts instead of a single pact; it would give the corporation final word on speed-up and other grievances; it would tie workers' hands with a 'no-strike' clause; it would reduce the number of union plant committeemen and curb their power to act; it would permit firings followed by 'hearings'—with the corporation as accuser, judge, jury and executioner; it would kill hard-won seniority rights.

STATE CRACKS DOWN

Following rejection by the union of the corporation's proposals, Governor Dickinson and the Michigan State Labor Mediation Board stepped into the picture again and ordered the corporation to meet with the union heads in Lansing. Previously the corporation has spurned the board's efforts.

Insurance Workers Win Pact

Philadelphia, Nov. 4 — The third union contract in the state for industrial insurance agents was won here last week by the Insurance Guild of the United Office and Professional Workers, CIO, when the Pennsylvania Mutual Life Insurance Company signed an agreement covering its 35 employes, after they had been on strike for a week.

The contract provides for reinstatement of two agents who were fired for union activity, an immediate cause of the strike, recognizes the local as sole bargaing agent, establishes machinery for arbitration of grievances and dismissals and gives the union preference in hiring new agents.

WHOSE POCKETS —

ARE YOU FILLING? When you buy your clothes do you help pay the wage of a union worker, or do you help swell the profits of a sweatshop boss?

- The Label of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America will give you the answer. When you don't see the label you know that the garment was probably made by an un-American sweatshop chiseler. When you see the Amalgamated label you know that your money will go into the pockets of union workers, earning union pay, working under union conditions.
- Demand the union label in the clothes you buy and insure yourself against sweatshop garments, against sweatshop conditions in industry.

You can find the Amalgamated label in union made suits, overcoats, uniforms, work clothes and overalls, workshirts, dress shirts, underwear, gloves, neckties, sheeplined, leather, and sport coats, children's clothing and wash suits.

Your WPA Job

By Ralph Hetzel

CIO UNEMPLOYMENT DIRECTOR

CIO Unemployment Director

Special emphasis was put on the problem of unemployment at the San Francisco Convention.

The main reason for this was a great concern that the prospect of a war boom would detract attention from the urgent necessity of meeting our unemployment problem. From a number of sources, some of them sincere, others deliberately misrepresenting, has come the idea that the war in Europe will so increase American production that unemployment would be substantially wiped out.

Every competent authority in Washington, however, agrees that even the most optimistic would not predict sufficient increased production within the next year to absorb more than one-fourth to one-third of the present unemployed.

The serious danger is that the mis-calculation of the effect of a war boom will be used as an excuse to reduce further completely inadequate WPA, relief, unemployment compensation and other measures to help the unemployed.

INCREASES NEEDED

Even in the face of an increase in production amounting to more than 25 per cent in the last four months, relief and WPA are woefully inadequate. It is perfectly clear that real increases are needed in WPA rolls and in the relief funds in order to meet at all adequately the present unemployment situation.

With this situation in mind the national convention of the CIO at San Francisco laid down a thorough-going program of public works and other measures for the unemployed. The principles of such a program are as follows:

"The Congress of the United States should authorize a program of public works for a period of not less than two years. Such a program should be large enough to provide jobs for all unemployed who are able and willing to work. This means the full recognition and acceptance by the Federal government of the obligation to provide work for the unemployed, an obligation, as the President's report points out, heretofore unfulfilled.

"The principles upon which a program should operate are as follows:

1. All workers should be employed on work suited to their needs and skills:

2. Projects should be socially necessary and productive, for example, housing, slum clearance, flood control, building of schools and hospitals, health measures, cultural and white-collar projects, and vocational training;

3. Jobs should be given to those who need jobs without requiring honest, decent unemployed workers to degrade themselves as paupers;

4. The wages paid on such a program should be such as will not lower standards set in private industry, and such as will provide a decent livelihood for those employed;

5. Funds for such a program should be so appropriated as to make possible the meeting of current needs wherever and whenever they arise.

The Federal Government now has a federal agency under which such a program could be adequately administered. Either the WPA should be extended on the principles herein set forth or an entirely new program be similarly established under the Federal Works Agency."

RCA Election Set Despite CIO Contract

Washington, Nov. 5 — Though the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, CIO, have had a signed contract for three years with the RCA Manufacturing Co. at Camden, N. J. and two weeks ago renewed the agreement with important gains, the Natl. Labor Relations Board last week ordered an election to determine whether the employes wish to be represented by the CIO union or the AFL's Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Toronto In First CIO Steel Strike

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 4 — The Steel Workers Organizing Committee here called its first strike in the city's steel industry when General Steel Wares Ltd., producers of kitchen utensils and enamel wares, refused to negotiate for a contract and a 10 cents an hour wage raise.

Toronto citizens are still chuckling over the novel picketing methods adopted by the 500 strikers. On Hallowe'en, the pickets paraded before the plant clad in costumes, their faces masked in the traditional festive style.

"WE'LL ROLL"

Girl pickets on roller skates attracted considerable attention carrying signs which declared "We'll Roll Till It Freezes for Wage Increases."

The strikers are asking for a 10 cent an hour pay boost, a minimum of 50 cents an hour for experienced men, 35 cents an hour for beginners and equal pay for equal work for women.

In its publicity releases the company is trying to bring in the CIO bogey as the reason for its refusal to bargain with Lodge 1111. The union is combatting this propaganda by effective publicity showing its CIO affiliation has no bearing on the company's refusal to bargain.

Chicago — (FP) — A closed shop contract described as the best in the area has been signed between the United Furniture Workers, CIO, and the Harris Hub Bed and Spring Co., covering 130 workers.

Between the Lines

By Cecil Owen

After brooding over it for several months, the Justice Department has finally hatched its interpretation of what the Hatch Act means.

Under this law federal government employes are made just bystandards at the political parade. It ends the day when a vast federal machine could be mobilized to get out the vote. Here are some of the things the Justice Department says the Hatch Act forbids government employes doing:

1. Holding office in a political party or political club.
2. Attending political conventions as delegates or alternates.
3. Serving on committees of a political party or a political club.
4. Distributing buttons or printed matter in support of any candidate or party.
5. Serving at party headquarters or as watchers at the polls, or or otherwise assisting a party or candidate in any prmiary or election campaign, whether or not federal offices are involved.
6. Being a candidate for elective offices — federal, state or local.
7. Soliciting funds for a political organization or campaign fund.

It should be noted these prohibitions apply only to employes of the federal government. Employes of state or local governments are not affected by any act of Congress. This gives the state political machine a great advantage.

Federal employes still have some freedom even in the light of the Justice Department's interpretation. They can, of course, vote, hold membership in political organizations and attend its meetings, participate in civic and educational groups, and hold certain local offices.

PRICES REMAIN UP

Food prices are still about 10 per cent higher than the August level, the Labor Department reports. Here's the latest digest of the food price situation:

"There were many small changes in specific items, but no definite trend upward in the general level, which is about 10 per cent higher than on August 15. Except for those food prices which are changing in response to seasonal factors, there is a tendency for food prices to decline on those items which are more than 10 per cent above their mid-August prices."

Complaints of profiteering are still running at the rate of 20 to 25 a day in the Justice Department mail. An interdepartmental committee has been set up under the Anti-Monopoly Committee to study the problem. So far there have been no prosecutions under the Anti-trust laws but a number of complaints of collusive price-fixing are being studied.

Chicago Kids Eat—Thanks to Labor League

Chicago, Nov. 4—Thirty thousand Chicago school children to whom the state of Illinois' inadequate relief budget means dull pain in the region of their stomachs, are playing and studying a bit harder because of the recent decision of the Chicago School Board to cooperate with Uncle Sam in taking the latter's surplus foods and preparing them into hot appetizing school lunches.

True only about 10,000 of them have been fed thus far during the week the plan has been in operation, but there are 20,000 more located in schools that have the facilities for preparing lunches and when the school board authorities are preparing to feed.

The plan was authorized by the Chicago School Board when one of its members, Samuel Levin, Manager of the Chicago Joint Board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union, CIO, and Vice-Chairman of the State Committee of Labor's Non-Partisan League of Illinois asked that it be approved by the Board.

Cleveland (FP)—The first local union contract in the scrap iron industry has been signed between the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, and the Apex Steel and Supply Co.

Connecticut CIO Pledges Drive On Unorganized

By JOHN J. DRISCOLL

WATERBURY, Conn., Nov. 4.—United behind the slogan of the national CIO convention, "Organize the unorganized," over 100 delegates representing 11 national and International unions in Connecticut last week-end pledged the State Industrial Union Council at its second annual convention to carry forward on all fronts toward the realization of John L. Lewis' stated goal of the CIO, 10,000,000 members in the next five years.

Stressing the need of organizing the state's booming aircraft and munitions material industries, the convention also resolved to use all possible means to keep this country from being embroiled in the European war.

COMMITTEES SET UP

As the Council's contribution to the organizing work of the different international unions in the state, the delegates resolved to set up general organizing committees in each local union to work under the direction of the Council executive board.

Resolutions were also adopted aimed at fulfilling the educational and political duties of the state organization. These would set up study groups in each local, as well as legislative committees to implement the work of Labor's Non-Partisan League.

John Brophy, representing John L. Lewis, received a tremendous ovation from the delegates after he had summed up the decisions of the national CIO convention.

OFFICERS ELECTED

Other speakers who received warm welcomes were Joseph Salerno of the Amalgamated, representing Sidney Hillman; Archie Wright, of the New York Dairy Farmers' Union; and the Rev. Pattrick Quinlan of Wethersfield, who stressed the advantages of cooperatives to organized workers.

Re-elected for a second time were Council Pres. Thomas R. Molloy of Hartford, and Sec'y.-Treasurer John J. Driscoll of this city. Aiding them in carrying on the Council's work during the coming year will be an executive board of 16 other representatives from the various local and international unions of the state.

CIO Steel Workers Demand $5 a Day Base Pay at Bethlehem

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Nov. 4—CIO committees, representing union steel workers affiliated with the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in all Bethlehem plants, called on local plant officials at each Bethlehem Steel plant throughout the nation to present the union demand that the company institute the $5 a day minimum wage immediately.

Plant executives were visited at Johnstown, Lackawanna, Sparrows Point, Bethlehem, Pottstown, Lebanon, Steelton, Rankin, Leetsdale, Seattle, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

CRITICIZE BETHLEHEM

The demand called attention to the fact that the $5 day has been accepted in the major portion of the steel industry, that advancing commodity prices make higher wages imperative especially for the lowest paid workers and that the Federal Contracts Board has recommended the $5.00 minimum for the steel industry.

The steel workers criticized Bethlehem for fighting in the federal courts the order issued by the Department of Labor establishing the $5.00 minimum under the Walsh-Healy Act.

The statement presented to the Bethlehem Steel Company management emphasizes the great bulk of government contracts for munitions and other supplies awarded this company. It accuses Bethlehem of profiting from government expenditures of tax money while violating laws enacted by the same government for the protection of labor.

SHOW DOWN

E. J. Lever, director of the SWOC organizing compaign in Bethlehem plants, in commenting on the union demands said:

"The SWOC is the only bona fide labor organization representing Bethlehem steel workers. The Labor Board has ordered the disestablishment of the company dominated Employee Representation Plan and has asked the Federal Courts to enforce its order.

"The SWOC is fulfilling its responsibility to Bethlehem workers by leading them in their fight for decent wages and working conditions. We are tired of evasion and excuses. The time has come for a showdown.

Labor League Convention

The First Constitutional Convention of Labor's Non-Partisan League of Philadelphia saw prominent CIO and League officials conferring on vital political issues. Seated, left to right, are William M. Leader, president of Branch No. 1, American Federation of Hosiery Workers; John A. Philips, president of the Pennsylvania CIO, and Charles Weinstein, County Chairman of the League.

League Meeting Urged to Fight War Dangers

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 4—Election of Congressmen next year "who will vote to keep us out of war" was urged by E. L. Oliver, Executive Vice President of Labor's Non-Partisan League, in addressing 400 delegates at the first Constitutional convention of the Philadelphia League.

The convention, held in the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, represented about 100,000 Philadelphia union members. The convention adopted a permanent form of organization and threw its support behind liberal candidates in the current city election contest.

"The possibility of our being in the second world war is a real danger and don't let anybody tell you it isn't," Oliver said. "No neutrality law can put us into the conflict or keep us out. Elect men who represent the farmer and the laborer, who will vote to keep us out."

Oliver cited attacks on social legislation as another vital reason for labor's political activity on behalf of progressive candidates.

"RETURN TO HOOVER"

"Many men at Washington now are urging a return to the Hoover era, when the farmer and the worker were the forgotten men," he added. "Attacks are being made on the wage-hour act which has benefited labor. Reactionaries all over the country are lining up for its repeal. The league will fight to the last ditch any move to repeal the act."

Endorsement of the Democratic-Fusion ticket in the Philadelphia mayoralty contest was voted by the League which threw its full support into the fight to elect "candidates who have consistently shown a regard for the just rights of labor."

The Philadelphia League is setting up a campaign organization in every ward and precinct to fulfill its promise to "bring to the people of Philadelphia the facts so that justice may triumph on Nov. 7 and a Democratic-Fusion victory ensue."

OFFICERS ELECTED

Officers elected by the League were: Chairman, Charles Weinstein, manager of the Joint Board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers; First Vice Chairman, William Leader, president of Branch No. 1 of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers; Second Vice Chairman, Joseph Heuter, of the Textile Workers Union; Secretary, Harry Bloch, president of District No. 1, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, and Treasurer, Albert Wells.

CIO Laundry Workers Win Pact for 25,000

NEW YORK, Nov. 4—Twenty-five thousand laundry workers, affiliated with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, have won a five-day week, minimum wage classifications and other substantial gains, averting the threat of a general strike in the Greater New York area. The agreement, reached with a half-dozen employer associations, is subject to ratification by the union membership. When ratified, it will run for two years.

Negotiations were led, on behalf of the union, by Sidney Hillman, Amalgamated president, and Hyman Blumberg, acting manager of the Laundry Workers' Joint Board. The union, following ten weeks of conferences, obtained improvements in a previous contract which it had generally regarded as pretty unsatisfactory.

SURVEY PLANNED

In addition to reducing the work week from six to five days, effective March 31, 1940, the new agreement calls for a survey of current wages in the laundry industry to determine minimum rates for each classification and department. Should a joint committee of employers and the union fail to agree, within a reasonably short period, on minimum rates for each classification, a decision by the impartial chairman of the laundry industry will be final.

Further, under the new contract, the union reserves the right to open the question of a general wage increase at any time in the face of rising living costs. The old agreement fixes only a general 35-cent an hour minimum and a $30 weekly minimum guarantee for laundry drivers.

Daily schedules of hours must be posted in each laundry plant. Make-up time for holidays must be paid for at the rate of time and a half. A minimum of 40 hours' pay in any one week must be guaranteed, under the new contract, to all regular employes. The agreement further provides for a closed-shop and a week's vacation with pay.

They Want the Right to Work

A group of unemployed picket the St. Louis offices of the WPA in protest of having no jobs.

NMU Pacts Extended

New York, Nov. 4 — With negotiations still deadlocked over the question of the union hiring hall, agreements covering east coast seamen have been extended for another month by the National Maritime Union. Unless a satisfactory settlement is reached, it is possible that a strike will be called in December.

New York City, Nov. 4—United Wholesale and Warehouse Employes signed a closed shop agreement with the Sun Ray Yard Co. and Quaker Yarn Co. providing wage increases, paid vacations, sick leave and six holidays with pay.

RCA Employes Get War Bonus

SAN FRACISCO, Cal., Nov. 4—The first war bonus for workers not subjected to war hazards was negotiated by the American Communications Association with the RCA Communications, according to a statement by Michael Mignon, ACA vice president. Approximately $20,000 will be distributed to the company's 1300 workers as a bonus for the month of September.

The bonus is computed on the basis of 10 per cent of the earnings of the employe for the month. This is the first time in trade union history that the employes have shared in the increased earnings of a company due to increased war traffic.

The supplementary agreement calls for monthly negotiations regarding war bonuses. All such bonuses will be based on the earnings of the company for the previous month.

Other clauses of the agreement call for a re-classification of the employes which would cover all departments of the company and the recognition of crafts within the industry.

Members of the ACA who functioned as the negotiating committee were: H. C. Taylor, second vice president of the Point-to-Point Division, Joseph P. Selly first vice president of the Telegraph Division, A. Iannucci, F. Connelly and J. Hobbs.

"We have set a fine precedent in the matter of war bonuses," stated Mignon. "It is a precedent that could well be followed by other unions."

Rubber Union Hits Banning Of Radio Time

Akron, Ohio, Nov. 4. — President S. H. Dalrymple of the United Rubber Workers asked the Federal Communications Commission this week to take action against Station WJW here for banning "The Voice of Labor" radio program.

In a letter to the Commission, Dalrymple termed the cancellation of the program "an unwarranted and dictatorial invasion of our rights as citizens," and called upon the FCC to take action to see that the right of labor to purchase time to inform the public of its aims and methods be protected.

The "Voice of Labor" program has been presented by the Akron CIO Industrial Union Council over local radio stations for two years, and "has made it possible for labor in this community to present its message in a fair and honest manner," Pres. Dalrymple said in his letter.

He charged that the management of the station had been harassing the program by unreasonable censorship for several months, and had finally cancelled the contract with the Akron CIO Council arbitrarily. An attempt was made to justify the action, Dalrymple said, on the basis of the recent code adopted by the National Association of Broadcasters barring so-called controversial material from the air.

In a statement in reply to an offer made by the station to give labor free time on "forum" programs, H. R. Lloyd, president of the Akron CIO Council, said: "We were on the air for the same purpose as all radio advertisers—to build up an audience, to let them know what we stand for, and to sell our product — which is unionism. For that purpose we need a regular program, and a program frequent enough to hold our listeners. Sporadic debates now and then will not do that."

Die Casters Sign For 400 Workers

Adrian, Mich., Nov. 4—A closed shop contract covering 400 employes has been signed with the Gerity-Adrian Co. here by Local 26, National Association of Die Casting Workers, Edward Cheyfitz, national secretary-treasurer, announced. The Gerity-Adrian Co. makes plumbing fixtures and auto parts.

The company union at the plant was eliminated as result of the agreement, which provides for the check-off, a 40-hour week and seniority rights. Negotiations will be reopened on March 1 to establish a new wage scale and discuss vacations with pay.

Negotiators in West Coast Tie-Up

With the lumber port of Bellingham in the northwest tip of Washington tied up by a strike of the Intl. Woodworkers of America, CIO, against the Bloedel-Donovan Lumber Co., union and company representatives meet with arbitrators in an attempt to settle the differences.

Smelter Workers Elect

Denver, Nov. 4—Re-election of all officers and board members of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers and adoption of all submitted constitutional amendments, including the vital 75 cents per capita proposition, marked the annual elections and referendum of the CIO union.

At the helm of the union is Intl. Pres. Reid Robinson who, though unopposed, drew 12,953 votes, the largest tally of any candidate. Returned to office with him are Vice-Pres. Ora L. Wilson and Sec.-Treas. John M. Sherwood.

Also re-elected were the following members of the Intl. Executive Board: Thomas Murray, Dist. 1; Glenn Gillespie, Dist. 2; Angelo Verdu, Dist. 3; Tony McTeer, Dist. 4; Van D. Jones, Dist. 5; Jess Gonzalez, Dist. 6; Ray Livingston, Dist. 7, and Tomye Church, Dist. 8. Brothers McTeer and Gonzalez were unopposed. Vote tallies for the district races appear elsewhere in this issue.

Western Union Told to Bury Company Set-Up

BULLETIN

The Natl. Labor Relations Board revealed today that it had petitioned the Second Circuit Court in New York for an enforcement order in its decision against Western Union.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4. — The Labor Relations Board, finally catching up with one of the oldest company unions in the world, issued an order here requiring Western Union to withdraw all recognition and support from the Assn. of Western Union Employes, to stop restraining employes from joining unions of their own choice, and to reimburse them for years of dues checked off by the company into its dummy union.

The Board order, described by CIO union leaders as "a green light for labor" was based on charges filed by the American Communications Assn., CIO, almost two years ago. The ACA is at present conducting a strike against Western Union in San Francisco.

"The decision issued today by the Board explodes once and for all the claim of Western Union officials that they could not negotiate a settlement of the San Francisco strike because of their existing agreements with a 'bona-fide' union, the Assn. of Western Union Employers," Joseph P. Selly, ACA vice-president, declared.

"Today's decision nullifies this 'agreement'. The choice to be made by Western Union officials is simple — either they will deal with the representatives of their striking San Francisco employes, or be completely exposed before the public.

"The decision brands the AWUE for what it is — a creature of the Western Union Co. designed to thwart genuine collective bargaining."

TWENTY YEARS AGO

Findings of the Board showed that the company union was set up more than 20 years ago, giving the company one of the longest and mustiest records of union dodging in history. Anti-union employers were more frank then, for Western Union stated openly at the time that the Association was being set up to prevent union organization, then under the AFL.

The Board's report in describing the history of this phony outfit is equally frank. After listing the various forms of company support to the Association, which included ample funds, use of company time and facilities, preference for stooge officials, and open terror against rebels, the report says:

"The respondent's (Western Union) reward for all these bounties lay in the fact that it had trained the Association to act as its complaint agent in dealing with its employes and that it had fashioned the Association into a weapon for warding off the advance of outside labor organizations upon the domain restricted to the Association."

And on the company's gestures at cutting off support to the Association after the Supreme Court validated the Wagner Act in 1937;

"While the respondent went through the motions on August 17, 1937, of reluctantly divesting the Association of some forms of support, it did not seriously attempt to place the Association in a position of equality with all other labor organizations which had endeavored to enroll its employes.

N. J. League Busy in Patterson

Paterson, N. J.—Intensive campaign activities are under way by Labor's Non-Partisan League in Patterson, N. J., where it has endorsed Vincent C. Duffy, Democratic mayoralty candidate, and a slate of aspirants for other local offices.

Campaign offices have been opened at 209 Market Street, several meetings have been announced, and a campaign committee set up.

New York, Nov. 11 — Pay increases totaling $66,000 a year for employes of the Milwaukee County Hospital were won by Local 35, State, County & Municipal Workers, in Milwaukee, Wis., the national office of the union here announced today.

A vigorous campaign supported by the local trade union movement in behalf of the hospital employes brought forth a forth a front page editorial of protest in the anti-labor Milwaukee Journal, the union said.

Republic Steel Must Rehire 5,000 Workers

(See Story Page Three)

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 11.—Holding Tom Girdler and his Republic Steel Corp. directly responsible for the Little Steel strike of 1937, the Federal Circuit Court today had sustained a Labor Board order directing the firm to rehire 5,000 workers with back pay, at an estimated cost to the company of $7,500,000.

The Girdler firm indicated it would take an appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court.

The verdict—which was unanimous on the part of the three judges — ordered the corporation to end its company-dominated unions, and to cease its attempted wrecking of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

The 1937 strike, the court held, resulted not from Republic's refusal to sign a union contract, but from its attempts to prevent SWOC from organizing.

One expected result of the ruling—which observers predict will be upheld by the Supreme Court—will be to wipe out the basis for Republic's $7,500,000 damage suit against the CIO. That suit, filed last summer under the Sherman anti-trust law, was based on charges that the CIO was responsible for strike and restraint of trade.

The court refused to take that position.

CIO Official Escapes Texas Death Trap

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11.—Maurice Dineen, CIO field representative for western Texas, was in this city today after having cheated Texas vigilantes of a threatened killing on the barren sand-hills near the border city of El Paso.

Dineen, who has been helping bakery workers fight a frame-up case, took an early morning train out of the Texas city just a few hours before he would have stepped into a trap that would have meant death or serious injury.

In saving his life, Dineen ignored a subpoena to appear at the trial of four Mexican members of the CIO Benito Jaurez Bakery Union charged with overturning a truck during a strike early last summer.

The CIO official received a late-night warning that local vigilantes were "planning a job". His informant, Dineen said, warned that "a phoney telephonic communication was to be transmitted to you direct. When those anonymous parties contacted you, they would leave in a taxi and pick you up, claiming they were representatives of the C. of C. [Chamber of Commerce] in this city.

"Instead of reaching your destination as contemplated, they would give you the works and out to the sandhills where your unidentified body might have been found some time in the future."

NAME HIRELING

Dineen's information revealed that a Mexican "readily admitted that he was offered a good price for getting rid of a 'rat like you'. He told me personally that he was leaving the Border because he had failed to accomplish his job and that he was returning to Mexico City, because he feared retaliation from the Higher Ups for having failed to do the job as paid and instructed.

"He wouldn't even give me the names of the Higher-Ups. Said it was 'too hot to handle'."

Union officials and members in El Paso said that Dineen had aroused the distrust and hatred of reactionary employers in western Texas because of his work in laying a foundation for CIO organization. Corrupt politicians cooperate closely with the anti-union employers, Dineen said, to forestall or wipe out unionism.

The four Mexican workers in the bakery strike case were the center of a violent red scare during their trial for allegedly overturning a truck during the June strike. Three of the men, however, were acquitted, while the fourth was given a sentence of only one day.

In a previous case, two other unionists had been handed one-year terms. An attempt to win pardons for the convicted men has been launched by CIO attorneys.

Tory Firm Throws In The Towel

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 11 — After fighting Labor Board decisions for three years all the way to the Supreme Court, the Louisville Refining Company, described as "the toughest, last-ditch opponent of the CIO in this locality" signed an exclusive bargaining agreement with Local 211, of the Oil Workers International Union.

Last October the Supreme Court refused to review a Labor Board decision favorable to the union and the company was obliged to pay men fired three years ago back wages totalling some $25,000.

The agreement sets up grievance machinery, provides for promotions on the basis of seniority rights, paid vacations and holidays, time and a half for overtime, and regular inspection of machinery which may cause explosions or cause other serious accidents to workers.

Canadian CIO Launches Drive To Enroll 2,000,000

OTTAWA, Ont., Nov. 11.—A one-day conference of CIO union representatives here last week launched a crusade to bring industrial unionism to Canada's 2,000,000 unorganized workers.

Predicting that within a year membership in the Canadian CIO would equal or pass that of AFL affiliates, Silby Barrett, chairman of the Canadian council, declared:

"Canadian workers are eager for organization and we'll give it to them despite the kind of attack we can expect from the manufacturers.

"In the fight for democracy the front line is here just as much as in Europe. It will be labor's boys who go overseas and we can't betray them. We have to see to it that decent working conditions await them when they come back this time."

105 DELEGATES

The conference drafted a legislative program which was presented to Hon. Norman McLarty, federal minister of labor. Attending were 105 delegates, representing 55,000 members in the basic industries of the nation. Three fraternal delegates from the Algoma Steel Workers Union, an All-Canadian Congress affiliate, were also present.

General CIO policy was established by the meeting on the basis of the following four points:

"1. Labor demands the right of adequate representation on all government boards and agencies set up to cope with the war situation and to mobilize national defense.

INCREASE WAGES

"2. The real wages of the workers, already inadequate in very many cases, must not be allowed to suffer further from rising living costs, and every effort must be made to stop profiteering and adjust wage levels to rising prices.

"3. Preocupation with international affairs must not be allowed to distract attention from unemployment and other pressing problems of internal economic insecurity.

"4. More than usual vigilance must be exercised to guard existing labor and social legislation and democratic rights against curtailment under the pretext of emergency consideration."

As the concluding feature of the week-end conference, the CIO Union leaders presented a legislative memorandum to the federal minister which it insisted the government adopt to "eliminate the injustice and dangers which confront our people."

HIT TORYISM AT HOME

Vigorous representation was made to the government to prevent suspension of municipal elections in Ontario and elsewhere during the war, now being contemplated by several provincial government.

The legislative brief was presented to Mr. McLarty by Silby Barrett, chairman, and C. H. Millard, secretary of the Canadian CIO council.

The delegates also asked the government to make the federal labor department's function the promotion of the welfare of labor in the dominion rather than continue its present role as being more of a neutral agent.

Presiding at the conference, Barrett explained that complete authority and national autonomy in regard to Canadian affairs was vested in the Canadian CIO. He said this independence of action within the Canadian sphere constituted a new departure in international unionism and was in complete accord with the wide democracy practiced in the CIO as distinct from the AFL which dominates the decisions of its Canadian members.

Commenting on the war, the committee reported that it had "offered its cooperation to the government in its measures to defend itself against fascist aggression," and was ready to "assist in the War Time Prices and Trade Board in a determined fight against profiteering."

To perform most effective work and avoid industrial strife, the committee contended, an extension of collective bargaining between employer and labor was essential.

The conference was the first delegate meeting of CIO unions in the dominion since they were expelled from the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada last September on orders of President William Green of the AFL.

Vote Support To Strikers

Bessemer, Ala., Nov. 11 — Members of Local 12019, District 50, United Mine Workers, employed at the Woodward Iron Company By-product plant, voted full support to Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers strikers at the Lipscomb Red Ore mines of the Woodward Iron Co. near Bessemer.

The company fostered a dual AFL union at the mine and refused to bargain with the CIO union when it won a Labor Board election 454 to 81.

The by-products workers also condemned the company's system of running the mine through contractors who are paid $20 to $40 a day and "do not hit a lick of work".

Restaurant Strike Ends

Henryetta, Okla., Nov. 11 — Henryetta's restaurants were back to normal today, thanks to the settlement of a four-month strike conducted by the CIO Cooks, Waiters and Bartenders Union.

Wage for restaurant workers were set at temporary levels until arbitrators can work out new standards acceptable both to the union and the proprietors of a half-dozen establishments.

David Fowler, CIO regional director, represented the restaurant employes in the settlement.

Steel Union Gets First Toronto Pact

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 11 — The Steel Workers Organizing Committee won its first contract in Toronto when the management of General Steel Wares Ltd., manufacturers of kitchen utensils and enamel wares, settled with the union after a five-day strike of its employes last week.

Under provisions of the agreement, signed by General Manager F. S. Corrigan and Lodge 1111 President Howard Fick, time workers received five cents an hour increase and piece workers obtained 7½ per cent raise in wages. The contract is in effect until Dec. 1940.

A feature of the contract is a provision that if the cost of living increases by five per cent over present-day costs, the company will grant a further increase to the extent of such excess over five per cent.

"This is one of the greatest victories for labor," Silby Barrett, SWOC director, declared upon announcement of the successful settlement of the strike.

AFL UNIONS HELPED

Highlights of the strike in which 517 employes were involved was the support received from the Toronto District Labor Council and AFL affiliates generally.

When the management tried to sidetrack issues of the strike by alleging that the dispute was over CIO domination, Secretary J. W. Buckley of the Council, immediately wrote the management that his organization was fully behind the demands of the strikers.

Three Million Enjoy Union Shop Standards

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11. — Almost half of the nation's eight million union members now work under the protection of union shop conditions, the Dept. of Labor reported today.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics, in an article appearing in the October issue of the Monthly Labor Review, estimated that some three million workers are employed under closed shop contracts, while "many" union workers enjoy closed shop conditions without formal contracts covering that issue.

The largest single group of employes working under a union shop is in the coal mining industry, the article pointed out; others are the clothing, printing, brewing, motion picture, fur and millinery industries.

GIVE DEFINITION

The closed shop agreement, under the Labor Department's definition, "requires that all employes in a plant or craft covered by the agreement must be members of the union, and that new employes are to be union members or must join the union immediately upon employment of within a specified time."

Preferential shop agreements—found in flat glass manufacture, newspaper offices, maritime transportation and longshoring—are much less common than the closed shop, the article said. This type of contract gives union members preference over non-member employes in some aspect of their working conditions.

Unions have sought the closed shop not so much for the "check-off" method of collecting dues but to protect the jobs of their members, the Labor Department found.

"The check-off is, of course, a great convenience to the union, and some employers prefer it as a means of avoiding possible confusion and loss of working time when dues are collected from members in or about the plant," the Department statement said.

Gleam in Shippers' Eye

AMERICAN SHIPPING IS BANNED in dangerous war area, shown as shaded section on map, through American Congressional action and Pres. Roosevelt's executive order. Now private shipping lines, which get heavy government subsidies, are attempting to change their ships' registry to evade the law, send ships into the danger zone. CIO Maritime unions are fighting the move.

Shipowners' Squeeze Play Under Attack

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11. — Proposals by shipowners and the U. S. Maritime Commission to allow transfer of American ships to foreign registry for the purpose of carrying cargoes to forbidden war zones was sharply denounced by CIO National Maritime Union official here and in New York.

In New York, Joseph Curran, NMU president, accused the owners and the Commission of "working in collusion" to destroy the American Merchant Marine and to involve "this country in the European war." In Washington, Bjorne Halling, secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee, described the proposal as "an outrageous deal" designed "to protect profits at whatever cost to the seamen and to the building up" of American shipping.

"This is in direct contradiction to the expressed feelings of the American people in this situation," Curran said. "The American people don't want their Merchant Marine destroyed and they don't want to become involved in war.

VIOLATES NEUTRALITY

"Furthermore, it is in direct violation of the spirit of the Neutrality law — the spirit, if not the actual wording, of a law on which the President's signature is hardly dry."

Both Pres. Curran and Committee Secretary Halling denounced the willingness of the Commission to consider the proposal and to promote it as evidence of the Commission's desire to serve the shipowners rather than the seamen and the general public. Said Curran:

"The willingness of the Maritime Commission to allow itself to be used by a section of American money interests in this matter

'Obey U.S. Law', Court Orders Republic Steel

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 11.—Tom Girdler and his Republic Steel Corporation have been told to obey the law of the United States. They were told by a court decision, reached by unanimous verdict of the three judges on the Circuit Court of Appeals here, affirming the Labor Board order of last June that required Republic to rehire 5,000 Steel Workers Organizing Committee members fired for the Little Steel strike of 1937, to get rid of all scabs, and to pay back wages between the time of the order and its execution.

Equally important was the court's stand in dismissing Republic's plea that the workers did not come into court "with clean hands," since they were allegedly responsible for the strike. Republic's actions in violating the law were alone to blame for the strike, the court held.

Full responsibility is placed at Republic's door by the court in describing a long series of provocative actions that led to the strike.

"Almost immediately after SWOC commenced its organization campaign Republic in its turn began a counter-campaign to crush the union,' the decision reads.

"It announced to all its employes at once that 'Republic stands for the Open Shop principle,' that 'no employe has to join any organization to get or hold a job,' and that 'every Republic employe owes a duty of loyalty to the company so that its best interests may be served. Conduct detrimental to the interests of the company and which may disrupt the satisfactory relations between employes and management will not be tolerated.' "

FROM THE BEGINNING

More than this, Republic from the start of the SWOC campaign followed a policy of coercion and open terror against union organizers and members, the court indicated.

Company union tactics of Republic were sharply criticized ed by the court as well. "Employes were coerced by foremen and representatices to sign petitions supporting the representatation (company unions, ed.) plans and opposing SWOC," it said.

"Meetings of employes were held by the management at which the virtues of the representation plans were praised; employes were threatened with discharge if they joined the 'outside' union, and anti-union literature was distributed.'

Finally, the court pointed out, lic's door. Consequently Republic cannot continue to maintain that any damages are due to it under the Sherman Act or any other statute, since its own illegal actions account for the strike and all its byproducts."

Bethlehem Gets CIO Invitation

Bethlehem, Pa., Nov. 11 — A November 13 deadline for collective bargaining was handed to the anti-union Bethlehem Steel Corp. today by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

The company's president — high-paid Eugene Grace — was advised in a letter from E. J. Lever, head of SWOC's campaign at Bethlehem, that a union negotiating committee will be in the company's New York office at 11 A. M. on the morning of the thirteenth ready to bargain for a contract.

"Your failure to meet us personally or through a fully empowered agent will create a situation for which the Steel Workers Organizing Committee can in no way be held responsible," Lever wrote to Grace.

ASK $5 A DAY

SWOC's recent demand for a $5-a-day minimum — the level gained in practically every union steel mill throughout the land— will be one of the subjects up for discussion.

"In view of the profits being made by the Bethlehem Steel Corp. there is no reason why Bethlehem should not pay wages equal to those being paid by all other steel companies of equal size," Lever asserted.

The SWOC committee will represent a majority of the company's workers in seven plants in Pennsylvania, one in Maryland, one in New York, one in Washington and two in California.

Slapped Down

TOM GIRDLER took another thumping this week when the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals upheld CIO steel union and Labor Board contentions that Republic Steel was responsible for the big strike of 1937. Company,—which will probably appeal to the Supreme Court— must pay millions in damages.

Decision 'Vindicates' Steel Union

Washington, Nov. 11 — The Court ruling against Tom Girdler's Republic Steel Corp. was described by Lee Pressman, CIO and SWOC general counsel, as "more than a complete vindication of the work and policies of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee," and as a knockout blow to Girdler's $7,500,000 suit against the CIO.

"The court, in upholding the Labor Board's contention that the illegal acts of Republic caused the 1937 strike, has knocked out the basis for the corporation's $7,500,000 suit against the union and the CIO," Pressman said.

WORKERS ABSOLVED

"This suit was based on alleged violations of law by the CIO workers involved in the strike. Now the court has affirmed the fact that flagrant and consistent violations of law, chiefly of the Wagner Act, by the corporation, caused the strike.

"The workers and the CIO are completely absolved of any blame in bringing about the strike, and its origins clearly laid at Repub-

Phoney Mine Outfit Squashed

Washington, Nov. 11—Approval of a settlement in the case of the Williams Coal Co., Mannington, Kentucky, in which the company agreed to abolish completely the Independent Miners' Union of Western Kentucky, District 1, has been announced by the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

In further compliance with the Board's order of Feb. 23, 1939, the company agreed to stop discouraging membership in the United Mine Workers, District 23, or any other labor organization and to reinstate with back pay 17 men.

Thugs Busy In Chicago

Chicago, Nov. 11 — New anti-labor violence marked the strike of warehousemen at the Continental Products Co. as four armed thugs invaded the living quarters of Leonard Levy, CIO union representative, and started a fight that resulted in injuries to seven men.

Levy, an official of the United Retail & Wholesale Employes, was living in a rooming house directly across the street from the struck plant. He said that the quartet of goons, armed with guns and clubs, invaded his room, and in the fight that ensued, seven men were hurt.

REVOLTED AGAINST AFL

The strike started when Continental employes quit an AFL union after its leaders, without consulting the members, signed a flimsy two-year contract. They demanded that the firm negotiate a real union agreement with the CIO affiliate.

Heads of the company took the fight into the courts and won a sweeping injunction against the strikers, which failed, however, to stop union activity against the firm.

Anti-Labor Knitting Mill Found Guilty

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 11.—Berkshire Knitting Mills, giant hosiery firm in Reading, Pa., long notorious for its bitter anti-union policies, was found guilty by the National Labor Relations Board this week of unfair labor practices arising out of the big 1936 strike led by the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, CIO.

Alexander McKeown, newly elected president of the AFHW, hailed the Board's decision as meaning "the end of industrial bondage for more than 5,000 Berkshire hosiery workers."

Berkshire, which is the largest single producer of women's full-fashioned silk stockings in the world, was ordered by the Board to offer reinstatement to the employes who went out on strike October 1, 1936, to abolish its company union, and to stop discouraging membership in the AFHW. Eighteen employes refused employment after the strike were specifically named to be offered reinstatement with back pay.

The CIO Is Vindicated

In upholding the Labor Board order against the Republic Steel Corporation, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia has rendered a measure of justice to thousands of steel workers who were discharged for their union activities and who have been ordered reinstated with back pay.

It has vindicated the charges made by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee and the Board in regard to the coercive and intimidating anti-union tactics of Tom Girdler's corporation.

More than this, it has upheld the contention of the Board that it was the company's flagrant and continued violations of the Wagner labor relations act that caused the 1937 strike.

In absolving the workers and the CIO of blame for the strike, and placing responsibility at the door of Republic Steel, CIO Counsel Lee Pressman points out, the court has "knocked out the basis for the corporation's $7,500,000 suit against the union and the CIO."

"Republic cannot continue to maintain that any damages are due to it under the Sherman Act or any other statute," he says, "since its own illegal actions account for the strike and all its by-products."

But aside from the tangible advantages for the workers and the legal implications of the decision, there is a moral justification involved which will bring satisfaction and encouragement to all of labor.

In organizing the workers, the CIO seeks to improve their conditions through peaceful collective bargaining as provided for under the law. Where industrial conflict occurs, it is caused by the refusal of corporations to grant the workers their full collective bargaining rights.

The court decision in the Republic Steel case is supporting evidence for this CIO contention. It also serves notice that no corporation is so big as to be above the law.

Company Unions Exposed

The Wizard of Oz had quite a system for impressing and terrifying the natives. Hidden behind curtains as he worked the controls, he could produce smoke and fire and magnify his voice until all bowed down before the apparitions he created.

The whole affair fell flat, however, and the Wizard felt decidedly foolish, when a little girl pulled back the curtains and showed him working at his fakery.

The Labor Board has been cast in the ingratiating role of little Dorothy in two recent decisions. It has pulled back the curtains to show how the Western Union company and the two Eagle-Picher companies in the tri-state area have been working the controls of two of the oldest and phoniest company unions, to intimidate their employes.

In exposing the company character of the Association of Western Union Employes, the Board has also ordered the company to stop restraining its workers from joining a bona fide union, and to return to them the tribute it has mulcted from them in the guise of dues to the phoney union.

In the Eagle-Picher case, the Blue Card company union was taken into the AFL, without losing its company-dominated character. The companies have been forbidden to coerce their employes into joining the Blue Card outfit, and to leave them free to join a genuine union. Many workers fired for union activity have been ordered reinstated with back pay.

Now that all this fake wizardry of company unionism has been exposed, the bona fide unions in these two fields, the American Communications Association and the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, can go to town in bringing the benefits of real collective bargaining to the workers concerned.

Time To Stop, Look and Listen

Looking Ahead

By LEN DE CAUX

Un-American Conditions

ONE THING that all humanity has in common is limited stomach capacity. With every aid to digestion, the richest potentate cannot stow away much more food than the lowest paid laborer.

On the contrary, the needs and capacity of any hard working man should give him a decided edge over the average dyspeptic millionaire, so far as appetite is concerned.

Yet recent statistics show that, whereas it takes $2,000 a year to fill the stomachs of one small group of Americans, there are some 13 million other families and individuals who have to get by on only $236 a year for food.

The figures are taken from the recent report of the National Resources Planning Board on consumer expenditures.

The report shows that one-third of the population of the United States have not enough income to cover food, clothing and shelter at even the most miserable level.

These millions of Americans had to go into debt to cover their barest family living costs of $563, on an average, in the year 1935-36, since their total income averaged only $471.

In contrast, a small group of 178,000 wealthy Americans had nearly as much consumer income as all of the 13 million families and individuals in the lowest income group.

Patriotism in Action

Such conditions are contrary to American principles of equality of opportunity. They deny to millions of Americans their full right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

The organizations which are doing most to combat these un-American and subversive conditions are the great labor unions which make up the CIO.

The CIO unions have not restricted themselves to representing the higher-skilled and better-paid. They have set out also to better the conditions of millions of the lowest-paid workers, to make this country worth living in for all.

The Americanism of the CIO is not confined to flag-waving oratory. It is patriotism in action, the patriotism of solid and continuous contribution to the welfare of our country and the people who dwell in it.

Hauling Down the Flag

The proposal of American shipowners to have their vessels sail under foreign flags, with foreign crews, to get around the neutrality legislation, is one that must cause much reflection on the questions of patriotism.

profit and equality of treatment under the law.

American seamen are not covered by the Social Security Act. They have no unemployment compensation coming to them when they are laid off.

Yet they interposed no objection to neutrality legislation which Congress deemed necessary in the national interest, though it would mean loss of jobs for up to 10,000 of them. All they asked was fair and equal treatment under the law, and that the Maritime Commission cease aiding anti-union shipowners to beat down their conditions.

But when the Commission apparently approves a plan to give their jobs to foreign seamen, in order that the shipowners may continue to rake in the full profits of war, it is getting a bit too thick.

Good News from Detroit

The election of Edward J. Jeffries as mayor of Detroit is a resounding rebuke by the voters of that city to the tactics employed by Richard W. Reading, the anti-CIO mayor, who was running for re-election.

Reading devoted the closing days of his campaign largely to attacking the CIO and to urging people to vote against Jeffries because he was supported by the CIO.

Progressive labor has demonstrated its political power in Detroit, to the great encouragement of the progressive forces generally throughout the country.

Detroit should also provide a lesson for all candidates in coming elections, that labor-baiting tactics are one of the most effective methods of inviting political defeat.

CIO—Four Years Old

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11. — CIO celebrated a birthday this week — the fourth anniversary of the day when leaders of the industrial union movement formed the Committee for Industrial Organization and prepared the way for great campaigns to organize the unorganized.

Fourth year of CIO's existence shows its membership at record size and growing fast; its ranks harmonious and united behind a progressive leadership; and its voice increasingly influential throughout the nation.

YOUR WPA JOB:

War Boom Bring Jobs?-Doubtful, Says Official

By RALPH HETZEL
CIO Unemployment Director

A short time ago a most important speech passed practically unnoticed. Howard Hunter, Deputy Commissioner of the WPA, spoke in Chicago on "Unemployment and Our National Economy."

The significance of the speech to the CIO is that Hunter's analysis of the present economic situation bears out that laid down by President Lewis at the CIO Convention last month. Hunter set forth a fundamental philosophy which, if consistently adhered to by the Administration, would have a powerful effect in correcting the present unemployment.

Those interested in the unemployment problem would do well to get complete copies of the speech. Excerpts from it will illustrate its importance:

". . . What is the basis for believing that the war is likely to cause a big expansion in employment? How many new jobs can be expected? Many people are guessing. And a lot of wishful thinking is going on.

"Presumably, the expected increase in employment would arise out of increased exports. During the last World War our exports to Europe tripled. But, as you may remember, a good part of these goods were sold on credit. At present, the belligerents can't buy on long-term credit. If exports to England and France increased by $1 billion during the next year, employment would rise perhaps 500,000—perhaps 700,000.

"At the outside, increased exports to Europe and South America combined might create a million new jobs. Domestic expansion, because of internal recovery forces, might add another million jobs.

"This would take a year. Meantime, the labor supply has increased by 600,000 workers. Add all this up and we would still have at least 8 million unemployed during next summer.

"Honest analysis tells us that this is the prospect. There are implications that should cause us the gravest concern. It means that we should have done with the will-o'-the-wisp notion that a war boom is going to wipe out unemployment.

"We cannot look to the war for a solution of our unemployment problem. War always brings economic dislocation and disturbances. If we gear our national economy to this war we will head right into another collapse that will make our troubles since 1930 look trifling.

U. S. PROBLEMS

". . . Too many people still think that unemployment is a distressing interlude between periods of full employment and prosperity. As a matter of fact our system has been shaken right down to its foundations, and we cannot expect it to return to the old order of things. It is not a matter of synical unemployment; it is persistent, long-term unemployment. Unemployment insurance cannot cure it; direct relief obviously should not handle it—only work and income can deal with this problem in an effective and democratic way.

". . . In short, our economic system does not offer much hope of any big expansion in the near future. And by a big expansion I mean one that will absorb 7 or 8 million of the present unemployment and provide jobs to the hundreds of thousands coming to the labor market each year in the future. Our system has suffered from a stagnation of investment and deficient income in the hands of the masses.

". . . No democratic system can exist unless its people can find work and security. A real work program must be the new frontier. Workers who go out in search of work—in their own locality and elsewhere—must find what their forebears found—jobs and income, and (economic security too).

"War prosperity will not do the trick—and the dislocations caused by it will only make our situation worse. We need, therefore, an expansion of public employment and public work—to use our idle savings and give jobs to idle labor. In doing this we will produce things we need, things that are good for the national economy.

"What we need to do now is bear down harder on a domestic policy that includes a substantial work prgram, an expanded social security program, and some measure that is comparable to the works-financing bill proposed during the last session of Congress."

Shipowners' Squeeze Play Under Attack

only confirms the suspicion of the seamen and other maritime workers that the Commission is, in reality, little more than the lobbying arm of the American Merchant Marine Institute."

Halling pointed out that seamen, who sacrificed 10,000 jobs in the revision of the Neutrality Act, were apparently to be rewarded with starvation, while the shipowners were "amply taken care of."

TAXPAYERS' PIE

"Our program for the protection of American maritime workers, made public during the debate on neutrality revision, was ignored," he said. "This program, which called for social security, WPA and other works projects, and severance pay for the seamen, was not even seriously considered.

In New York, more than 3,000 seamen held a mass meeting to deal with the problems arising from Neutrality revision, transfer of ships and other actions increasing marine unemployment.

Tells Wage Law Story

Washington, Nov. 11—A new Wage-Hour Administration pamphlet "How the Wage-Hour Law Affects You"—has just come off the press.

Copies of the pamphlet can be obtained free from the Administration, c/o of the U. S. Dept. of Labor, Washington, or from the Wage-Hour field offices in key cities throughtout the country.

This pamphlet, together with one issued by the CIO—"Your Rights under the Wage-Hour Law" give complete information about the workings of the Law. The CIO Wage-Hour Bureau, in cooperation with the CIO Legal Department, will answer questions about specific points under the law for any affiliates seeking information.

Catholic Paper Defends Union At Chrysler

By FRANK WINN

DETROIT, Nov. 11.—President R. J. Thomas of the UAW-CIO charged today that the Chrysler Corporation, with the cooperation of the three Detroit daily newspapers, was attempting to use the Mohawk Valley formula in the current dispute to get the workers back into the plants without the protection of a union contract.

He was supported in his charge by the "Michigan Catholic", official newspaper of the Catholic Archdiocese of Detroit.

Thomas pointed to the front page editorials in all three daily newspapers in Detroit last week, all of which urged the men, in effect, to break with the leadership of the union and go back to the plants without an agreement being reached.

These editorials, coupled with the stalling by the company, a house to house canvass to the homes of workers by strikebreakers posing as salesmen, and the deliberate confusion of the issues on the part of the company, form a perfect picture of the Mohawk plan, Thomas said.

DEFENDS UNION

The Catholic newspaper presented a vigorous defense of the union's position, also in a front page editorial, in its issue of Nov. 9. After stating that "the issues involved have been clearly presented to the public," the editorial says.

"In this dispute there has been a request by the workers for a voice in the determination of production standards, which, when no agreement could be reached, was modified into a demand for arbitration of grievances.

"Both these demands are justified in the light of Catholic principles."

The article included a severe condemnation of the editorial policies of the three Detroit papers which "has not helped to clarify the issues of the dispute.'"

ASKS SEC PROBE

Earlier in the week, President Thomas requested that the Securities and Exchange Commission "investigate the relationship between the unloading of stock by Chrysler insiders in September and the current shut-down of the Chrysler plants."

A SEC report last week showed seven Chrysler officials, including Walter P. Chrysler and President K. T. Keller, had sold in September 16,300 shares of Chrysler common stock, representing more than 13 per cent of their total holdings.

"Shortly after disposing of these large holdings, these directors and officials precipitated a controversy with the UAW-CIO which has resulted in the closing of the Chrysler plants," Thomas wrote to Jerome Frank, chairman of the SEC. "The circumstances, I believe, require that your commission investigate the relationship between the unloading of the stock and the current shutdown.

'OPEN TO SUSPICION'

"There are several circumstances that are open to suspicion.

"In the first place, seven insiders disposed of large holdings on the eve of an unusually good business period for the automobile industry.

"Secondly, these Chrysler insiders must have had good knowledge of approaching labor difficulties when they unloaded their stock.

"The suggestion has been made by a Chrysler share-holder that the unloading of the 16,300 shares was part of a deliberate campaign. With the continuation of the shut-down brought on by these insiders it may be expected that the stocks will decline in value. They have already dropped a few points. Persons who bought some of the shares on margin will no doubt be unable to hold onto them. It will then be possible for the original holders, or persons acting for them, to pick up the shares at considerably less than the price they received a month ago."

Scholle Shifted To Detroit

CHICAGO, Nov. 11 — Gus Scholle, CIO regional director in this city for the past several months, is being transferred to a similar position in Detroit.

Court Hits Girdler's Tactics

these provocations culminated in a series of lockouts of workers at its Canton and Masilon plants. "These lockouts," the court wrote, "coming after a long period of continual drastic anti-union measures, placed the union in a position where it could not hope to preserve itself without immediate resort to action."

This terror had its "tragic result" in the shootings at Massilon, the court pointed out, in clearly laying the blame for all these occurrences on Tom Girdler's doormat.

Summing up, the court declared that these conditions, found to be facts by the Labor Board after exhaustive hearings, were backed by "ample evidence" and "must, therefore, be sustained."

War Boom — Or Boomerang?

CHICAGO, Nov. 11 (FP)—The total number of workers for whom jobs have been provided by the so-called war boom falls short of the number dismissed from WPA under the 18-month clause, Col. F. C. Harrington, WPA administrator, warned in an address here.

"However large our new war-time employment," Harrington declared, "there will still be millions of unemployed in this country.

"Let us bear in mind that next year there will be about 600,000 new young workers entering the labor market in excess of those older workers who leave it. Let us not forget that there are a good many millions of unemployed workers who are not on WPA.

"We shall still need a public works program to provide jobs and wages for the neediest of them."

Labor Shows Strength In Off-Year Elections; Big Gains in Detroit

By ROBERT DALE

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11.—Outstanding in Tuesday's off-year election returns was the smashing labor victory in Detroit, important gains in Ohio, scattered successes in New Jersey, Connecticut and Pennsylvania, and general increases in labor's vote in all local contests.

The landslide defeat of reactionary Mayor Richard Reading, of Detroit, indicates that the big auto city has definitely broken the stranglehold of the corporations on the city's political life. Edward J. Jeffries, Jr., backed by labor, polled 226,185 to Reading's 108,975.

In a frantic effort to save himself from defeat after he ran far behind in the primary, Reading indulged in a vicious labor-baiting campaign. He made the CIO an election issue and the outcome was hailed by the nation's press as a major CIO victory.

Six councilmanic candidates supported by CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League forces were also successful in the progressive sweep. Two anti-labor council incumbents went down to defeat with Reading.

A major issue in the Detroit race was removal of Police Commissioner Pickert whom the CIO has charged repeatedly with illegal assaults on workers and other anti-labor activity. Jeffries pledged to fire Pickert and since election has said he intends to do it promptly.

YOUNGSTOWN

Labor voters of Youngstown, O., are celebrating the election of their candidate, William Spagnola, to the mayoralty there. Spagnola, who had Labor's Non-Partisan League endorsement, is a trusted friend of the steel workers who were attacked by ex-Gov. Davey's troops.

In Cleveland, Mayor Harold Burton's expected majority of 80,000 was reduced to 37,000 when labor forces united in the closing week of the campaign behind his opponent, John O'Donnell. The labor majority on the Cleveland school board was re-elected.

LOCAL VICTORIES

While labor lost mayoralty candidates by narrow margins in Akron and Canton, there were many victories in local contests over the state. Two labor-endorsed school board candidates in Toledo were elected. Result of the Toledo council election, with five labor candidates, is delayed due to the proportional representation voting plan there.

Akron voters defeated old-time Republican incumbents in the city council. Labor's Non-Partisan League made six endorsements and four of these were elected, three being members of organized labor. Although the Republican mayor was re-elected by only 6,320 votes, his majority in city council was upset. The council formerly made up of ten machine Republicans and three Democrats is now composed of eight Democrats and five Republicans.

BIGELOW LEADING

Herbert Bigelow, former Ohio Congressman and author of the old-age pension plan which was defeated, was apparently elected a member of the Cincinnati city council with labor support.

In Pennsylvania, labor's political forces marked a number of significant victories though its mayoralty ticket in Philadelphia was nosed out by the close margin of less than 30,000 votes out of a total vote of 751,000. A change of 16,000 votes — slightly more than two per cent — would have reversed the result.

The Republican victory in Philadelphia over the Democratic-Fusion ticket which labor backed was influenced by the fact the GOP made a national issue of the city contest and spent freely to put over its nominee. Pennsylvania Democrats who were badly split last year are still suffering the consequence of their betrayal of labor's candidate for governor, Tom Kennedy, former Lieutenant-Governor and high United Mine Workers official.

Two councilmen endorsed by labor were elected in Philadelphia. Upstate, Judge Vincent J. Dalton won with labor support a seat on the Common Pleas bench. Labor also backed Judge William H. Keller, re-elected to the Superior Court. John E. Sheridan, a Democrat backed by labor, was elected to Congress from Philadelphia.

MANY UPSETS

In the Pittsburgh area, labor forces backed the Democrats who snowed under the Republicans in dozens of local contests. There were a number of surprising upsets of veteran Republican office holders as the Democrats took complete command of the city government.

Other local labor victories in Pennsylvania's balloting included election of a pro-labor mayor of Easton, school board members in Bethlehem, and Clifford Shorts, secretary of SWOC Lodge No. 1211, Aliquippa, to the city council. Labor also elected a Sheriff in Westmoreland county, on the basis of early returns, and city councilmen and mayor in Arnold.

Connecticut and New Jersey also presented some labor victories.

NEW JERSEY

Labor forces lost their fight to elect a mayor in Paterson, N. J., but did win with State Senate candidate Oscar R. Wilensky, Republican, and Assembly candidate William J. Hanna, also Republican. South New Jersey resisted efforts of the Hague Democratic machine to take over there.

Labor's Non-Partisan League victories included election of Assemblyman Samuel S. Ferster in Essex County, Mayor John Gabriel, of Garfield, plus two councilmen there, three councilmen in Gloucester who defeated Democratic incumbents, and an Assemblyman in Mercer County.

It is also noteworthy that though labor's mayoralty candidate lost in Paterson, the campaign manager of his successful rival is a member of Labor's Non-Partisan League. Both candidates showed friendly attitudes to labor.

The League in Connecticut saw the only two men it endorsed elected to the city council in Bridgeport. Michael Flanagan who had League endorsement was the first Democrat named to the council since 1933.

ROSSI WINS AGAIN

San Francisco's re-elected Mayor Angelo Rossi, whom labor had opposed, and California's rejected the "ham and eggs" pension plan, though it rolled up 1,000,000 votes.

Tammany Hall claimed victories in New York on the basis of early returns but results for many offices will be unknown until the proportional representation ballots are counted.

Elected

DETROIT'S REACTIONARY ADMINISTRATION toppled as labor and liberal votes swept Edward Jeffries into the mayor's office by a 2-1 margin over the present incumbent, Richard Reading. Jeffries had active CIO support in his fight against the bitterly anti-union mayor.

Bethlehem Stooge Ousted

One of labor's most sensational triumphs was the decisive defeat of Mayor Daniel J. Shields, of Johnstown, Pa. after a campaign in which Mayor Shield's anti-labor activity two years ago in the steel strike was an issue.

Shields had been exposed by the U. S. Senate Civil Liberties Committee as having received $25,000 from steel firms. His labor-endorsed opponent who won is John A. Conway, Democrat, whose lead was more than 1600 votes.

The Labor Reader—

A Spotlight On Incomes

By C. W. FOWLER

Every worker knows certain basic facts about life in American industrial society. He knows that most frequently he and his fellow workers don't get enough money to buy the things that he and his family need for decent living. He knows that his income, what with hard times, layoffs, unemployment, can't stretch far enough to bring in the food and clothing and shelter that every American family should have.

He suspects further that millions of families like his are in the same leaky economic boat—and that a lucky minority doesn't have to worry or do without the way the majority does.

Every so often, however, the government comes along to remind him of it, and to tell the public at large just what share of the national income the people of America get. This the government has just done in a lengthy and carefully documented study on the incomes of U. S. consumers and how they are spent.

The study is complete, as all government reports are, with statistics, graphs, charts and tables. Out of this statistical welter certain basic and high-powered facts emerge—and some of them are dynamite.

THE FACTS

Some 29,400,300 families and 10,058,000 individuals during the year 1935-36 covered by the study spent $59.3 billion. Most of this (85 per cent) went for current expenses—food, clothing and shelter. Twenty-nine per cent went for food, 16 per cent for housing, almost 10 per cent for clothing, etc.

This was the overall expenditure for all families and individuals covered in the study. But the expenditure wasn't equally laid out by all these millions of people—far from it.

One third spent less than $780 during the year surveyed. One third spent between $780 and $1450, and the top third from $1450 up. The bottom two-thirds didn't hold their expenses down just because they were thrifty—they held them down because that was all they had.

(Incidentally, other government studies have shown that upwards of $2200 is the annual income needed for the full life, if the full life is to proceed according to established minimums for the food, clothing and shelter, plus other goods and services, that an American family should consume.)

A NATIONAL DEFICIT

At that, the lower one third consumed a smaller proportionate share of food than the other groups. Their average income of $471 wouldn't let them buy any more. Worse than that, it forced them into a deficit of $92 per year. In other words, to live, they had to go in the hole for 20 per cent of their expenditure.

The next one third, though the report describes it as "this American middle class," did a little better, but not much. On an average income of $1076, this group managed to get by with a $19 deficit.

"Thus," the report says, "for the poorer two-thirds of the nation, the incomes received during 1935-36 were too low, on the average, to cover current outlays." In other words, two-thirds of 29,000,000 families and 10,000,000 individuals did not make enough money per year to cover expenses they had to lay out in order to survive.

THE TOP THIRD

The top third in the three categories set out by the report, while they did better than the others, weren't all on consumers' easy street. Of this "top third," only 4.5 per cent got more than $3,000 ($800 above the desirable minimum of $2,200), only two per cent got more than $5,000, only one half of one per cent got more than $15,000. But—

"This top half of one per cent," the report says, "received nearly ten per cent of the $59 billion consumer income in 1935-36—almost as much as the whole lower third." And while the lower third had to spend all its money and more on living costs, the top half per cent only had to spend less than half of its take on all costs. The rest went into savings.

"There is plainly urgent need for improvement in the purchasing power of more than half of the nation's consumers, and ample room for a substantial expansion of the American consumer market."

Or as Pres. Lewis put it somewhat more forcefully in his report to the first CIO convention: "Full production in the modern economy is based on effective consuming power. Consuming power must at all times be able to absorb the full product of our economy. Broadly speaking it is the lack of adjustment between consuming power and productive capacity which brings us face to face with the paradox of plenty on the one hand, and on the other, people ill housed, ill clothed and ill fed."

By CECIL OWEN

Now that the neutrality debate is ended and Congress ready to go home, the real questions facing the country again appear.

Washington which has a way of attaching more importance to personalities than to policies is vastly concerned with the speculation over a third term for Roosevelt.

Actually, the third-term issue is of secondary importance. The real issue is what are to be Roosevelt's policies. Serious domestic problems have been shelved for months but they still remain and cry aloud for action.

While the war debate has taken all the headlines, a few of the legislators at the Capitol have been quietly thinking about the basic problems. One of these is Rep. Lee E. Geyer, D., Calif., who is circulating among his constituents a proposed program to keep us out of war. It is summarized here for purposes of discussion.

THREE SUGGESTIONS

Geyer's program has three main points: 1. Take all the profits out of war; 2. Guard against incidents such as the sinking of the Lusitania, likely to incite war fever in this country; 3. Preserve and extend democracy at home.

Under the first heading, Geyer would nationalize the munitions industry, curb all profiteering on food and other necessities, and continue protection of labor's right to organize and bargain collectively.

The second heading corresponds with the Administration's neutrality bill excluding American ships and citizens from war zones, curtailing credit to war nations, and the title and carry provisos.

DEMOCRACY AT HOME

Here is the third section about democracy at home:

a. Protect the civil liberties (freedom of speech, press, and assembly) of ALL Americans in order that the desire of the American people to remain at peace may continually be voiced.

b. Allow every group regardless of whether they are in the minority or the majority to continue to exercise the rights of freedom of speech, press, assembly, and worship as guaranteed under the constitution lest this denial become contagious and spread until the privileges be lost.

c. Insist on the right of a job at a decent living wage for every man able to work, and an adequate pension to those past employment age, not as charity, but as a right. This will provide the economic basis of real national unity and patriotism giving no chance for un-American doctrines to gain headway.

APPRENTICE TRAINING

The need of more apprentices in various skilled trades is seen by the Army and Navy Munitions Board which is preparing a report on the subject. It says lack of apprentices in skilled trades may "seriously interfere" with authorized upbuilding of the armed services.

The two federal agencies, the Labor Department and the Office of Education, are sponsoring apprentice training programs. Federal aid is provided in cooperation with employers and labor. Indications are this program may soon be expanded.

While the federal agencies concerned have a good "paper" policy that calls for joint supervision by employers and labor it does not always work out that way. Reports from Ohio tell of a rubber company apprentice program which not only froze out the union but actually implanted anti-labor thoughts in the minds of the students.

Protests to Washington brought promises this situation would be corrected and the company required to conform to policy. Labor elsewhere needs to be on guard against abuse of the apprentice system.

Retail Employes Meet Dec. 11

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—The United Retail and Wholesale Employes, CIO, will hold its second biennial convention in Huntington, W. Va., on Dec. 11, Pres. Samuel Wolchok announced today.

Hotel Pritchard will be headquarters for the delegates.

Arrangements have been made for special train facilities to take the expected large number of New York delegates to the sessions. Huntington was picked as the convention city, it was pointed out, because of its proximity to organized retail and wholesale centers in the east and middle west.

The union held its first epochal convention in Pittsburgh two years ago. Formation of the URWE marked a new stage in the fight against corruption and inaction in the AFL retail clerks union.

Within the two-year period, the URWE has organized many thousands of retail employes, as well as workers in wholesale and warehouse establishments. The convention, it is expected, will chart plans for an extended drive in all sections of the country.

Radio Code Battle:

Akron CIO Wins Point In Broadcast Fight

MIKE QUILL, head of the Transport Workers Union and candidate for re-election to New York City's Council, does a bit of last-minute campaigning. Results will be known next week.

AKRON, Ohio, Nov. 11.—Akron labor today had regained the use of its radio voice, though wondering if it would again be gagged by local station operators.

The program, the weekly "Voice of Labor" is sponsored by the Akron Industrial Union Council. Last month Mrs. E. F. Melrose, manager of Station WJW, ruled the program off the air, using as her excuse the new code of the National Association of Broadcasters.

The station's retraction of its earlier decision followed admission by Mrs. Melrose that programs contracted for previous to the formulation of the code cannot be ruled off the airwaves. What will happen at the end of three months, when the contract expires, remains to be seen, union leaders said.

PLAN CAMPAIGN

In the meantime the Akron CIO Council is planning a campaign of pressure to secure establishment of labor's right to the air.

The entire subject of labor's demand for radio time was reviewed last week when two representatives of the broadcasters debated Wilmer Tate, Akron labor veteran, and James Wishart, assistant educational director of the United Rubber Workers.

CITE POSITION

"We want the right to buy time like an advertiser with a legitimate product to sell," said Tate. "We are not asking for charity, but for a guarantee that we will not be shoved off the air at the whim of some Chamber of Commerce."

Free forums and debates proposed by the broadcasters as alternatives to the banned labor programs were assailed as "soothing syrup to lull us while we are robbed of our basic rights."

The broadcasters' code of ethics was adopted a few months ago. It forbids discussion of controversial issues on paid time, excepting political campaign discussions.

Estimate 'Blue Card' Back Wages Award At Close to $200,000

By HAROLD ROSSMAN

JOPLIN, Mo., Nov. 11.—Tri-State locals of the Intl. Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, victorious in their long Labor Board struggle against the Eagle-Picher Companies, today invited men who have gone to work since the 1935 strike, to join the union and protect their jobs.

This invitation was voiced by Board Member Tony McTeer of the CIO union as the first flood of wild reports about the decision subsided and the fact emerged that 207 strikers were allowed back pay in the sweeping decision. Of these, 175 were given full reinstatement rights and 18 placed on the preferential hiring list.

To estimate the amount of back pay, according to Hugh E. Sperry, regional NLRB director, would be "sheer guess work," but the award "may not exceed $200,000." Company estimates had risen as high as $1,000,000.

The Board's decision, which found the companies guilty of some of the most outrageous actions yet to come before it, ordered the Eagle-Picher Co. and its wealthy, wholly-owned subsidiary, the Eagle-Picher Mining & Smelting Co., to fire enough men hired after the strike to make places for the workers named in the order.

However, some 300 of these men have accepted the union's bid to join, and these men are unlikely to lose their jobs, McTeer declared.

19 SILICOSIS CASES

Some 19 men were disallowed any relief because of the fact that they have contracted lead poisoning and silicosis as a result of their work for the Eagle-Picher Companies under unsafe conditions, and for this reason are unemployable.

The Board's decision spells finis for the AFL's notorious "Blue Card" union, which served as a stooge for operators in the Tri-State area. Time after time the Board order refers to evidence disclosing that Eagle-Picher and other operators in the district were caught red-handed in their violations of the federal laws.

Every known method was used to break the miners' strike. Violence, hiring of thugs and criminals, fake arrests, destruction of union halls, influencing of police authorities, pick-handle parades and payment of $15,000 to the Blue Card union are but a few of the unfair activities exposed and condemned by the Board.

Re-Elected

PRES. REID ROBINSON of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers was re-elected to office by an overwhelming majority, results of a membership referendum revealed. Robinson was elected a CIO vice-president at the San Francisco convention.

Order Poll After Year's Delay

Washington, Nov. 11 — An election among employes of the Planters Manufacturing Co., Inc., Portsmouth, Virginia, first ordered by the Labor Board nearly a year ago, and tied up in the courts by opposition of the company, has again been ordered held within 30 days.

Employes whose names appear on any payroll in July, August or September 1939 will be eligible to vote in the election which will determine whether or not they want to be represented by CIO Local Industrial Union 485.

The Board's first election order was issued Dec. 20, 1938, but was postponed at the request of the Baltimore regional director of the Board, pending compliance with the order by the company.

On July 26, 1939, the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit entered a decree enforcing the Board's order. The regional director recommended on October 24 that a poll be scheduled.

Assails Weakening of Wagner Act

Amendments, Sissy Policies Hit By Carey

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11.—A warning that maladministration of the Wagner Act is becoming a greater threat than the drive for amendments to that Act was sounded today by CIO Sec. James B. Carey in a statement filed with the Senate Committee on Education and Labor.

Tracing the history of opposition to the Labor Act through its various stages, Carey — who heads the powerful United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers — charged that "just as those groups sought to wreck the Act through amendments, so do they now seek to wreck it without amendments by influencing the National Labor Relations Board."

PLAYING POLITICS?

"At least a part of that board (the NLRB) appears to have lost sight of the purpose of the Act and to have abandoned to a great degree the rigid and strict furtherance of those purposes, in order that they might indulge in playing politics—adjusting the principles of the law in an outrageous way to 'pressure' and threats from the known and avowed enemies of the Act.

WEIGHS HIS WORDS

"I weigh what I say carefully," the youthful CIO secretary declared, "when I state that in our view it is not beyond possibility that this kind of shabby manipulation of what is a good piece of legislation could very well turn the Act into a deterrent to industrial democracy.

"It is possible indeed, that this might happen to such a degree that organized labor . . . might have to organize its forces to seek to repeal the Act in toto if the enemies of the Act continue to be as successful as they have been during recent months in inducing the Board to contravene the purposes of the Act."

Earlier in his statement, Carey told of the great benefits which the electrical and radio workers have received from the Wagner Act, and cited the cases of the RCA Manufacturing Co., Westinghouse Electric and General Electric to prove his case that industrial peace has been gained because of the Act's protection to workers.

QUOTES GE OFFICIAL

He quoted from a speech by W. R. Burrows, General Electric vice-president in charge of labor relations to prove that the Wagner Act is no bar to satisfactory industrial relations. Burrows declared:

"Nine times out of ten, strikes are the management's fault and nine times out of ten when there are grievances, it's the management's fault.

"I can't look upon the CIO with any animosity.

"We have had no trouble with the Wagner labor law, now under fire from many quarters. It was designed to take the part of the employe who can't take care of himself. My suggestion would be to let the Wagner law ride and let some of those employers who haven't tried it, give it a try."

Columbus, Ohio. — The Ohio Industrial Union Council has donated $100 to the Hearst Chicago strike committee.

Rubber Pact Lifts Wages

Elmhurst, L. I., Nov. 11 — A general five per cent wage increase, a closed shop and check-off of union dues are among the terms provided in a contract signed by Local 153, United Rubber Workers and the Elmhurst Rubber Co.

The contract also provides one year's service, departmental seniority, and protection of seniority in case employes are called into military service.

Grievances which cannot be settled between the union and the management are to be submitted to an arbitration board whose decision will be binding.

Cudahy Fake Union Dies

Washington, Nov. 11—The Cudahy Packing Co., Chicago, has been ordered by the Labor Board to throw out its company union, the Packing House Workers Union, unaffiliated.

A secret election was also ordered at the Kansas City plant to determine whether the production and maintenance employes wish to be represented by the CIO local of the United Packinghouse Workers, or by an AFL union, or neither.

Rap Board Action At Goodrich

AKRON, Ohio, Nov. 11 — Charging that no opportunity for oral arguments had been given to Local 5, United Rubber Workers, by the Labor Board in its decision granting an election to six pattern makers in the giant B. F. Goodrich plant here, a rehearing of the case has been demanded by the CIO union.

In a letter to Chairman J. Warren Madden of the Board, the union's counsel, Stanley Denlinger, said that the decision was announced in the newspapers before the union was informed that it had been rendered.

Jersey Council To Hold Meet In Hague-Town

NEWARK, Nov. 11.—The second annual convention of the New Jersey State Industrial Union Council will be held Saturday and Sunday, November 18 and 19.

The convention will be held in the same city—Jersey City—in which a little over a year ago CIO organizers were beaten and deported. Host to the convention will be the powerfully organized Hudson County Industrial Union Council.

National leaders of the CIO will participate in the celebration and deliberations of the 500 delegates that are expected to attend.

Among those scheduled to speak are CIO Vice Presidents, Philip Murray, R. J. Thomas, S. H. Dalrymple and Reid Robinson and Secretary James Carey. John Brophy will bring the greetings of President John L. Lewis to the delegates.

Council Pres. W. J. Carney in a pre-convention statement hailed the "great victory of the CIO in holding our Second Annual Convention in Jersey City". Pres. Carney pointed out that "the theme of the convention will be organize the unorganized and there is no better place to launch such a drive than in Jersey City. I will be proud to report to the convention that the State CIO membership is 30% greater than it was a year ago.

"This convention will mark a great step forward in the history of the labor movement and will be a progressive step forward in wiping out the sweat-shops that have made the name of our State notorious."

Greater Boston Council Chartered By CIO

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 11—Another of the nation's big cities today had a functioning CIO industrial union council.

A council for greater Boston—including not only the city itself but some 5 nearby suburbs—received its charter from national CIO headquarters this week.

Donal M. Sullivan, a Newspaper Guild national vice-president, is president of the new group, its vice-president is Charles Higgins of the Mine Workers and James Gavin of the National Maritime Union is secretary-treasurer.

Other unions represented on the executive committee include the clothing workers, furniture workers, packinghouse workers, shipbuilding workers and retail and wholesale employes.

Michael Widman, Jr., who is leaving the CIO directorship post in Boston this month to become assistant director of organization for the CIO, predicted the council will become a powerful influence in the Boston metropolitan area.

Minneapolis Local In Drive

Minneapolis, Nov. 11—Local 1146 of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers is pushing a drive in the city's tractor plants.

The local, which started out as a combination of plant groups forming a machinists local, it now has a growing membership and has raised wages considerably, according to Sec. F. L. Bigham.

See AFL Heading For Fall At RCA

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11. — The AFL electrical workers' union is either "silly or courageous" if it goes ahead with plans for a Labor Board election at the RCA Manufacturing Co. in Camden, N. J., Sec. James Carey of the CIO said today.

Carey, who heads the CIO electrical and radio workers union, presented arguments on the case to National Labor Relations Board officials this week after the Board, ignoring the fact that the CIO has had a contract at the plant for three years, ordered an election among the several thousand employes.

Basis for the poll order was a claim of the AFL Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers that it had signed application cards from 4,000 of the RCA people.

MUSTY CARDS

But Carey said a large majority of the cards were obtained by the IBEW during a 1936 strike, which finally ended in the CIO pact. The IBEW case wobbled even more when its leaders met a request to show the cards with an alibi that they "had been stolen from the office."

The AFL outfit, which has few members at RCA, will probably withdraw from the ballot to avoid a thumping defeat, Carey said.

If it withdraws, there will be no need for a poll, he continued, since it was the AFL union, not the CIO, that asked for the election in the first place.

Reason for the AFL's meddling in the situation, Carey charged, was to injure the CIO's bargaining position in approaching contract discussions.

PAY RAISED

Battle Creek, Mich.—A contract won by the Battle Creek Newspaper Guild at the Enquirer & News has lifted pay $3,000 a year.

Toledo Labor Goes To Town

VOTE LABOR! was the plea of Toledo Labor's Non-Partisan League as it sent this "locomotive" through city streets with advertising for five city council candidates and others on the League-endorsed list.

Pay-Hour Bureau Opened

New York, Nov. 18 — A free information service on the newly effective wage-hour provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act has been set up nationally by the United Office & Professional Workers, CIO.

The service, which will aid employes in collecting wages due them under the Act and in enforcement of the 42-hour week, is available in the major cities of the country through some 40 of the union's locals in the commercial, publishing, financial and other fields coming under the scope of the Act.

PAMPHLET ISSUED

A special pamphlet, "Your Rights under the Wages and Hours Law", has been printed by the UOPW for free distribution nationally to office and professional employes to acquaint them with the Act's provisions.

The pamphlet points out that while the UOPW is striving to secure shorter hours and better wages than the minimums set by the Wage law, it believes that unorganized employes are entitled to government protection.

The UOPW therefore supported the successful campaign to enact the Wage-Hour Act and is now cooperating with the U. S. Government to have it properly enforced.

Pope Defends Workers' Right to Join Unions

(See Story Page Five)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18—A powerful defense of workers' rights to join unions, and to seek wages sufficient to support their families, was contained in the encyclical issued by Pope Pius XII to the American Catholic hierarchy last week.

Discussing the right of workers to organize, the encyclical noted that "since it is legitimate to promote by common effort decent livelihood, it is not possible without injustice to deny or to limit either to the producers or to the laboring and farming classes the free faculty of uniting in associations by means of which they may defend their proper rights and secure the betterment of the goods of soul and of body, as well as the honest comforts of life."

The Pope's message, which touched upon many aspects of American life, lamented the fact that a large section of our population, "though robust, capable and willing, cannot have the work for which they are anxiously seeking." The Pontiff expressed hope that government, workers and employers would find a solution to the unemployment problem.

Of wages, Pius XII said: "The salaries of the workers, as is just, are to be such that they are sufficient to maintain them and their families." He quoted his predecessor, Pius XI, to show that social reforms should be carried on to reach this goal.

CIO pickets on the San Francisco waterfront, members of the Ship Clerks Union, take it easy between turns on the line. Close to 650 are on strike for improved working conditions.

Brophy To Speak at N. J. Convention

Jersey City, N. J., Nov. 18 — The annual convention of the New Jersey CIO Industrial Union Council opens here today at the Grand View Auditorium. John Brophy of the CIO national office, representing John L. Lewis, and other CIO leaders will speak.

Shoe Workers Add 2 to 1 Vote for CIO

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18. — Two CIO unions this week showed by overwhelming votes that industrial workers, when called on to show their preference, are still choosing CIO industrial unions by large majorities.

In Camden, N. J., 6,294 workers at the Radio Corporation of America plant, biggest radio factory in the world, voted for the CIO United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers to 1,035 for the AFL's Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

In Portsmouth, Ohio, the CIO United Shoe Workers polled 1,379 votes in a runoff election at the Selby Shoe Co., to 884 against. In a previous vote, the AFL polled 751 votes against 1,205 for the CIO, with "no union" getting 498.

The Camden victory was described as a repudiation of AFL tactics of sabotaging CIO organizations, since the AFL claim to an election was based on a shaky claim to representation.

The Electrical and Radio Workers, in protesting the Labor Board order for the election, pointed out that they have held a contract at RCA for three years.

Youch Yells 'Ouch' After U. S. Pinch

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18—Youch and Youch, garment makers in nearby Baltimore, have felt the pinch of the Wage Hour Act in some 29 indictments for chiselling just slapped down on them by the Grand Jury.

The Youch brothers, who employ 175 workers, are charged with failing to pay the legal minimum, failing to pay overtime, failing to keep proper records, with falsifying what records they kept and with shipping goods in interstate commerce in violation of the act.

The Messrs. Youch and Youch, according to the Wage Hour Dept., employ mostly "elderly foreign women, all of whom were paid substantially below the minimum of 25 cents an hour."

The minimum was raised by law on October 24 to 30 cents, which increases the difficulties of the firm of Youch and Youch by five cents an hour.

Big Smelter Bows to Union

PERTH AMBOY, N. J., Nov. 18—Two strike victories were won by CIO Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers here and in Newark, N. J., when employers signed contracts with important gains for the union.

In Perth Amboy, 1,200 workers won improved safety and health conditions, overtime pay for holidays, tighter seniority rules and 62.5 cents an hour for a 40-hour week from the American Smelting and Refining Co.

In Newark, 100 previously unorganized workers who walked out following the Perth Amboy strike won three to 19 cent-an-hour raises and other gains in line with conditions at bigger plants at the Federated Metals Co.

The American Smelting and Refining contract puts a stop to company habits of summarily discharging men with occupational diseases, allows the workers access to the company doctor at any time, whereas before they had to wait his convenience, and puts dismissals under union review.

The company also agreed verbally to a demand for paid vacations.

Many Packinghouse Polls Loom

Copper Tax Cut 'Mistaken'

Washington, D. C., Nov. 18—The federal government had before it today an appeal from President Reid Robinson of the International Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers not only to refrain from reducing the copper import tax but to block loopholes in the present tax, which have made it costly to Uncle Sam and ineffective as a protection for American workers.

Joining with our organizations protesting a two-cent reduction for Chile in the four-cent tax on imported copper-bearing ores and concentrates, President Robinson goes further and contends that the present tax is so full of loopholes that it is worthless.

MISTAKEN

"Bluntly and clearly," declared Robinson, "thos who have gone on the assumption since Congress passed this tax in 1932 that the domestic copper industry is receiving a four-cent-a-pound protection and the government is receiving revenue therefrom have been completely and continually mistaken and deceived.

"There has not been one iota of protection for the domestic industry, nor one cent of revenue for the government from this tax."

In his memorandum submitted to the Committee on Reciprocity Information of the State Department, which is considering the change, Robinson pointed out a number of these loopholes.

He called the committee's attention to the fact the beneficiaries of any reduction would not be Chile, as a nation, but rather the American interests which control its copper deposits—chiefly Anaconda and Kennecott Copper. As shown above, these companies can now bring in all the copper they want without paying the four-cent tax under the drawback set-up.

"The difference is," says Robinson, "that they would use the lower price of copper that would result to close down their comparatively higher-cost domestic operations, bring about wage cuts here, cause more unemployment here—and still have all the cheap copper from abroad to supply their needs."

The memorandum contends that the only result of a reduction in the amount of the tax would be to reduce the price of copper and to reduce wages and employment in domestic copper mines. Added relief costs would be an extra measure of loss to the United States from such a reduction, the report argues.

It concludes:

"It is our contention, now that we have called the above points to your attention, that the State Department and this committee should use this opportunity to recommend that the present four-cent tax really be made effective so that the government may in fact obtain some revenue thereby, and so that the domestic industry may in fact win some protection thereby."

Chicago Armour Workers Vote This Week

CHICAGO, Nov. 18—Labor Board elections in a half-dozen key packinghouse centers appear slated during the next few months as the CIO Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee campaign rolls on towards national contracts with big employers.

The elections are expected to contribute to the already successful organizing drive which the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee, under the leadership of Van A. Bittner, has conducted during the past eighteen months.

Topping the list is the vote scheduled for Armour's main Chicago plant, where several thousand workers are slated to give the CIO a thumping majority while laying the ghost of an AFL company union outfit.

"We have an opportunity to bury the AFL disrupters under such an avalanche of votes that they can never again lift their heads among packinghouse workers," PWOC Asst. Director Henry Johnson declared.

The Chicago Armour vote will take place on Nov. 21, just 13 months after another election in which the AFL received a 4-1 thumping. With an even greater majority expected this autumn, one of Armour's pet worries—its concern for the phoney outfit will no longer be able to hold up contract negotiations with the CIO union.

In the Peoria election, the CIO is opposing not only the AFL meat cutters but two craft unions as well. Here, too, PWOC officials promise victory.

Meanwhile, the NLRB has received appeals for an election at the Cudahy plant in Kansas City, where the company has been told to kill a dominated union which attempted unsuccessfully to woo the affections of the plant's 1,000 employes.

IN SOUTH

In the deep south, PWOC Local 78 is awaiting word from the Labor Board on an election at the Cudahy plant in Albany, Ga.

Workers at Wilson Bros. in Chicago may also have a chance to vote for the PWOC. Labor Board hearings are slated for Nov. 20 and the union's arguments favoring a poll will be given to NLRB representatives.

Union Pressure Wins HealthMeasures, Ends 'Gas Fume' Menace

LEWISTOWN, Pa., Nov. 18—A new health program to cover ultimately the 20,000 workers in all plants of the American Viscose Corp. has been put into effect at the company's big plant here, the Textile Workers Union of America has announced.

Pressure brought by the CIO textile union some time ago resulted in a survey being made by the Pennsylvania Dept. of Labor & Industry with the cooperation of the U. S. Dept. of Labor, of the hazards of carbon disulphide poisoning suffered by workers in the production of viscose rayon yarn.

The new health plan which was announced by William D. Silcox, plant manager, will be tried out at the Lewistown plant and when it is functioning successfully, will be extended to the other mills in the Viscoe chain at Marcus Hook and Meadville, Pa.; Roanoke, and Front Royal, Va.; and Parkersburg and Nitro, W. Va.

PUBLICIZED CASE

The rayon division of the CIO textile union shortly after it was formed, brought to the attention of the industry and of the nation for the first time, President Emil Rieve pointed out, that rayon workers were subjected to poison gases.

Findings of the government investigators substantiated the union's charges, declared Herbert W. Payne, director of the Synthetic Yarn Division of the union, and awakened the industry to the dangers of carbon disulphide. The plan of sanitary and health innovations announced by Viscose Corp. is the culmination of these efforts.

Gary CIO Maps Sports Program

Gary, Ind., Nov. 18. — Lake County CIO unions are going in for athletics in a big way, reports Chester Schleff of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee. The Lake County CIO Industrial Union Council is backing both the girls' and boys' basketball teams of the Club Vida. Most of the club belong to the SWOC.

Records of the teams are something to boast about, Schleff says. The girls' team won the Mid-Western IWO League tournament in Chicago, in 1938, won the National semi-final tournament in Cleveland, and took second place in the national tournament in Philadelphia.

In 1939 the boys' team won the Mid-Western IWO League tournament and took third place in the national tournament held in Chicago. This year the winner goes to New York for the national tournament.

The girls' team is entered in the Gary and Calumet City, Ill. leagues while the boys' team is entered in the Armory league in Gary and the IWO league in Chicago.

Labor Law Parley Urges Cooperation Of Government

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 18.—Close cooperation with organized labor was urged by the Sixth National Conference on Labor Legislation at its three-day meeting here this week, based on recognition of the fact that "labor departments are set up to protect the interests of labor."

The conference discussion centered around methods of cooperation between state and federal labor departments in administration of federal labor laws and maintenance of labor standards.

Members of the conference are appointed each year by the U. S. Department of Labor to discuss state labor laws and their administration. Governors send members of their state labor departments and others who have special knowledge in the field of labor legislation are invited by the Secretary of Labor. Many CIO leaders attended this year's sessions.

SUBJECTS DISCUSSED

Among the subjects discussed were: More effective administration of state wage-hour laws, strengthening labor departments, repeal of poll taxes, plans to assist agricultural and migratory labor, support of the Wagner Health bill, coordination of labor law administration into one department, apprentice training, child labor and industrial bygiene.

George G. Kidwell, director of California's Department of Industrial Relations told the group that Government cannot hope to take any fundamental steps toward curing our economic ills without an alert labor movement which asserts itself economically and politically.

Among CIO leaders who participated in the Conference were: Allan S. Haywood, national organization director of the CIO; Raymund Edmundson, CIO regional Director from Illinois; Frank Bender, CIO director, from Maryland; Lucy R. Mason, Textile Workers Union; James B. Carey, president of the Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers and CIO Secretary; James Robb, regional director of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee and the CIO in Indiana; Ralph Hetzel, CIO unemployment director; J. T. Alford, Federation of Flat Glass Workers.

Hearst Strikers Win Point

Chicago, Nov. 18—Enforcement of the Chicago Newspaper Guild's injunction against Hearst strike violence took a step ahead here when Judge Lupe ordered the management to "show cause" why it should not be held in contempt of court for repeated violations.

The injunction, obtained Oct. 16, came as a winning move in the Guild's 11-month strike against the two Hearst papers here, which have been reduced to one through losses incurred by management's refusal to bargain collectively with the CIO newsworkers.

Before the Guild injunction was secured, the strike was marked by constant violence of Hearst goon squads against the 500 men and women who walked out nearly a year ago. Guild pickets were beaten up, Guild sound cars dumped in the Chicago river, even a Guild motorboat "torpedoed" at management's orders.

At the same time, management engaged in a legal campaign against striker's rights to picket and to urge advertisers and readers not to use the Hearst papers.

CIO Radio Vote Blankets AFL By 6-1 Majority

CAMDEN, N. J., Nov. 18.—More than 6,000 workers in the huge RCA plant here, biggest radio factory in the world, showed their preference for the CIO Electrical and Radio Workers over the AFL in the crushing way American workers have been using lately—by a better than six to one majority in a Labor Board election.

The vote, announced by Labor Board officials here, totalled 6,294 for the CIO United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, to 1,035 for the AFL Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Results bore out the first part of a prophecy by James B. Carey, UERMW president, who said last week that the AFL was either "silly or courageous" in going ahead with the election.

VINDICATES CIO

The election, ordered by the Labor Board in spite of protests by the CIO union, was seen in labor circles as a complete vindication of CIO policy and as a rebuke to Board practices of "appeasing" disgruntled anti-industrial union elements.

The AFL pre-election campaign, one of the most intensive anti-CIO drives put on in the industry, brought more than 50 AFL organizers and other officials to Camden in an endeavor to destroy the CIO union.

These individuals slipped quietly out of town before the election results were made public, CIO union officials said today.

Lewis Hails Canada CIO

Washington, Nov. 18.—President John L. Lewis today sent congratulations to the newly formed Canadian Committee of Industrial Organizations, set up at a conference held in Ottawa, Ont., last week as prelude to a nationwide drive for industrial organization. Lewis' letter was sent to Silby Barrett, chairman of the new group.

"I am gratified to know that representatives of the various CIO unions in Canada have joined with you in the establishment of a Canadian Committee of Industrial Organizations," he wrote.

CIO Model

Elaine Fried, 21-year-old member of the Models Division of the United Office and Professional Workers, CIO, was chosen "model model" at union contest. She will preside at the Artists and Models Ball in New York Thanksgiving night.

Back to Work Move Supported By Coughlin Flops

DETROIT, Nov. 18. — The Chrysler Corporation dropped three rounds in rapid fire succession this week in its fight to destroy the union chosen by its employes.

Most eloquent testimony that the Corporation has failed to make a dent in the morale of its locked-out workers was a cheering, enthusiastic meeting of 45,000 CIO members in Cadillac Square last Wednesday.

On the same day a back-to-work movement—inspired by the corporation with attempted stimulation by the three Detroit dailies, Father Charles Coughlin and a former president of the UAW — fell flat on its face. Less than 1,000 of the 55,000 Chrysler workers reported to the eight Detroit plants in response to this phase of the Mohawk Valley Formula.

The third loss sustained by Chrysler was a scathing criticism and denunciation of the Corporation's ally, Father Coughlin, by his own colleagues among the Catholic clergy.

A principle speaker at the Cadillac Square Rally was the Rt. Rev. Monsignor John S. Mies, pastor of Our Lady of the Rosary Church, who attacked Father Coughlin's plea earlier in the week that the government order settlement of the Chrysler dispute.

President R. J. Thomas, announcing at Cadillac Square the collapse of the back to work movement, said: "The corporation now knows how the workers feel about abandoning their union and returning to work without an adjustment of their reasonable demands. I hope the corporation will be dissuaded from further efforts to follow the Mohawk Valley Formula. That formula, pushed to its conclusion, has meant violence and bloodshed, as scores of widows and orphans of workers can testify."

ANOTHER COUGHLIN CRITIC

The severest criticism of Coughlin came from the Rev. Father Raymond C. Clancy, executive secretary of the Archdiocesan Labor Institute in a radio address Wednesday evening.

Earlier in the week Coughlin had declared over the radio that the government was empowered to step in and compel a settlement, that under existing conditions "strikes are neither Christian nor American," and he had quoted from an Encyclical of Pope Pius XI to show that his contentions were in accord with Catholic principles.

"It is not pleasant for me this evening to have to disagree publicly with the statements made by a fellow priest, the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin," Father Clancy said. "Lest these many listeners (Coughlin's) be led astray by the errors into which Father Coughlin has fallen in this present dispute, let us examine the address which was presented . . . last Sunday."

After showing how Coughlin had misinterpreted the Wagner Act and had misrepresented the union demands, Father Clancy said:

MISQUOTED POPE

"We can understand how a priest could be mistaken in his facts and how he could be ignorant of federal law, but there is no excuse for one who is taken by many listeners to be an authority on the Papal Encyclicals to mistake the meaning of the Holy Father. And yet, that is what Father Coughlin did. He misquoted the works of Pius XI; he misinterpreted their meaning; and he inserted his own words in the text with the result that he distorted the thought expressed by the Holy Father."

Steel Prexy Evades Union, Faces New Board Action

NEW YORK, Nov. 18—Their appointment with Pres. Eugene Grace of Bethlehem Steel Corp., disregarded, CIO steel union leaders today planned Labor Board charges against the prosperous anti-union steel fabricator.

E. J. Lever, head of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee's Bethlehem campaign, said that failure of Grace to meet witha SWOC negotiating committee on Nov. 13 had led him to file "refusal to bargain" charges with the National Labor Relations Board.

Lever indicated that the SWOC has also asked the Board for an election to determine the collective bargaining agency for all employes in Bethlehem's far-flung industrial empire. An original plea for a vote filed in 1937 has been held up by the Board pending final outcome of the Board's first case against the corporation—in which it ordered Bethlehem to disband its hoary company union setup.

That case is now in the circuit courts.

NINE WERE PRESENT

The SWOC negotiating committee, comprising nine representatives from the company's eastern mills, visited Grace's offices in New York's Wall Street area at 11 a. m., following out a schedule they had sent to the executive a week before.

Grace made no reply to the union's request that he bargain with the committee.

WANT $5 A DAY

The visit was intended to push the SWOC's demand that Bethlehem immediately establish the $5 a day minimum wage now in effect throughout the remainder of the industry. The steel workers also have demanded an end to the staggered work week, under which the men must work Saturdays and Sundays without extra pay.

CIO Ladies Fight 'War' Profiteers

New York, Nov. 18—First action of the newly formed women's auxiliary of the Newspaper Guild here is a sharp attack on profiteering in prices, in the form of a letter suggesting a Price Control Commission sent by the auxiliary to Mayor LaGuardia and Markets Commissioner Wm. Fellowes Morgan, Jr.

"We, the wives, mothers and sisters of organized newspapermen, have, during the past two months, felt the inroads on our purchasing power caused by the unreasonable increase in food prices," the letter said.

"Henceforth, we have been told that all our ills are due to overproduction and a deficiency in purchasing power. Suddenly, within two months, we are expected to believe that the reverse has set in. Of course, this is not true. It is just an example of out-and-out war profiteering. The time has come to put a stop to this raid on the public pocket.

"In an effort to combat these evils, we ask that you appoint a commission to curtail war profiteering. Of course, no such commission will have real value unless the consumer is equally represented."

Gas, Coke Workers Sign New England Pacts

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—A batch of new contracts with gas, coal and coke companies in New England was announced today by Martin Wagner, president of District 50, United Mine Workers.

Negotiations with the Koppers Company, Pres. Wagner said, have resulted in a renewed contract with the Eastern Gas & Fuel Associates, three agreements with the New England Coke Co., and two with the New England Coal & Coke co.

The plant of the Eastern Gas & Fuel Associates, in Everett. Mass., is the largest domestic coke plant in the country.

PAY UP $30,000

The contract with Eastern Gas & Fuel, covering 1,000 workers at its Everett, Mass., plant, which is the largest domestic coke plant in the country, provides for a closed shop and check-off.

Wage adjustments that will bring $30,000 more pay to the workers were effected, and a vacation clause giving two weeks' paid vacation to 96 per cent of the employes was included. The basic common labor rate was raised to 65 cents an hour.

Still to be negotiated are contracts with the Mystic Steamship Co. and the Koppers Tar & Chemical Division, both subsidiaries of the Koppers Co. The same provisions as in the Eastern Gas agreement are expected to be provided.

President Wagner said the contracts should serve "as an object lesson to all reactionary employers who cry out against 'un-American' tactics of labor unions. All these contracts were negotiated in an atmosphere of peaceful labor relations by the proper use of collective bargaining procedure and with proper respect on both sides for the conference table."

900,000 Represented At New York CIO Meet

NEW YORK, Nov. 18—Delegates representing more than 900,000 CIO unionists in the state are attending the second annual convention of the New York State Industrial Union Council which opened here yesterday at Manhattan Center.

The convention will elect a new president to succeed Allan S. Haywood, who is leaving New York to take up his new duties in Washington as national director of organization for the CIO. It will welcome Adolph Germer, formerly CIO regional director in Detroit, who was appointed to succeed Haywood in New York.

LIBERALS SPEAK

U. S. Senator Robert F. Wagner, Governor Herbert H. Lehman and Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia are among the speakers scheduled to address the delegates.

In accordance with policies adopted at the recent CIO national convention in San Francisco, the New York Council will draw up plans for a more intensive organizing drive throughout the state, and will take action on the position of CIO unions in the 1940 presidential elections, the international situation, the National Labor Relations Board, public housing, social security and the Wage-Hour law.

A variety show demonstrating the educational and recreational activities developed by CIO unions during the past year was presented at an extra public session of the convention last night.

The Story Behind the Elections

There is an exciting and significant story behind the recent local elections throughout the United States.

But it is a story you probably haven't seen in the daily press.

Local elections are usually considered to have only local interest. Seldom does the press attempt to make any compilation or analysis of election results in a thousand different counties and cities.

But this year Labor's Non-Partisan League has compiled results affecting labor-endorsed candidates in industrial centers, large and small, throughout the country. These include:

The more than two-to-one defeat of Detroit's anti-CIO Mayor Reading and the election of six League-supported council candidates there.

The election of labor-endorsed mayors in Youngstown, Massillon, Warren, Niles, Campbell and Euclid, Ohio.

The election of ten CIO and League-endorsed councilmanic candidates in Cleveland and of four CIO-backed councilmen apiece in Akron and Canton, Ohio.

The defeat of anti-labor Mayor Shields of Johnstown, Pa., by a League-supported candidate.

The election of scores of CIO-supported candidates, many of them members of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, in steel cities and counties.

The above are just a few samples of the types of election returns that stand out from the still incomplete compilations of Labor's Non-Partisan League.

While it is hard to get a complete picture of the trends revealed by all of the local elections, enough has been reported to show how labor's political strength is becoming organized and effective in every industrial center.

This mobilization of labor's votes for the election of progressive candidates has been made possible, of course, by the growth of industrial organization through the CIO.

In every city and every industrial community now there are CIO unionists who are no longer completely at the mercy of local political bosses, but who can make labor's voice count in the selection and election of candidates pledged to advance labor.

Local elections are not so showy as state or national elections. But nevertheless they are at the grass roots of American politics. and through the local, ward and precinct organization which they develop a firm base is laid for making labor's votes count in elections of wider scope.

The exciting and significant story behind the recent local elections is that through the CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League, labor is slowly, but surely and demonstrably, developing the organized political power which will win for it the consideration to which it is entitled in the councils of every state and the whole nation.

No Cause to Kid Ourselves

Labor is not letting itself be kidded too much by talk of a war boom.

Industrial production has risen considerably, it is true, and profits are soaring. But on the other hand.

In the past few weeks, the prices of a number of the staple foods have risen as much as 11 per cent.

Due to technological improvements, it takes fewer and fewer workers to produce more and more goods. So recent increases in production are by no means accompanied by increases of similar extent in employment.

Private employment, WPA Commissioner F. C. Harrington revealed in a recent speech, "is not very much higher than it was on January 1." Yet in that period WPA rolls have been reduced by 1,300,000 workers, relatively few of whom have succeeded in getting private jobs.

In addition to the approximately two million WPA workers, he said, there are almost eight million workers completely unemployed—and this at a time when business is supposed to be starting to boom.

The artificial stimulus of war production means big profits for the rich, but for the workers it means rising living costs, which usually outstrip wages; laying off of WPA workers with relatively little increase in private employment; and the prospects of worse economic depression than before when the boom finally collapses.

Certainly there is nothing in this picture to lull workers into a false sense of security. Now more than ever strong unions are needed to eep up labor's end both economically and politically.

Learning the Hard Way

Looking Ahead

By LEN DE CAUX

Crusaders and Sutlers

ONE live fly of truth can be discovered batting its wings in the platitudinous molasses of William Green's recently published book.

In the most purple patch of his drab and sticky prose, Green disclaims any intention on the part of the AFL to be "an army with banners flying, enlisted for a crusade."

Webster defines "crusade" as "vigorous concerted action for the defense of some cause, or the advancement of some idea."

So there will be universal agreement that the AFL, as conceived and led by Green, is in no sense a crusade, with or without banners.

In fact, we can carry our generous agreement with Green's thought to the point of admitting that his leadership represents the very oposite of crusade. Ii might, on the contrary, be described as "feeble divided inaction for the betrayal of labor's cause."

According to one of those little books that pretends to give you all the facts about everything, the lowest point in the world is the Dead Sea in Palestine, which is 1,290 feet below sea level.

But eminent scientists are now arguing that the AFL news service reached an even lower level when it reprinted as its main story a lengthy article from the anti-labor Chicago Tribune, attacking the CIO with more than usually fantastic inaccuracy.

There is one thing that can be said for the writers of such attacks on the CIO as the AFL loves to cull from journalistic garbage cans. They have this much respect for the truth, that they keep a most respectful distance from contact with the facts until they have written their pieces.

The particular story referred to was written just about 3,000 miles away from the happenings it purported to report. Yet it pretened to describe intimate scenes of CIO leaders "storming" in and out of rooms arguing about this and that.

Needless to say, the incidents thus imagined never occured and are laughable to anyone who was closer than 3,000 miles to what was going on.

As to storming in and out of rooms and slamming doors, this is the second or third time at least that Chicago Tribune writers, from their vantage point of distance, have thus described CIO leaders behaving in their private conferences.

That may be pattern behavior on the Chicago Tribune. But without wanting to be snobbish or to cramp the Tribune's style, it must be said that in the CIO people are better brought up; they habitually knock on the door before they enter a room and close the door gently but firmly when they go out.

Some of these people who measure newspaper space like yards of cloth, have estimated that the AFL has devoted some acres of type to knocking the CIO in the past, while CIO retorts can be measured in square inches.

There are several reasons for this geometrical situation.

In the first place, some of the AFL diatribes are so deadly dull that it seems a shame to wake people from the slumbers they induce; while others are wild as the sparring punch-drunk boxer who threatens to knock himself out any moment.

A second reason is that the CIO has more important things to do than to pay attention to the ravings of a little group of frustrated per capita-grabbers.

Unlike the AFL, the CIO has been proud to call itself a crusade and has no objection whatever to advancing with flying banners.

The CIO has been and still is a crusade to bring the benefits of union organization to millions whom the AFL neglected.

It is a crusade for higher wage and living standards, for greater security and for industrial democracy.

It is a crusade to build up not tear down the strength of organized labor.

And because the leaders and members of the CIO think of themselves as fighters in "an army with banners flying, enlisted for a crusade," they do not react like the sutlers and Hucksters of the AFL camp.

They do not slink in behind the organizers of other unions to trade with labor's enemies; nor have they time or inclination for the endless recriminations and malicious gossip with which some AFL leaders vainly seek to destroy the powerful industrial unions of the CIO.

Because the CIO is an advancing army, it fully expects to encounter all the poison gas of propaganda at the command of labor's enemies.

If it does not devote all its time to dispelling this gas, it is because its members have the gas masks of their own common sense and because they regard it as more important to concentrate on advancing to their organizational goals.

Memo To Dies:

Probe Lynchings, Texans Demand

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Nov. 18—Congressman Dies, the tireless hunter of "un-Americanism" from Texas, has been challenged to investigate un-American activities in his own political bailiwick of the southwest, in an open letter from the Southern Negro Youth Congress detailing terror and discrimination against Negro citizens.

The letter, signed by Edward E. Strong, Congress secretary, charged that Dies and his Committee have deliberately failed "to investigate the most barbaric hangover from the Dark Ages known to the modern world—the lynching and burning to death of innocent Negro men and women."

CHALLENGE TO DIES

"As a Texan," the letter challenged, "you must know how Negroes are jimcrowed, lynched and segregated in clear violation of the U. S. Constitution. You also know that Negro citizens in Texas are not allowed to participate in the primaries of your own party. We call these practices un-American."

Any Southern Negro can testify to these anti-democratic practices, Strong told Dies, in declaring that "the liberties of Negroes are very much more threatened by Klan-ism in America than by any foreign 'ism' from abroad."

"The test of democracy," he wrote, "as Dr. Frank Graham has pointed out (Dr. Graham is head of the Southern Conference for Social Welfare) is how America treats its Negro minority. This, Congressman Dies, is also the test of your Committee."

CIO Building Workers Urge Gov't Probe

Buffalo, Nov. 18 — Government investigation of the Buffalo Housing Authority has been requested by Julius Goodman Jr., general organizer of the CIO United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, on account of "flagrant violation of the law" in awarding contracts only to those contractors who have the approval of AFL business agents.

The request was made in a telegram to U. S. Attorney General Frank Murphy and a letter to U. S. Attorney George L. Grobe of Buffalo.

Goodman declared there was "a policy of having Harold C. Hanover, Authority secretary and also secretary of the AFL Carpenters District Council, approve all contracts before they were awarded."

Win Cotton Mill Strike

Phoenix, Ariz., Nov. 18—CIO workers in the oil mill plant of the Western Cotton Products here won a substantial victory with a contract providing reinstatement of strikers, union recognition, a grievance committee and monthly meetings with company officials to smooth out disputed points.

The victory was won by members of Local 306 of the Cannery, Agricultural, Packing and Allied Workers. A. M. Collins, local president, described the strike as one of many made necessary by the attitude of the employers, who form "the largest cotton monopoly in California, Arizona, New Mexico and Texas."

"Most of the Federal laws, governing social security and protecting wages and hours," he pointed out, "do not apply in the cotton processing industry, which is considered as part of agricultural work. It is, therefore, necessary for us, even more than other workers, to have union protection."

Labor Vote Wins In 7 States, Many Industrial Cities

By ROBERT DALE

WASHINGTON—Candidates supported by labor won many striking victories and made impressive showings everywhere in the Nov. 7 off-year elections. Nearly complete returns have expanded early reports of political gains for labor.

On the basis of a state by state analysis of the results it is apparent that labor voters turned out by the hundreds of thousands and are decisive factors in industrial areas.

MICHIGAN

Supplementing the sensational Detroit victory which saw a liberal mayor and six council candidates elected with CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League support, voters of nearby Dearborn returned a pro-labor mayor and councilman.

Dearborn, home city of the Ford Motor Company, defeated three anti-labor council candidates, while Judge Leo Schaefer sneaked in by only 420 votes against labor opposition. Clarence Doyle, whom labor backed, got only 8,507 votes to make him third high in the council race.

Ford's service men made an intensive campaign against the CIO-LNPL candidates during which they imported the Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith, Fascist rabble-rouser. Smith got a cold shoulder and his meetings were poorly attended.

Charter amendments in Detroit and Dearborn sought by labor were successful. These related to traffic court, civil service and gas rate subjects.

OHIO

Voters of Ohio's steel areas went down the line for the labor slates and offered tangible evidence of labor's progress in political action.

In addition to Youngstown where sucessful Judge Spagnola had labor backing in the mayoralty race, labor-endorsed mayoralty candidates were elected in five other towns—Massilon, Warren, Niles, Campbell and Euclid.

In Warren, labor support put Mayor W. Strain into office, and also elected J. Fabrizio to the city council. Campbell steel workers elected Anthony Pacella for mayor, and Charles Nelson for city council. William P. Carnel, endorsed by Niles labor, won the mayoralty in that steel city. Euclid, Cleveland suburb, elected pro-labor Kenneth J. Simms

In Akron and Canton where labor's mayoralty candidates lost by narrow margins, voters put four CIO-backed council candidates into office in each city. Akron's council majority was overturned and now has eight Democrats and five Republicans, four of its members being labor union representatives.

Cleveland, where labor entered the campaign late, saw the expected 75,000 margin of Mayor Harold Burton cut down to 37,000 as 11 labor wards went against him. Burton actually ran 16,000 votes behind his primary lead.

Of the 19 councilmanic candidates endorsed by Labor's Non-Partisan League-CIO forces in Cleveland, 10 were elected. Labor scored another victory in the School Board election by renaming two liberal incumbents of its slate of three.

Toledo elected two labor-backed judges—Edgar W. Norris and Harvey G. Straub.

PENNSYLVANIA

Labor in Pennsylvania not only unseated Mayor Daniel Shields, Johnstown, a steel company puppet, but also elected a large number of local candidates in the steel areas.

Endorsed by Labor's Non-Partisan League, the Democratic candidates swept Pittsburgh and elected the largest part of the officials of Allegheny County including two county commissioners.

In Philadelphia, two candidates for city council endorsed by the League were elected and the vacancy caused by the death of Congressman Daly was filled by the League-supported candidate, John E. Sheridan. This makes the Philadelphia delegation to Congress consist of five democrats and two Republicans. In the city-wide election the Democratic-Fusion candidates, support by the League, lost less than 29,500 in a total vote of about 750,000.

In Westmoreland County, Fred J. Broad was elected sheriff and the whole Democratic ticket, supported by the League, was successful.

In Johnstown, Mayor Daniel J. Shields, who acted as the agent of Bethlehem Steel in the strike there, was defeated by the League-supported Democratic candidate John A. Conway. This defeat of Shields was extremely significant, since he fronted for the Bethlehem Steel Corporation against the strikers. Shields had been exposed by the U. S. Senate Civil Liberties Committee as having received $25,000 from steel firms. His labor-endorsed opponent won more than 1,600 votes.

In Lehigh County, the Democratic candidate for mayor of Allentown was re-elected for the county which went Republican in the 1938 congressional fight, is again Democratic.

In Northampton County, home of Bethlehem Steel, Judge Barthold Democrat, supported by the League, was elected to the common pleas court.

In Schuylkill County, Vincent J. Dalton, Democrat, supported by the League for Judge of the common pleas court, was elected.

In Washington County, the League-suported Democrats were elected, including Ross R. Cumsmin, SWOC, as county commissioner.

In Montgomery County, the League-supported candidate for commissioner won the election.

Other candidates supported by the League were elected to local offices throughout the state.

An impressive feature of the returns is the fact that there was wide-spread dissatisfaction and unrest over those in office. This is indicated on the favorable side by the overturn in Sharon, Mercer County, where a democrat, Thomas Dougherty, was elected mayor for the first time in the city's history. In Perry-Juniata District, the Republican incumbent was defeated for judge after 20 years on the bench.

New Jersey and Connecticut labor forces saw many of their local candidates elected, especially in southern New Jersey.

Salt Lake City voters elected David Abbot (Ab) Jenkins, auto race driver, who had labor support, as mayor by a 14-vote lead over Herbert A. Snow, banker and president of the Chamber of Commerce. The labor wards went heavily for Jenkins.

CALIFORNIA

The labor candidate for mayor lost in San Francisco by the narrow margin of 21,000 votes out of a total of 285,745 cast. Congressman Franck R. Havenner, endorsed by Labor's Non-Partisan League, polled 116,256 votes for mayor of San Francisco, despite united newspaper opposition and the fact that he was forced to be away from the city attending to his duties in Congress throughout almost all the campaign. Angelo J. Rossi, incumbent, did not receive a majority, since the total of all opposition candidates exceeded Rossi's total by 8,000 votes.

Two of the state propositions, and all local San Francisco propositions supported by Labor's Non-Partisan League and the Union Labor Party, carried. California rejected "Ham and Eggs" which labor was supporting, but it received about a million votes.

WHOSE POCKETS —

ARE YOU FILLING? When you buy your clothes do you help pay the wage of a union worker, or do you help swell the profits of a sweatshop boss?

• The Label of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America will give you the answer. When you don't see the label you know that the garment was probably made by an un-American sweatshop chiseler. When you see the Amalgamated label you know that your money will go into the pockets of union workers, earning union pay, working under union conditions.

• Demand the union label in the clothes you buy and insure yourself against sweatshop garments, against sweatshop conditions in industry.

You can find the Amalgamated label in union made suits, overcoats, uniforms, work clothes and overalls, workshirts, dress shirts, underwear, gloves, neckties, sheeplined, leather, and sport coats, children's clothing and wash suits.

CIO Seamen Hit U. S. Commission

By C. W. FOWLER

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18—Failure of U. S. Maritime Commission and other government officials to show good faith in carrying out Pres. Roosevelt's order to "consult and cooperate" with the seamen in the present job crisis was sharply criticized by CIO Natl. Maritime Union officials today.

From New York, NMU President Joseph Curran wrote to President Roosevelt that his "excellent plans" for aiding seamen thrown on the beach by neutrality revision "are not being carried out and are, in fact, little less than a joke.'

In the capital, Bjorne Halling, secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee, bluntly declared that the Maritime Commission was "using the present emergency to try to cram an anti-CIO, anti-NMU program down the throats of the seamen."

Both protests came after a National Maritime Union conference at the White House, in which Curran and Halling presented the seamen's point of view, won promises from the President to start Maritime Commission and other relief projects for the beached workers.

HIT COMMISSION

Chief criticism was aimed at the Maritime Commission, long an enemy of CIO maritime unions. Curran's letter to the White House declared that the Commission's conditions for extending relief were unacceptable, since they required enrollment in the Commission's service before any seamen would receive aid.

"It was not our impression that American citizens must be coerced before they can obtain relief," Curran wrote. "The membership of the NMU recognizes and appreciates your sincere desire to aid the seamen and the interest you have manifested in their welfare. We urge that you use their good office to insure immediate and fair action on behalf of the American seamen."

Both NMU President Curran and Maritime Committee Secretary Halling pointed to the union-baiting role of the Maritime Commission in this and previous situations affecting the CIO seamen as examples of the conspiracy against organized maritime labor being conducted from Commission headquarters in Washington.

Curran pointed out that the Commission and its chairman, Admiral Emory S. Land, in requiring seamen to register in their "schools" before getting relief was simply carrying its anti-union program into a new field.

"This means," he wrote Roosevelt, "according to Admiral Land's own words, that a seaman must either enlist in the training service or starve." Halling, commenting on this order, recalled the uncompromising way the Commission has used its training school to fight the NMU from the beginning.

SCHOOL FOR FINKS

"From the beginning," Halling said, "the Commission has used its training program as a school for strikebreakers. The NMU has never been consulted on the school courses or on the personnel, though this was promised. Green people only have been enrolled, and the main effort has been to inculcate them with anti-union teachings. The Commission has run a school for finks, not for seamen."

In New York, NMU officials restated their opposition to the proposed transfer of American ships to foreign registry as a step in evading the Neutrality Act. Wm. L. Standard, NMU attorney, delved into international law to prove that "transfer of American ships to foreign flags does not lessen the menace to the peace of this country," in another letter sent by the NMU to President Roosevelt.

Pope Pius XII Speaks Out In Behalf Of Unions

Now, if the rich and the prosperous are obliged out of ordinary motives of pity to act generously toward the poor, their obligation is all the greater to do them justice. The salaries of the workers, as is just, are to be such that they are sufficient to maintain them and their families. Solemn are the words our predecessor, Pius XI, on this question: "Every effort must therefore be made that fathers of families receive a wage sufficient to meet adequately normal domestic needs. If under present circumstances this is not always feasible, social justice demands that reforms be introduced without delay, which will guarantee such a wage to every adult working man. In this connection, we praise those who have most prudently and usefully attempted various methods by which an increased wage is paid in view of increased family burdens and special provision made for special needs."

May it also be brought about that each and every able-bodied man may receive an equal opportunity for work in order to earn the daily bread for himself and his own. We deeply lament the lot of those — and their number in the United States is large indeed—who, though robust, capable and willing, cannot have the work for which they are anxiously searching.

May the wisdom of the governing powers, a far-seeing generosity on the part of employers, together with the speedy re-establishment of more favorable conditions, effect the realization of these reasonable hopes to the advantage of all.

Because sociability is one of man's natural requirements and since it is legitimate to promote by common effort decent livelihood, it is not possible without injustice to deny or to limit either to the producers or to the laboring and farming classes the free faculty of uniting in associations by means of which they may defend their proper rights and secure the betterment of the goods of soul and of body, as well as the honest comforts of life.

But to unions of this kind, which in past centuries have procured immortal glory for Christianity and for the professions an untarnishable splendor, one cannot everywhere impose an identical discipline and structure, which therefore can be varied to meet the different temperaments of the people and the diverse circumstances of time.

But let the unions in question draw their vital force from principles of wholesome liberty. Let them take their form from them, take their form from the lofty rules of justice and of honesty, and conforming themselves to those norms, let them act in such a manner that in their care for the interests of their class they violate no one's rights; let them continue to strive for harmony and respect for the commonweal of civil society.

CIO Reaffirms Old Age Aid

Washington, Nov. 18—CIO pledges of aid to all progressive old-age pension groups and the CIO program of $60 a month for all people 60 years of age and over were reaffirmed today in a statement by Joseph Kovner, secretary of the CIO Social Security Committee. Kovner's statement read:

"All progressives have recognized that the problems of adequate care for our aged people who can no longer find employment in industry has not been solved by the defeat of the Ham and Eggs Plan in California and the Bigelow Plan in Ohio. Both these movements represented a fundamental demand for meeting this elemental need.

"The 60-60 program of the CIO calling for flat pension payments of $60 per month to all individuals over 60, and $90 to married couples, administered and subsidized by the federal government, now stands out as a practical and effective means of satisfying the needs of our aged population and the economic ills that attend the failure to take care of their wants.

"The CIO is prepared to go forward in cooperation with all progressive and old age groups in the achievement of a sound pension program."

R. I. CIO To Meet

Providence, R. I., Nov. 18 — An official call to the second annual convention of the Rhode Island CIO State Industrial Union Council to be held here at the Crown Hotel, Sunday, December 17, was issued this week to all affiliated CIO groups in the state.

The call was signed by Adelard Gingras, president of the state council and Anne Marsoli, secretary-treasurer.

Send Greetings To Westwood

Sacramento, Calif., Nov. 18. — By unanimous vote the Sacramento CIO Industrial Union Council sent greetings to the Westwood local of the Intl. Woodworkers of America, praising the "splendid organizational progress" being made, in the face of the repeated attacks of vigilantes, provoked by the Red River Lumber Company.

Oregon CIO Office Opened

Portland, Ore., Nov. 18—William Dalrymple, CIO Director for Oregon, has announced the opening of the CIO regional office in the state at 404 Woodlark Building, 813 Southwest Alder Street, Portland.

Dalrymple is planning to visit every local in the state to meet the officers and members as part of his plans to strengthen the CIO in Oregon through cooperation and advice with all affiliates.

"I intend to build our organization so that it will be second to none within this state," the new Oregon Regional Director pledged.

CIO Back Pay Award

This check for $1,385.32 is only one of many totalling $25,000 that was ordered paid to members of CIO Oil Workers Local 211 in Louisville, Ky., as back pay compensation for discharge for union activities. The order came from the Natl. Labor Relations Board, ending a three-year fight by the Louisville Refining Co. to break the union.

Laundry Workers Win Pact

New York, Nov. 18. — A two-year agreement covering 25,000 laundry workers in the Greater New York area, was announced today by Sidney Hillman, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. The contract signed between the Laundry Workers' Joint Board, ACW affiliate, and organized laundry owners, was hailed by Hillman as a model, "raising the standards of living for those who needed it most."

Terms provide for a five-day week beginning March 30, 1940, for all inside and outside workers, with all Saturday work forbidden. Minimum wages are to be fixed for each section and department covering all inside workers.

GAINS WON

A survey of wages is to be made immediately and a minimum rate agreed upon with 60 days, though the period may be extended to permit a comprehensive survey. If no agreement is reached on minimum wage classifications after the survey, the question will go to arbitration and the minima will be fixed by the arbitrator. Setting up of a minimum will do away with the present practice of hiring all new workers at 35 cents an hour.

The employer must post a permanent schedule of hours to be worked each day in the week under the agreement. Hours worked over the schedule in any one day must be paid at the rate of time and a half. The schedule can be changed only on one week's notice to the union, which has the right to take the matter to arbitration if it disputes the fairness of the change.

All inside workers are guaranteed not less than 40 hours work per week. This eliminates the present practice of giving permanent employes only one or two days' work a week. At any time during the life of the agreement, the union may request a general wage increase based upon an increase in the cost of living. If the employers refuse the increase, the matter goes to arbitration.

Employers must comply with the decision of the arbitrator in case of disputes, which eliminates the present practice of appealing all arbitrators' decisions to the courts. In discharge cases the arbitrator must make his decision within one week.

Double time must be paid for holiday work with time and a half for holiday make-up. A worker shifted from a lower paid to a higher paid job must be paid the higher rate, and a worker shifted from a higher paid job to a lower paid one must continue to receive the higher rate.

"MOST SWEATED"

Gains won by the laundry workers in the agreement were stressed by President Hillman who pointed out that the laundry industry has always been the most sweated industry in the city, and for years the object of investigations by various social agencies.

"This was the condition until the entrance of the CIO in the laundry field," he said. "We have been able to obtain an agreement for two years which permits the constructive advance of 25,000 laundry workers."

Maryland-D. C. CIO To Meet

Washington, Nov. 18—The third annual convention of the Maryland-District of Columbia CIO Council was set for Baltimore, Nov. 27, by Council President John T. Jones in the official call sent out from headquarters here.

Delegates from the coal mines of western Maryland, from steel mills, clothing shops, textile plants, government offices and a dozen other industries will meet, as Pres. Jones said in the call; "to come to grips with the important problems facing labor in this area and to push forward to greater successes."

Baltimore's official welcome will be given by Mayor Jackson, elected earlier this year with CIO and Labor's Non-Partisan League support. Featured speakers will include Eli Oliver, League executive vice-president. Jack Edelman, Amalgamated Clothing Workers attorney and member of the Baltimore City Council, and others.

Electrical Workers Win Pact

East Pittsburgh, Pa., Nov. 18—An important contract providing for wage increases, a strict union shop and other benefits was signed recently with the Pennsylvania Electric Coil Corp., Pitttsburgh, by Local 615, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

The shop manufactures and repairs coils and motors used largely in the bituminous coal mines, which are 100 per cent organized. Local 615, therefore, asks miners' locals to request that the products of this union shop be used in preference to the products now used in many mines in western Pennsylvania from unorganized coil shops.

Minimum wage rates for women were increased 10 per cent and those for men 20 per cent under the terms of the agreement, which also specify a 40-hour week, time and a half for overtime and vacations with pay.

Textile Workers Win Pact

Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 18—Increases of five cents an hour for all low bracket employes, along with raises for other groups, are part of the three-year closed shop contract just renewed with the Textile Service Company here by the Textile Workers Union.

The 75 workers covered by the agreement also get a week's vacation, seven paid holidays, seniority, a promotion system, the five-day 40-hour week, arbitration of differences, equal division of work in slack seasons, and time and a half for overtime.

Intl. President Emil Rieve signed the agreement for the union, together with TWUA Joint Board Manager Joseph L. Hueter and George M. Powell, Business Agent.

John T. Jones, president of the Maryland-District of Columbia CIO Council, who issued the call for the third annual Council convention to be held in Baltimore, Md., Nov. 27.

Wire Strikers Accept Bid To U. S. Parley

San Francisco, Nov. 18 — CIO organized workers in Western Union, members of the American Communications Assn., accepted Labor Secretary Perkins' bid to discuss settlement of the nine week strike of Western Union workers here, it was announced by ACA President Mervyn Rathborne.

In accepting Miss Perkins' invitation, Rathborne pointed out that Federal Labor Dept. agents and state and city groups in California and San Francisco had tried in vain to bring the company to the conference table.

The Secretary's invitation, he said, was most welcome to the union, since it has tried consistently from the beginning of the strike to bring about a fair settlement, only to be balked by the stubborn refusal of the company to listen to any reasonable proposal.

CITES BOARD ORDER

He cited the recent order of the Natl. Labor Relations Board dissolving the Western Union company union as a vindication of the CIO policy in endeavoring to bring collective bargaining to thousands of exploited telegraph workers.

The San Francisco strike started nine weeks ago, and has won support not only from all CIO affiliates in the area throughout the country but from AFL unions and progressive groups generally.

The Western Union workers here are striking against such conditions as denial of wage-hour law rights, permanent part-time work for veteran employes, arbitrary layoffs, inflated company prices for messengers' bicycles, and union recognition.

CIO Council Asks Relief Session

St. Louis, Nov. 18—The Industrial Union Council here voted full support to the demand of the Board of Aldermen for a special session of the state legislature to deal with the relief problem, Secretary Luther M. Slinkard announced.

"Only additional relief funds voted by such a special session can prevent starvation and evictions from occurring on a mass scale within the near future," the St. Louis CIO'ers said.

They also endorsed the appointment of George Duemler as attorney for the Wage-Hour Division at Kansas City. Senator Bennett C. Clark has attacked Duemler's appointment.

Canadians Report CIO Victories

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 18—The Canadian CIO last week reported continued progress in its drive to organize the unorganized and protect the living standards of its members, according to the national office here.

In Zeballos, B. C., hard-rock miners obtained recognition of their local of the CIO Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union at Privateer Mine.

Recognition of the union by the company came after a week's dispute over discrimination. The discharged employe was reinstated and other concessions were granted under the contract.

WOODWORKERS WIN

The International Woodworkers reported that it obtained a 10 per cent wage raise in two British Columbia camps of the Industrial Timber Mills following an intensive organizing drive.

Members of both crews are preparing to begin negotiations for collective bargaining rights, preferential hiring and safety committees.

In Nova Scotia, 1,400 coal miners returned to work after a seven-day strike when the Provincial Department of Mines agreed to investigate the layoff of four bankhead workers by the Cumberland Railway and Coal Co.

The men struck because the four bankhead workers were laid off without any specific cause.

In Toronto there is intensive activity in the steel plants as a result of the victory gained by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in the General Steel Wares plant.

In Estevan the Mine Workers continued their strike for a union contract and elimination of a small company union from the Saskatchewan lignite field.

Despite protests from the local population the provincial government has not withdrawn the strong force of Royal Canadian mounted police sent to the strike scene at the request of the operators.

'Organize Unorganized' Drives Set by CIO In Connecticut, Indiana

Fort Wayne, Ind., Nov. 18—This city was chosen as the starting point for an organization drive throughout Indiana in plans launched at a meeting held recently in Indianapolis attended by some 150 organizers, regional directors and representatives of industrial union councils.

A drive on the International Harvester Company and Tokheim Pump, in progress here several weeks before the new drive began, has resulted in hundreds of workers joining the United Automobile Workers and the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

Tokheim attempted to stave off organization by raising wages three cents an hour, the Fort Wayne CIO Council reported, but this only strengthened the efforts of the unions.

Plans for the intensive campaign were taken up at a meeting of the Fort Wayne Council held here November 7, and a publicity committee was formed to work under the supervision of President Clem Grabner. Windshield stickers, buttons and union caps were ordered for the drive, and a speakers' bureau set up.

Waterbury, Conn., Nov. 18—"Organize the Unorganized," the keynote of both the CIO national convention in San Francisco and the Connecticut Industrial Union Council convention held here recently, has been taken seriously by the organizing committee of Unity Lodge 251, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Thomas R. Malloy, president of the state CIO Council, said today.

An open meeting held in Hartford for workers in the P. & W. Aircraft and Hamilton Propeller, both divisions of the United Aircraft Corporation, stirred up much enthusiasm.

Support of the United Automobile Workers, and the entire CIO organization, was pledged by Gene Sorenson, international UAW representative, and Tom Cummings from the CIO regional office. Axel Benson, business agent for Unity Lodge, and a former aircraft worker, was chairman of the meeting. Tom Molloy offered the cooperation of the Connecticut Council as well as Unity Lodge.

A temporary committee was elected at the meeting and hundreds of application cards were given out for distribution in the shop.

Miners Complain:

Boom Stories Go Boom

BUTTE, Mont., Nov. 18. — Reports about Butte's war boom, like the story about Mark Twain's death, have been greatly exaggerated.

Newspaper ballyhoo to create a picture of a great boom in this mining city have been good advertising for Anaconda Copper, local CIO union officials charge, but it's causing disappointment—and hardship—for hundreds of workers who flock to the city in search of non-existent jobs.

Glowing newspaper reports originating in the local papers and reprinted throughout the country omit mention of the real facts—that hundreds of Butte miners are still on WPA, ready, willing and eager to swap WPA's starvation wage scale for a real day's pay in the mines.

WPA officials say that only 275 men have left the government payroll for mining work, while at the end of October there were still 2,650 persons on WPA in Silver Bow County.

List Union Clothing Concerns

New York, Nov. 18 — A directory of firms operating under contract with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers has just been published by the union's label department.

In handy size for carrying, the directory lists several hundred concerns manufacturing all types of men's clothing.

The ACWA has requested all workers to ask for the Amalgamated label when clothes are bought.

"The use of our union label is optional with manufacturers," the ACWA points out. "Instead of compelling them to sew on the label, we strive to make labor and the consuming public union label conscious and we appeal to them to insist that all wearing apparel bear the Amalgamated label."

Information about the directory may be obtained from the Union Label Department, Amalgamated Clothing Workers, 15 Union Square, New York City.

Win First Six Hour Shift

Chicopee Falls, Mass., Nov. 18—A six hour shift, believed to be the first in the textile industry of Massachusetts is to be installed at the Chicopee Manufacturing Corp. here under a contract being negotiated by the Textile Workers Union of America.

The firm is a subsidiary of Johnson & Johnson, internationally famous manufacturers of medical bandages and other cotton cloth.

There will be four shifts running from six in the morning to 12 noon, from noon to six p. m., from six to midnight and from midnight to six a. m. A new shift of about 100 workers will be employed, increasing the output about 20 per cent.

The company has already put a six-hour shift into effect in its Manchester, N. H. plant.

Judge Halts West Coast Vigilantes

Cotton Pickers Union Wins Injunction

MADERA, Calif., Nov. 18—Striking CIO cotton pickers scored a legal point for civil liberties here when Federal Judge Campbell Beaumont granted a temporary injunction to the Cannery and Agricultural Workers restraining Madera County authorities from applying an anti-labor law against picketing.

Earlier, the strikers asserted their rights in the face of extreme vigilante-Associated Farmer terror at a mass meeting called under auspices of Labor's Non-Partisan League and the union.

DOZENS JAILED

Dominant note of the meeting was labor's reply to Associated Farmers' campaign of violence that has sent dozens of workers to hospital, jailed scores, and clubbed and tear-gassed hundreds of men, women and children on the picket line.

Support came from California Governor Olson's office, when Stanley Mosk, the Governor's executive secretary, and K. I. Fulton, another aide, pledged help to the strikers. A major step in this campaign, Mosk pointed out, will come when labor organizes politically to drive reactionaries out of the state legislature as they drove Republican Merriam out of the Governorship.

STARVATION WAGES

The workers, who come from the migratory groups that California keeps in a perpetual state of near-starvation for the sake of growers' profits, are striking for a wage of $1.25 per 100 pounds of cotton. Growers offered 85 cents, though a state commission recently recommended the higher rate.

Highway cops have adopted a "neutral" attitude on the strike, which means allowing Associated Farmers' thugs to beat up strikers and their families, then rushing in with bullets and tear-gas aimed at the picket line.

Seamen To Have Lakes Conference

Cleveland, Nov. 18 — The third and largest post season conference of the National Maritime Union on the Great Lakes will be held in Buffalo as soon as the season ends, NMU headquarters announced here.

Victories will be celebrated at the conference and plans made for future negotiations and organization of the shipping companies that supply American steel mills with raw materials, move coal up the Lakes and bring down grain.

Bethlehem "Wasn't In"

Mr. Eugene Grace, president of Bethlehem Steel, "wasn't in" when a delegation of nine Steel Workers Organizing Committee representatives called on him in New York. The nine delegates filed charges of refusal to bargain with the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

Homeless Wait Aid

Some of the 400 evicted sharecroppers of southeastern Missouri camp in barrel-stave shacks, waiting and praying for federal aid. They are part of more than 1,500 turned out of their homes last January. The CIO Cannery and Agricultural Workers Union fought for and secured aid for many of them.

Labor and the Law

By Lee Pressman

CIO General Counsel

The recent decision of the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia upholding practically in toto the order of the National Labor Relations Board directed against the Republic Steel Corporation is of deep importance to organized labor.

The order of the Labor Board directed against Republic Steel Corporation found that the Corporation had engaged in a planned campaign to deprive its employes of their rights under the Wagner Act. In this campaign a company union was fostered and maintained.

Employes who attempted to organize into the Steel Workers Organizing Committee were discharged in wholesale lots. Organizers were spied upon and brutally beaten by hired thugs of the Corporation. Two plants were closed down to demoralize the union men. The Board found that the Steel Workers Organizing Committee was forced to call a strike as a result of the Corporation's unfair labor practices to protect its own existence.

On the basis of such findings the Board, in its order, directed Republic to disestablish its company union and to cease and desist from engaging in any unfair labor practices against the SWOC.

In addition the Board ordered the company to reinstate all except a few strikers. Back pay was awarded. The men who had been locked out in the Canton and Massillon plants were given similar relief and in addition were awarded back pay for the period that they were locked out prior to the strike.

It is important to note that the Corporation was directed to dismiss any employes who had been hired subsequent to the strike in order to give preference to the strikers to their jobs.

NO DEDUCTIONS ALLOWED

In regard to the awarding of back pay the order of the Board specifically provided that the Corporation would not be entitled to make any deductions on account of wages earned by the strikers on any State or WPA projects. Instead it was ordered that these amounts be paid by the Corporation to the public authorities that maintained the men.

The Court in reviewing the evidence at Board hearings found plenty to justify the conclusions of the Board. The Court specifically held that the Board was justified in finding that the unfair labor practices of the Corporation had caused the strike.

The decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals is of the utmost importance to the Steel Workers Organizing Committee and assures Republic workers the exercise of their rights.

MAKES CORPORATION LIABLE

In addition, the opinion of the Court insures success to the hundreds of individual members of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee who have initiated damage suits against the Corporation for the false arrests and assaults inflicted on them during the strike. These suits involved damages in excess of $2,000,000 for which the Corporation will be liable.

Furthermore, Republic Steel several months ago initiated a suit against the Steel Workers Organizing Committee and the CIO under the anti-trust laws accusing the union of having engaged in the strike for the purpose of interfering with the business and commerce of Republic Steel Corporation. In this suit the Corporation asks for damages of $7,500,000.

The decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals certainly should put an end once and for all to the lawsuit which the Republic had the gall to institute against the CIO and the SWOC.

Charges have also been on file with the Labor Board against Republic in regard to their plants at South Chicago, Illinois; Buffalo, New York, and Munroe, Michigan. These charges also grew out of the activities of the Corporation during the steel strike of 1937. However, the Board has not yet issued any complaint against Republic on these charges. There is no reason now for any further delay on the part of the Labor Board. Hundreds of discharged employes of Republic Steel Corporation at these three plants will become entitled to similar relief.

CIO Steel Officer On U. S. Board

Washington, Nov. 18 — Secretary of Labor Perkins this week appointed Clinton Golden, Northeastern Regional Director of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, a member of the Federal Committee on Apprenticeship. Miss Perkins announced she is adding Mr. Golden to the Committee in order to provide "broader labor representation."

Previously the only trade union representative has been John P. Frey, President of the AFL Metal Trades Department.

The Federal Committee on Apprenticeship was placed under the U. S. Department of Labor by Congress to supervise a program of apprentice training for young people entering the skilled trades.

Fur Workers Win Pay Boost

Providence, R. I., Nov. 18 — Pay increases ranging from $3.00 to $7.00 a week were won by Providence Fur Workers Local 92, Intl. Fur & Leather Workers Union, in contracts renewed with the Merchant Furriers and department stores here.

The pacts which are effective for one year beginning June 2, 1940, also set a work week of 37½ hours. Max Rotstein of the furriers union was in charge of negotiations.

Joseph Mayo, state CIO director, hailed the agreements as a big achievement for the union won without a single dispute.

Unions Speed Drive

(See Stories Page Three)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25—The CIO's big organizing campaign scored two more major victories today.

In Chicago, the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee demonstrated its strength in the main plant of the stubbornly anti-union Armour & Co., rolling up an easy 4-1 victory over an AFL stooge union.

The vote was 4,006 for the CIO and only 1,047 for the AFL.

In Washington, meanwhile, the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee demonstrated that it means business by signing the first industrial union contract in the Capital's building industry.

The pact, covering several hundred workers employed by members of the Construction Industry Employers, Inc., was hailed by UCWOC Chairman A. D. Lewis as "one of the most important events in the history of the construction industry."

'Nothing To Gain From War'

Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 25 — Workers have everything to lose and nothing to gain by a war, Ted Silvey, secretary of the Ohio CIO Industrial Union Council said in a radio address here.

"It is utter folly for labor to believe that war commerce will solve the unemployment problem," Silvey asserted. "American industry is more mechanized now than in 1914, and production can be multiplied with relatively few more workmen."

Cite 'Chamber' Chief For Law Violation

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25—A spirited pleader for the sanctity of property rights—Pres. W. Gibson Carey, Jr., of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce—today was on the receiving end of a sharp blast from the National Labor Relations Board.

The Board ordered Yale & Towne Manufacturing Co.—of which Carey is the boss—to stop discouraging its North Chicago, Ill., members from joining a union.

H. L. Murphy, superintendent of the Illinois plant, and other supervisory employes, used all the old war-cries in their fight against the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, the NLRB charged. Murphy sent a letter to the workers with a thinly-veiled warning not to organize, while the straw-bosses circulated "atrocity" stories about the CIO.

Carey, who classes himself as a liberal, has made impassioned speeches against the 40-hour week and begged workers to forget their silly ideas about wanting more leisure time.

Charter Shipyard Local In Canada

Halifax, Nova Scotia, Nov. 25 — The first Canadian local of the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers received its charter today, thereby making the union a truly international union.

The new Local 34 covers workers in the shipyard and repair shop o fthe Halifax Shipyards. Although the plant has been principally concerned with repair work, it is expected that the war may see it embarking upon construction work.

Hosiery Union Sues Firm for $250,000

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 25. — Suits charging damages that may total $250,000 were filed against the Holston Manufacturing Co. here by members of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, in the third month of their strike against the firm.

The union has also filed additional charges with the Labor Board, charging Holston wtih refusal to bargain collectively.

Legal action was taken after the company refused to meet with Alfred Hoffmann, AFHW vice president, in the office of the mayor, and continued attempting to operate with scabs. The union committee declined to meet with firm representatives unless Hoffmann was present.

Steel Union Puts Heat On Bethlehem

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 25. — Eugene Grace, president of Bethlehem Steel, was bluntly asked whether he would meet with Steel Workers Organizing Committee representatives to work out a contract or compel the CIO union "to resort to other methods to acquire the status guaranteed by the law of the land."

The question came in a letter from SWOC Regional Director Clinton S. Golden, following two occasions on which Grace and his subordinates ran out on scheduled meetings with the union, while local company officials "reinstated a regime of coercion and intimidation designed to discourage Bethlehem employes from remaining members or continuing their lawful activity in behalf of the SWOC."

PIOUS PROCLAMATIONS

Director Golden's letter to Grace cited the obligations of the company under the Wagner Act, and quoted Grace's own statements on the intentions of the company to meet and bargain with the union.

"Thus encouraged," Golden wrote, "the SWOC began to enroll members among your employes. The response from them was immediate. Perhaps they had been influenced by the pious proclamations you had uttered from time to time in respect to your willingness to engage in collective bargaining.

"On Tuesday, Jan. 11, 1938, for example, in a bulletin to your employes, you said: 'Our belief in collective bargaining and our long established policy of meeting, dealing, and negotiating with you through your freely chosen representatives will continue. We stand firmly on that ground'."

According to Golden's letter, SWOC committees called in October on various local plant managers "and presented requests for wage adjustments in order to bring Bethlehem's low rates up to those prevailing generally in the industry. Your plant managers knew our committees were coming. They had been informed days in advance, and took immediate measures to evade the demand.

DISAPPEARING ACT

"Then a singular thing happened," Golden continued. "On the appointed day for presentation of these demands all of your local plant managers disappeared. Nobody seemed to know just what had happened to them. And the same thing happened at every plant where SWOC committees called to present their wage revision demands."

Following this, SWOC officials announced they would call on Grace at his New York office. Golden added, where they met the same complete lack of hospitality — Mr. Grace wasn't in. It was this second evasion that brought Golden's sharp question:

"Are you now prepared to meet with a committee consisting of employes of your company . . . for the purpose of negotiating the terms of a mutually satisfactory collective bargaining contract, reduced to writing . . . or must we be compelled to resort to other means to acquire the status guaranteed by the law of the land?"

Marine Pay At Peak Level

New York, Nov. 25. — The highest wage scales specified in a marine union contract since the World War were announced this week by the National Maritime Union in an agreement signed with nine coal carriers.

Blanket wage increases of $2.50 a month for 1,500 seamen are provided for in the new contract, NMU Vice President Ferdinand C. Smith said.

In addition to wage increases the contract provides new overtime clauses and substantial improvement in working and living conditions on board ship.

Under the new contract which becomes effective immediately upon ratification by the membership, the increased monthly wages will range from $62.50 to $137.50 in the stewards' department, from $72.50 to $95 in the engine dept., and from $67.50 to $97.50 in the deck dept.

UNION HIRING

These scales are from $10 to $12.50 above those on passenger and general cargo vessels, Smith said. Hiring, as in previous agreements with the coal industry, is completely union controlled, with replacements on a rotary basis from the union halls.

The new agreement, the third to be negotiated by the NMU with the coal carrying industry, will run until March 1, 1941. The old contract has been extended to Nov. 30.

Some 50 ships are covered by the new pact. They run mainly in and out of the ports of Norfolk, Va.; New York; Providence, R. I.; Boston; and Portland, Me.

DISCUSS CHRYSLER CONTRACT: Representatives of CIO United Automobile Workers, the company and the government talk over proposals for ending the long dispute. Left to right, Chrysler Vice Pres. Herman Weckler, U. S. Conciliator James Dewey, Arthur Raab of the State Mediation Board, and Pres. R. J. Thomas, Atty. Maurice Sugar and Richard Frankensteen of the UAW.

Just to show the company that the UAW holds the loyalty of its members, several thousand auto workers demonstrated in Cadillac Square in downtown Detroit, demanded that Chrysler substitute a contract for windy excuses.

Pontiac Unions Fool Foes, Win Americanism Parade

By SWANSON C. SHIELDS

Pontiac, Mich., Nov. 25—Charges by unscrupulous forces that the CIO is "un-American" proved a boomerang Armistice Day when the Pontiac CIO copped honors for having the largest division in a patriotic demonstration.

The impressive showing made by the CIO left the Board of Commerce, the daily newspaper and other anti-labor forces empty handed in their drive to show that the CIO is "unpatriotic."

The AFL Martinites were also conspicuous — for their absence. The few remaining followers of Homer Martin were unable to muster enough support for a place in the parade.

Included in the CIO delegation were large numbers of veterans who served overseas in the last World War.

Echoing John L. Lewis' words at the San Francisco Convention, Pontiac CIO leaders, pointing out that labor furnishes both the man power and materials for war, urged that the United States remain neutral in the European War.

CIO members here are also planning a series of rallies to acquaint the public with the important part that the CIO plays in building Americanism.

Win $8 Increase In Toronto

Toronto, Ont., Nov. 25 — Wage raises by $2 to $8 a week were won from seven Toronto shoe companies by local 157, United Shoe Workers of America, CIO, in past two weeks.

Included in the contract is provision for further adjustment of wages should prices of foodstuffs increase due to the present war situation.

According to the agreements some employes will get the raise immediately and others will receive 10 per cent on December 1 and another five per cent on January 1.

For the first time in Toronto union history, the local obtained a dues check-off agreement, Ken Scott, organizer, announced.

Win Long Strike In South

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 25 — A two-year strike at the Indian Head Mills of the Nashua Manufacturing Co., Cordova, Alabama, has finally been settled by the signing of a contract with the Textile Workers Union of America, R. R. Lawrence, TWUA regional director said today. About 450 workers are affected.

The Profile Mills of Jacksonville, Alabama, which have been closed down for eight months in what the workers term a lockout, have also signed a contract with the TWUA, Lawrence announced.

Coincidence?

WASHINGTON. — Students of Sherman anti-trust law cases raised their eyebrows when they saw the brief recently submitted by Joseph Padway, AFL general counsel, in a case involving a Chicago AFL milk wagon drivers' union.

Reason for the surprise was its extraordinary likeness to the CIO brief filed last spring in the Apex Hosiery case.

Stranger than coincidence, in the opinion of many, is the fact that Padway not only used many of the same quotations and sources as the CIO legal department, but time after time lifted whole sentences and phrases out of the CIO brief—without crediting the original source!

Certify Auto Union In 12 Chrysler Plants

Washington, Nov. 25 — One point of disagreement in the dispute between the United Automobile Workers, CIO, and the Chrysler Corporation, was settled by the action of the National Labor Relations Board certifying the CIO union as sole bargaining agency for production and maintenance employes in 12 plants.

In the case of the Briggs Manufacturing Co., too, the Board reversed its previous stand in favor of a separate bargaining unit at each of seven plants and has granted the request of the United Automobile Workers, CIO, for a single employer-wide unit and has certified the UAW-CIO as sole bargaining agent.

The Chrysler management which had previously insisted it would write separate but identical contracts covering each plant agreed in view of the Board's decision, to give in to the union's demand for one contract covering all the plants where elections were won.

UAW WON 10 TO 1

The UAW-CIO defeated the AFL by a total vote of 40,564 to 4,744 in elections held at 14 Chrysler plants September 27 and 28.

The Board's action at Briggs was based on the results of seven separate polls conducted in September 14, all won overwhelmingly by the CIO union, which defeated the AFL union 13 to 1.

The total vote won by the CIO at the seven Briggs plants was 13,301. The AFL group received 1,052.

Construction Union Gets First Pact

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25. — Signing of the first industrial union contract in the building industry here was announced today by Chairman A. D. Lewis of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, an affiliate of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Parties to the contract are the UCWOC and Construction Industry Employers, Inc., an association of local builders and contractors recently organized with headquarters at 1101 Vermont Avenue, N. W. Signatories to the contract for the UCWOC are Chairman Lewis, Thos. P. McTigue, Chairman of the D. C. Construction Workers District Conference, and the officers of Local Union No. 30, UCWOC. For the CIE, Inc., the contract was signed by Richard W. Frey, president of R. W. Frey, Inc., and chairman of the negotiating committee.

Elimination of jurisdictional disputes and other abuses associated with the craft union form of organization is the cardinal objective of the contract. All workers on the job of any contractor no matter what type of work they may do shall belong to the same union.

GRIEVANCE MACHINERY

Grievance machinery to settle disputes without stoppage of work is provided by the contract. Both parties agree there shall be no suspension of work because of any dispute until there has been resort to the grievance machinery. Selection of an umpire is provided to decide cases that are not settled by direct negotiation.

The contract calls for the eight-hour day and the five-day week, with time and a half for overtime and double time on holidays and Sundays. A standard wage scale based on $9 per day for journeymen is embodied in the contract. Safety standards to protect the workers are provided under terms of the contract. There is a check-off for union dues.

Some 30 or 40 contractors covering all types of work, are included in the membership of the Construction Industry Employers, Inc., and the total number of workers covered by the contract will run into thousands. The contract covers all types of work, private and governmental, and stipulates equal treatment of the workers, whether on private or governmental work. The Davis-Bacon Act wage standards apply on government work.

An apprentice system included in the contract offers opportunity for training younger workers under union conditions and eliminates past abuses in this respect.

Civil Rights Probe Starts

Los Angeles, Nov. 25 — The Associated Farmers vigilante outfit was hauled up on the carpet before the Senate Civil Liberties Committee here in the first major move of the group's western investigation.

Purpose of the preliminary hearing was to obtain papers from the Tory farm organization or place it in contempt of Senate if it refuses to turn over the documents to the committee for examination.

A similar procedure will be worked out in San Francisco early next month, with public hearings scheduled for mid-December.

Chrysler Pay Scale Ties Up Negotiations

DETROIT, Nov. 25. — Still haggling over union demands, the Chrysler Corp. maintained its lockout of some 50,000 workers through the Thanksgiving holiday.

Union and company negotiators admitted, however, to seeing better chances for settlement of the long dispute than had been apparent in recent weeks. Only major stumbling block to terminating the shutdown, it was indicated, was the question of wage increases for the Chrysler employes, members of the CIO United Automobile Workers.

Pres. R. J. Thomas issued a statement sharply criticizing the corporation's suggested wage rate, which it made public during the week.

SCORN COMPANY FIGURES

"The 'subsistence' wage for a family of four in Detroit," Thomas pointed out," is $1,423, according to government figures.

"Chrysler production workers do not earn anything near that amount. The average hourly wage in June of this year was 93 cents. Given 40 weeks of work a year, at 32 hours a week, Chrysler workers earn $1,190 a year. That is $233 less than the government says is required to keep a Detroit family of four in the ordinary necessities of life.

WAGES OR SUPER-PROFITS?

"The issue, as we see it, has boiled down to this: more profits for the stockholders and coupon clippers, or better wages for the men and women who work in the plants. That issue alone stands between us and resumption of operations."

CIO Wins Easy Victory In Armour Election

CHICAGO, Nov. 25.—CIO-minded packinghouse workers in the huge Armour plant here handed a stunning defeat to AFL pretensions when they voted four to one for the Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee in a National Labor Relations Board election.

The victory, 4006 for the CIO to 1047 for the AFL, was described by PWOC leaders as "the death knell of the despised AFL union" and as a clear direction to Armour officials to negotiate and sign a contract with the CIO union.

The pre-election campaign, according to PWOC officials, included every sort of anti-CIO propaganda, worked out in close collaboration by Armour interests and the AFL Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen. Last minute efforts of Martin Dies and his un-American Committee, which rushed to Chicago to attempt a smear campaign on PWOC leaders, also failed to influence the vote.

CRIMINAL RECORDS

AFL tactics suffered a severe relapse when PWOC officials exposed the criminal record of George Dasho, local president, whose biography, compiled by the police, included trips to state prison and a blotterful of theft, assault and other charges. Revelation of a U. S. Dept. of Justice probe into AFL local connections with Armour management added another crimp to anti-CIO plans.

The PWOC ran its campaign strictly on the record of its achievements for workers in the packing industry in Chicago and other centers throughout the United States.

CIO Gets Position on ILO Delegation to Havana

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25. — A two-year CIO campaign for CIO representation on U. S. delegations to the International Labor Organization met with success today.

Pres. Roosevelt named CIO Sec. James B. Carey as one of the American representatives to the ILO's western hemisphere regional conference at Havana, Cuba. In addition, he selected Miss Kathryn Lewis, assistant to Pres. Lewis, and Vice-Pres. Dorothy Bellanca of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, as expert advisers to the American delegation.

As a delegate to the Havana conference, Carey will split the U. S. government's one vote with George Harrison of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, who represents the AFL.

AFL HAD MONOPOLY

Until now, the AFL has maintained a monopoly on American labor representation to the ILO, an organization affiliated with the League of Nations and maintaining headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland. Purpose of the ILO is to secure agreements among the various participating governments for the raising of labor standards.

In a letter to the chairman of the Havana conference, Sec. of Labor Frances Perkins explained the decision to give both CIO and AFL representation at the same time.

"The multidunious problems which face the world as a result of the present emergency and the part that the ILO must play in world reconstruction has led the government of the U. S. to designate two delegates to represent labor at this second conference," she wrote.

Head of the American delegation at Havana is A. J. Altmeyer, chairman of the Social Security Board. Other members, in addition to Carey and Harrison, are Miss Josephine Roche, former Asst. Secretary of the Treasury, and Clarence McDavitt, retired New England telephone company official, who represents employers.

Other labor advisers on the technical staff, in addition to Miss Lewis and Miss Bellanca, are Rev. Francis J. Haas of Catholic University, and Rose Schneiderman of the Women's Trade Union League.

High Court OKs Leaflet Distribution

Washington, Nov. 25 — The Supreme Court last Wednesday declared invalid four different city ordinances each of which attempted to prohibit the distribution of leaflets on city streets and public places.

The decision of the court completely guarantees the right to distribute leaflets. The court ruled that the constitutional right to this distribution could not be adbridged simply because there was some littering of the streets.

Two of the decisions directly involved labor unions and the other two involved organizations making appeals to the public. By these decisions, unions will be free to make reasonable distribution of leaflets on public streets and public places.

A full explanation of the decision, together with an outline of how to take action against public officials who deny these constitutional rights, will be shortly issued by the CIO Legal Department.

Seamen Demand Jobs

A group of seamen, members of the National Maritime Union, picket New York offices of the U. S. Maritime Commission after the neutrality law beached several thousand workers. They want WPA jobs, not relief.

Court Hits 'Stooge-ism' Of AFL

Washington, Nov. 25 — Straw bosses don't make bona fide union organizers in the eyes of the law.

That was the tenor of a major decision affecting the National Labor Relations Board handed down by the federal circuit court of the District of Columbia over the wails of the AFL's chief legal lights.

By a 2-1 ruling, the court threw out an AFL closed shop contract at the Serrick Corp. in Muncie, Ind., told the company to quit its unfair labor practices and recognize the CIO United Automobile Workers, and gave the AFL a thorough tongue-lashing for using supervisory employes as organizers.

WIDE EFFECT

The case, which will probably go to the U. S. Supreme Court, will have wide effect on a half-dozen other situations where AFL closed shop contracts have been outlawed by the Labor Board on evidence of shady organizing practices or outright collusion between boss, straw-boss and AFL officials.

In the Serrick case, it was the Intl. Assn. of Machinists which was involved. The Board held that two locals were "company unions" pointing out that six of the local's officials were straw bosses closely tied to the employer.

The court's majority found that the "evidence fully sustains the findings of the Labor Board that the employer unlawfully assisted IAM to organize the tool shop and secure the closed shop contract."

CIO Wins Again—and Again

The four-to-one victory of the CIO Packinghouse Workers Organizing Committee in the Labor Board election last week at the big Chicago plant of Armour & Co. reflects the growing esteem in which the CIO is held by American industrial workers.

Following shortly after the six-to-one victory of the CIO United Electrical & Radio Workers at RCA in Camden, the world's biggest radio plant, it is also another resounding rebuke to the pitiful union-splitting attempts of the American Federation of Labor.

In both these cases, the CIO unions had organized the workers and won earlier elections which should have entitled them to sole collective bargaining rights without question. In the case of RCA the CIO even had a contract.

But AFL unions entered the picture in both cases in an attempt to break the CIO industrial unions chosen by the workers, and the Labor Board called new elections to put these would-be union-busters on the ballot.

The results speak for themselves. At both Armour's and RCA, the vote for the CIO increased tremendously in the second elections over the first. So far from weakening the CIO unions, the AFL splitters succeeded only in strengthening them and in demonstrating their own weakness and futility.

These elections continue the trend that has been in evidence for some time. It is a trend of overwhelming and ever-increasing preference for CIO representation on the part of American industrial workers.

Getting Acquainted

Movies, radio and automobiles are doing a lot of things besides developing glamorous stars, insipid crooners and speed maniacs.

Producers, advertisers and auto manufacturers may be, and probably are, innocent of all social purpose when they put their money into developing these mediums of communication and transportation.

But nevertheless they have by-products which are of definite social significance.

For one thing, as Archie Wright of the Dairy Farmers' Union pointed out at the recent New York CIO convention, they are among the factors that are bringing city and country closer together physically and mentally, industrially and socially. And as farmer and city worker become better acquainted, there are important results.

For instance, Wright said: "The country worker, the farmer, finds the city worker has serious problems. The farmer has heard of the dollar-an-hour, 40-hour-a-week city worker, and he has been filled with envy. This has made him an easy mark for the barbed shafts of propaganda shot in the interest of the employing class. On acquaintance the farmer finds the city worker has a hard time to make both ends meet.

"The farmer is appalled at the city rent figures and he can see little or no relation between what the city worker pays for food and what he gets for producing it. In addition to this, the farmer finds among city workers a constant fear of insecurity, unemployment and penniless old age.

"One bit of understanding by farmers of the problems of the city worker and all opposition to WPA, militant trade unions and old age pensions disappears."

The city worker, on the other hand, Wright pointed out, finds on acquaintance that the farmer too has problems of much the same basic nature as his own.

"First," he said, "the farmer is a worker, and a worker who always seems to have a job in front of him. The average day on a northeastern dairy farm is 12 to 14 hours, seven days a week and 365 days a year. Furthermore, the farm is a family proposition. The whole family works those hours.

"The city worker discovers, what the farmer himself is just coming to realize, that the farmer is a piece worker in many instances who holds title or possession to a piece of farm property only on the sufferance of his creditors who are merely waiting a favorable opportunity to dispossess him. The price of the product is unbelievably below the cost of production."

The cordial and practical cooperation between the CIO and the Dairy Farmers Union in New York state, which was the main subject of Wright's speech, is just a sample of the mutual benefits to be derived from farmers and city workers getting together. Both the CIO and forward-looking farmers desire and expect more and more cooperation for economic and progressive political purposes, as both groups of producers become better and better acquainted.

Thanksgiving — Here and There

Looking Ahead

By LEN DE CAUX

Tolerance

Mankind's heavenward aspirations combine with the business instincts of real estate owners to produce soaring edifices whose pinnacles poke holes in the clouds.

As the gaping visitor admires the fairyland of window lights piled shelf upon shelf against the evening sky, he may try to calculate how many more thousands of people can be made to pay rent through such vertical accommodation than could be given even standing room on the plots of land from which the skyscrapers rise.

And burrowing below the earth, he can see miracles of rapid transportation performed by CIO subway workers for millions more people than the streets above could carry marching by the dozen abreast.

Towers of Babel

New York has produced towers of Babel that do not fall.

Every race, nationality, religion and political belief is represented among the millions who daily mount skyward in elevators or hurtle through Manhattan's subterranean tunnels.

New York, a cosmopolitan curiosity to all of America west of the Hudson, is yet a most typical American city, depending socially upon a quality which is basic to American civilization.

New York is a city which is perforce founded on tolerance. The American people are immigrants all, and New York is a port of arrival, in which succeeding generations of immigrants have first learned to live together as Americans all.

An Organizer's Tale

Two years ago, New York added one more to its population of immigrants—this time from Ilinois. A two-fisted labor organizer arrived, a stranger to the city, under instructions to build the CIO.

Before he left New York, a few days ago, for other duties, he bade farewell to a state convention there representing 900,000 organized CIO workers. Governor, Mayor, United State Senators and many other leaders in public life came to pay their respects to the power and success of this great New York labor movement.

After the convention a dinner was given in honor of the departing labor organizer. There he told the tale of his sojourn in New York and of some of the things it had taught him.

New Union Life

Allan Haywood admitted that he had not wanted to come to New York. He hated to leave his earlier assignments in the auto and rubber industries, where workers by the tens of thousand were flocking to the CIO—new converts to unionism with life, vigor, enthusiasm and militancy that was sweeping all before them.

But now, he said, he hated to leave New York. He related his early difficulties as a stranger in this strange city. He told how the Amalgamated Clothing Workers had been his first host, when it was hard even to find office space, and how Sidney Hillman had been his wise and ever-ready counsellor.

In New York City Haywood found men and women of every race and creed, white-collar and manual workers, conservatives and radicals, every variety of the human race, ready and eager to cooperate in a common cause, the building of the CIO.

CIO Growth in New York

Just as he had seen in Detroit and Akron the rise of the auto and rubber workers unions, so in New York City he found subway, street car and taxi workers joining with equal enthusiasm, under the inspiration of the CIO, to build the great Transport Workers Union. He saw the big department stores being organized; the union spirit spreading to factories of every kind; white-collar workers, newspapermen, insurance employes, civil servants, standing up for their union rights side by side with industrial workers.

And out of it all had grown a powerful CIO in New York, with which the biggest corporations had to reckon and bargain, and to which the highest-placed in political life paid their respects.

But the note that Haywood stressed most of all was that all of this growth depended upon a spirit of tolerance. Jews and gentiles, Catholics and Protestants, Negro and white, American-born and foreign-born, workers of every creed, race and politics, had to work together with some degree of mutual tolerance, for unionism to succeed.

Basic to Labor Success

Intolerance is a meatgrinder which can reduce the most solid steak to the most disintegrated hash. It can reduce strong unions into quarreling factions.

But the New York CIO convention, and the whole growth of the movement there, shows that through industrial organization even the most diversified groups of workers can learn the self-control, the mutual respect and the tolerance without which no disciplined and effective labor movement can exist.

Closed Shop Pact In Law Office

San Francisco, Nov. 25—(FP)—The first closed shop contract signed with a Pacific Coast law office by the United Office & Professional Workers, CIO, covers the firm of Gladstein, Grossman & Margolis, attorneys for the state CIO council and numerous unions.

An unusual feature is a clause providing maternity leave for three to six months. The pact calls for the 38-hour week.

CIO Construction Union Wins Contract

There is a graduated wage scale for apprentices based on time worked in the industry.

Commenting on signing of the contract, a joint statement by Mr. Lewis and Mr. Frey said:

"The completion of this contract is one of the most important events in the history of the construction industry. It marks the beginning of a new day for builders, workers and the public.

"The wage scale will standardize the largest single cost factor in building and provides continuity of work and harmonious relationships on the part of employes and employers toward the problems confronting the industry.

"The District of Columbia is to be congratulated on being one of the first cities of the nation to adopt the modern industrialized form of organization in the building industry. Industrial unionism offers the only effective answer to ancient craft union abuses with which the industry has been confronted for 50 years."

Haywood Announces Four Appointments

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—New appointments in four key CIO areas were announced today by Allan S. Haywood, national organization director of the CIO. The appointments were made in New York, Boston, Chicago and New Orleans, and were necessitated by recent CIO Executive Board action in shifting Haywood and Michael F. Widman to Washington as director and assistant director, respectively.

In New York, where Director Haywood built up CIO organization as Regional Director, Harry Straub was appointed to head the Utility Workers Organizing Committee, which Haywood also headed while stationed in the city.

In Boston, where Assistant Director Widman acted as Regional CIO Director, Hugh Lyons was appointed to head up CIO work in the area. Lyons, a member of the Executive Board of the United Mine Workers in Illinois, was active as well in organizing steel in the midwest.

In Chicago, Ernest B. Pugh was appointed to be Regional Director in place of August Scholle, recently transferred to Detroit, and in New Orleans Fred Pieper, formerly with the United Automobile Workers, was made Director of the new Regional Office opened there.

CIO Seamen Hit Back At Admiral

New York, Nov. 25—Admiral Wiley of the U. S. Maritime Commission, who undertook last week to scold Joe Curran and the Natl. Maritime Union he heads, was told in very plain and vigorous language just what the seamen thought of him and his Commission. The telling was done by Curran, in a letter replying to Wiley's charges that the NMU was "betraying" the seamen and was "dominated by outside interests."

Curran flatly contradicted the Admiral on his charge that the seamen had refused to cooperate with the Commission on the training school issue, citing the recent order of Pres. Roosevelt to Chairman Emory S. Land, also an Admiral, to "cooperate with the representatives of labor."

COMMISSION FAILED

This, as Curran pointed out, is exactly what the Commission has failed to do. On the contrary, he wrote: "If anyone is victimizing the seamen, it is the Commission. The Commission is forcing them to enlist in a Coast Guard School as a prerequisite to obtaining relief. You cannot deny this. We have affidavits showing that the 'enlist or starve' order went into effect immediately after the President had ordered Admiral Land to cooperate with the seamen."

And what is more, Curran added, the Commission has failed in its most important duty — to build up an American merchant marine. ". . . it is high time," he wrote, "that Congress realized that such a vast program should not be entrusted to a Maritime Commission composed of two lawyers, two retired Admirals and one insurance broker."

JOBLESS MAY MARCH

Chicago—(FP)—Predictions of a march of Illinois unemployed to the state capitol were heard when Gov. Horner indicated he would not include relief in the special legislative call.

Mid-Continent Official Plotted Bombing to Hurt CIO Union, Board Hears

(By Federated Press)

TULSA, Okla., Nov. 25.—A former U. S. marshal, employed as chief of guards for the struck Mid-Continent Petroleum Corp., was charged here with having tried last March to bribe members of the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union into dynamiting the company's pipelines.

The man accused of this attempt to discredit the union in its fight against the bitterly anti-labor corporation is John M. Vickrey. The accusation came during the course of a National Labor Relations Board hearing.

R. C. Walker of Ada, a union member but not a striker, testified that Vickrey gave him his orders in an Ada hotel room on March 30. Previously Walker had told Jack Neal, a company investigator, that he would spy on the union.

Vickrey's aim was to catch the strikers in the act of blasting the company's pipelines and cripple the strike through indictment of its leaders, Walker explained.

"We want you to get in with Chaffin (C. H. Chaffin, a union leader) and the other boys and try to get them to blow up one of our pipelines," Vickrey told him in the hotel, Walker revealed.

"I told him that I would," Walker continued. "Then Vickrey said: 'That'll be fine. That'd be worth more to the oil companies of this state than anything that could happen.'

COMPANY WORRIED

"Vickrey told me to be damn careful not to get Mid-Continent involved in the thing," Walker added. He also said Vickrey had declared that the union couldn't win "because Red Phillips (Gov. Leon C. Phillips) was behind the oil companies."

Walker related that his cousin, a man named Byrd, was offered cash and $6 a day while in jail if he would dynamite the line. He also testified that Jim Bracewell, a pipeline worker, had told Vice-Pres. J. C. Denton of Mid-Continent in a telephone conversation that the dynamiting couldn't be handled for less than $2,500.

LONG HEARING

Lawyers for Mid-Continent were grieved to learn that Walker had been reporting the company's activities to the union. They said that Vickrey, who was out of town at some place where he could not be reached by phone, would explain everything later.

The hearing is in its seventh month and may last as much as a year. The strike, stil lstrong, was called Dec. 22. The workers have the full support of the CIO, which at its San Francisco convention, placed the Mid-Continent corporation on its national unfair list until it signs a union agreement.

HOUSING PROJECT

Marshall, Tex.— (FP) —A $1,000,000 slum clearance project will be inaugurated here shortly with the razing of 200 rent houses for Negroes and whites.

The Labor Reader:

The Politics of Misery

By C. W. FOWLER

America's No. 1 problem area, the South, has been frequently spotted by all kinds of Federal Government leaders and agencies, from the President of the U. S. down to the numerous government fact-finding bureaus and statistics mills. Its economic difficulties have been treated in detail, the misery of the sharecroppers, the low wages of industrial workers, set down in any number of studies and reports.

The CIO has made the South a major concentration area for organization—thereby becoming the first agency to propose a practical remedy for the problems everyone sees. The CIO is also the first to recognize the existence of sinister political forces behind the misery of millions of white and Negro working men and women—again a contribution that no other agency has been able, or has seen fit, to make.

CIO's President John L. Lewis put a finger dramatically and effectively on this when he described Vice-President John Nance Garner to the people of America last spring as the source of Congressional reactionarjes' attacks on labor, as the "labor-baiting, poker-playing, whisky-drinking evil old man" whose knife was "searching for the quivering, pulsating heart of labor."

A BACKGROUND

Now there's a book about these political forces behind the misery of the South, "Dixie Demagogues," by two young CIO Newspaper Guildsmen, Alan Michie and Frank Rhylick, that fills in a background of political and social history on more than a score of Southern politicos like Garner and his pupils and teachers.

The South, the authors point out, has always been a stamping ground for unscrupulous demagogues, since Reconstruction and before. They live and thrive on the poverty and the consequent backwardness of those they permit to vote, turning their poverty and their backwardness to the interest of reaction. This of course is not unique to the South, nor traceable to any inherent stupidity in Southern citizens, any more than political corruption under Tammany was due to the ignorance of New Yorkers or the looting of Chicago under Big Bill Thompson due to a low mentality among Chicagoans.

It is due, they point out, to just the conditions the Southern demagogues know so well how to exploit—the poverty and misery of masses of industrial and agricultural workers.

"It is hard," they write in the opening chapter, "to see how the South's agrarian workers, driven so low that they are hardly fit for further exploitation, can peacefully endure more suffering. They need food . . . They need clothing . . . They need medical care . . .

"They need housing. Surveys show that four million Southern families, over half the families in the entire region, should be rehoused. They need sanitary facilities . . ."

WHAT THEY DON'T NEED

The things they don't need, the authors point out in detailing the character and exploits of demagogues and tories like Garner, Dies, Glass, "The Man" Bilbo, the late Kingfish, and a dozen others, are politicians, but the supply seems to be inexhaustible.

"A great majority of the black and white citizens of the South have been unable to raise their voices in effective protest against this dominance of outside corporations and a decadent plantation system since the close of the Reconstruction. They have been forced to submit abjectly to taxation which favors absentee landlords and collects on the average of 59 cents of every revenue dollar by a sales tax on consumers' goods. They have been compelled to accept as their 'elected representatives' political tools of the dominant hierachy. This complete negation of the most elemental and political rights is the bitter fruit of the South's 'Poll Tax Democracy'."

The poll tax, denounced by every progressive organization in the U. S., target of CIO convention resolutions, disfranchises an overwhelming majority not only of Negro voters but of white citizens as well. Poverty, malnutrition, disease, almost complete absence of even elementary education in many sections do the rest.

HOPE IN ORGANIZATION

But the picture of the South is far from hopeless. New forces are rising, the authors point out, that will sweep away the Garner boys and bring democracy and human decency to 36,000,000 Americans. Greatest of all hopes is organization—organization the CIO way. This is how they conclude:

"A militant trade union movement under the CIO is slowly but surely welding urban and rural workers of both races into a common front. This is the very essence of the struggle to bring democracy to the South . . .

"There is a will to freedom and a lust for a better life. The fulfillment or denial of these aspirations in the New South will play a vital role in America's climb to greater democracy or descent to fascism."

Fishermen's Convention December 4

Seattle, Wash., Nov. 25 — The annual convention of the International Fishermen's & Allied Workers of America will meet in Bellingham, Washington, December 4, President William Hecker announced here.

Main points to be taken up at the convention are conservation, legislation, economic conditions faced the affiliated locals, and plans for organizing the 100,000 workers in the fishing industry into one industrial union.

New York, Jersey Drives Planned

Empire State CIO Sets Goal

NEW YORK, Nov. 25. — Intensifying organization of the unorganized was the keynote of the second annual convention of the New York State Industrial Union Council of CIO affiliates held here last week.

The officers' report, submitted by retiring Pres. Allan S. Haywood and Secretary-Treasurer Gustave A. Strebel reported a gain of more than 100,000 new members for the CIO in the Empire state from September, 1938 to October, 1939.

"This is a good record, but not good enough," declared Haygood.

"If we are to realize the goal of ten million members by 1944 set by President Lewis in San Francisco, then New York State must double its membership to retain its place in the vanguard of the great CIO," Haywood said.

Virtually every national CIO union and organizing committee have large memberships in New York, with the CIO roster in and about Gotham town soaring up toward the million mark.

ELECT STREBEL

Gustave A. Strebel, general organizer for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, was unanimously elected president of the council to succeed Allan S. Haywood, newly-appointed national director of organization for the CIO.

Hugh Thompson, sub-regional director of Buffalo, was elected secretary-treasurer.

Haywood's remarks on organizing the unorganized were echoed and emphasized by every CIO officer who addressed the 800 delegates. National CIO Vice-President Sidney Hillman, Thomas Kennedy, John Brophy, Vice-President Sherman Dalrymple and Michael J. Quill, Transport Workers president, were among the boosters for greater organizing activities.

RESOLUTIONS

Condemnation of the Dies Committee, support of the National Maritime Union's fight against unemployment due to the European war; condemnation of the anti-labor policies of the Metropolitan Life Insurance and Consolidated Edison Companies; support of collective bargaining rights for transit workers on municipal transit lines; condemnation of discrimination against Negroes in employment and support of a third term for President Roosevelt were embodied in resolutions adopted by the convention.

The same neutrality resolution passed at the recent national CIO convention in San Francisco was unanimously reaffirmed and adopted by the New York State body.

LEWIS SENDS MESSAGE

The delegates were reminded of the CIO's position on the European war in a telegram of greeting from President John L. Lewis. The telegram read:

"Please convey my warmest greetings to the delegates to the New York State Industrial Union convention. The workers of the greatest industrial state in the Union look to the Council for progressive leadership.

"These days of alarms and war are ones which call for the wisest guidance on the part of the leadership of labor. There must be no compromise with the determination to stay out of war nor any slackening of the struggle to better the conditions of the working men and women within our own nation."

The convention greeted with enthusiasm a report by Mrs. Mary Santo that ladies auxiliaries are being established virtually by all CIO affiliates and that a Ladies Auxiliary Council has been established and is ready to coordinate all auxiliary work in New York State.

Speakers at the convention included United States Senators Robert F. Wagner and James M. Mead; Gov. Herbert H. Lehman and Lt.-Gov. Charles A. Poletti; Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia; Rev. John P. Boland, N. Y. State Labor Relations Board; Mrs. Frieda Miller, N. Y. State Industrial Commissioner; Archie Wright, president N. Y. State Dairy Farmers Union; Elmer Brown, president, N. Y. Typographical Union (AFL); Len De Caux, editor of The CIO NEWS and Ralph Hetzel, director of the CIO Unemployment Committee.

Oklahoma CIO Maps Campaign

Drumright, Okla., Nov. 25. —One hundred delegates at the annual convention of the Oklahoma Industrial Union Council flashed the "go" signal to plans for CIO organizing throughout this state.

Unanimous and harmonious, the convention voted full approval to the decisions of the CIO San Francisco meeting and voiced their 100 per cent backing to the goal of five million new members set by Pres. Lewis last month, according to Davis Fowler, CIO regional director.

The convention adjourned after electing the following officers: C. A. McPeak, Oil Workers, president; A. M. Duncan, Glass Workers, vice-president; Jim Johnson, United Mine Workers, secretary-treasurer.

Maryland Convention In Baltimore

Baltimore, Nov. 25—Delegates to the third annual convention of the Maryland-District of Columbia Industrial Union Council will hear Philip Murray, Chairman of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee and CIO Vice President, speak at a mass meeting here Monday night.

John T. Jones, President of the State CIO, will preside at the meeting, which will be held in convention headquarters, Moose Hall, 410 West Fayette Street.

Considerable interest in Murray's appearance has been expressed by workers at the Sparrows Point mill of Bethlehem Steel, just outside Baltimore. State CIO leaders expect many steel workers will turn out to hear Murray, especially in view of SWOC's demands for collective bargaining with the anti-union Bethlehem Steel Corp.

Delegates to the convention will be officially welcomed to the city by Mayor Jackson. Jack Edelman, attorney for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, who is also a member of the Baltimore City Council, is scheduled to address the three-day sessions, as is E. L. Oliver, Vice President of Labor's Non-Partisan League.

Joint Board Chairman Ulisse DeDominicis announced that the Amalgamated Clothing Workers will be hosts to the delegates at a party on Tuesday night.

Hague Stronghold Site of Meeting

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Nov. 25. — Representatives of over 200,000 New Jersey CIO workers, meeting in second annual convention here, made organization of the unorganized in basic industries—and particularly in the state's huge munitions plants —their goal for the next 12 months.

They met in a city where a year ago they had been banned, and thus carried out a pledge made at last year's convention of the Jersey Industrial Union Council.

The CIO's symbolic "conquest" of the Hague stronghold was matched by definite and concrete gains throughout the state, Pres. William Carney reported to the more than 300 delegates present at the sessions.

WILLIAM CARNEY, who was re-elected president of the New Jersey Industrial Union Council at its second annual convention in Jersey City last week.

CIO unions in New Jersey have registered a 30% membership gain during the past year, he and Sec. Leonard Goldsmith told the convention, and were responsible for an $11,000,000 raise in the wages.

LIST STEPS AHEAD

In speeches outlining the tasks ahead, Carney commented on the need for bringing the benefits of organization to the state's still-unorganized army of workers, while Goldsmith warned state unemployment compensation directors to change their anti-labor bias.

The convention was opened with an address of welcome to Hague-town by John Dempsey, head of the newly-created Hudson County Industrial Union Council. Others who appeared on the speakers' platform were CIO Vice-Presidents Dalrymple and Robinson, Sec. James Carey and John Brophy, director of local industrial unions.

Brophy urged the Jersey workers to continue their progress, and warned that unless the nation's economic problems are solved, democracy is endangered.

"The best way to preserve democracy is to organize," he added, "especially with the opportunity to do so that the improved job situation brings."

MANY RESOLUTIONS

Resolutions calling upon CIO locals to affiliate with state and city industrial union councils and to support Labor's Non-Partisan League brought strong approval from the delegates. Other expressions called for endorsing the drive of the CIO Musicians locals, intensified organizing campaigns by all locals, extension of the government's food stamp plan, a third-term for the President, extension of WPA and elimination of the 18-month period.

Carney was re-elected president of the council and Carl Holderman of the Textile Workers Union treasurer. Seven vice-presidents were also named.

New York Unionists Honor Haywood

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—Allan Haywood, the Scot, couldn't leave New York without one grand dinner—free.

About 500 active CIO unionists and officers (all paying guests) joined Haywood at the dinner, a testimonial, in the Cocoanut Grove room atop New York City's Park Central Hotel the night of Saturday, Nov. 18.

Haywood, who has just assumed his new post as national director for the CIO with headquarters in Washington, received a large bronze plaque—as a token of esteem from the New York State Industrial Union Council.

Michael Quill, New York's leading Kerryman, presented Haywood with a blackthorn stick (not a shillelah). He also received gifts from the Utility Workers, Photographic Employes and the CIO staff.

Among those who paid their respects to Haywood were National Vice-President Sidney Hillman, Sherman Dalrymple, Emil Rieve, Reid Robinson, Thomas E. Kennedy, the Rev. John P. Boland U. S. Senator James M. Mead, Walter Smethurst, Ralph Hetzel, Len De Caux, Adolph Germer, Gustave Strebel, Ben Gold, Samuel Wolchok, Abram Flaxer, Hugh Thompson, John Santo, Henry Wenning, Austin Hogan, Milton Kaufman Carl Randau, Morris Watson, Irving Potash, D. William Leider and Harry Sacher.

Alex Ravitch headed the arrangements committee.

READY TO PUSH ANOTHER BIG DRIVE, delegates to the second annual convention of the New York State Industrial Union Council met in Manhattan and discussed where to concentrate organizing efforts.

Your WPA Job:

Recognizing Needs of Youth

By RALPH HETZEL
CIO Unemployment Director

"Every young person who does not desire to continue in school after 16, and who cannot get a job in private enterprise, should be provided under public auspices with employment in some form of service."

This sentence is not from a resolution by the CIO. It comes from a report of the American Youth Commission whose acting chairman is Owen D. Young, former head of the General Electric Company. Other members of the Commission include Henry I. Harriman, former president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, Ralph Budd, president of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway and Robert E. Wood, chairman of the board of Sears, Roebuck & Co.

Unquestionably this conclusion upon the part of such a body as the American Youth Commission, heavily representing the viewpoint of large American industry, will do much to further the kind of a program that has been fought for by the CIO. It provides a substantial basis for cooperation in backing a program for young people that will move boldly to solve what is in a way the first problem of the nation.

RECOGNITION OF FACTS

The report is a recognition that the problem of young people is not one mainly of providing schools. It is mainly a problem of unemployment and the lack of economic opportunity. Such an attitude is a very refreshing note of realism. It bodes well for a renewed attack upon the problem of unemployed youth in the coming Congress.

Those in the Administration and in Congress who are now filling the newspapers with anonymous predictions that provision for the unemployed will be sharply reduced are clearly revealed by this report as attacking the national welfare. The CIO will fight vigorously, as was made clear at the San Francisco Convention, against the attempt to destroy adequate provisions for young people and the unemployed on the excuse that a lot of money will be spent for armaments.

The American Youth Commission sounds the same note: "There is grave danger in the widespread belief that a war boom will solve all our unemployment problems, including the special problems of unemployed youth."

The Commission goes on to say—and remember who is on it—that "it is frankly advocating a program which will add to the federal budget."

NO SUBSTITUTION!

The CIO believes that the American people will not stand for the substitution of an armament program for the New Deal. That is the solution of totalitarian states. The CIO has strongly expressed its conviction in President Lewis' Report that our first line of national defense must be the solution of our internal problems, especially that of unemployment.

And much in line with this position the report of the American Youth Commission goes on to point out: "Society in each generation has an obligation to provide for youth full opportunities for vocational exploration, training and public service."

The report states that "the rate of unemployment is higher among youth between 20 and 24 than in any older age group and highest of all for young people between 15 and 20 who are out of school and seeking work." It goes on to show that there are at present at least four million unemployed young people between the ages of 15 and 25 and that "as a result of population trends and the general changes in industrial conditions, aggravated by the long period of severe unemployment for workers of all ages, we now have a generation of youth containing an unusually high proportion without work experience or training."

PUBLIC WORKS PROGRAM

The report advocates a public works program "designed to provide constructive work experience in such a manner that the work done is a true service to the community . . . (and) should be planned with special regard to its education quality."

They emphasized the educational character of the program and state that: "It should provide an opportunity to try various kinds of work, so that the young person may find his own aptitudes and abilities and may be given some guidance in preparing for private employment in a field where he can be most useful and successful."

But they go much further than that and suggest that the young people be put to "producing the goods and services which are needed by the young people themselves and by others who are unemployed and in need. The Commission does not regard this as competition with private business, although it may be so considered by some persons.

"In any event, it is far preferable to unemployment or to the levels of taxation which would be necessary to support a decent level of subsistence for those in need if they are not to be allowed to do anything for themselves."

Standard of Panama!

OUT-DOING THE LEOPARD, who can never change his spots, Standard Oil switched nationalities on this oil tanker with all the nonchalance of a sleight-of-hand artist. The tanker took on the flag of Panama, and, while anchored in Boston, replaced American seamen with others imported from Nova Scotia.

New Homes for Old:

How About Housing?

By THOMAS HUMPHRIES

"Shall the low-rent housing program be strangled to death in its very infancy?"

This is a question that faces every American worker and his family.

Somewhere in the House of Representatives there is a dusty filing cabinet wherein lies a bill entitled "S-591." It's full of legal phrases and big-looking figures: $800,000,000 more in loans and $45,000,000 more in annual subsidies for the United States Housing Authority. Frankly, it makes dull reading!

But if you look behind the phrases and behind the figures, you'll find a story that will hit you like a pair of brass knuckles. NEW HOMES FOR 240,000 FAMILIES WHO ARE NOW LIVING IN BAD HOUSING! JOBS FOR THOUSANDS OF WORKERS IN THE CONSTRUCTION AND BUILDING MATERIALS INDUSTRIES!

22 VERSUS 240,000

But why is this bill gathering dust in a filing cabinet? Why has it not been written into the law of the land?

The answer is that although the Senate passed the bill 2 to 1 at the last session, the House dodged the issue. By a vote of 191 to 169, it voted against voting on the bill.

In other words, 22 Nays doomed 240,000 ill-housed families to wait still longer for the day when they will leave the slums. . . .

A NEW BATTLE CRY

In only a few weeks the House of Representatives will meet in regular session. S-591 will be on the order of business once again.

And once more the reactionaries will try to gang up on housing. Capitol Hill in Washington will crawl with lobbyists. Congressmen will be told once again that more low-rent public housing will ruin business, bankrupt the nations, lead us straight toward the per-r-r-ilous paths of socialism.

But this year a new war cry will be heard among the tents of the anti-housers. Last year they beat the drums for economy. This year they will beat the drums for higher and higher war appropriations—and with the din will try to drown out any voice that calls for improved working and living conditions.

A concerted attempt will be made to finance defense appropriations at the expense of low-rent housing and other vital government activities!

HOUSING MUST GO ON

If S-591 is defeated at the coming session, the flourishing low-rent housing movement will be halted in its tracks.

Scores of local housing authorities will have their applications for USHA loans rejected. Those that have already started projects will find that they can only do a fraction of the slum clearance needed in their localities. Local authorities that have not yet swung into action will remain penniless.

The USHA program will continue a little while on its own momentum—like an automobile after the gas has run out. One hundred and sixty thousand low-rent homes will get under construction—and nothing more: a pitifully small drop in an amazingly large bucket.

But labor can't afford to see this happen.

We need the jobs that the expanded program would create. And above all, we need better housing at rents we can afford to pay. We must tell our Representatives in Congress now—even before Congress opens in January—that "housing must go on!"

Labor And The Law:

Serrick Ruling Hits AFL Leaders

By LEE PRESSMAN
CIO General Counsel

The CIO has scored another substantial victory in Labor Board court cases. The Federal Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia turned down the appeal of the AFL from the Board order setting aside a collusive closed shop contract between the AFL Machinists Union and the Serrick Corporation. Just as the Republic Steel decision is an answer to the drive by the NAM and the Chamber of Commerce to amend the Wagner Act, so this decision is an answer to the wild charges made by the AFL officials.

GREEN OVER-RULED

In his testimony before the Senate Committee, William Green charged that the decision of the Labor Board in the Serrick Case was "arbitrary and without foundation in fact or reason."

Answering Green, the Federal Court said: "The evidence was clearly sufficient to sustain the Board's finding that the employer gave unlawful aid to the IAM and to show that its decision was not arbitrary."

The facts in the case are a typical example of collusive contracts. When the CIO Automobile Workers began an aggressive organizing campaign, the company first tried to stop the campaign with a Welfare Association, and then, with an out-and-out company union. After these two measures failed, it turned to open collusion with the AFL and signed a closed shop contract, notwithstanding the CIO majority.

CIO HAD MAJORITY

The first argument made by the AFL was that although the UAW undoubtedly had a majority at the time it requested the company to bargain with it, since the hearing, the majority of the employes had shifted to the AFL. The AFL therefore argued that the Board ought to call an immediate election instead of directing the Company to bargain with the CIO union. But the Court ruled that the Board might very well require a reasonable period to pass before it would have to order any election.

The second important point in the case is that the AFL tried to have the Court judge the negotiations between the AFL and the company entirely apart from the whole background of the company's open hostility to the CIO, and its attack against the CIO with the aid of the Welfare Association and with the company union. But the Court ruled that any reasonable person would have to take into consideration all the events leading up to the AFL collusive contract.

COMPANY STOOGES

The third important point related to the use of company "stooges" and supervisory employes to get members for the AFL.

What happened in this case was that the principal organizers for the AFL were straw bosses and old cronies of the general manager, the superintendent and the personnel director. One of them, suspiciously enough, was transferred to the plant at the time the CIO organizing campaign began and left it immediately after the AFL closed shop contract was signed. The court said that it was impossible for such men who had been active in the company union and in the Welfare Association to "regain independence overnight," in other words, to be whitewashed by the AFL.

The fourth important point is the fact that the court condemned secret back-door agreements between the AFL and employers. In this case, what happened was that the AFL entered into negotiations for a closed shop covering the tool room before it had a majority. When the contract was actually signed, it was dated back, in order to offset the CIO majority demand for collective bargaining made before the actual date of the fake contract. The Court threw this scheme out.

The last important point deals with the appropriate unit. In this case the AFL first got a closed shop agreement covering only the tool room employes, intending to use this contract to break down the CIO majority in the whole plant.

Because of this collusion, the Board refused to establish the tool room as a separate unit. The AFL has protested this decision, claiming that it was clear evidence of the bias on the part of the Labor Board in favor of the CIO and of its intent to destroy genuine AFL craft units. But the court upheld the Board order, saying that there was no question that the tool room was strategic in the organizing campaign and that the separate collusive contract for the tool room was only a scheme to help the company lick the CIO.

The decision in the Serrick case was handed down by a majority of New Deal judges.

Canadian Miners' Strike Gets Support

Fight 15c-Hour Wages

ESTEVAN, Sask., Nov. 25.—A wide boycott of Estevan coal has been started by western Canadian communities in protest against the refusal of Western Dominion Coal Mines to bargain with its striking employes, members of the United Mine Workers of America.

One of the first municipalities to head the boycott call of the Winnipeg and Regina trades and labor councils was the town council of Transcona which decided to stop purchases of Estevan coal until the mine operators bargain with the mine workers.

Organized farmers in Elfros, Saskatchewan, approved the boycott move and in addition demanded that the 150 members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, now stationed in the strike area, should be withdrawn immediately.

AFL GROUP HELPS

The Winnipeg Trades and Labor Council, composed of majority of AFL affiliates, is taking steps to have the Manitoba government refuse to accept tenders for coal supplies from Estevan. The Regina central labor body has approved similar measures.

The Saskatchewan government has been accused by Pat Conroy, vice-president of District 18 of the UMW as a "strike-breaker" for despatching the federal police to the strike area.

"The life of these miners and their wives and children is one of the most pathetic things in our dominion," Conroy declared. "Wages per hour are as low as 22½ cents. Many young men are even forced to work for less, and sometimes at 15 cents an hour.

"Miners are paid 15 cents a ton for digging coal which sells for $5.50 in Regina," the UMW leader charged.

OPERATORS STUBBORN

He told how the operators refused to recognize the findings of a conciliation board which recommended a minimum wage of 40 cents an hour and recognition of the United Mine Workers.

"The operators brought in the Canadian Federation of Labor," Conroy protested. "That this boss union is looked upon with contempt by the majority of the workers is proven by the vote taken by the representative of the federal government when 84.6 per cent of the men voted for the UMW and when 90 per cent desired the board of conciliation to intervene.

"Since when are 150 police, armed to the teeth, needed to maintain law and order over two or three hundred half-starved miners who have scrupulously adhered to orderly conduct?" he asked.

Conroy said that over 100 miners in the strike area joined the army yet at the same time "there's an attempt to do away with democracy and institute Hitlerite methods right here at home."

Maytag Parleys

Newton, Ia., Nov. 25—Negotiations with the Maytag Company, manufacturers of washing machines, will be resumed early in December, the local office of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers announced here.

The renewed talks on negotiations come as a result of the satisfactory working out of a rehire agreement, the UERMW local said, whereby unions members were guaranteed to return to work in proper proportion to a union, non-union percentage in each department.

Figures Refute Anti-Union Fables About San Francisco

FRISCO HARBOR PLENTY BUSY: This photo gives the lie to ghost town stories, San Francisco maritime leaders say. Note the number of ships lined up along the wharves.

By MIRIAM ALLEN deFORD
Federated Press

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 25.—Just as the Associated Farmers wreak their spite on strongly-unionized San Francisco by calling it a "ghost town," so have other anti-labor organizations and individuals publicized the irresponsible charge that because of the union shop established by the maritime unions in the successful strikes of 1934 and 1936, San Francisco harbor is now a "ghost port."

Official figures from the Chief of Engineers of the U. S. Army tell a different story. In every year from 1932 to 1937 (the last year for which figures are available) both the tonnage and the value of cargoes cleared through the port of San Francisco have increased.

INCREASING BUSINESS

This consistent increase has been made despite a 10-year depression. It is continuing despite the nationwide upset in shipping because of the European war.

In 1932 the port's commerce was 25,295,205 tons, valued at $969,241,474. In 1935, after the 1934 strike, it was 26,962,032 tons, valued at $1,122,566,999. The tonnage for 1937, after the 1936 strike, was 28,812,967, valued at $1,209,541,226.

Unofficial but reliable figures for 1938 show further increases in both tonnage and value. Maritime commerce in September 1939 was 13% above September 1938, and for the first nine months of 1938 was 8% higher than for the same period in 1937.

In the ranking of U. S. ports according to value of cargo, San Francisco is second, outranked only by New York. Los Angeles is fourth. Seattle and Portland are eleventh and twelfth respectively.

REPEAT THE FABLE

Yet many San Franciscans, ordinary citizens as well as employers who can presumably read the official figures, persist in saying that the waterfront has been turned into a graveyard by the unions. They can't explain why union members would wish to commit economic suicide, and they don't defend the notrious shape-up system and fink hiring halls that victimized longshoremen and seamen before unionism swept the waterfront.

"But look at the docks!" these people say. "There used to be ships at almost every pier. Longshoremen and truckers were busy. Now there's hardly any work. It's one strike after another."

What these critics don't look at is the official reports of maritime commerce. What they fail to understand is that although cargo is not moved when the unions are forced to strike, the temporary reduction is made up very quickly when the employers — who still hope to bust the unions and go back to the old system — decide that peace is better than strife.

RAISED BUYING POWER

And let it not be forgotten also that the strong organization of the maritime unions in San Francisco, their equalization of work through the hiring hall and stabilization of pay at a decent subsistence level, mean a perceptible increase in the buying power of thousands of waterfront and maritime workers and their families.

If San Francisco is a ghost port, it is the liveliest, healthiest, and most material ghost in the annals of phychic research.

Marine Union Payroll Holdup Suspect Caught

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—The round-up of shipowners' labor spies that tried to wreck the Natl. Maritime Union, CIO, is "practically complete," with the arrest of John Gallagher for complicity in a payroll holdup here, the NMU announced.

Gallagher was seized by New York police as one of a group that stole the NMP payroll from headquarters last March. His arrest brings to seven the number picked up in connection with the robbery.

Of the seven, the NMU pointed out, four were members of the executive committee of the "Mariners' Club," exposed by the union as a shipowners' organization whose function was to spread dissension and "to deliver the union into the hands of the shipowners."

The expose was made in a pamphlet called "Labor Spies in the NMU," which can be obtained from NMU headquarters at 126 — 11th Ave., New York.

Gold Miners Demand $1 Raise

Vancouver, B. C., Nov. 25 — Organized labor in British Columbia is rallying to the defense of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union strike in Pioneer Gold Mines whose employes are seeking a $1 a day pay boost.

At its last meeting, the Vancouver and New Westminster Trades and Labor Council, went on record to support the strike and also urged its affiliates to do the same.

Recently the court convicted four of the union's officers on charges of calling an "illegal" strike. As a result of the conviction organized labor is making preparations to seek amendments to the provinicial labor laws so that such affairs will not happen in the future.

Seamen Eat Union Turkey

New York, Nov. 25 — Close to 3,000 CIO seamen, thrown out of jobs by revision of the Neutrality Act, ate turkey with dressing, mince pie, pumpkin pie, cranberry sauce and all the fixings at a huge Thanksgiving dinner held in Natl. Maritime Union headquarters here.

The dinners were furnished by the NMU Women's Auxiliary, of which Miss Frances Bryant, stewardess' organizer, is chairman.

Youngstown Booms

Youngstown, Ohio, Nov. 25 — Things are looking up in Youngstown, in the heart of Ohio's steel belt, according to John L. Mayo, district director for the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

Election of Judge William Spagnola as mayor with the help of organized labor is expected to give labor its rightful place in this industrial city's political life. Formation of a Mahoning Valley Industrial Union Council is also helping to coordinate CIO activities.

Three new SWOC lodges have been chartered within recent months, and several more are expected soon, Mayor said.

Seek Peace In Wire Walkout

Washington, Nov. 25 — Moves to settle the 10 week old Western Union strike in San Francisco brought Mervyn Rathborne, CIO American Communications Assn. president, to confer with U. S. Labor Secretary Frances Perkins here.

Miss Perkins heard Rathborne describe the origins of the strike, which was provoked by refusal of Western Union officials to bargain collectively with the union. She asked for additional information, which Rathborne said would be delivered later in the week.

Rathborne was accompanied by Joseph Selley, ACA vice-president, and Daniel Driesen, legislative representative.

The Natl. Labor Relations Board recently ordered Western Union to abandon its company union, described as one of the oldest in the world, and to refund company union dues checked off from workers' pay.

Union Puts Waterman on Unfair List

Jersey City, N. J., Nov. 25. — Members of the United Rubber Workers today placed Waterman fountain pens and Waterman's ink on their unfair list as they continued to fight the company's bitter anti-union attitude.

Though calling off a strike which has been in effect at the plant here for some time, the union announced that it will continue to push its Labor Board discrimination cases against the firm, as well as intensifying the consumer campaign.

John Baldante, international representative for the United Rubber Workers supported the local in its move, calling attention to the firing of union leaders and refusal to bargain which has marked the company's labor relations policy.

Push Steel Campaign

Indiana Harbor, Ind., Nov. 25 — Progress of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in the Chicago-Gary district was spotlighted at a recent convention attended by delegates from all lodges in the area.

District Director Nicholas Fontecchio revealed that six new lodges have been formed in recent months, and that union shop, check-off agreements have been signed with a number of companies.

Seniority systems instituted by the SWOC have been followed very closely in the rehiring of men for Chicago's humming steel industry, Fonteccio said, and as the men come back to the job they are becoming active members in good standing with the union.

Resolutions passed by the delegates pledged support to decisions of the CIO at its second convention, called for organization of all unorganized workers in steel and criticized the National Labor Relations Board for decisions appeasing AFL and industrial critics of the Wagner Act.

CHRYSLER PACT BIG CIO VICTORY

Their Ranks Held Firm

PICKETS — AND LOTS OF THEM — defeated Chrysler Corp.'s union-busting back-to-work efforts and helped win another big victory for the United Automobile Workers, CIO. Company attempts at provocation, used as a last resort, failed to split the solid union ranks.

Best Among Major Firms, Union Says

(See Story Page Three)

DETROIT, Dec. 2. — Fifty thousand Chrysler Corp. employes were back at work today after a smashing union victory had brought them a $6,000,000 yearly pay increase and one of the best contracts in the automobile industry.

The eight-week lockout and strike ended happily for the Chrysler employes, who had been suffering under a vicious speed-up system. In a joint statement, CIO Vice-Pres. Philip Murray and Pres. R. J. Thomas of the United Automobile Workers, declared:

"It represents a major accomplishment for the CIO . . . the greatest gains made for the Chrysler workers since the inception of unionism in the plants of the corporations."

Murray had assisted the UAW-CIO representatives in the final days of the negotiations with the company.

With the troublesome Chrysler dispute ended, UAW-CIO leaders plan to institute a new campaign to organize the nation's booming low-wage aircraft industry. Allan S. Haywood, national CIO director, said an organizing committee representing the union and the CIO, may soon be formed.

Propose Settling Wire Strike

Washington, Dec. 1.—Proposals of Frances Perkins, U. S. Secretary of Labor, for settlement of the prolonged Western Union strike in San Francisco will be presented to the local of CIO American Communications Association involved. Mervyn Rathborne, ACA President, said here on receiving the Secretary's proposed settlement.

The Secretary's plan called for three things: return to work without discrimination against any striker on any grounds, revival of grievance machinery in use before strike began, and immediate calling off of the strike.

Anniversary Reward

Chicago, Dec. 2 — As part of the first anniversary celebration of their strike here, CIO Guildsmen posted rewards of $1,000 for the arrest of Hearst thugs who tried to kill two pickets recently, latest development in a 12-month campaign of Hearst violence and intimidation.

Sign Construction Contract

SIGNING ON THE DOTTED LINE are leaders of the CIO's United Construction Workers Organizing Committee and Washington, D. C., building contractors. The contract is the first industrial union pact in the capital's history. Shown signing are: Chairman Thomas P. McTigue of the D. C. UCWOC committee; Richard W. Frey, chairman of the Construction Industry Employers, Inc., negotiating committee; Edmund J. Grady, CIE organizer; and A. D. Lewis, UCWOC chairman.

CIO Chemical Workers Fight Starvation Pay

EAST CHICAGO, Ind., Dec. 1.—In protest against refusal of the management of the Harbison-Walker refractories plant here to bargain with Local 12120, United Mine Workers, 250 workers walked out on strike, charging the company with paying starvation wages. The men cleared the plant in five minutes, taking the bosses out with them.

The union demands are for a five cent hourly wage increase to bring pay up to the level prevailing in the Calumet district; vacations with pay and installation of adequate machinery to control the silica dust which is said to have caused some 80 deaths in the past 15 years.

Denying the company's claim that the dust control system is the "most modern and efficient known to science," the union pointed out that one of the workers, Emmet Jones, died of silicosis before the strike was a week old.

"The industrial murder of Emmet Jones galvanized the attention of the city to the working condition at the Harbison Walker plant," a statement issued by a union official declared.

"An investigation was promptly launched and startling facts were soon uncovered.

"A search of the files of the East Chicago Public Health Office testified that the men of the Harbison Walker plant were working in a 'death mill.' These records revealed that in the last 11 years, 28 men had died from silicosis and coincident diseases of the chest and lungs induced by silicosis."

The union also declared that four other workers died from silicosis during the last year.

Irving Meyers, young labor lawyer who is handling the legal claims of the workers for compensation, called the plant a "death mill."

"The men go there to work," he said, "but they leave there to die."

Oil Union Rings Up Two Wins

Washington, Dec., 2—Two recent successes of the Oil Workers International Union were reported here by President John L. Coulter of the Oil Workers International Union.

At the Louisville (Ky.) Refining Company, where a Labor Board case has been in the courts for some time, the company has reinstated with back pay the union members involved and has now signed an agreement with the Oil Workers International Union.

At Port Neches, Tex., the Oil Workers Union recently won a Labor Board election at the Pure Oil Company by an overwhelming majority.

TOO HOT TO BURN

St. Louis, Mo.—The local Library Board has decided that John Steinbeck's novel of migratory workers, "Grapes of Wrath," is too hot to burn, reversing the previous five to zero vote for public cremation a la Nazi book-burnings.

Win 2nd War Bonus At RCA

New York, Dec. 2—For the second time within two months, RCA Communications Company, Inc., has agreed in negotiations with the American Communications Association, CIO, to pay a "war bonus" to 1,700 of its employes, in the form of 5 per cent of the total October earnings of eligible employes.

The latest war bonus which will total about $12.000, the union estimated, will go to all company employes in the United States, Philippine Islands, Hawaii, the Dominican Republic and Puerto Rico who earn less than $5,000 a year.

Last month the ACA negotiated a war bonus which totalled about $25,000 in payments ranging as high as $50.

None of the employes who will receive the special bonus are engaged in hazardous work. The demand for the bonus payments was made because of the additional burden placed upon employes as the result of increased war business and the rising cost of living.

Order Big Poll At Shoe Plants

Washington, Dec. 2 — Another mammoth election has been placed on the schedule books of the National Labor Relations Board.

Within the next 60 days, some 18,000 employes of Endicott-Johnson, big shoe manufacturer, will determine if they wish to be represented by the CIO United Shoe Workers or by the Boot & Shoe Workers, AFL. It was the AFL affiliate which petitioned for the poll, and the date was set over the objections of the CIO union.

Representatives of the USWA claimed that further time should be granted for the effects of the corporation's anti-union practices to be dissipated.

In setting the election date, the Board ordered the voting unit to be industrial — thereby including all plants of the company in Binghamton, Endicott, Johnson and Owego, N. Y.

BACK ON AIR

Akron, Ohio—The CIO radio program, "The Voice of Labor," banned by a local Akron station under the National Association of Broadcasters' code, was back on the air this week with a broadcast over WADC of the Columbia network. The Akron Industrial Union Council, which sponsors the program, has signed a year's contract with the station.

Suffering Acute As Relief Trickles Out In Cleveland

COLUMBUS, O., Dec. 2.—Demanding action to forestall outright starvation for thousands, a delegation of CIO leaders from all parts of Ohio today conferred with Gov. Bricker in an effort to solve the relief crisis in Cleveland, Toledo and other industrial centers.

In Cleveland, Mayor Burton stopped all relief for 16,000 adults in order that children of the unemployed might eat.

A Cleveland nutrition expert said she knew of a family of five, including a new-born baby and its nursing mother, which had had no food in six days except cornmeal and coffee.

Two threatened suicides have been attributed to the relief situation. A woman was found walking near the lake front. "I'll kill myself if you don't get food for my children," she said.

CIO COUNCIL TAKES ACTION

With the situation becoming increasingly critical, the Cleveland Industrial Union Council called upon the Ohio CIO body to order a special meeting of its executive board for state-wide action to meet the crisis.

Present relief funds in Cleveland were made available by the state, after the city's appropriation was exhausted.

However, Sidney Rowlery, assistant relief commissioner in Cleveland, said it is an "almost impossible task" to make the present funds last for "the most needy and most helpless" until the end of the present year.

Discuss Pan-American Problems

LEADERS OF LABOR from all the American nations gathered in Havana for the ILO's regional conference. Shown on the platform are Sec. James B. Carey, first CIO official appointed as delegate to an ILO meeting; Miss Kathryn Lewis, a labor advisor on the American delegation; and Vicente Lombardo Toledano, head of Mexican labor's powerful CTM.

Locked Out Fishermen Form Co-op

Halifax, N. S., Dec. 2—Locked out by two cold storage companies after they sought union recognition, 647 CIO fishermen and fish handlers here have set up their own business, catching, processing and marketing fish on a cooperative basis.

They are being backed by some 15,000 CIO steel and mine workers in the vicinity who have pledged as far as possible to buy fish from the new cooperative.

Securing an option on a disused plant, the union fishermen and handlers announced that they would stay in business until their demands were met, and perhaps longer.

They are asking union contracts with the two companies, covering wages and working conditions and providing for the reinstatement of all the locked out workers.

7½% INCREASE

NEW YORK—The Imperial Rayon Co. of Gloucester, N. J. has granted a 7½% wage increase in a new contract with the Textile Workers Union.

Marshall Field Mills Sign With Union

DRAPER, N. C., Dec. 2.—Dixie workers chalked up another CIO victory today as 3,000 textile workers in three North Carolina towns ratified the Textile Workers Union newly-signed contract with the Marshall Field & Co., owner of five mills.

The agreement, announced by TWU Pres. Emil Rieve in New York, was given the workers' stamp of approval at overflow meetings. George Baldanzi, TWU executive vice-president, presented the contract to the union locals.

A week's paid vacation, the 40-hour week, seniority and grievance machinery were included in the contract, which is hailed as a major step in the CIO campaign to free southern workers from industrial feudalism.

The contract is the first in the 85-year history of the Marshall Field mills. It followed a union victory in a Natl. Labor Relations Board election earlier this year.

The mills manufacture bedspreads, blankets, rugs, woolens and sheeting.

PUSH FOOD PLAN

Washington, Dec. 2—The Food Order Stamp plan for distributing agricultural surpluses will be extended to include Sioux City, Ia., Pulaski County, Ark., Minnehaha County, S. D., Bismarck and Mandan, N. D., Denver, Colo., and Wichita County, Tex., Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace announced recently.

41 W. Va. Mine Deaths In Month

MORGANTOWN, W. Va. — "Too much carelessness on the part of supervisory employes" resulted in West Virginia coal mine accidents during the month of October which took the lives of 41 men, the West Virginia Department of Mines announced.

The shocking increase in fatal accidents has caused the Department to inaugurate a campaign to enforce the observance of safety laws.

New Pact Benefits Gotham Shoe Workers

NEW YORK, Dec. 2. — An agreement covering about 3,000 workers in 13 New York shoe plants was signed this week between Joint Council 13, United Shoe Workers of America, CIO, and the Shoe Manufacturers Board of Trade. It provides for pay increases ranging from two to eight per cent.

The contract which will run for two years, was ratified at a membership meeting attended by some 1,500 shoe workers. According to Isidore Rosenberg, manager of the Joint Council, the contract will be used to cover an additional 3,000 workers in independent shops.

Chrysler Pact Brings Big Gains

Heed Voice Of Labor -- Carey

Havana, Cuba, Dec. 2 — The voice of labor must be heard in all government agencies throughout the world.

Calling for labor participation both in the peace settlement which follows the present European war and in those government agencies which enforce international agreements on labor questions, CIO Sec. James B. Carey brought this message to representatives of Latin American workers attending the Inter-American Labor Conference here.

The conference is sponsored by the Intl. Labor Office, which has headquarters in Geneva. Nineteen of the western hemisphere's 22 nations are represented at the sessions here.

Appointment of Carey by Pres. Roosevelt marked the first time that the CIO had been given representation on an ILO delegation. Here for the conference by Presidential appointment are Miss Kathryn Lewis, executive secretary to her father, the head of the United Mine Workers; and Miss Dorothy Bellanca, a vice-president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. Both are worker advisors to the American delegation.

LABOR AND PEACE

A peace agreement no better than the Treaty of Versailles will result unless labor gets full recognition at the next peace conference, Carey predicted. Only by giving labor participation, he went on, "can we insure a peace settlement unlike that of 1919, that is based upon justice for all peoples of all nations."

Both Carey and Miss Lewis spoke at a huge mass meeting last Sunday under the auspices of the Cuban Labor Federation. Some 4,000 people who crowded into the National Theater heard Miss Lewis speak in Spanish.

"Labor in the United States cannot solve its problems unless Latin America solves its political and economic problems," Carey said in a plea for close cooperation among the various labor groups.

Convention Proceedings Available

Washington, Dec. 2—Complete proceedings of the second CIO constitutional convention, held at San Francisco, are available at National CIO Headquarters this week. The proceedings are bound in one volume, and include all material in the daily proceedings issued at the time of the meeting.

In addition, a series of pamphlets on main convention subjects such as CIO organizing drives, labor and the war, and several of Pres. Lewis' speeches are in preparation.

Copies of the CIO constitution as amended at the second convention are also obtainable, priced at five cents per single copy, $4.00 per 100.

Proceedings and pamphlets as well as the revised constitution can be obtained from CIO National Office, 1106 Connecticut Ave., NW, Washington, D. C.

Circuit Court Kills Apex Anti-CIO Case

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 2.—Efforts of the Apex Hosiery to use the Sherman Anti-Trust law against the American Federation of Hosiery Workers ran up against a stone wall in federal circuit court of appeals here.

Reversing the federal district court, the three judges set aside the $711,000 judgment previously awarded the Philadelphia company against the CIO hosiery workers union.

The Apex company has not yet announced whether it will take the case to the U. S. Supreme Court.

'VINDICATES CIO'

In Washington, Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, said the decision "is a further vindication of the CIO stand that anti-trust laws to not apply to labor unions engaged in the struggle to establish collective bargaining.

"The decision clearly disposes of the claims in the widely-publicized suit by Tom Girdler's Republic Steel Corp. against the Steel Workers Organizing Committee and the CIO for $7,500,000 damages."

If Apex wants to sue for any alleged damages sustained during the 1937 seven-week sitdown strike for union recognition, the court decision held, the proper procedure is to sue for damages in the state court. But, the judges said, the anti-trust law cannot be applied to unions seeking to organize a plant and to win collective bargaining.

CIO 'NOT GUILTY'

"The effect upon interstate commerce was merely indirect, incidental and remote," the judges declared. "The appellants therefore were not guilty of engaging in a combination of conspiracy to restrain commerce."

$6,000,000 Raise Won By Union

By FRANK WINN

DETROIT, Dec. 2.—Chrysler workers won a $6,000,000 a year pay increase, one of the best union contracts in the industry, and a smashing victory for the CIO this week when they ratified an agreement settling the eight-week old dispute between the United Automobile Workers CIO, and the corporation.

In a joint statement, Vice-Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO and Pres. R. J. Thomas of the UAW - CIO characterized the agreement as representing the "greatest gains made for the Chrysler workers since the inception of unionism in the plants of the corporation. It represents a major accomplishment of the CIO."

"The Chrysler workers may be proud of the fact that their contract ranks highest in the automobile industry," the CIO leaders said.

"For this great victory, credit is due to the magnificent, disciplined solidarity of the thousands of Chrysler workers, and to the able negotiating committee headed by Richard T. Frankensteen, Morris Field and the spokesmen of the respective Chrysler locals."

The negotiators reached an agreement last Tuesday night, two days after Murray had come to Detroit to participate in the conferences.

Members ratified the settlement in local meetings Wednesday, which were climaxed by a gigantic meeting Wednesday evening of some 20,000 Dodge workers at the State Fair Coliseum. By Thursday the first groups of the 57,000 Chrysler workers had already started back to work and production was expected to be in full swing by next week.

The union victory thwarted a back-to-work movement in which the corporation was aided by Homer Martin, Father Charles Coughlin and Gerald L. K. Smith. President Thomas had charged Chrysler with attempting to incite race hatreds when the Dodge plant opened its gates this week to a few hundred Negro workers who had been duped by unscrupulous leadership.

Just before the settlement, the corporation announced that Chrysler workers had lost $15,000,000 in wages in strikes and stoppages since 1937. The union promptly countered by pointing out that the employes had gained over $67,000,000 in wage increases, due exclusively to the union, since 1936. It was also pointed out that auto workers seldom suffer permanent loss of wages due to strikes, since the season is extended to make up the lost time.

BLANKET RAISE

Thomas and Murray estimated that increases won in the present contract amount to between $5,600,000 and $6,000,000 a year. They are embodied in several different provisions. One calls for a blanket pay raise of 3c an hour for all employes, the first general increase granted by any corporation since 1937.

In addition to the blanket raise, differentials between Detroit plants and plants outside Detroit were narrowed by 1c, second and third shift workers get a 5c an hour bonus, thousands of workers received additional increases in the adjustments of wages in various classifications, tool and die, maintenance and engineering workers were raised to the top rates paid similar workers by General Motors. The total increases established the highest wages in the industry at Chrysler.

The wage issue may be reopen-

Discuss Aircraft Campaign

Detroit, Dec. 2—A big campaign to organize the nation's high-profit, low-wage aircraft industry will soon get under way.

In the motor industry capital to confer with leaders of the United Automobile Workers, Allan S. Haywood, CIO national director of organization, announced:

"The CIO and the UAW have made tentative plans for an aircraft drive headed by a director and four representatives from the CIO and four from the UAW on the committee. We hope to have Philip Murray and Sidney Hillman (CIO vice-presidents) on the committee.

"We shall co-operate with the government and protect the workers from unfair labor practices and low wages on the part of the companies. The plan for the campaign is subject to ratification by the executive board of the UAW, which is to meet next Monday in Chicago."

A Major Accomplishment

The new contract agreed upon by the Chrysler Corporation and the CIO United Automobile Workers of America puts tens of thousands of workers back on the job with increased wages, improved working conditions and greater security than has ever been their lot before.

"The Chrysler workers may be proud of the fact that their contract ranks highest in the automobile industry," CIO Vice-President Philip Murray and President R. J. Thomas of the UAW point out in a joint statement.

Besides bringing wage increases of close to six million dollars to 57,000 employes, the new contract represents an advance for the workers on each of the subjects covered by their original demands.

The agreement as a whole "represents the greatest gains made for the Chrysler workers since the inception of unionism in the plants of the corporation," the statement declares. "It represents a major accomplishment of the CIO."

As originally demanded by the union, there is now a single agreement covering the 11 major Chrysler plants. The UAW-CIO is granted exclusive bargaining rights for all employes, and the corporation is pledged not to encourage or deal with any other organization.

There are many other features of the agreement that represent substantial gains for the workers.

The whole represents a great union victory for which the major credit is due, as the CIO leaders point out, to "the magnificent, disciplined solidarity of the thousands of Chrysler workers", who held their ranks solid for so long to make it possible.

The Chrysler victory will lend encouragement to every CIO union. The auto workers have demonstrated once more their loyalty to the CIO, the strength of their great industrial union and its ability to advance to new gains.

Their advance is part of the general advance of the whole CIO at the present time in every industry, as shown by many striking election victories and new contracts won, bringing better wages and conditions to countless American workers.

Part of CIO's Contribution

Within the past three months, the CIO Textile Workers Union has succeeded in raising the annual wages of 75,000 workers in more than 100 plants by $5,000,000, reports Pres. Emil Rieve.

This, he says, represents but the beginning of "a whole new series of increases which will be announced as soon as negotiations are concluded."

Add this to the millions of dollars in increased wages won by the CIO auto workers in the recent Chrysler agreement. Add to it the millions more won in scores of new agreements in nearly every industry where the CIO is operating.

All of these additions to the pay envelopes of American workers in the recent past are good news not only for the workers directly concerned but for the whole country.

More money in the workers' pay envelopes means a little better life for them and their families. It means more money paid to storekeepers for goods, which in turn means more demand for the production of new goods. This again means better business and more employment in other industries.

Altogether the wage increases recently won by the Textile Workers, the Auto Workers and dozens of other CIO unions represent a most substantial and constructive contribution by the CIO to the welfare of all sections of the American population.

Unemployment—Still America's No. 1 Problem

Looking Ahead

Good News For Labor

EVERY union man and woman in the United States can breathe a bit easier as a result of a court decision recently handed down in Philadelphia.

When the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals there reversed the verdict in the Apex Hosiery Co. case, it was helping to remove a threat to the wages, working conditions and general welfare of Millions of American workers.

You don't have to be a lawyer to know that there's dirty work somewhere at the crossroads, when a court socks a fine of more than $700,000 on a local union for conducting a strike.

So the whole labor movement became aroused when a verdict of this character was rendered against the Hosiery Workers union in Philadelphia, on account of its 1937 strike against the Apex Hosiery Co.

If this verdict were allowed to stand, every unionist knew, no labor organization would be safe from similar court action designed to bankrupt it and put it out of business.

Anti-union employers were also quick to realize the meaning of the Apex verdict. They immediately began filing a whole series of suits against other labor unions, on similar grounds to those advanced in the Apex case. Among these was the demand of the Republic Steel Corporation for $7,500,000 damages from the Steel Workers Organizing Committee and the CIO, on account of the 1937 steel strike.

A Great Victory

The reversal of the Apex verdict knocks the bottom out of all these anti-union suits.

The Apex company claimed that it was entitled to triple damages from the union under the Sherman anti-trust act, on the grounds that the strike was a conspiracy to interfere with interstate commerce.

The union and the CIO, in appealing the verdict, pointed out that the anti-trust laws were passed to protect consumers and little businessmen from trusts and monopolies, and were never intended to apply to labor unions engaged in the struggle to establish collective bargaining.

The action of the Circuit Court of Appeals in setting aside the Apex case is justly hailed as a great victory for labor.

It represents a definite check to the whole campaign of anti-union employers to use the courts to smash labor organizations which they have not been able to destroy in any other way.

New Day in Building

The industrial union contract recently signed by the CIO United Construction Workers with an association of some 40 Washington contractors, is yet another piece of good news of far-reaching significance.

The idea that the building industry is a well-organized, high-wage industry is a fallacy.

The English curate who was polite enough to describe the over-ripe egg he tried to eat as "good in spots," might be equally charitable about the American building industry.

But the facts are that there are some two million unorganized construction workers in the United States; non-union wages are deplorably low; and even where the craft unions hold sway, there is so much rottenness and racketeering, and so many abuses and jurisdictional disputes, that the good effects as often as not are negated by the bad.

The CIO has only recently entered the construction industry, but already it has close to 70 locals chartered, and the Washington agreement is a forerunner of many similar contracts.

Besides substantially increasing the wages of previously unorganized workers, this contract will show what clean industrial unionism can do both for the workers and the industry, by ending jurisdictional disputes, establishing better conditions and spreading collective bargaining through the industry.

Haywood Tells Plans For Big CIO Drive

Widman Has Long Career In Unions

Washington, Dec. 2 — Michael F. Widman, assistant national organization director of the CIO, was a miner at 18, going to work in the Vermillion Co., Illinois mines as the first world war was drawing to a close. Like Director Haywood, Widman was a union man from the first day on the job.

He was an active union man, right from the beginning. In 1921 he was trustee of his local, in 1924 financial secretary. For four years he acted as President of Sub-District 3, going in 1933 to the Dist 12 Ill. legislative work in the state capitol, while at the same time carrying on general field organizing work in the great early New Deal organizing drives.

EARLY IN CIO

Widman was early active in the CIO, being assigned as international representative to District 50 of the United Mine Workers, where he helped set up industrial unionism in the gas, coke and chemical industries. He served with District 50 until 1937, when he was sent to direct CIO activity in New England.

Here Widman's work covered six states, and a variety of industries, ranging from steel, textiles, rubber, oil, leather, electrical, shoes, to paper, drugs, manufacturing and service trades and professions. During his term as New England CIO Regional Director, he aided negotiations for contracts covering more than 220,000 workers, took an indirect part in the great shoe strikes in Maine, when CIO organizers were arrested and jailed for crossing streets.

BIG JOB AHEAD

Widman agrees with Director Haywood that the CIO has an even greater future before it than it had in the beginning.

MICHAEL WIDMAN, JR.
Assistant CIO Director of Organizations

"Our job is to organize," he said. "That's all we have to worry about. There are millions of American working men and women waiting for the CIO. First, last and always our job is to bring them the CIO message.

"The rest — in better living and working conditions, more industrial democracy — will follow from that."

Sees Chance To Serve U.S. Workers

Washington, Dec. 2—More than 30 years ago a Yorkshire boy of 12 quit school, packed a lunchbox, and went to work in the mines. Two days before his mother had died, but the family needed the two shillings a day a 12-year-old miner could earn as a lamp carrier for the older men.

The first day on the job, the boy joined the British Miners Union, as his father and his grandfather had done when they went to work. He knew about labor's struggle for collective bargaining, having gone, with his family and thousands of other British miner families, through the historic three months' strike of 1893.

The boy was Allan S. Haywood, today national organization director of the CIO. A union man at 12, he has been continuously a member and an active worker in organized labor since that time. At 17 he came to the United States with his transfer card to the United Mine Workers of America in his pocket.

LEADER IN ILLINOIS

Haywood went from Yorkshire to the coal fields of Illinois. In a short time he was president of his local of the UMWA; following that sub-district vice-president, president, and district Executive Board member.

When the CIO began its work of organizing the unorganized, Haywood was soon entrusted with important work in tackling the first of the big mass production industries to come under the CIO drive. In 1936, he was sent to the rubber plants of Ohio to help the workers there win collective bargaining rights from reluctant employers. He went through the great strikes forced on the workers by the employers, helped on the picket lines, and helped negotiate the contract with Firestone, first big agreement in the industry.

After rubber, Haywood went to automobiles, where thousands of workers were making the first effort to unionize an industry that had been open shop from its earliest history. He was in the great General Motors strike, advising and aiding the newly organized auto workers. Here again he helped negotiate basic contracts, in GM, in Reo at Lansing, Mich., in Midland, at Cleveland Autolite.

From the industtrial midwest, Haywood was appointed to the post of CIO regional director in New York, where for two and a half years he worked in the building of powerful CIO unions that today represent hundreds of thousands of industrial, white-collar and professional men and women workers.

In New York, in addition to all his other duties, he functioned as active chairman of the Utility Workers Organizing Committee, set up to organize in an industtry dominated by the most powerful Wall Street lobby in the nation.

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD
CIO National Director of Organizations

Today, Director Haywood sees opportunities opening before the CIO as great as any it ever had, with this added advantage—the CIO today has a firm base in mass production throughout the national economy.

Organizing drives are scheduled, Director Haywood indicated, in all industrial areas where large groups of unorganized workers still exist. The need for organization is there, he says, and "the CIO will organize wherever the workers of America need collective bargaining to protect and improve their living standards.

"We have a great opportunity to serve the American worker and the nation," Haywood told THE CIO NEWS. "I know that the CIO will seize this opportunity, as it has done in its brief three-year history. I know, too, that we can count on the support of the American people. They need the CIO, and they seem to prefer our methods. You have only to look at the Labor Board election returns to know that."

Worcester CIO Council Acts Fast

Worcester, Mass., Dec. 2 — The CIO Council here is quick to take advantage of last week's U. S. Supreme Court decision upholding the right to distribute leaflets on city streets.

Within two days of the decision they had a leaflet out explaining the situation, calling on city authorities to uphold it by rescinding their own ban on free speech, and urging Worcester workers to join the CIO.

Chrysler Workers Win Gains

ed by the union at any time.

OTHER GAINS

Other important gains are:

An equal voice by the workers in the final adjustment of grievances. Unsettled grievances are to be submitted to an Appeal Board of four—two from the corporation and two from the union. The board must render a decision in thirty days. Arbitration may be used by the board if it finds it necessary.

Exclusive bargaining rights in the eleven major Chrysler plants. The corporation pledges not to encourage or deal with any other organization.

A former iron-clad "no-strike" clause is eliminated. The union may now strike after grievance procedure is exhausted.

Reinstatement of 128 Dodge workers discharged for not keeping pace with, or protesting against the speed of the line.

Union committeemen must be notified immediately of any future discharges.

OVERTIME PAY RATES

Overtime pay provisions written into the contract for the first time.

A vastly improved bargaining procedure which allows for the shop steward system and a more rapid settlement of grievances.

Substantial gains in seniority.

"The great improvements in wage standards and working conditions won by the Chrysler workers will benefit the entire city of Detroit," Murray and Thomas said.

"It is unfortunate that the corporation's concessions were not forthcoming two months ago. The lockout and the strike might thus have been averted. However, we have no desire further to prolong the dispute.

Textile Union Proud Of Record

New York, Dec. 2 — Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union "pointed with pride" today to the union's three-month record of achievement.

During the quarter-year, he noted, the TWU has negotiated wage raises totaling $5,000,000 annually for 75,000 workers in 100 textile mills.

The wage increases, Rieve said, "herald a whole series of additional raises now being negotiated."

TWU's campaign for higher pay was launched at the end of September by the executive council with a call on leading textile manufacturers for wage conferences. The union pointed out that wages should go up in line with "rising business, swelling profits and the spurting cost of living."

WIN RAISE

New York City — An increase of 7½ per cent was obtained in negotiations between the Imperial Rayon Co. of Gloucester, New Jersey and the Textile Workers Union of America, Emil Rieve, TWUA General President announced.

Bare Tri-State Silicosis Plague

Disease Rate Soars Among Miners

NEW YORK, Dec. 2 — Out in the Tri-state where a high percentage of the world's zinc and lead comes from, the chat dust from the mine waste blows into the houses, into the food, into the beds, into the lungs of the men and women and children who live and work there.

The streets are made of chat, the school playgrounds are chat, and the kids kick it up in the clouds when they run.

Chat dust is almost pure silica. Silica, breathed into the lungs year after year, does what ground glass taken into the stomach would do—it destroys them, slowly at first, painfully, with devastating weakness for the patient and ultimate collapse and death.

THE WARNINGS

First the miner notices that he is getting shortwinded. Scar tissue forming on the lungs breaks down the breathing surface. Then follows weakness, with resistance lowered to vanishing point. T. B. and every other respiratory disease finds the silicosis victim the perfect host. Death is slow, with possibly years of suffering before it comes.

The miners get it the worst, since they work in unprotected mines where little is done to keep the dust down. The T. B. and other respiratory diseases they pass on to their wives and their children—because the housing is so bad, because there is no sanitation, because the wives and the kids are worn down from overwork and undernourishment.

THE PROFITS

The Tri-State area, a corner of Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma, is enormously profitable. Since the 1880's, when large scale mining got under way, close to a billion dollars has come out of it—for the companies. The miner's average wage is currently around $12 a week. It has been lower.

NO RELIEF

And now a study, put out by the Tri-State Survey Committee of New York, shows what this means to the thousands of Tri-State workers and their families—in terms of starvation wages, sub-human housing, under-nourishment, silicosis and death. The condition is not new. A survey in 1914—25 years ago—found that 433 workers of 720 examined had silicosis, blamed it on the same conditions of housing, wages and neglect.

The condition is just as bad today. Little is done by the companies, by the local health authorities, by the relief agencies. A silicotic miner starves today as he starved 25 years ago. His family starves with him, and his kids get tuberculosis to help death along. This is what one of them told the Survey Committee:

"The little kids seem alright," he said, "except that they're kinda thin, but I can't help that 'cause I only make $35 a month on WPA an' it ain't enough to feed 10 people. I hope these kids are alright but I can't help worryin' some because the older ones looked well enough, too, when they wuz little."

(Of the three older ones, one is in the state sanitarium, another has "weak lungs," the third has had a cough for "the last three years steady," the report added.)

THE CURE

The cure for these conditions, which the report describes as "a national health menace," lies in proper safety conditions, dust control in the mines, decent housing, relief, and living wages. The companies aren't giving these things of their own free will—especially not Eagle-Picher, dominant in the industry.

So the CIO, through the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, is in the Tri-State to show the workers how to get the things they need to free themselves from misery and death—by organization.

Cause!

FROM MOUNTAINS OF DUST heaped near miners' homes in the Tri-State area of Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, blow deadly clouds of sharp silica. Zinc and lead miners — poorly housed, poorly paid, poorly fed — fall victims to dread lung diseases like silicosis and tuberculosis. With adequate medical and hospital facilities, the sick spend their final weeks in miserable shacks. (See picture below.) CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers are entering big campaign to correct the situation.

Effect!

Melting Pot!

San Francisco, Dec. 2—A true American radial "melting pot" is the Alaska Cannery Workers Union, CIO affiliate.

Answering foes of labor who try to stir up mistrust among various race groups, the local re-elected George Woolf to the presidency, and named a Japanese, two Chinese, a Filipino and a Mexican to other offices. Every nationality in the union is represented on the local's 26-man executive board.

7-1 Victory For CIO

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 2—CIO scored a 7-1 Labor Board election victory in the Labor Board poll at the Planters Manufacturing Co. in Portmouth.

Local Industrial Union 485 polled 383 votes, to only 55 against the union, Ray Thomson, CIO regional director, announced.

CIO Construction Pact Hailed As Solution To Housing Problem

By CECIL OWEN

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2. — The first over-all attack on America's building problem, for years hailed by economists as the No. 1 hope for a real recovery, was speeded here by CIO progress in bringing industrial unionism to the construction industry.

Advance of the CIO through its affiliate, the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, in the construction field marked the first genuine effort to break one of the major log jams that has prevented the long-awaited building boom.

Government experts, contractors, and the more than two million unorganized construction workers, joined this week in welcoming news of the first contract between the UCWOC and an association of contractors. This contract was negotiated by A. D. Lewis, chairman of the UCWOC, with a large group of contractors in the nation's capitol.

Independent observers were quick to recognize the CIO's three-sided interest in construction as: (1) producers of the raw materials, (2) construction workers, and (3) consumers. This is a complete change from the outworn craft set-up, which looked at construction only from the angle of an individual craft union on a single building job.

CIO HOMES

The millions of members of CIO unions throughout the nation are preparing to seize their first opportunity to live in CIO-built houses. Housing and other construction programs may now be supported by the entire CIO with the realization that benefits of such programs will go to CIO construction workers, something not possible until the UCWOC was established.

Word went forth from Chairman Lewis this week to CIO directors to carry the slogan, "CIO-Built Houses for CIO Members," into every nook and cranny of the vast CIO territory. Now that the UCWOC is here, CIO workers are demanding houses built by their brothers of the CIO who enjoy the equality and benefits that accrue to CIO membership.

It is a reflection on the sad state of organization of the construction industry under the old craft set-up that millions of members of organized labor have been forced to occupy homes built under non-union conditions. Only a fraction of the nation's building workers have ever enjoyed the privilege of unionism. The great bulk of the construction workers were frozen out by the craft unions.

MANY UNORGANIZED

Of some 3,000,000 construction workers in the United States, far less than a third have ever been organized. Restrictions on membership by craft unions would prolong this condition for many years to come. Even now, under the impact of CIO organization, craft unions are making last-minute efforts to obtain new members, but only on the discriminatory basis of Class B status.

Already, more than 70 local unions have been set up by the UCWOC in 20 states and the District of Columbia, while its Washington contract means breaking of the former stranglehold of the crafts on important government and other construction in the nation's capital. Government workers who have long occupied a "no man's land" of housing, being ineligible for government-financed low-rent projects and unable to pay for higher-cost private housing, were cheered by the CIO advance in Washington and moved to take prompt advantage of it.

Dollars For CIO Workers In U. S. Housing Program

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2. — There is more than one powerful reason why everybody in the CIO from President John L. Lewis to the newest union member is 100 per cent behind the UCWOC drive to organize the construction industry.

Industrial unions in the construction industry are recognized as the answer to the much talked of housing dilemma. It means an end of obsolete craft practices that have kept the industry lagging far behind in the recovery parade.

And housing for the CIO means not only jobs for its construction workers, not only homes for its millions of members, but also dollars and cents in the pockets of every CIO member in the mass industries. For it is the mass industries of America that will benefit from a housing boom.

Materials that go into construction are produced by CIO workers from Maine to California. A single government program (USHA) estimates its money spent for materials in this table:

Six-Hour Day Won In Textile

Chicopee Falls, Mass., Dec. 2 — The first six-hour day contract in the textile industry was won here by the Textile Workers Union, Valery Burati, union representative, announced today.

Signed with the Chicopee Manufacturing Co., the pact calls for equal division of work during slack times and seven holidays with pay.

Labor and the Law:

The Apex Verdict

By LEE PRESSMAN
CIO General Counsel

Another definite victory has been scored by the CIO in the Apex Hosiery case decided by the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia, Pa.

The American Federation of Hosiery Workers, CIO, had attempted to organize the Apex plant in Philadelphia. Because of the refusal of the company to accede to the union demand for a closed-shop agreement, a strike resulted. The company contended that in the strike certain alleged unlawful acts were committed which resulted in serious property damage.

After the strike was settled and a contract entered into, the company sued the union on the ground that it had engaged in an unlawful conspiracy in restraint of trade and therefore came within the prohibitions of the anti-trust acts. The lower court imposed damages on the union for over $700,000.

'EXTREMELY SERIOUS'

This litigation involved an extremely serious problem for organized labor. The suit was the opening gun in a campaign on the part of anti-labor corporations to deprive labor of its hard won gains under recent social and labor legislation. If the contentions of the Apex Company had been upheld no labor union in this country would have been safe from attack by any corporation whose plants were being organized. In effect, the Apex Hosiery Company claimed that merely because it was engaged in interstate commerce and the Union in attempting to organize its plant had stopped its production and had committed certain unlawful acts, the Union should be held liable for treble damages under the Anti-trust Act.

To appreciate the importance of this suit it should be realized that immediately following the decision of the lower court, the Republic Steel Corporation initiated its suit against the SWOC and the CIO claiming $7,500,000 damages resulting from the "Little Steel" strike of 1937.

The opinion of the Circuit Court, reversing this verdict of the lower court, rests fundamentally upon the ground that since the Hosiery Workers union was engaged in organizing the plant of the Apex Hosiery Company this activity could not be held to show any intention on the part of the Union to interfere with interstate commerce, the basic requirement under the anti-trust legislation.

In other words, labor unions organizing workers for collective bargaining are completely protected and cannot be sued under the anti-trust laws for such activities, even though they may result in strikes. The Court also stated that the mere fact that certain alleged unlawful acts were committed by the members of the union or its officials during the strike was completely irrelevant and furnished no reason for invoking the anti-trust laws.

In addition, the Court placed an additional obstacle in the path of anti-trust suits against labor unions by pointing out that if the business of the Apex Hosiery Company were quadrupled it would have amounted to less than three per cent of the national total output of the industry. The interference with the business of the Apex Hosiery Company as a result of the strike could not be held, in the opinion of the Court, to be such an interference with interstate commerce as to justify the application of the anti-trust laws against the Union.

This case should definitely put an end to any anticipated wave of similar law suits against unions under the anti-trust laws. The restrictions laid down by the Court in this case preclude any recovery in such a suit as was initiated by the Republic Steel Corporation against the SWOC and the CIO.

WHAT COURT DIDN'T DO

The Court did not accept the contention of the CIO that the legislative history of the Clayton Anti-trust Act demonstrates that Congress had intended to exclude labor unions and labor disputes.

This conclusion, if accepted by the Courts, would furnish complete safety to labor unions from any attack by anti-labor employers under the anti-trust laws.

In the event the Apex Hosiery Company appeals from the decision of the Federal Circuit Court, the CIO will be in a position to urge the United States Supreme Court to accept this analysis by reversing previous decisions of the Supreme Court rendered at a time when liberalism was foreign to that Court.

Seek Data About Scandinavians

Washington, Dec. 2.—Scandinavians who have been active in the trade union movement in America, or connected with the independent movement of Scandinavian workers in this country are being asked to aid in collecting material to be used in writing a history of such activity.

A committee formed in New York City a few months ago is cooperating with a Stockholm committee for the Archive of the Swedish Labor Movement in Stockholm, according to C. A. Thorsberg, one of the members of the Stockholm committee, in collecting the necessary material.

The materials should be sent to: Carl Dahlen, 629 Third avenue, New York City, or directly to: The Archive of the Swedish Labor Movement, Uppsalagatan 2, Stockholm, Sweden.

District 50 Wires N. H. Polls

Boston, Mass., Dec. 2—A Labor Board election at the Johns-Manville asbestos plant in Nashua, N. H., was won, 218 to 148, by District 50, United Mine Workers, the CIO regional office here announced today.

District 50 was also certified by the Board as sole bargaining agent at the American Cyanimide plant at Maynard, Mass.

Vigilantes Lose To CIO Farm Workers

Madera, Calif., Dec. 2—The half-Nelson which Associated Farmers have been practicing on labor in the cotton fields of California has been broken by signed agreements between the United Cannery, Agricultural, Packing and Allied Workers, CIO, on behalf of striking cotton pickers, and individual growers' associations.

Thirteen growers in the independent Mineral King Farm Association signed a contract with UCAPAWA to pay $1 per 100 pounds of cotton. The 17,000-acre farm of E. C. Von Glahn, near Tulare, agreed to pay $1 for the first picking and $1.25 for a second picking.

STRUCK IN OCTOBER

The Associated Farmers scale was 60 cents per 100 pounds of cotton. Thousands of migratory cotton pickers struck against that wage early last October.

Armed gangs of Associated Farmers moved all over the strike area in the San Joaquin Valley trying to break the union ranks by violence.

"When 15,000 striking cotton pickers kick the Associated Farmers in the pants," said Donald Henderson, president of UCAPAWA, "its something to be shouted from the housetops."

Mayo Heads New Council

Youngstown, Ohio, Dec. 2 — John Mayo, veteran CIO steel organizer, was elected first president of the newly-formed Mahoning County Industrial Union Council.

John Pollack of the Rubber Workers was named vice-president, Miss G. Lookabaugh, SWOC, recording secretary; and Thomas Phillips, construction workers, treasurer.

The Labor Reader:

The Negro and the CIO

By C. W. FOWLER

One of the annual events at American Federation of Labor conventions just as regular as the re-election of Bill Green and other extinct volcanoes to the AFL leadership, is a pious resolution of discrimination against Negro workers. Annually the resolution is passed, with favorable comment, and annually ignored. AFL unions, having voted for the resolution, go home to continue what they have always practiced — with honorable exceptions — the rule of exclusion and Jim Crow against Negro workers.

It took the advent of the CIO to change this age-old custom, just as it took the CIO to bring organization to the masses of industrial workers in the United States. There is no discrimination in CIO unions. The constitution of the CIO expressly forbids it, all CIO affiliates have consistently refused to practice it, just as an industrial union refuses to discriminate against a worker because of skill or occupation, so it cannot discriminate against a worker because of race — and remain an industrial union.

The CIO doesn't need any pious resolutions on discrimination to remind it of certain basic facts, ably stated in the introduction to "Black Workers and the News Unions," a new study by Horace R. Cayton and George S. Mitchell. The CIO has been aware from the beginning, as the authors say, that:

PROFITS IN PREJUDICE

"The employer class has found racial prejudice a profitable thing, for since the Negro has not been drawn into working class organizations, he has been available for the exercise of the 'divide and rule' policy in connection with labor disputes. During a strike, the employer could import from another region Negroes who felt no solidarity with his employes and who were well beyond the control of the local public opinion which supported the strikers.

"Another advantage for the employers was the adoption of a lower wage scale which the Negro accepted because of the difficulty in obtaining other employment. As a rule a prerequisite to employment was that Negroes would not demand the wage and working conditions granted the white workers."

This advantage is something, as the authors point out, that anti-union employers have never hesitated to use, as long as the labor movement allowed them to. Negro workers were brought in to break strikes in the north as early as 1875, when they first came into the steel industry. Thirty thousand of them were imported as strikebreakers in 1919, as before in the great Homestead walkout of 1890.

UNION MEN TODAY

The same technique was used in other basic industries. In the packing industry, now organized like steel by the CIO, Negroes were imported to break the back of organizing effort after the first world war and in sporadic outbursts before. The employers succeeded then, to the point of provoking disastrous race riots.

They are not succeeding now, as the overwhelming success of the CIO Packinghouse Workers union shows. Here again, as in other CIO organizing drives, Negro workers take their full place in the membership and in the leadership of the new industrial union. The packing industry has a high percentage of Negro workers, and the percentage of Negro leaders, from the Assistant National Director to local officials, is equally high.

This is the way the CIO organizes industrial workers, not, as Cayton and Mitchell point out, in the way the AFL and some other organizations have attempted to organize, by discrimination and Jim Crow.

LIKE A CHAPTER FROM 'GRAPES OF WRATH' is this California strike scene as Madera County CIO fruit pickers fight for their civil rights. Lift Membership 50%, Goal of Maryland CIO

By FRED D'AVILA

BALTIMORE, Dec. 2.—The biggest and best convention ever held by the Maryland and District of Columbia Industrial Union Council closed this week with delegates pledged to carry back to their locals the stimulus for an organizational drive to increase membership at least 50 per cent before the next meeting, a year hence.

The drive to carry out the mandate of the national CIO convention to organize at least a 10,000,000 membership within 5 years will concentrate in six basic fields: steel, aviation, auto, shoe, construction and the federal government.

The third annual convention, which was attended by 153 delegates representing 68 locals and three local industrial union councils, re-elected President John T. Jones of the United Mine Workers Union and Sec.-Treas. Sidney Katz, of Washington.

NEED TO ORGANIZE

In his report to the Convention, Jones stressed the need for organization with redoubled energy, particularly because of increased industrial production due to war conditions.

"A large CIO labor movement, two and a half times the present 4,000,000 members, will be of tremendous benefit, for it will strengthen that great voice of ours so that when we make requests speaking for labor that voice will represent a much larger and stronger group," Jones said in his report.

He cited gains in textile, mining, shipyard, clothing, steel, maritime, federal, rubber, restaurant, auto and construction organization, among others.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO organization director, urged the Convention to see that every CIO member organizes another member.

"It is necessary to organize if we are going to conserve democracy, if we are going to be a shining light for a war-stricken world," he declared.

Other CIO speakers who stressed the timeliness and need for a great organizing drive were: Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel; E. L. Oliver, of Labor's Non-Partisan League; E. J. Lever, in charge of SWOC's Bethlehem campaign; Powers Hapgood, of the United Shoe Workers, and Charles Ervin of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

JOHN T. JONES
Head of Maryland-D.C. Industrial Union Council.

Resolutions adopted urged: opposition to changes which would weaken the Wagner Act, but condemnation of the Labor Board for favoring craft organization; criticism of the Maritime Commission; opposition to our entry in the war; demand that President Roosevelt issue an executive order requiring firms filling government contracts to bargain collectively; condemnation of the Dies Committee; demand for state wage-hour and "baby" Wagner acts; liberalization of unemployment compensation; and support of the labor press.

Bethlehem Attacked By Employes

Harrisburg, Pa., Dec. 2 — Bethlehem Steel's power plant employes today had joined hands with thousands of production workers in demands for a union contract from the big anti-labor corporation, second largest steel producer in the nation.

Meeting here, 99 delegates from seven of Bethlehem's eastern plants passed a resolution charging that "pious proclamations and sanctimonious claims" issued by the company's president, Eugene Grace, have "reached the saturation point."

Object of the power house employes' attack was a Grace assertion praising conditions among the company's workers.

"From the point of view of our many years' experience as employes in the mills, the published statements of Mr. Grace have little or no relation to the actual facts," the statement declared.

MANY GRIEVANCES

In joining with the Steel Workers Organizing Committee's demand for a written agreement, the power plant workers pointed to "stacks of grievances," which they said "indicate the injustices employes have suffered for many years."

"We warn Mr. Grace," the statement continued, "that his employes no longer stand alone, subject only to his mercy. Today we are members of the SWOC, which for three years has defended our legitimate right to collective bargaining and we will no longer be trifled with."

ASK INCREASE

Demands for a 25% increase for all combustion, steam and gas power plant employes at Bethlehem, also were approved by the meeting.

The SWOC has demanded that the big corporation, employing close to 100,000 workers, negotiate an agreement with the union, which has a majority in the plants in Pennsylvania, Maryland, New York and the far West.

Football Team Bum? Blame The CIO!

By RAY PASNICK

UNION CITY, N. J.—The CIO is now blamed for "slowing down" a college football team!

That is the intimation seriously advanced by the anti-labor Hudson-Dispatch daily in an editorial titled "What's The Matter?" which appeared in a recent issue.

In criticizing the lack of do-or-bust spirit ascribed to two Yale football players, both accused of being "indifferent" on the gridiron, the Hague-city paper says:

"Can it be possible that the 'slow down' of American industry by the un-American CIO has, wittingly or unwittingly, been taken up by the youth of a nation, as exemplified by a college football team?"

Bemoaning the possibility that present day youth does not appreciate "opportunity" as it should, the editorial runs on to say: "It would be a bad deal if opportunity were ever swapped for security, which is talked about so much in these times."

Rah! Rah! Rah!

Steel Workers Hail Court Slap At Girdler

CLEVELAND, Dec. 2.—Workers in Tom Girdler's Republic Steel were warned today by William Donovan, Steel Workers Organizing Committee district director, to beware of being "killed with kindness" by the anti-union corporation boss.

Donovan's warning was sounded as Republic Steel embarked on a program of banquet for the workers, presumably to win them away from the SWOC.

"Don't let Tom Girdler appeal to your stomach to put over his program," Donovan asked local steel workers. "Don't gamble with your industrial freedom, which is far more important than all the turkey dinners."

The warning was made at a mass meeting called to celebrate the circuit court victory over Republic Steel, which followed a convention of district SWOC leaders.

PREDICTS VICTORY

Van A. Bittner, SWOC regional director, told the lodge officials that Girdler would eventually be defeated and CIO industrial democracy would prevail in Republic's mills.

Bittner said that the court decision, which held that Republic Steel must reinstate men who went out on strike and pay them back wages, was the finest decision upholding the right of men to strike that ever was rendered by a higher court in the United States.

"THE REAL ENEMY"

Bittner hammered home to the men and women the importance of going out and enrolling the workers in the steel mills until the union has 100 per cent organization.

"The real enemy of the union," Bittner said, "is not Tom Girdler, but the man who works in the steel mill and does not belong to the union. He is the real enemy."

1,500 Thank Pontiac CIO for 'Mass Feast'

By SWANSON C. SHIELDS

PONTIAC, Mich., Dec. 4—In what was described as the biggest "mass feast" in this city's history, the Pontiac CIO Industrial Union Council furnished Thanksgiving dinners to over 1500 poverty-stricken citizens last week.

Abandonment of relief in Pontiac, plus widespread unemployment that is found here, prompted CIO members to sponsor a public dinner so that the city's needy would not go hungry on a holiday that is dedicated to a full dinner table.

The CIO mobilized all the forces at its command to assure the unemployed of a "bona fide" Thanksgiving meal. Food and cash donations were received from business groups, churches and civic organizations. CIO solicitors received generous contributions from industrial workers.

Supervision of the preparation and serving of the food was assumed by the Women's Auxiliaries. Several churches offered the CIO the use of their kitchens and other equipment. Many charitable organizations dropped plans for separate dinners and threw their full support behind the CIO.

As a result of the CIO's well-directed campaign, the more than 1500 men, women and children who packed into the market building for the feast were served a Thanksgiving dinner that had all the trimmings. Over 400 pounds of turkey were served. Other delicacies such as roast chicken, pork and lamb and pumpkin pie gave the affair a real Thanksgiving theme—and a hearty appetite to the hungry.

A Pontiac minister gave grace and praised the CIO members for their "sympathy to the poor" and described the affair as an "inspiring example of true Christianity."

Severno Pollo, assistant State CIO Director, spoke briefly after all had enjoyed a wholesome meal.

"The CIO fights for the unemployed just as hard as it does for the employed," he pointed out, in stressing that a "contented people is the strongest defense for democracy."

Gratified over the success of its Thanksgiving dinner, the CIO Council is mapping plans for a huge Christmas party for the unemployed and their families.

Vermont Marble Co. Grants Demands Of CIO Quarry Union

Long Dispute Ends

BOSTON, Mass., Dec. 9.—Successful termination of one of the most heroic labor struggles in New England was anounced here today by the Quarry Workers Intl. Union, CIO affiliate.

Sec.-Treas. John C. Lawson revealed that the union, in negotiations sponsored by the Natl. Labor Relations Board, had won major demands from the Vermont Marble Co., most powerful firm in the Green Mountain state.

The firm, which waged a bitter fight against the union during a nine-month strike in 1935-36, agreed to disestablish its company-dominated Works Council, to reinstate large numbers of the union workers involved in the strike, and to award pensions and cash settlements to workers who have reached an advanced age.

The agreement resulted from the filing of NLRB charges against the company last May, when the Quarry Workers charged Vermont Marble with unfair labor practices, maintaining a company union and discriminating against union members by refusing to rehire workers who had participated in the 1935 strike.

1,000 MEN INVOLVED

That dispute started in the Danby, Vt., quarry of the company on October 16, 1935 and continued in all the corporation's quarries in the Rutland area until July 27 of the following year. Altogether, about 1,000 men participated.

National attention was focused on the strike, and the issues involved were even debated on the floor of Congress.

At the time of the strike, the union was affiliated with the AFL, which completely deserted it during the fight. The strike was marked by the use of over 100 special deputies, and the union charged that workers' civil liberties were flouted by the state and city officials.

A number of strikers were evicted from their company-owned homes, and numerous others were sent to the state prison.

Steinway Learns Union Tune

New York City, Dec. 9. — Steinway & Sons, makers of the famous pianos used by some of the world's outstanding musicians, has signed an agreement with the United Furniture Workers, CIO, covering the 650 workers employed by the company.

The contract provides for a union shop under which the employes become members of the union and remain members for the next two years. Wage increases ranging from 2½ per cent for the production employes to 7½ per cent for other groups, brings pay up from $3 to $8 a month, under the terms of the pact.

WAR SERVICE CLAUSE

A war service clause states that in case of a declared or undeclared war, all employes entering military service will be taken back after the conflict is over.

In announcing the agreement the union stated: "Steinway & Sons now become a 100 per cent union shop and should receive the full support of organized labor as far as purchasing power is concerned."

PUSH DRIVE IN BUILDING, LEWIS ASKS

(See Story Page Five)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—In letters to all CIO councils and regional directors, Pres. John L. Lewis pointed to recent gains by the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee and called for increased cooperation from CIO affiliates.

Declaring that "the time is here for action," Pres. Lewis noted that the UCWOC has chartered 70 locals in 20 states and has made considerable headway in its drive to organize the construction industry, eliminate graft and the abuses of craft unionism, and bring to the workers the benefits of CIO industrial unionism.

"Let no feeling of consideration for the adversaries of our movement weaken your resolve nor lessen your efforts," Lewis wrote. "Our movement derives its support from its own members, and our first obligation is one of loyalty to our own objectives, our own ideals and our own membership."

Meanwhile, UCWOC Chairman A. D. Lewis called for support for the union's program of "CIO-Built Homes for CIO Workers" and pointed to the advantages to all CIO unions in a big home building program utilizing CIO labor.

Hungry

LIKE THOUSANDS OF OTHER Cleveland jobless families, this woman and child wait patiently for food during the city's relief crisis. Gov. Bricker, Republican, refused to call for state legislative action. Situation was critical until WPA and the Federal Surplus Commodities Corp. rushed food and jobs to the hungry.

Youch-Youch Case Echoes

Baltimore, Dec. 9 — Echoes of the case of wage-hour law violations by the firm of Youch and Youch, garment makers pinched for consistent chiselling on the act, were heard in recommendations of the local grand jury for increased prosecutions of similar violators.

The jury, very much stirred by this and other evidence of law-breaking by sweatshop employers, urged the local division of the Wage Hour agency to increased vigilance in bringing up indictments.

Commenting on the jury's action, Washington wage-hour officials declared: "There is no better guage of public sentiment with regard to a criminal Federal statue than the expression of a Federal grand jury which has heard cases arising under the act in question."

'Frisco Handbill Ban Ruled Illegal

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 9.—The anti-handbill ordinance of this city has been declared unconstitutional in a ruling handed down by Superior Judge Thomas Foley in connection with the arrest of Mervyn Rathborne, president of the American Communications Association, CIO, and John Forbes, a striking Western Union operator.

The two men were arrested for passing out handbills on the picket line in front of the struck Western Union office. The leaflets were notices of the public forum which was held on the WU strike.

The strikers were defended by George Anderson. Judge Foley stated in his decision that the ordinances prohibiting distribution of handbills "were an unwarranted and unjustified interference with the constitutional guarantees of free speech and free press."

Douglas Ward, chairman of the WU strike committee, said that "organized labor in San Francisco has for years been endeavoring to have these ordinances repealed.

"We feel that by refusing to bow to these unconstitutional ordinances and insisting on our rights, we have won a great victory for the labor and liberal movement of San Francisco."

Hearst Strike One Year Old

Chicago—The strike of the Chicago Newspaper Guild against the Hearst-owned Herald - American became one year old on December 5.

Pledges of support from unions all over the nation continue to reach strike headquarters.

4c-An-Hour Raise Gained

Eau Claire, Wisc., Dec. 9—Four-cent an hour wage increases have been won at the National Pressure Cooker Co. by Local 6 of the CIO Aluminum Workers of America.

The contract also lifted maximum vacation pay from $25 to $30 a week.

Retail Union Meeting Opens In Detroit

DETROIT, Dec. 11.—Problems facing millions of workers in the nation's distributive trades will get a thorough airing here today as over 500 delegates assemble for the second biennial convention of the CIO United Retail and Wholesale Employes.

An imposing list of labor and government officials will address the convention sessions, which are expected to last through Dec. 18. Convention headquarters are at the Fort Wayne Hotel.

Pres. Samuel Wolchok will report substantial progress in organization, since the union has made enormous strides forward since its first convention in Pittsburgh two years ago. The union developed out of the discontent against the racketeering and "do-nothing" policies of the AFL union, and the standard of democratic unionism has attracted thousands of workers to the URWE standard, Wolchok declared.

POINTS TO GAINS

In a pre-convention statement addressed to the members of the union, Pres. Wolchok pointed out that despite the challenge of the CIO organization, the AFL union —the Retail Clerks Intl. Protective Assn.—has stubbornly maintained the same policies which kept the workers out of the union for years.

"We have organized more workers in our industry than the RCIPA has done since 1888," Wolchok said. "We are only 2½ years old and our future is brighter than the sun and has more promise than the proverbial rainbow.

"We feel capable and strong enough to stay clear from dissension in our ranks. We feel capable enough to teach all those who want to darken our guiding light to see their folly and uselessness. We know that we are giving the workers that which they have searched for during more than half a century."

SHIFTED MEETING

Originally scheduled for Huntington, W. Va., the convention site was shifted to Detroit as a protest against one of the most drastic court injunctions in West Virginia history, which was handed down against striking bakery workers in Huntington.

With the court asking the arrest of URWE Vice-Pres. John J. Schulter because he had issued strike leaflets, in defiance of the injunction, union officials decided to move the convention.

Priest Leads Labor School

Indianapolis, Ind., Dec. 9 — A new labor school has been opened in Indianapolis, offering courses in public speaking, parliamentary law and the encyclicals of Pope Leo XIII and Pope Pius XI.

The classes are being conducted by Rev. Father Charles Schottelkotte and a local attorney. Admission is free, and the classes are open to everyone, regardless of race, color, creed or union affiliation.

LOCKOUT ENDS

Jacksonville, Ala. — (FP) — An eight-month lockout by the Profile Mills here ended with the signing of a contract with the CIO Textile Workers Union.

Eight AFL Retail Union Heads Indicted in Gotham

NEW YORK, Dec. 9.—Eight AFL union leaders were on the spot today as Dist. Atty. Thomas Dewey's racket bureau won indictments charging them with conspiracy and extortion.

Action against the eight men, who have ruled over two sizeable locals of the Retail Clerks Intl. Protective Assn., bore out charges of racketeering made by the CIO United Retail & Wholesale Employes, against the AFL affiliate.

One of the men arrested was Nicola Elia, known around town as "Nick the Bull." He is general manager of Local 1204 of the AFL union. Another arrested was Sol Shuster, teamsters official. The other two were "Fat Frank" Persico and Simon Saientz. He has a police record running back a quarter century, including sentences for carrying weapons and nitro-glycerin.

This quartet, and the others not yet arrested, preyed both upon workers and store owners, the district attorney's office said. While the two locals had taken in an estimated $175,000 in two years, only $1,000 was left in the treasury.

In addition to mulcting the workers, the gang ringleaders made a practice of "shaking down" store owners with threats of strikes.

CIO Drive Speeds Up In St. Louis

St. Louis, Dec. 9 — Meetings of local union officers and shop stewards in this city are being held regularly under the auspices of the St. Louis Industrial Union Council, according to Luther Slinkard, recording secretary.

The meetings are being held to acquaint all local officials with the aims of the CIO and to work out a program for helping get "Ten Million CIO Members by 1945."

Resolutions passed at the first meeting urged all CIO unions here to affiliate with the city and state industrial union councils, to support the program of Labor's Non-Partisan League, and to help carry the ball during the CIO's organizational campaign.

Donate $500 For Xmas Party

Coraopolis, Pa., Dec. 9—Lodge 209, of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, has gathered over $500 for a Christmas party and celebration for the children of this city.

Each employe of Standard Spring Co., all of whom are union members, has agreed to contribute 50 cents, and the lodge voted to set aside a sum of money from the treasury.

In addition to a free Christmas entertainment, refreshments and a box of candy will be given all the children.

Several other lodges of the SWOC in this district are planning similar celebrations, John Tafelski, sub-regional director revealed.

Cleveland — Employers of another giant electrical manufacturer won union protection when the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, CIO, signed an exclusive bargaining agreement with National Carbon Co. here for its 1,800 workers.

Mid-Continent Oil Accused of Spying

WEST TULSA, Okla., Dec. 9. (FP)—If anyone thinks that the big corporations abandoned espionage after the disclosures of the LaFollette Committee, he should consider the testimony in the National Labor Relations Board hearing of the Mid-Continent Petroleum Corp. case.

The struck oil company, producer of D-X gasoline, rigged up a dictaphone and wire-tapping system through cooperation with the Tulsa police department and the state militia, testimony at the hearing revealed. Purpose was to listen in on the conversations of officers and members of the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union.

[Previous testimony had exposed a plot by corporation-hired detectives to dynamite Mid-Continent property and place the blame on the union.]

REPORTS IN TRIPLICATE

Frank Munroe, one of the troopers, testified that he sat in the basement of the company's administration building, where a 24-hour wire-tapping service was operated. He was required to make reports in triplicate on anything connected with the union. One copy of each report was given to Ed B. Moffett, a Mid-Continent official.

Munroe was ordered by his superior officer, Maj. Taylor, to perform even stranger duties as a national guardsman. He was sent to the Tulsa Hotel, where he had to strip naked and climb up through a ventilator in order to install a dictaphone that would record conversations in the room occupied by Pres. John Coulter of the oil union.

William Kelly, Tulsa police officer, told the NLRB trial examiner that Vice-Pres. J. C. Denton of Mid-Continent had provided one of the three dictaphones used in the spying. Kelly also said that a court reporter was paid $15 a day by Police Commissioner Floyd Rheam to make transcripts of the conversations.

Board Orders Election; AFL Boss Has Tantrum

NEW YORK, Dec. 9. — Mere holding of a Labor Board election is now sufficient to bring down the wrath of AFL top officialdom, recent events here would indicate.

Pres. George Meaney of the New York Federation of Labor —who on Jan. 1 becomes secretary-treasurer of the national AFL, has gotten plenty mad at the New York State Labor Relations Board.

The reason: because it ordered an election among the employes of the Triboro Coach Co. of Queens at the expiration of a contract with the AFL streetcarmen's union.

SEES RED

Fighting angry, Meaney charged the Board was "CIO-minded," that it was seeking to impose "a Nazi-Communist type of governmental control" over New York labor relations. He persuaded the New York AFL legislative conference to "deprecate" the Board's alleged anti-AFL bias.

Father John P. Boland, head of the SLRB, was quick to defend the election, which resulted in a 161-79 victory for the CIO Transport Workers Union.

"What we did," Rev. Boland pointed out, "was to order an election and the results proved that we were right to give the employes this opportunity.

"We are surprised that a union which is truly interested in the American principle of free choice of bargaining representative should be such a poor loser."

TRIED TO SIGN PACT

At the expiration of the disputed contract in October, the SLRB announced that an election would be held upon the CIO petition, Boland pointed out. Before waiting for the election, the company signed a three-year contract with the AFL organization. Despite this, the CIO union won the election.

He pointed out that only a week previous the SLRB had ruled in favor of the AFL in an exactly similar case when the board has ordered an election among employes of a linen supply house, who were then under CIO contract.

Canadian CIO Leader Arrested

(Special to The CIO NEWS)

Toronto, Ont., Dec. 9.—C. H. Millard, secretary of the Canadian Committee of the CIO, was arrested here Dec. 6 by Ontario Provincial Police on charges based on Section 39B of the "Defense of Canada" regulations, passed when the Dominion entered the war.

Labor here is preparing a defense campaign on his behalf, in which AFL unions, as well as CIO, are expected to join.

MADE SPEECH

Millard was charged with making statements in Timmins recently which, it was claimed, are "prejudicial to recruiting." Timmins is Ontario's gold mining center, and has been an important organizing area for the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers Union during the past several months.

The CIO official's arrest was based on charges arising out of a speech he was said to have made to members of the union in Timmins recently.

He was taken into custody here on a warrant issued by Timmins police. According to the report, the CIO leader will be taken to the mine center for trial.

CIO Aids Minneapolis WPA Strikers

Minneapolis, Dec. 9—Endorsement of the CIO WPA Defense Committee was announced by the State CIO Council, the Minneapolis-Hennepin Council, and most CIO locals in the state and city. The Committee was formed to defend 163 WPA workers under indictment growing out of the WPA strikes last July.

Attempts of authorities here to pin the natural death of a policeman who dropped dead from heart failure on the WPA strikers and to hand out prison terms for the strike were vigorously criticized by the CIO Defense Committee, in a statement which read in part:

"Labor leaders declare that the indictment and prosecution of workers on conspiracy charges are a violation of civil rights, and part of an organized attempt of nationwide scope to intimidate the labor movement in order that America may more easily be drawn into the European war.

"Efforts to link strikers with Gearty's death (Gearty was the policeman who dropped dead) were part of a campaign designed to align public opinion against the strikers."

Engineers Win Raises

San Francisco, Dec. 9—Wage increases running as high as $25 a month were negotiated here by the Natl. Marine Engineers Beneficial Assn., CIO affiliate, and the Shipowners Assn. of the Pacific Coast.

The agreement, effective immediately and extending to Sept. 30, 1940, covers approximately 250 men. Substantial improvements in working conditions, as well as the wage increases, were contained in the pact.

Everybody's Happy!

Charge AFL Plotting In Wire Merger Deal

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9. — The Federal Communications Commission "is acting as the union-busting agent of the AFL", Vice-Pres. Joseph Selly of the American Communications Assn., CIO affiliate, charged today.

Selly's statement, based on FCC recommendations for the merger of Western Union and Postal Telegraph—as published in the New York Times—accused the federal agency of seeking to weaken the CIO union through the merger.

The Times story said FCC officials feel the "chief obstacle to be overcome in plans for the merger of the two companies . . . is the foreseen controversy over absorption by Western Union of the personnel of the Postal Company."

POSTAL HAS PACT

The article pointed out that Postal employes are members of the ACA and work under a contract with the company. It then went on to say that "those in Western Union not having any labor affiliation are lined up with the AFL."

Selly, in reply, suggested that the FCC might check into the facts of the case. He pointed out that ACA has filed petitions for Labor Board elections in a number of Western Union offices throughout the nation.

Implications that the FCC feels the 17,000 unionized Postal employes should be dismissed in the merger "makes it appear that the Commission is acting as a union-busting agent of the AFL, which made precisely this demand when it appeared before the Commission on November 24," Selly said.

QUOTE HIGH COURT

"The Supreme Court on December 5 decided in the case of railroad consolidation that 'the welfare of railroad workers was as important to the public interest as the maintenance of an adequate transportation system, and that consolidations aimed at operating economies must not overlook the interests of those who serve.'

"The workers in the telegraph industry are convinced that the Supreme Court decision is equally applicable to the communications industry, and are determined to fight to protect the public interest and the interests of labor which coincide."

Delay Action On Settling Wire Strike

San Francisco, Dec. 9. — CIO Western Union strikers here voted to defer action of U. S. Secretary of Labor Perkins' settlement proposals until the company has indicated its acceptance, on the grounds that action would be "meaningless" until the Western Union's attitude is clear.

Miss Perkins' proposals were on a three-point basis, calling for an end to the strike, no discrimination in rehiring, and a return to company practice of dealing with union grievance committees.

The strikers, all members of the American Communications Assn., CIO, have been out four months now, with support from leading San Francisco citizens and from organized labor all over the country.

They won a civil liberties victory this week when the courts ruled a local anti-handbill ordinance unconstitutional, the judge declaring that it was "an unwarranted and unjustified interference with the constitutional guarantees of free speech and free press."

Glass Union Elects Irwin De Shetler

Columbus, Ohio, Dec. 9 — Unofficial returns on the run-off election of national officers to head the Federation of Flat Glass Workers, CIO, were announced today at union headquarters here.

Irwin L. DeShetler, general secretary-treasurer of the FFGW for the past two years, was elected general president, winning over Leland Beard. DeShetler is from Toledo Local 9, and Beard is from Local 19, Ottawa, Ill.

J. T. Alford, Local 14, Fort Smith, Ark., was elected vice-president. Highest number of votes for secretary-treasurer was received by Peter J. Vidmar, Local 19.

The run-off election, held November 29, was required under the union's constitution, as no candidate for national office re-

Lift Wages $1,400,000 At American Viscose

NEW YORK, Dec. 9.—The CIO's "lift wages" campaign spurted here today as the Textile Workers Union negotiated a $1,400,000 increase from the American Viscose Corp.

The raise, announced here by TWU Pres. Rieve, amounts to 6% of the company's payroll. Distribution of the increase among the various occupations and plants will be undertaken jointly by corporation officials and union committees representing workers in Lewistown and Meadville, Penna.; Parkersburg and Nitro, W. Va., and Roanoke, Va.

The Viscose pay boost, Rieve pointed out, swells the total annual wage increases negotiated by the TWU in the synthetic yarn industry to $2,500,000 since last September.

CIO Wins Auto Poll By 10-1

Detroit, Dec. 9.—Victors in a dozen major Labor Board elections during the past few months, the CIO United Automobile Workers rolled up another overwhelming majority at Kelsey-Hayes Wheel Co. last week.

Of 2,708 votes cast, 2.457 voted for the CIO. Only 251 voted for no union at all.

Heroes of one of the early 1937 strikes, the Kelsey-Hayes workers haven't let the anti-union drive of either the bosses or the former UAW president affect their determination to have the protection of their own democratic organization.

Wages Up 3c An Hour For 18,000

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 9. — The blanket wage increase of 3c an hour granted to 18,000 employes of the Briggs Manufacturing Co. at the plant here and in Evansville, Ind., is the direct result of the UAW-CIO strike victory at Chrysler, Emil Mazey, president of the Briggs Local 212 said here.

The increase brings Briggs scales up to the Chrysler levels.

A few weeks ago the Labor Board reversed its previous stand for a separate bargaining unit at each of the seven Briggs plants and granted the request of the UAW-CIO for a single employer-wide unit.

The Board's action was based on the results of seven separate polls conducted on September 14, all won overwhelmingly by the CIO union, which defeated the AFL, 13 to 1. A week after the elections, the UAW-CIO petitioned the Board to amend its original decision for separate plant unit elections, so as to establish a single unit of the production and maintenance employes of all the company's plants.

In granting the request, the Board stated: "At the time of our original decision there was no indication in the record as to the relative strength of the CIO-UAW and AFL-UAW in the various plants.

"The results of the elections, which are a part of the investigation conducted by the Board, now show that the CIO-UAW has been designated collective bargaining agency by a majority of the production and maintenance employes in each of the plants."

Pittsburgh Newspaper Locals Unite

Pittsburgh, Dec. 9 — Ratifications for a new constitution of the recently established Pittsburgh Newspaper Unions Council were reported proceeding here, with the local CIO Newspaper Guild and 15 printing unions involved. Elections were postponed until January.

The Council grew out of a dispute between 10 unions in the newspaper industry, including the Guild and the local Cripps-Howard paper, over loss of pay during suspension brought about by two newspapers after a deadlock in printing trades contract negotiations.

Relief Crisis, While Profits Soar

There is a horror about the stories coming out of Ohio on the relief crisis that matches in its way the horror of Europe's war news.

Thousands of innocent and helpless people in Cleveland, Toledo and other Ohio cities have been sentenced to utter misery and slow starvation by the cutting off of relief.

In Toledo the Council of Social Agencies reports "unbelievable conditions", with "many cases in actual want and acute need—where persons were starving." It tells of people "picking up scraps—scavenging" to keep alive.

Stories from Cleveland tell of unemployed workers, without clothes or shoes to go out in, confined to cold bare cellars or drafty shacks and subsisting on such scraps of food as a small lump of cheese and a few crackers a day.

For the horrors of Europe's warfare, all sorts of excuses are advanced about the exigencies of war, the heat of battle, economic compulsions and the like.

For the horror of what is happening to Ohio's jobless, no excuse whatever can be advanced. These people are starving in the midst of plenty. The money to feed and clothe them would hardly make a dent in the millions and billions of public funds being spent for other purposes.

And irony of ironies, these thousands are cut off relief at a time when industrial profits are soaring due to the so-called war boom and when Cleveland, for instance, is said to be experiencing the biggest business upturn in years.

Ohio has been giving a horrible object lesson of what is in store for the country if present proposals to cut down relief, to provide more money for war preparations, are adopted.

Assistant WPA Commissioner Corrington Gill, in a recent speech, described the notion that war trade will eliminate unemployment as "fantastic and absurd". He declared that the number of unemployed is not likely to be reduced below nine million even by next spring.

Yet because war profits are pouring into their own coffers, the fat cats imagine all is well and demand reduction of public expenditures for the needy.

Labor, on the other hand, insists that unemployment still remains America's No. 1 problem. It demands not less but more relief, and a real program to provide jobs at decent wages for all who need them.

Good Reason for Organizing

A survey of the earnings of 80 industrial corporations, made public in the "New York Times", reveals that their combined net profit increased from $36,547,000 in the first nine months of 1938 to $200,253,000 in the same period of 1939, a gain of 448 per cent.

In contrast to these huge profit increases, weekly earnings of workers in manufacturing industries rose only from $26.02 to $27.58 from December 1938 to September 1939, and hourly wages increased only 1.3 per cent.

Small wonder that the workers in most of these industries are turning in increasing numbers to CIO organization to get their share of improved business in higher wages.

Presidents of the five districts comprising the FFGW were elected at the October 31 general election. Lorillard Still Unfair

Middletown, Ohio, Dec. 9—Members of Pioneer Tobacco Workers Local Union 55 are still keeping up their fight against the P. Lorillard Co., according to E. P. Murphy, financial secretary of the local.

The company, which manufactures Old Gold cigarettes and a number of other tobacco products, was placed on the CIO unfair list at the San Francisco convention.

The Skeleton At The Feast

Looking Ahead

By LEN DE CAUX

A Significant Contrast

THERE is a remarkable and significant contrast between the organizing literature put out by the CIO and the AFL, when the two compete for the workers' votes in Labor Board election campaigns.

Take for example the campaign at the big Endicott-Johnson shoe plant at Endicott and Johnson City, N. Y., employing some 18,000 workers.

The AFL avails itself of an alleged labor paper at Binghamton, which fills its columns, aside from shoe company and other advertising, with the wildest slander and abuse of the CIO, including such fantastic charges as "money from Moscow" and lurid red-baiting that has nothing to do either with truth or with the problems of the shoe workers.

The CIO United Shoe Workers, in contrast, publishes a local paper of its own called the E. J. Union News, which devotes its columns to carefully written articles about the workers' conditions and the possibilities of improving them.

The tone of the CIO paper is as dignified and factual as the AFL sheet is hysterical, slanderous and careless of the facts.

The appeal of the CIO is to the reasoning power of thinking shoe workers, who want to improve their lot through union organization and collective bargaining.

The AFL appeal, on the other hand, is directed to ignorance and the basest emotions. Knowing that its outfit has a long record of betrayal and disservice to the shoe workers, the AFL sheet tends to avoid the subject and to concentrate on slandering the CIO union.

The Factual Approach

This contrast is typical of nearly every situation in which CIO and AFL unions compete.

In the recent RCA Radio election at Camden, N. J., the Armour packing plant election at Chicago and the auto plant elections, for example, the CIO stuck to straight unionism and the exposition of its record of achievement for the workers, while AFL leaflets read like the crazy political outpourings of some Fascist sect.

In the Armour election, where actual forgery was used by the AFL union, the CIO union did retort to the wild campaign of slanders and lies against its leaders. But here too it handled its slanderous opponents in a carefully factual manner. It simply printed the prison picture and criminal record of the local AFL leader.

This record included about a dozen convictions for robberies of all kinds, assault and battery and dope peddling. The leaflet just let the facts speak for themselves.

Victories for Reason

Those who are sincerely concerned for democracy will get genuine satisfaction from knowing that the CIO type of thoughtful appeal to reason is far more effective with most American workers than the Hitleresque appeals to ignorance and emotion of the AFL.

In the above-mentioned elections, in which the anti-CIO propaganda of the AFL reached new depths of distortion and lying, the workers thought matters out for themselves and returned majorities for the CIO which ranged from four-to-one to ten-to-one and more.

The Record Speaks for Itself

There are a number of good reasons why the CIO in general concentrates on presenting its union message and standing on its own record and the facts; while the AFL has to resort to slandering the CIO and to diverting attention from union issues by appeals to ignorant passion and prejudice.

In the first place, the CIO has a record of active organizing work and union achievement which is its best advertisement. It has long had organizers in the field in each case, who have been carrying on the hard work of union education to convince the workers where their interests lie.

The AFL, on the other hand, enters the field in most cases long after the CIO has done most of the spade-work of organization. It seeks to cash in on this work by appealing to the employers' fear of the CIO and offering them a virtual company union in its place.

For this purpose, the AFL sets about trying to make a bogey of the CIO. It does not bother much about selling its own phoney wares to the workers, but seeks rather to disrupt and destroy the union organizing work of the CIO.

Faith in Democracy

In the second place, the CIO is a far more fundamentally democratic movement than the AFL. It has faith, based on experience, that when the workers are given the facts in a reasonable fashion they will vote for the modern and progressive industrial unionism of the CIO.

The AFL, on the other hand, knows that its type of stick-in-the-mud craft unionism, with all the corruption, inertia and outright betrayal that have been associated with it, has little appeal to the workers in America's big modern industries.

It knows that it is progressively slipping, as the CIO advances, and in desperation it turns to the type of lying, hysteria-creating propaganda to which dictators resort when they try to seize by trickery the power which they cannot gain by democratic means.

WinIncreases

Nashville, Tenn., Dec. 9—Wage increases were won in two contracts with handle manufacturers signed by CIO unions in this area recently. The Link Handle Co., Sequatchie, Tenn., has accepted an agreement with Handle Workers Union 907, providing improved working conditions and wage advances.

Thousands Go Hungry In Ohio Cities

Toledo Fears Epidemics

By WALTER PETERS

Toledo, Dec. 8. — Already suffering from the worst relief crisis in its history, Toledo faces the future with a grim threat— unless state or federal aid is forthcoming—of having an additional 2,500 families join the present hungry army of 25,000 men, women and children who have been without relief since Sept. 16.

The sad local picture, it was pointed out by Jack Thompson, United Automobile Workers welfare director here, and Louis Didisse, president-elect of the Toledo Industrial Union Council, will be worse soon after Christmas. At that time a number of WPA projects will have been completed, thus ending the jobs of some 2,500 workers. The city of Toledo will not be in a position to meet its sponsor's share of new projects to replace those already completed.

'HOLD THEIR BREATH'

Meanwhile, City Manager George N. Schoonmaker admitted that city officials "have been holding their breath for fear some disaster might break out here with the continued stoppage of relief . . ."

With the exception of small handouts of beans, butter and apples provided by Federal Surplus Commodities Corp., the unemployed here have received no food since all relief was shut off. Unemployed families are undernourished to the extent that an epidemic is likely unless some measures are taken by the state to again provide relief.

An independent survey made by the Council of Social Agencies of Toledo revealed extreme suffering among the 25,000 affected by the crisis here.

CIO unions are continuing their demand for a special session of legislature to act on the emergency immediately.

APPEAL TO BRICKER

Repeated appeals for a special legislature made to Gov. John W. Bricker by both branches of organized labor and city officials of Toledo and Cleveland apparently fell on deaf ears.

Obviously afraid that a special session of legislature may act on the relief situation by adopting what Labor's Non-Partisan League of Ohio termed "a just and equitable system of taxation to provide a permanent solution to this permanent problem," the governor now is attempting to shift the entire responsibility of feeding the hungry unemployed to the municipalities whose treasuries are already depleted.

At one time the governor blamed the people of Toledo for the plight of its unemployed because a proposed 1½-mill 'Poor Relief Tax Levy' was defeated last September. The charge was made to a Toledo CIO delegation several weeks ago.

USELESS PROPOSAL

As one solution to the problem, the governor suggested that Lucas County Commissioners issue bonds against future collections of state, gasoline and license tags fund. The county commissioners asserted that even by doing that the most that could be obtained would last seven weeks after which time Lucas County and Toledo would be in even a worse financial condition.

Breadline, 1939

WAITING FOR MEAGER RATIONS are these unemployed Clevelanders, in line outside a relief station in a former bank branch. Thousands of men and women and children were hit by the crisis.

War Boom Bring Jobs? 'No!' Says WPA Official

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 9.—Notions that the war-boom will do away with a large part of America's unemployment problem are "fantastic and absurd," Corrington Gill, assistant WPA head, told students at the Pennsylvania Social Work School here.

Not only is it fantastic, he said, but it is a dangerous illusion, calculated to distract peoples' attention from the pressing domestic problem of doing something effective about unemployment.

War at best can only offer a temporary relief, Gill pointed out, and then only by taking "surplus" labor and putting it on the battlefield. The fewer come back, he explained, the lower the unemployment figures—for a while.

Gill called on Congress to face this question at the next session, saying: "We have at present about 9,000,000 unemployed; and if our country remains at peace, we will have nearly that many unemployed next spring. Again Congress will have to face the question of what to do about it."

CIO, Jobless Blame Tory Officials

CLEVELAND, Dec. 9. — Cleveland's reactionaries have taken a trip to "utopia"—and are glad to be out of it.

For a week this metropolis followed—unwillingly—the advice of the "end coddling" bloc. Cleveland "got out of this business of relief."

The experiment flopped—and the reactionaries were forced to admit it.

For more than a half-decade conservatives have pictured a reliefless community as a prosperous community. They have promised that an end to relief will mean a wealth of jobs.

Cleveland proved they were wrong.

The sight of breadlines, of starving mothers and babies huddled in heatless, barren apartments, of scavenging in garbage pails, of grumbling desperation was too much for Cleveland's prosperous folk, just as it was for those who have been demanding aid all along for the jobless. The rich had to admit that relief is a necessity.

City officials this week got together with Gov. Bricker, who still plumps for balancing the budget, and arranged a $1,200,000 bond issue which will mortgage future tax receipts. Together with aid from WPA and the Federal Surplus Commodities Corp., the situation will be eased, though some 66,000 relief cases will be on less-than-normal assistance until well into 1940.

TOLL OF ILLNESS

Health officers predicted, however, that the toll of the subnormal diets for children and adults will long be felt.

"We are concerned with the situation," said Dr. Harold Knapp, city health commissioner. "If you have under-nourished or starved people, you haven't good health. You may expect a toll to be exacted later."

PAPERS HUSHED IT

Cleveland papers valiantly attempted to "play down" the sensational story, which crashed onto the front pages in other cities throughout the country.

Prosperity stories edged out relief stories, and statistics about the city's booming auto and steel industry edged out statistics showing that for two years relief clients have had "25 to 44 per cent less food than a minimum standard requires."

Since last April, it has been common knowledge that Cleveland and other Ohio cities would be confronted with thousands of under-fed, poorly-clothed and inadequately-housed citizens unless the state and municipal administrations provided funds for their relief.

CIO DEMANDED ACTION

Nevertheless, demands from CIO delegations for action to meet the oncoming crisis were brushed aside by both the governor and by leaders of Cleveland big business.

Gov. Bricker, who refused to take action when presented with the facts by a CIO group on November 30, was assailed by Pres. John Owens of the Ohio Industrial Union Council. Owens said:

"His inaction in the present crisis indicates that his permanent program is to keep the unemployed permanently at the edge of starvation.

"I do not accuse Mr. Bricker of being dishonest but the daily fiscal reports show that money is available in this rich staate. There can be no prior call on that money ahead of aid for Ohio's industrial refugees."

Wages Up In Bleachery Pact

St. Louis, Mo., Dec. 9—Hourly wage increases of two to six cents were obtained in an agreement renewed between the Lowell Bleachery Company here and the Textile Workers Union of America.

The pay raise which covers the 220 workers at the bleachery will amount approximately to $25,000 annually, according to estimates of Richard Brazier, TWUA representative here at the St. Louis Joint Board of the textile union.

Oust Jersey Relief Boss, Unions Ask

NEWARK, N. J., Dec. 9.—Removal of New Jersey's state relief administrator was demanded by CIO officials today on grounds that he has flouted the state relief act and expressed opposition to the whole principle of government aid to the needy.

The demand was sent to Gov. A. Harry Moore, member of the Hague machine, by Leonard Goldsmith, executive secretary of the state CIO council.

"We charge Director Arthur Mudd of the State Relief Administration with being unfit to hold office, with using a subterfuge to refuse to permit the payment of relief to needy people in the case of the members of the AFL who are on strike against the Mundet Cork Co. of Hillside."

INCLUDE AFFIDAVIT

Accompanying the letter was an affidavit charging Mudd with having been present in the attorney general's office when that official ruled that refusal to grant relief to the strikers was illegal and ordering the order be rescinded.

"In the discussion that followed, Arthur Mudd several times said in effect that he was opposed to the principle of relief, that many people would rather be on relief than work, and that if relief was abolished, industry would re-employ people and solve the unemployment problem. Attorney General Wilentz pointed out to Director Mudd that this was a 'rather peculiar philosophy' for the state director of relief to have."

Plan Big Campaign In Oregon

Toledo, Ore., Dec. 9 — "We are going to make Oregon one of the banner states within the CIO setup," William Dalrymple, recently apointed CIO Regional Director for the state, told a mass meeting of members of the CIO Intl. Woodworkers of America here.

Warning that this "will take plenty of hard work," Dalrymple assured the audience that every CIO meeting he has attended since his appointment has brought assurances of "cooperation and help in building the CIO as the dominant labor organization within the state."

OPEN HALL

The day before the Toledo meeting, CIO Woodworkers at Olympia, Wash., dedicated a new meeting hall with a meeting of more than 700 members. In addition to Regional Director Dalrymple, Woodworkers President Harold Pritchett, Washington Regional Director Richard Francis and the Mayor of Olympia were featured speakers.

Push Construction Campaign; New Locals Receiving Charters

Issue Six Charters In Week; Enlist Unions in Drive

By CECIL OWEN

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—Six new local unions were chartered this week by the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee as it stepped up the drive to bring industrial unionism to the 2,000,000 unorganized workers in the construction industry.

These new locals brought to 76 the total chartered by the committee in the four months since it was established. The UCWOC now has locals in more than a score of states and the District of Columbia. Organizers are busy in many key industrial areas and chartering of new locals is expected momentarily.

Locals of the UCWOC dot the industrial east, midwest, south and far west. Concentration points are the states of: East—Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, Maryland, West Virginia and the District of Columbia; Midwest—Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Missouri, Ohio and Wisconsin; South — Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, Oklahoma and Arkansas; Far West — California, Colorado and Washington.

Among the new locals to which charters were issued since Dec. 1 is one in New Jersey with 650 members which has been an independent union. Another chartered is in East St. Louis, Ill., where many unorganized construction workers are enrolling in the UCWOC. Others chartered are at Hammond, W. Va., Alexandria, Va. and Canton, O.

Chairman A. D. Lewis of the UCWOC advised all locals of the UCWOC of their special duty and opportunity to follow up the letter by President Lewis.

CIO-BUILT HOMES

He wrote UCWOC locals:

"The slogan 'CIO-Built Homes for CIO Members' has a special significance in your community, since it is one of the many in which the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee has chartered a local union.

"This means that in your community CIO members stand ready to build CIO homes for CIO members.

PROMPT ACTION

"May I therefore suggest prompt action by you to carry this message to the CIO membership in your community. If there is an industrial union council in your city, a representative of the UCWOC should appear before its next meeting and explain our program.

"From today on, loyal CIO members in your community who are building homes or other structures will advise the UCWOC Local so that its members may have the opportunity of doing this work. We further suggest a clause in all building contracts insisting on CIO construction workers.

"The principle at stake here is the same as that which impels good union members to refrain from patronizing merchants or manufacturers who are unfair to organized labor. Let CIO buying power aid CIO organization in construction as elsewhere.

CRAFT UNIONS FAILED

"It is an unfortunate fact that for many years union members who would not think of buying other non-union products have been forced to live in homes built under non-union conditions. This is because of failure of the obsolete being corrected.

"We are confident that CIO craft form of unionism to organize this great basic industry.

"Now that the CIO is successfully organizing construction workers, this condition is fast membership will find that the standards of workmanship, the wage rates, and other aspects of CIO construction warrants the most favorable consideration."

A. D. LEWIS
Reports progress in campaign.

STAKE IN BUILDING

Letters went forward also from Chairman Lewis of the UCWOC to those CIO unions whose members produce the materials that go into construction.

He stressed the fact that there is hardly a CIO union which does not have a major stake in the building industry. It is the CIO that provides most of the materials and services that are essential before a building can be erected.

Typical was the letter sent to the Steel Workers Organizing Committee which said, in part:

"Every construction job in the United States and Canada means dollars and cents to the Steel Workers Organizing Committee membership because it is they who produce a large part of the raw materials that go to make a building.

"Members of the CIO produce steel products, lumber, electrical equipment, glass, metal fixtures, plumbing, flooring and roofing, granite, and countless other materials that enter into construction. Their stake in this industry is fully as great as that of the workers who put up the building.

"Our purpose in writing this letter is to earnestly seek your cooperation on a three point program: 1. Advise your industry of its new opportunity to sell more building materials as a result of this CIO program; 2. Acquaint your entire membership with the prospects for them as producers of construction materials and as consumers of housing; and 3. Assist organizing of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee in areas where your membership is concentrated."

AFL Racket Men Assailed

New York, Dec. 9 — Racketeering by certain AFL top officials, particularly in the electrical industry, was cited as "a real obstacle to labor unity" in the quarterly report of James J. Matles, organization director of the CIO Radio and Electrical Workers, delivered here today.

The report listed notable gains by the CIO union during the past three months, with 63 new contracts covering 16,000 workers, nine Labor Board elections won (not including the six to one victory in RCA at Camden), over 6,000 new members for an increase of 67 per cent, and dues payments up two-thirds over 1938.

Matles' comments on AFL racketeering were made in his discussion of the struggle the CIO union has had to carry on against raiding and splitting tactics of the AFL Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

OK Changes In Rules

New York, Dec. 9 — Returns on a three-month referendum conducted by the National Maritime Union on a new constitution drawn up at the NMU national convention held at New Orleans last July, disclosed an overwhelming vote in favor of accepting it, the CIO union office announced today.

The revised constitution will go into effect January 1, 1940, Joseph Curran, NMU president said.

Pres. Lewis Sounds Call for Action

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—Pres. John L. Lewis of the CIO today called on all Regional Directors and CIO Councils to speed the organizing drive in the construction industry.

In a special letter sent all Directors and Councils, Pres. Lewis commended achievements of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee in chartering 70 local unions in 20 states and the District of Columbia.

Referring to affirmative action of the San Francisco convention on the drive to organize construction, Lewis said that "the time is here for action." He informed CIO officers that their course had been chartered by the convention and an aggressive organizing effort in construction is now the order of the day.

SENDS LETTER

Text of the letter follows:

"On August 1, 1939, the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee was formed with headquarters in Washington, D. C. Since that time, the Committee has issued charters to 70 local unions in 20 states and the District of Columbia.

Asks cooperation for CIO Construction Workers drive.

"The Committee recently signed its first association agreement with Construction Industry Employers, Incorporated, in the District of Columbia, covering wages, hours and working conditions of men employed in the construction industry. Copy of this agreement has been made available to you.

"Considering the limited assistance the Committee has received from representatives of the CIO, I am sure you will agree that their work represents an achievement worthy of commendation and support.

CONVENTION PLANS

"At the recent San Francisco convention, the question of promoting organization of construction workers was brought to the attention of the Executive Board and Regional Directors, by the undersigned.

"At that time, I expressed the hope that all CIO Directors, Organizers, State Industrial Union Councils and local Industrial Union Councils would immediately lend their assistance to the UCWOC in the drive to organize local unions in the territory adjacent to the location of these agencies.

'COURSE IS CHARTED'

"I again renew this request and strongly urge that each of the aforementioned representatives of the CIO take immediate steps to lend assistance to this organizing drive in the construction industry. Our convention has approved the policy of organizing these workers; it has already been demonstrated that these workers are capable of being organized on an industrial basis, and the time is here for action.

"Let no feeling of consideration for the adversaries of our movement weaken your resolve nor lessen your efforts. Our movement derives its support from its own members, and our first obligation is one of loyalty to our own objective, our own ideals and our own membership. These have been defined and our course is chartered by our conventions.

"Therefore, let there be no hesitation, but rather loyal response to the suggestion in this letter.

"In nearly every community a local union of construction workers can be organized. After these unions are organized, they will need some assistance and guidance, which should be freely given. Upon all matters of policy and detail, please communicate with Chairman A. D. Lewis, of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, 15th and Eye Streets, N. W. Washington, D. C."

Broun Quits Scripps-Howard; Shifts To New York 'Post'

NEW YORK, Dec. 9. (FP)—Heywood Broun, president of the American Newspaper Guild, will write his last column for the New York World-Telegram and other Scripps-Howard papers on Dec. 14.

On the following day he will start writing for the New York Post.

Managements of both papers confirmed the change, but declined to comment. Unofficially, it was said that the World-Telegram had refused to renew Broun's contract at the end of its 5-year term, a move that had been expected because of the Scripps-Howard management's increasing irritation over the writing of its only outstanding pro-labor columnist.

Although Broun had come to the then Telegram in 1927 with the understanding that he was to write whatever he pleased, in recent years the Scripps-Howard editors have not pleased to print everything that Broun wrote. A number of columns were suppressed, others sharply edited.

In addition to writing a column for the Post, Broun will cover general assignments in sports, politics and other fields. Syndication of his column means that any Scripps-Howard papers outside New York may continue to buy it, but it is expected most of them will follow the lead of the World-Telegram.

TWO RE-HIRED

New York—Two CIO workers in F. W. Woolworth & Co. were order upheld by the courts. The demediation board here, and the order upheld by the courts. The decision was described by Yale Stuart, organizer of the CIO Five and Dime Organizing Committee, as "a real step forward to make employers, even the biggest, carry out their agreements."

Probe West Coast Terrorism

NATIONAL SPOTLIGHT FOCUSES ON CALIFORNIA once more as the Senate Civil Liberties Committee investigates activities of Associated Farmers and other outfits accused of violating civil liberties.

Associated Farmers' Tactics Rapped As Hearings Open

By MIRIAM ALLEN DEFORD

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 9.—The long-heralded LaFollette civil liberties committee probe of the vigilante-minded Associated Farmers was under way here today.

The investigation, sought by Pacific Coast labor to expose the anti-union reign of terror of the big ranchowners organization, is expected to continue for several weeks.

Highlight of the first day's proceedings was the offering of a lengthy program of reform for the State's knotty farm set-up by Gov. Culbert L. Olson.

The governor made no efforts to soothe the feelings of Associated Farmers, accusing the organization of representing "the same interests dominant in employer organizations in the cities."

LIBERTIES VIOLATED

Civil liberties have been violated "beyond all question" in California, the governor's statement—a 12,000 word document—declared. He lashed out at those farm organizations "which are opposed to the principles of collective bargaining for agricultural labor."

Associated Farmers and other like-minded outfits were served notice by Olson that "this state administration . . . is prepared to go to any lengths, even to the point of calling out the National Guard and invoking martial law, to see that order is maintained and that the laws are equally and impartially enforced."

Others who testified at the first hearing were Prof. Paul Taylor, University of California economist, and Henry Fowler, chief counsel for the LaFollette committee.

SERIOUS PROBLEM

Fowler presented figures to show the seriousness of the state's agricultural labor problem, asserting that 183 farm labor strikes had taken place since 1933—65 of them accompanied by violence. While the state has only 4% of the nation's field workers, it has had 34% of the agricultural labor struggles.

Prof. Taylor, following the LaFollette lawyer on the stand, cited some of the reasons for this strife. Among the factors he named were the industrialization of the state's agriculture through the development of huge ranch farming; the hostility of the big growers to the "interference" of labor organizers; and the migration of thousands of farm workers from Arkansas, Texas, Missouri and Oklahoma.

"Because of overt acts violating civil liberties and also because of economic pressures surrounding labor in industrialized agriculture, the farm problem is becoming one of the whole structure in which men work for wages on the land," Taylor said.

2 GOVERNORS DODGE

Two other West Coast governors were invited to appear but instead sent only statements. As far as Gov. Sprague of Oregon is concerned, his statement indicated, the protection of civil liberties is no business of the U. S. government unless the states are particularly derelict.

As the committee adjourned its hearing until Dec. 13, Senators LaFollette and Elbert Thomas—both of whom are taking an active part in the probe—were considering the use of contempt proceedings against the sheriffs and district attorneys of Fresno and Madera counties.

Seek Injunction Against Finks

BESSEMER, Tenn., Dec. 9—A novel type of injunction is being sought by the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, according to Van Jones, Intl. union executive board member.

Court action has been sought to bar the struck Tennessee Copper Co. and the sheriffs of three counties from depriving copper miners of their civil rights and from transporting strikebreakers across state lines.

Labor And The Law:

The Supreme Court Notes Workers' Rights

By LEE PRESSMAN
CIO General Counsel

The Supreme Court has upheld an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission in which a railroad was permitted to lease its properties to another railroad company upon condition that adequate protection be afforded to employes of the first company who might otherwise be discharged or given inferior jobs because of the merger.

In effect, the ICC had ruled that out of the merger considerable savings would result to the owners of the property—and that a reasonable share of such savings should be apportioned to the employes who would suffer because of the fewer number of employes necessary to operate the consolidated properties of the railroad.

The ICC had inserted the labor provisions in its order on the basis of the statutory authority which it had, that in connection with mergers the Commission might impose such terms and conditions that it finds will "promote the public interest".

PROTECTION OF EMPLOYES

The Supreme Court sustained the ICC order by pointing out that protection of the employes of the railroad through reasonable wages and working conditions and security of employment has a definite relationship with the maintenance of uninterrupted service which certainly serves the public interest.

For instance, the Supreme Court stated that:

"The now extensive history of legislation regulating the relations of railroad employes and employers plainly evidences the awareness of Congress that just and reasonable treatment of railroad employes is not only an essential aid to the maintenance of a service uninterrupted by labor disputes, but that they promote efficiency, which suffers through loss of employe morale when the demands of justice are ignored."

The reasoning of the Supreme Court in this case furnishes support to one of the basic policies which has been urged by the CIO. We have claimed that the protection of the interest of the workers in industry is the best assurance for industrial peace. Improved wages and working conditions and security of employment are the best guarantees for maintenance of the public interest in this country.

CIO POLICY JUSTIFIED

In support of this position the CIO has urgently beseeched Congress and the President of the United States to follow this very policy in regard to the awarding of Government contracts.

In other words, we have pointed out that the United States Government should not award contracts to employers who violate the provisions of the outstanding social and labor legislation which has been enacted by Congress during the past few years. It has been our contention that adoption of the policy by the United States Government would be the best assurance for the protection of the workers in industry and for the maintenance of industrial peace, both of which are in the public interest.

Facts have been brought before Congressional committees by the CIO on several occasions in support of legislation that the corporations which are foremost in their reactionary and anti-labor attacks and in their determined attitude to violate labor legislation are the very corporations which secure the benefits of Government contracts.

In each industry the spearhead for anti-labor attacks is usually the corporation which receives the major share of Government contracts for that industry.

BIG OFFENDERS

Bethlehem Steel is the outstanding example in the steel industry; Standard Oil of New Jersey is the outstanding enemy of labor in the oil industry; and Douglas Aircraft is adamant in its determination not to recognize organized labor for the aviation industry—yet these very corporations are receiving millions of dollars of Government contracts from which the profits are used to battle organized labor and deny to labor the benefits of all social legislation.

The United States Government now has the sanction of the Supreme Court to issue an Executive Order which would settle the policy of the Federal Administration—that in the public interest no Government contract will be awarded to any corporation which violates the National Labor Relations Act or any other social or labor legislative enactment.

In this manner the workers of the country will receive the benefits of legislation which Congress intended that they enjoy. In addition, by compelling the reactionary corporations to comply with such legislation, guarantees will be established for industrial peace and assurance will be obtained that necessary materials for the Government's national defense will be available because of the elimination of the basic cause of industrial disputes.

Canadian Gold Mine Workers Vote Strike

Kirkland Lake, Ont., Dec. 11.—Voting 332 to 68 in favor of a strike, workers at the profitable Teck-Hughes gold mine have given their answer to the flat refusal of the company to meet with their union to discuss desired wage increases.

The miners are members of Local 420 of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, which has launched a general drive for 15-cent-an-hour wage boosts to meet war-time increases in living costs and taxes.

Notice of the strike vote was communicated immediately to the Minister of Labor, in compliance with Ontario laws, and a strike conciliation board was requested.

Bethlehem Steel Corp. Backtracks, To Meet Union Committees

PITTSBURGH, Dec. 9. — The high-powered campaign of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee is at last having its effect on the management of the Bethlehem Steel Corp.

Backtracking from its previously haughty anti-union stand, the company granted recognition for the first time to local committees representing the SWOC and extended an invitation to SWOC committees to meet with management representatives at each of Bethlehem's plant.

Recognition of the CIO steel union and the invitation to confer with corporation officials was contained in a letter from George Vary, Bethlehem's industrial relations manager, to Clinton Golden, SWOC northeastern regional director.

The letter, dated Nov. 30, brought an immediate reply from Golden indicating that while SWOC is pleased at the concessions won from Bethlehem, it is far from completely satisfied and will push its campaign in the company's mills until a signed contract is obtained.

SEES PROGRESS

Golden's letter asked for a specific reply to whether or not the company is now ready to negotiate a contract with SWOC.

"The progress of our organization campaign at Bethlehem mills can be measured by the extent to which the company makes concessions to its employes," Golden pointed out.

"The present stage in our Bethlehem organizing drive can be compared to the time in our initial general organizing drive when the steel industry conceded vacations with pay and 10% wage increase in 1936. These concessions were made, it has since been generally admitted, to offset the SWOC campaign.

"Such, of course, was not the effect. SWOC recognition and signed union contracts followed in the wake of these concessions in 1936. The same trend of events is now taking place in the Bethlehem campaign, which will come to a climax in the signing of a bona fide union contract between the SWOC and the Bethlehem Steel Corp."

DODGED DELEGATIONS

Two weeks ago, when a SWOC delegation visited New York offices of the company for a collective bargaining session with Pres. Eugene Grace, all executives with power to bargain had disappeared.

At the same time delegations in the various Bethlehem plants found that local management representatives had taken simultaneous run-out powders.

CIO Steel Workers Seek Pact

Halifax, Nova Scotia, Dec. 9. — Increased wages and improved working conditions for workers in the plant of the Dominion Steel & Coal Corporation at Sydney and in other Canadian steel plants were discussed at a conference between Labor Minister McLarty and a CIO delegation headed by Silby Barrett, CIO Canadian representative.

The CIO committee asked for a minimum steel wage of 50c an hour, an eight-hour day and 48-hour week, and time-and-a-half for overtime work.

12,000 Take Strike Vote At 9 Crucible Steel Co. Plants

PITTSBURGH, Dec. 9.—Twelve thousand employes of the Crucible Steel Co. are voting whether to authorize a strike in nine mills operated by the corporation.

The strike poll followed a series of meetings between representatives of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee and the company—negotiations which failed to bring agreement on terms for a contract to succeed the first one entered into during May, 1937.

"The SWOC has tolerated unsatisfactory relations with Crucible Steel for long enough," Clinton S. Golden, SWOC northeast regional director, asserted. "We have tried in every peaceable manner to effect cordial relations with the company, but their antiquated outlook on labor relations has made this agreement impossible.

5-POINT DEMANDS

"The strike vote is being taken only after every other means of reaching a mutually satisfactory agreement has been exhausted."

A vast majority of the workers in Crucible plants belong to the CIO steel union. The ballot being handed the employes points out that the firm has turned thumbs down on all efforts to reach an agreement on five demands: 1: sole bargaining rights; 2: 62½c basic wage; 3: consecutive 40-hour work week beginning Monday and ending Friday; 4: voluntary checkoff of dues; 5: seniority system based on continuous service with the company.

"Refusal of Crucible to agree to any of these points was the only answer we could obtain," Golden said. "This refusal, together with sweeping violations of provisions incorporated in the contract signed by the company in 1937, has prompted our action in issuing the strike ballot."

Two Steel Pacts In Indianapolis

Indianapolis, Ind., Dec. 9—Two important contracts have been signed by the Steel Workers Organizing Committee in this city, according to James Robb, CIO regional director here.

Local 1699 has won an agreement with the American Can Co., providing for sole bargaining rights, seniority and other improvements in working conditions.

Wages and hour conditions have been worked out with Van Camps, Inc., under terms of a previous contract. Under the agreement, the five-day week is instituted and 2½c hourly wage increases have been established for all employes, including the truck drivers.

DROUTH RELIEF

San Antonio—(FP)—More than half of Texas' 250 counties will receive drouth relief in December and January, and 8,000 workers will be employed to assist in the program, the Farm Security Administration has announced.

Akron CIO Program Back On Air Despite 'Code'

AKRON, Dec. 9 (FP) — The Voice of Labor, CIO radio program banned by a local Akron radio station under the code of the Natl. Assn. of Broadcasters, is back on the air over Station WADC, basic outlet for the Columbia network in this part of the country and one of the most powerful stations in northern Ohio.

"The attempt of the radio interests to keep labor off the air has been defeated," said H. R. Lloyd, president of the Akron Industrial Union Council. "Not only do we now have a better outlet in Akron, but we can carry the CIO message to Canton, Warren, Massillon, Youngstown and Cleveland."

Lloyd said the contract will run for a year. The station has agreed to free discussion of so-called controversial questions within the usual limits of radio, he added.

The labor program was cancelled by the small local station on the ground that discussion of labor questions is "controversial" and therefore banned by the code newly adopted by the NAB, self-appointed censor of radio.

Marble Co. Grants CIO Demands

handicaps, the strikers kept up heroic resistance during the bleak New England winter, and picket lines were maintained even when the temperature dropped to 20 degrees below zero.

Because of the AFL's desertion of the workers, the strike loss resulted in disruption of the union throughout the entire Vermont marble area. In February, 1938, however, the Quarry Workers affiliated with the CIO and started a successful drive to reorganize the Vermont marble workers.

The union's case in the Labor Board negotiations was handled by Sec. Lawson and Liam Donlon, acting CIO regional director in New England; Eugene Pederson, one of the strike leaders, and Samuel Angoff, Boston labor lawyer. The company was represented by Mortimer R. Proctor, an executive who is also president of the Vermont state senate, and by Benjamin Williams, another official, who is a former lieutenant-governor of Vermont.

Plan Strike At Icebox Factory

Duluth, Minn., Dec. 9—Following the breakdown of negotiations with the Coolerator Co. here, manufacturers of ice boxes, Coolerator Lodge 1096, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, has filed notice of intention to strike. Under the anti-labor state law passed in Minnesota, unions are required to give ten days' notice before calling a strike.

The union which is demanding wage increases and other improvements claims that the company has been giving them the "run-around" for some weeks.

"Each time we met in negotiations," a member of the negotiating committee said, "we were given the impression that the agreement was acceptable. But each time the apple cart was kicked over."

21c Increases Won for 400 In Newark

Newark, N. J., Dec. 9 — More than 400 city employes here won wage increases of 21 cents an hour when a CIO-sponsored ordinance was passed by the city government. The increases were won for garbage workers organized in the CIO United Construction, Transportation and Allied Workers, Local Industrial Union No. 958.

In addition, the workers won pay for all time worked and transfers of all employes who persist in refusing to join the union. Formerly, workers were paid for eight hours labor even when they put in 10 or 12 or more.

Two short strikes brought reinstatement of 10 garbage loaders who were fired for refusing to load scab trucks. The agreement was negotiated by Wm. J. Carney, CIO regional director, E. L. Howard, field representative, and Abram Flaxer, head of the State, County and Municipal Workers.

Intl. Harvester Men to Vote

Richmond, Ind., Dec. 9 — Close to 1,000 workers at the big Intl. Harvester Co. will have a chance to determine on Dec. 20 if they want the Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, as their sole bargaining agency.

FEWOC leaders were optimistic that the CIO affiliate would win an easy victory, but pointed out "the bigger the vote, the better the contract." The CIO agreement proposal will include provisions for higher wages, strict seniority and no speedup.

Supplies For Strikers

CIO Council Challenges Tory Critics

Crooksville, Ohio, Dec. 16 — Anti-CIO mud-slingers in local business organizations and their allies in AFL unions were warned to change their tactics by the Perry County Industrial Union Council.

Pointing out that the CIO and its national, state and local leaders are dedicated to thoroughly American ideals of better living standards and the protection of democracy.

"Those truly interested in Americanism would be of more value to their community if they would promote the principle that all workers must be paid decent wages and given good working conditions instead of merely singing the song of low-wage advocates," the council statement said.

Closed Shop Pact in Steel

Newark, N. J., Dec. 16 — The Filtration Engineering Corp. has signed a closed shop contract with the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, George Mufson, union representative, announced today.

The agreement provides for a 10c hourly wage increase now and a 10 per cent increase effective June 1. Also included in the pact are the 5-day, 40-hour week, check-off of dues, vacations with pay and seniority rights.

DISCUSS PLANS FOR CIO DRIVE IN SOUTH

Christmas, 1939

THE GLOOMY DECADE is heading for oblivion, with lots of Americans as bad off as they were 10 years ago when the boom collapsed. AT TOP: New York children, their fathers unemployed, demand free clothes from the city as King Winter hits the big city. CENTER: An apple a day doesn't keep the doctor away for Cleveland's jobless; it merely helps to postpone starvation. Federal government sent apples and flour to the Ohio city after state and city budget-balancers permitted thousands to go hungry.

Ohio CIO leaders demanded that Republican Gov. Bricker, held primarily responsible for the crisis, call a special session of the legislature. (See Story Page 8)

Union Leaders, Directors Attend Confab

(See Story Page Three, Column Four)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16 — Methods of speeding the CIO's big organizing campaign throughout the southern states were discussed here at a conference of southern union leaders called by Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization.

Reports of encouraging growth for affiliated unions and of strong desire upon the part of southern workers to gain union protection were related at the meeting.

Concrete plans for a co-ordinated campaign, through which CIO funds and energies can best be used most effectively will be worked out by a committee appointed to discuss the proposals with Pres. John L. Lewis.

American Brass Co. Signs With CIO

WATERBURY, Conn., Dec. 16. — Major gains for CIO workers in American Brass Co. here and at nearby Ansonia and Torrington are listed in the new contract presented to members of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers for ratification today.

The gains, won after long and patient negotiation with the company, include sole union recognition, a system of grievance machinery, a week's paid vacation, improved seniority and pay for reporting to work.

In addition, the local won protection for jobs of workers called to military service, a five-cent per hour bonus for night shift workers, and a system for equalizing hours of work per week.

Wage scales are subject to negotiation on 30 days' notice from either party.

Wage-Hour Chiseller Nailed By U. S.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16 (FP)—Cancellation of a special learners certificate issued to the Wilkes-Barre Hosiery Mills, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., was announced here by the Wage-Hour Administration.

Investigation of a complaint filed by the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, CIO, revealed that the firm was employing 62 experienced workers as "learners" and paying them substandard wages. The firm, in its application, contended it was expanding its plant and wanted to employ 57 new, inexperienced workers.

The firm failed to appear at a hearing and the Wage-Hour Administration cancelled the certificates.

More Wagner Act Violations Linked to Ford

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—Henry Ford, who shares with Tom Girdler the doubtful honor of being the most publicized union hater in the country, got another crack last week in his losing fight to prevent the organization of his workers.

The National Labor Relations Board ordered the Ford Motor Company to bargain collectively upon request with the United Automobile Workers, CIO, as the sole representative of employes in the Ford plant at Long Beach, Calif.

Based upon the finding that the company refused to bargain collectively with the union on March 7 and April 15, 1938, the Board declared that the strike which followed was a direct result of the company's refusal to bargain.

RIGHT TO ORGANIZE

The Board also ordered the Ford Motor Co. to stop interfering with the right of the employes to organize, and to offer to reinstate those employes who went out on strike April 15, 1938, because of the company's "unfair labor practices."

Evidence presented at the NLRB hearing in Los Angeles June 6-16, 1938, revealed that the CIO auto union, whose organization campaign among the employes of the Long Beach plant began early in 1937, had secured membership cards from an overwhelming majority of the employes during the next few weeks.

The union financial secretary produced at the hearing more than 900 cards which he testified had been signed between April and July, 1937.

The Board found that these cards, together with the union dues records, showed that from January 10 to April 15, and "at all times thereafter," the union was the duly designated representative of a majority of the company's employes in the appropriate bargaining unit.

MAJORITY IN UAW

The Board also found that the plant superintendent admitted at a conference in February, 1938, between the union president and several company officials that "there was no discussion as to whether the union represented a majority of the employes in the plant."

In its investigation the Board discovered that less than a month after the UAW local had been chartered and installed, two employes were approached by an assistant foreman who told them they could make some extra money and insure themselves permanent employment if they would form a "company union," which would have official backing and "plenty of money" behind it.

Fight To Save Jobs

NEW YORK TRANSPORT WORKERS, led by Pres. Michael Quill of the transit union, picket New York City Hall demanding job guarantees for 2,800 workers who face unemployment when two elevated lines are dismantled.

Fishermen Ask U. S. Investigate Mob Attacks

BELLINGHAM, Wash., Dec. 16. — Protests against recent vigilante violence in Aberdeen, Washington, and demands for an investigation by the federal government were voiced in resolutions passed at the first annual convention of the International Fishermen & Allied Workers of America held here.

President Harold J. Pritchett of the International Woodworkers, and Howard Costigan, secretary of the Washington Commonwealth Federation, were among the speakers who addressed a civil liberties mass meeting held during the convention.

Delegates representing a combined membership of some 15,000 attended the convention of the young international, which affiliated officially with the CIO in May, 1939, after the conclusion of a referendum on joining the CIO conducted among the various fishermen's units formerly included in the Federated Fishermen's Council.

LISTS PACTS

In his report to the convention summing up the progress made by the UFWA, Secretary-treasurer J. F. Jurich listed a number of important agreements won by the various affiliates.

The delegates went on record in favor of a comprehensive five-year conservation program; a complete survey of herring spawning grounds, and a federal government investigation of crab and cod fisheries in the Bering Sea and Bristol Bay, where the Japanese have undertaken large scale operations.

Among the groups represented at the convention was the Alaska Fishermen's Union, the largest single unit in the International with a total membership of 5,000.

Other large units represented were:

The United Fishermen's Union with a membership of 4,000, the Columbia River Fishermen's Protective Union with 2,300 members, the Pacific Coast Fishermen's Union with 1,700 and the Copper River & Prince William Sound Fishermen's Union with 640.

THREE-WAY CIO supporters are Walter Sings (left) and Willis Edmonds, janitors at CIO headquarters in Washington. Besides working for the CIO, they belong to the CIO Building Service Employes Local Industrial Union, and now they've taken to wearing CIO insignia on their shirts and caps.

Board Raps Maine Shoe Company

Washington, Dec. 16 — Refusal to bargain with the United Shoe Workers, CIO, four months after it won an election at the Clark Shoe Company, Auburn, Maine, was declared a violation of the National Labor Relations Act in a ruling issued here by the Labor Board.

The company was ordered to stop stalling and to bargain collectively upon request with the USW as sole representative of all its employes. Efforts of the ed by the Board which found that the firm kept putting the CIO union off, hoping that in the meantime an "independent" union known as the Lewiston-Auburn Shoe Workers Protective Association, would be successful in enrolling its employes.

Although the USW won an election held in the spring of 1937 with the agreement of the company, defeating the Protective Association by a vote of 343 to 289, the Clark management continuously refused to bargain with the USW and four months after the election contended that the CIO union no longer represented a majority of its employes.

Maverick Acquitted By Jury

San Antonio, Tex., Dec. 16.—It took a jury less than 12 hours to acquit San Antonio's liberal mayor, Maury Maverick, on charges of criminal poll tax proceedings.

Maverick, who was one of the leaders of the liberal bloc in Congress during the last session, had charged that tory politicians were responsible for the case against him. He had been accused of paying the poll tax of members of the garment workers union, and conviction would have meant two to five years' imprisonment.

The mayor had only one comment: "My statement is contained in the verdict of the jury—not guilty."

STAMP PLANS

Washington. — The Dept. of Agriculture has announced that the food stamp plan will be put into effect in Akron, San Francisco, Richmond, Va., and Shelby County, Tenn.

Sides With Employer

Washington, Dec. 16 — AFL representatives on the wage-hour committee setting a minimum wage for the shoe industry, sided with employers in suggesting that the proposed 35c hourly rate not go into effect until next May.

Leaders of the CIO United Shoe Workers took the position that the minimum should apply after Feb. 1.

Eligible for Old Age Benefits? Here's How To Make Application

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—Workers throughout the nation were advised today by the CIO Social Security Committee that applications can now be made to the U. S. Social Security Board for Federal Old Age Insurance benefits.

"Under certain conditions, workers over 65 years of age who have been employed in covered occupations for some time during the past three years may be eligible to receive these benefits," Joseph Kovner, committee executive secretary pointed out.

In addition, wives of these eligible workers who are also over 65 may secure benefits. Under certain other conditions, widows and dependent children of workers who would have been eligible for benefits if they had lived, may be entitled to a small monthly allowance

Kovner advised workers that if they are in any doubt as to their eligibility for benefits, they should make an application, and the Social Security Board will then be able to determine their rights to old age benefits.

FIVE FORMS

The applications for benefits come in five separate forms.
A worker should ask for Form OAC1.
A wife should ask for Form OAC2.
Dependent children should ask for Form OAC4.
A widow should ask for Form OAC5.
An estate, where there are no other persons entitled to the benefits, should ask for Form OAC8.

All these forms are available at the nearest office of the Social Security Board. Unions which wish to secure a supply of the application forms for distribution among their members, may get them from the SSB offices.

Any questions about old age insurance benefits may be sent directly to the CIO Social Security Committee, 1106 Connecticut Ave., Washington, D. C. The committee has recently issued a pamphlet entitled, "Your Rights Under the Federal Old Age Insurance Benefits."

'Probers' of NLRB Hold Forum For Hoary Anti-CIO Fables

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—With almost indecent haste, the Smith committee "investigating" the National Labor Relations Board this week turned itself into a platform for yelping foes of the CIO to wipe off their slanders.

Before the hearing was three days old, the committee had trotted out one of the AFL's tall tale artists to repeat once again for the Tory press ragged "horror" stories of the CIO. Joe Ozanic, still enraged because the United Mine Workers contract negotiated by Pres. John L. Lewis last spring had cut the bottom out of his plans to disrupt the mine industry, hurled a variety of charges at the CIO and at the Labor Board.

Held in reserve for a dull moment was Homer Martin, head of the AFL's minute auto oufit, whose similar union-busting aspirations have ended in failure. Still another witness was John P. Frey, chief of the AFL metal trades department, always eager to red-bait against the CIO and the New Deal governmental agencies.

NOTHING NEW

But for all its promises and all its headlines, this latest drive against organized labor had, by the end of its first week, produced nothing but a collection of quickly-denied charges and a rehash of Labor Board decisions which had been discussed for days during the Senate and House committee hearings on Wagner Act amendments last summer.

CORPORATION LAWYER

Rep. Howard Smith, Virginia anti-New Deal Democrat, a lanky gentleman who constantly nurses a cigar and sports a gaily flowing tie, presides. Chief artist for the prosecution is Edmund Toland, a corporation lawyer who has represented many big companies in their fights to ward off collective bargaining.

Toland conducts the hearing with an eye cocked on the clock to guarantee flashy developments for newspaper deadlines.

Taking a different tack against the CIO, Toland publicized a memorandum which charged that Van A. Bittner, UMW District 17 president, had called for violence against AFL mine unionists during a Labor Day speech in Charleston, W. Va. in 1938.

Bittner, in a denial issued here, pointed out that there had been no union mass meeting in Charleston on that day.

His telegram, which was read into the record, declared:

"I wish to deny completely and emphatically any such statement as attributed to me . . . This so-called memorandum is absolutely false and manufactured out of the whole cloth.

WASN'T THERE

"I was not even in Charleston on Labor Day, 1938. I spoke that day from the same platform as United States Senator M. M. Neely and Vice President Philip Murray of the United Mine Workers of America at Fairmont. I am sure their testimony of what I said that day will be completely contradictory of the

$20,000 Yearly Pay Raise

NEW YORK, Dec. 16. — Another big wage increase — this time for $20,000 a year — has been won by the Textile Workers Union of America, according to Pres. Emil Rieve.

The increase, negotiated with the Roxbury Carpet Co. of Saxonville, Mass., swells to $600,000 the increases won by TWUA for some 15,000 carpet and rug company workers.

Discuss Plans For Campaign In South

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16. — John L. Lewis' goal of a ten million CIO in five years will be realized as far as the South is concerned, CIO delegates to the Southern Organizing Conference held here this week maintain.

Organized labor in the South, they reported, is looking up, and organized labor means the CIO. Delegate after delegate got up at the conference to report progress, to report that the CIO was today a real and growing factor in the economic and social life of the South.

At the same time, none of the speakers underated the obstacles in the way of CIO progress in the South. Thousands of workers are still unorganized. Wages are low and in many areas poverty extreme. Political tie-ins between local government, especially "the law" and exploiting employers are close.

In many sections the low cultural level, brought on by poverty and inadequate schooling, plus the racial question, bring added difficulties. As William Mitch, Mine Workers leader and Regional Director of the Steel Workers, expressed it: "The South is the hardest nut we have to crack in the country. We're cracking it."

COMMITTEE SET UP

Plans and suggestions for an intensive CIO organizing drive, outlined by the delegates, were referred to a committee of the conference, appointed by CIO Director Allen S. Haywood, with Emil Rieve, president of the Textile Workers, chairman, and S. H. Dalrymple, head of the Rubber Workers, John L. Coulter, leader of the Oil Workers, William Mitch of Steel, and Lucy Randolph Mason of Tex-

Campaign In Canneries Under Way

New York, N. Y., Dec. 16 — Plans to double the membership within the next 12 months headlined the actions of the annual convention of District 7 of the CIO Cannery and Agricultural Workers, just concluded here.

Drives will be concentrated in New York, Camden, N. J., (where the huge Campbell's Soup plant is situated) and Philadelphia, with full time organizers in each territory. An organizer will be sent to western New York state in February.

Delegates voted unanimously on resolutions to keep the U. S. out of the present European war, to protect and extend the Wage Hour, Social Security and Wagner Acts, and for more aid to the unemployed. "Unwarranted and slanderous" attacks on the CIO and its leaders by the Dies Committee were condemned.

Leif Dahl was elected president of the District, Hattie Marcy, Wm. Robbins, vice-presidents and Anna O'Brien, secretary-treasurer.

Retail Union Sets Campaign For Members

By FRANK WINN

DETROIT, Dec. 16. — A goal of 1,000,000 members by 1944, as its contribution to the CIO's general drive for 10,000,000 members, was set by the United Retail and Wholesale Employes at its second biennial convention here this week.

The proposal made by President Samuel Wolchok in his report to the convention, and emphasized in his opening address, was greeted with an enthusiastic ovation by the delegates.

In the new streamlined fashion for conventions set by the CIO, the retail and wholesale employes disposed of all matters for consideration, elected officers for the next two years, heard a half-dozen speakers, and completed their business in four days.

RE-ELECT WOLCHOK

President Wolchok was re-elected president by acclamation, as was Secretary John V. Cooney. Delegates staged a 15-minute ovation when Wolchok was officially returned to office for another term.

Principal speaker of the convention, Vice-President Sidney Hillman of the CIO, stressed the need for increased organization and political action in order to protect and extend the gains won by labor in the last three years.

"We want an organized labor movement of 20,000,000 to 25,000,000—not only for our own good but for the good of the nation," he said.

"The country does not appreciate yet the great contribution of the CIO in preventing the 'recession' from becoming another depression by maintaining wage scales. We must do more of that.

"The greatest problem today is still unemployment. Last month we produced more than the high mark of 1929, yet there are still 8,000,000 or 9,000,000 unemployed."

Hillman warned against the of-

Eight-Week Strike Is CIO Victory

Cleveland, Ohio, Dec. 16—An eight-week strike at the Stahl Gear & Manufacturing Company here has ended with another victory for the United Automobile Workers, CIO. All the demands of the striking workers were won in the terms of the settlement.

Another Union Shop Pact In Steel

Ambridge, Pa., Dec. 16. — The Steel Workers Organizing Committee today rolled up its fifth union shop contract in Beaver County in six weeks.

In announcing the agreement, Joseph Timko, SWOC sub-district director, declared: "This again leaves the company and the union free to devote its full energies and attention to the improvement in relations at the plant. The contract is a demonstration of the company's full acceptance of collective bargaining."

Hillman, Mrs. Norton Ask Consumers' Support For Wage-Hour Law

That was the warning given members of the Natl. Consumers League, holding its annual convention here, by Pres. Sidney Hillman of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

The CIO vice-president insisted that only increased purchasing power, made possible through agencies of labor, industry and government, can hope to preserve American democratic forms from possible totalitarian threats.

AID TO DEMOCRACY

Passage and enforcement of the wage-hour law, Hillman continued, insure some degree of well-being and ward off that despair and desperation "which could only result in the breakdown of our democratic processes.

"The wages and hours law is but a modest effort toward overcoming the lag in purchasing consumers' goods," he declared.

Rep. Mary Norton of New Jersey, who heads the House Labor Committee, sent a message to the League meeting warning that organized business is preparing for a grand assault on the wage-hour law at the next session of Congress.

Mrs. Norton named names.

Foes of the wage-hour law, she said, are "the United States Chamber of Commerce, the Associated Farmers of California, and their allies, the packers and canners, and the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers."

Discuss Southern Problems

CIO LEADERS THROUGHOUT THE SOUTH gathered in Washington this week to discuss plans for speeding organization throughout the south. The conference, called by Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood, brought together officials of the textile, clothing, oil, rubber, quarry, furniture, steel, mine, and other unions and regional directors from important southern cities.

Peace on Earth?

Another Christmas season is upon us in which the message of "peace on earth, goodwill to men" has a ring of mockery to it, as human hatred and warfare spread over half the globe.

But if we search for true disciples of peace and goodwill, we do not have to look far beyond the organized labor movement.

Labor unionism is a practical business. Its spokesmen are not much given to preaching. But nevertheless the practical work of labor organization is about the most effective work being done today to realize the ideals of peace and goodwill about which we think at Christmas time.

Consider the program of the CIO. It calls for unity, harmony and cooperative effort among all the workers employed in industry. It unites people of all races, religions and nationalities, emphasizing their common interests and calling for tolerance and goodwill among them as a condition of successful industrial unionism.

Besides promoting peace and goodwill among the millions it organizes, the CIO makes the working people articulate as a group and makes the voice of labor a power in the councils of the nation.

Labor as a group has most to lose and least to gain from war. And in proportion as it is organized, the very principles of unionism incline it to sympathy and cooperation with the working people of all countries.

The work of organizing the unorganized, which the CIO is so successfully undertaking, is therefore one of the greatest contributions being made today toward "peace on earth, goodwill to men."

Can Figures Lie?

An almost classic example of how true figures can give a totally false impression, is presented by a recent release of the National Labor Relations Board on election results.

This release was seized upon by reactionary papers as an excuse for carrying headlines declaring that the AFL was ahead of the CIO in labor board elections, because it stated that in the year ending June 30 the AFL had won 262 elections as against 260 won by the CIO.

But the release failed to state that the AFL victories were mostly in small shops employing but a handful of workers, while the CIO won its victories in big plants employing thousands.

Actually the release was completely misleading. For in the year cited, the CIO received nearly twice as many workers' votes as did the AFL. And if all the facts had been given, any fair headlines would have had to read, "CIO Far Ahead of AFL in NLRB Elections."

In recent months, the CIO lead over the AFL in election results has continued to increase tremendously.

The periodical summaries of Labor Board election results show the CIO consistently running ahead of the AFL by thousands and tens of thousands of votes. The last five reports, for instance, show the CIO lead ranging from two-to-one to as much as 44-to-one.

And in this latest period, covering September to November, CIO unions received 94,809 votes, as compared with only 9,430 received by the AFL.

All of which goes to show that there is more than one way of making anti-CIO propaganda, and that a half truth is often the worst kind of lie.

Come On In!

Looking Ahead

By LEN DE CAUX

Southern Pioneers

MANY of the pioneers of modern science and invention were jeered at, stoned, tortured and generally considered to be possessed of the devil.

When we read the biographies of these great benefactors of mankind, we are amazed to think that such hard-working, honest and sincere people could have been thus abused and misrepresented.

Yet we have only to look around us in the United States today to find a parallel in the treatment accorded to some of our own pioneers of social progress.

Labor organization and collective bargaining are recognized in the law of the land as not only completely legal but also socially beneficial and worthy of encouragement.

Yet in many parts of the United States, labor organizers are still treated as if they were dangerous and wild-eyed agitators. When they enter some unorganized communities, they are hounded as disreputable outsiders, sometimes kidnaped and beaten up, and generally abused in reactionary papers as agents of disorder and disturbers of the peace.

CIO Southern Conference

Anyone who looked in at the recent conference in Washington of Southern CIO organizers could not have failed to be impressed with the contrast between such abuse and the personalities of these labor men.

Here was a group of serious-minded, law-abiding Americans—as upstanding, clean-cut, straightforward and truly respectable as could be assembled from any class or calling.

The subject which they discussed throughout the conference was the ways and means of raising the wages and living standard of the working people throughout the South.

There was not a man or woman among them that did not realize that the work of organization on which they were engaged would bring in its train many far-reaching social benefits, not only in higher living standards, but in better feeling between white and Negro people, in cleaner living and in greater democracy.

But there was none of the self-righteousness and windy generalities of self-proclaimed world-saviors about this gathering of practical labor organizers.

These were people who were doing the basic day-to-day work of building labor organization in the South. They talked in terms of union education, winning new members, negotiating contracts for better conditions—confident that out of such activity is growing a great labor movement through which the working people of the South can speak for themselves and make their democratic contribution to the country as a whole.

Substantial Growth

The representation at this staff conference was in itself evidence of the substantial growth of the CIO in the South.

Leaders of the United Mine Workers were present, speaking for tens of thousands of Southern coal miners, solidly organized under union shop contracts.

Textiles, the biggest industry in the South, had leaders and organizers present to tell of the steady progress of the Textile Workers Union campaign in score of mill towns.

Steel workers, rubber workers, automobile workers, Mississippi boatmen, Gulf seamen, quarry workers, metal miners, furniture workers, clothing workers, timber workers, paper workers, chemical workers, oil workers also had their CIO union representatives present.

This was no convention. It was simply a small staff conference of some of the leading organizers called together to discuss their common problems. Yet their discussion covered nearly the whole range of Southern industry.

Obstacles to Overcome

Encouraging reports were made on the gradual decline of intolerance as labor organization spreads; of better race relations as white and Negro workers learn that they have a common interest in unionism; of cooperation between organized farmers and organized workers, and of labor board elections won and new contracts secured, bringing many improvements in wages and working conditions.

But none of the Southern organizers present minimized the tremendous task which still lies ahead.

Many industries have moved south to avoid union organization and are fighting its development in the South tooth and nail. Wages are still deplorably low. Negroes and whites are still played off against each other, to their mutual disadvantage. Corrupt and reactionary politicians often use the powers of government on the side of union-fighting employers.

And despite all the evidence of the constructive purposes of CIO organization and the high caliber of Southern labor leadership, much of the press still continues its wild misrepresentation and abuse of the pioneers of unionism.

Yet obstacles similar to these have been met and overcome everywhere that the labor movement has developed. The pioneers of every worthy cause have suffered abuse and persecution from the vested interests which they disturb.

But as labor's organized strength grows, social recognition ad political influece follow in its train—until the once abused pioneers are honored by all as benefactors of their fellow men.

Smear Report Splits Dies Committee

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—Internal dissension broke out in full force on the Dies Committee today, following a "report" on allegedly crimson consumer organizations by J. B. Matthews, the committee's research chief.

Rep. Jerry Voorhis, appointed last year as the New Deal member of the committee, made his first public criticism of Dies' methods in a statement asserting that Matthews' report was "purely and simply" his own opinion.

At his press conference this week, Pres. Roosevelt condemned the report, and said the manner in which it had been prepared and released spoke for itself as to the report's validity.

Matthews' statement "was released to the press by a suddenly-appointed one-man sub-committee before other members even knew such a report was in process of preperation," Voorhis angrily charged.

NO HEARINGS HELD

Recalling that "not a single hearing has been held on any of the matters" mentioned in Matthews' report, Rep. Voorhis declared:

"I believe the committee is put in a very difficult position by releasing a report which attempts to brand as Communist intrigue protests against high milk prices, the teaching of young women to be wise buyers, or the efforts of consumers to secure the honesty in advertising which every reputable merchant and business man in America desires as much as the consumers do."

Discussing the manner in which the report was released to the press—Dies had created a sub-committee of one to receive it and make it public—Voorhis said:

"If anything in the world is undemocratic, certainly this procedure is.

NO BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE

"I am utterly unable to see what business a committee on un-American activities has defending advertising as such, regardless of its merits, or attacking consumers counsels or casting discredit upon a properly filed complaint of the Federal Trade Commission against a powerful magazine." Here Voorhis was referring to the FTC's action against Good Housekeeping, a Hearst property.

The organizations "condemned" by Matthews included practically the entire range of consumer groups. Denounced by the Dies research head were Consumers Union, Inc.; the Consumers' Counsel of the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture; the Natl. Consumers Federation; the League of Women Shoppers and a number of other local organizations.

DENIALS FLOOD WASHINGTON

No sooner had Matthews' report been made public than denials began to pour into Washington from all the groups mentioned.

Arthur Kallet of Consumers Union said the "most shocking aspect" of the Matthews' charges was the fact that he has been an executive of Consumers Research, Inc., a competitor of Consumers Union, and was apparently using his government position to "injure those who have come into conflict with him in the past."

Consumers Union was formed after a strike at Consumers' Research, during which Matthews was an active foe of the union.

Tennessee Miners Keep Up Heroic Strike For Contract

VANN JONES

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—Down in the Ducktown basin, where the Tennessee Copper Co. pulls fabulous profits out of the earth, CIO miners and smelter workers have been on strike since July, 1939. They aren't asking for anything very exorbitant; all they want is conditions and relations on the job they used to have before the AFL came along.

Vann D. Jones, member of the Executive Board of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, told the story to THE CIO NEWS when he was here for the southern organizing conference this week. It's a story of patience and solidarity, of faith and hope in the CIO—and utter treason on the part of the AFL.

It goes back to 1933, before there was a CIO, when the workers in the basin started a local of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Union. Unionism was in the air then, conditions were bad, the AFL leaders had still greater depths of treachery left to sink into, and the new local got a contract, without too much trouble.

Under the contract, relations were good and conditions considerably improved. They stayed that way until 1937. In the meantime, the CIO was founded, with the Mine, Mill union one of the founding fathers, AFL leaders embarked on their policy of splitting the labor movement, and orders went out to attack the CIO wherever possible.

BACK TO WORK

The contract came up for renewal in 1937. The company stalled. The union asked for and won an election. In 1939, after waiting a year and three quarters, the local went out on strike, as it had to or face annihilation. Immediately the AFL got to work, for the company. A Federal labor union of foremen and strawbosses was chartered, its president one Dalton, foreman. Its first act was to start a back-to-work movement on the familiar strikebreaking lines. A 25-foot sign stretched across the main street read: "We Solicit Membership of All Who Wish to Return to Work."

The company brought in close to 300 gun thugs and professional strikebreakers, bringing them in violation of Federal law across state lines. They took over the YMCA for barracks.

Workers' homes were raided, picket lines constantly assaulted, union meeting places boarded up, strikers framed on false charges. (Dalton, company foreman and president of the local AFL, is also justice of the peace, before whom CIO strikers come.)

JAIL RECORDS

Two of the scabs have Federal prison records, Vann Jones said, and one of them was sentenced again while on strikebreaking duty. Others are notorious gun toters, bad men, scum of the big cities. The strikers, incidentally, are pure native-born American whites—the kind that Chamber of Commerce speakers and experts on Americanism like to praise in their speeches.

The AFL is an out-and-out company union in the basin, Jones said. "I've had plenty of experience with company outfits," he told The CIO NEWS. "This is the most flagrant case I've ever seen, and the blame lies right at the door of the leadership of the AFL. They came in with one purpose, to smash the CIO and tear down the conditions we had won.

"The CIO workers aren't cracking. Spirit and solidarity are 100 per cent. We'll go back into that plant with CIO banners flying. And we'll teach the AFL and the employers that even the vilest treachery and bad faith can't win.

"We know that workers throughout the whole South are watching our struggle. They're watching to see whether the CIO will win for the working men and women who fill its ranks. They won't be disappointed."

Discuss Plans For Campaign In South

tile as members. The committee was instructed to meet at the earliest possible date to map out the campaign.

CIO GUIDANCE

Many of the delegates, notably Noel Beddow of Steel in Alabama, Yelverton Cowherd, regional director in Louisana, Ray Thomason, Virginia, and others, pointed out the vital importance of CIO guidance in the campaigns. Together with this guidance from CIO, educational work and a wide publicity campaign were stressed by Roy Lawrence, Textile southern director.

AID FOR UCWOC

The basic problem, according to CIO Vice-President Emil Rieve, was "to organize the workers into the CIO. Other problems press heavily on our work in the South. Their solution will come as we organize, not before. We all know the South's problems. They can only be met by building strong CIO unions."

A. D. Lewis, chairman of the Construction Workers Organizing Committee, urged the delegates to renewed efforts in building the newest CIO affiliate, started, he said, "for precisely the same reason the other CIO unions were set up, to organize the unorganized."

Director Haywood, closing the conference, reminded the delegates that the job of organizing the South "can't be done by a national office alone. We need and must have the cooperation of all the men in the field. We've got good men, and I know that good will come from this conference. You're noticing your problems now, because you're organizing.

"When we have organized still more, our enemies will respect us even more than they do today. I know we can organize the South, in spite of the obstacles we have to face. We've done it in other sections. With hard work and cooperation we can do it anywhere we try."

Southern Kidnaping Exposed

Washington, Dec. 16.—Kidnaping and beating is the answer of one Southern employer to a CIO investigation of his habit of firing union members, Noel Beddow, Steel Workers Organizing Committee official in Alabama, reported here.

Beddow told THE CIO NEWS the latest example of anti-union tactics when he showed a letter from O. S. Baxter, sub-regional SWOC director, detailing an account of a beating he received at the Johnson Mfg. Co. in Jefferson City, Tenn.

SEIZED BY 25 MEN

Baxter was investigating the firing of the union men when he was seized by a gang of 25, taken to an outlying road, severly kicked and punched, and told to get out of town for his health.

Incidentally, the CIO is not stopped by such receptions, Beddow said. In another company, the Combustion Engineering Corp., a new contract covering 300 workers in one shop has been signed, giving 100 per cent union recognition, wage raises and other gains.

Unions Rally To Building Drive

By CECIL OWEN

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16—Strength of the entire CIO was mobilized this week behind the drive to organize the construction industry on an industrial union basis.

Wholehearted response came from CIO internationals, councils and regional offices, to recent letters from Chairman A. D. Lewis of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee. The letters outlined specific methods of cooperation.

Several CIO internationals advised that their executive boards were acting on the programs proposed. Hundreds of letters were going forward from International Unions to their locals giving instructions on how to assist the drive in the construction industry.

Union journals were brought into the program and carried special articles, featuring the recent letter of President John L. Lewis, on various aspects of the UCWOC campaign.

AID TO INDUSTRY

The fact that CIO unions produce virtually all the materials that enter into construction gave added impetus to the desire of the entire CIO to assist in bringing industrial unionism to the construction industry. Failure of construction so far to provide homes at reasonable costs for CIO members was another powerful factor behind the CIO emphasis on reorganizing this laggard section of industry.

Millions of Americans, including the bulk of CIO membership, are in the income groups not being provided with proper housing by either government or private industry under existing programs. An aggressive drive to lower construction costs, in which labor is a key factor, is demanded by the CIO.

HOMES FOR ALL

The CIO efforts look toward housing not alone for city dwellers but also for those workers who live in mining centers, textile mill towns, and rural areas, which have been neglected by past efforts in this field. The housing situation in those areas has long been acute.

Greet Chilean Visitors

Chilean Labor Leaders Describe Struggle To Free Workers From Feudalism

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16. — Two young leaders of labor in a South American nation, where 28c-a-week wages are not uncommon, appealed to the CIO this week for moral support in their struggle to better conditions.

Introduced to CIO officials by Miss Kathryn Lewis at a luncheon under the auspices of the CIO Latin-American Relations Committee, the South Americans won immediate sympathy to their cause. The pair—Bernardo Ibanez and Salvador Ocanpo, president and assistant president of the Confederation of Chilean Workers — related with grim sincerity the bitter status of the working population in their country, and told of their aspirations for improvement with the cooperation of the Chilean people's front government.

LIKE NEW DEAL

In introducing the guests—who came to Washington following the inter-American labor conference at Havana—Miss Lewis told of the red smear campaign against the Chilean government, which actually, she asserted, is much like our own New Deal.

Senor Ibanez told his hosts that Chile's present government is the first liberal regime in the nation's 400-year history.

"For over 100 years of our life as an independent country," he said, "we have been under the tutelage of a succession of conservative governments which favored a policy of putting natural resources in the hands of foreign capital, while exploiting the workers at home."

Chile's two big industries are nitrates and copper. Both are owned and controlled by foreign companies, which have little use for the present government or its progressive policies.

"Kathryn Lewis has had an opportunity to see the extremely low wages, to see the bad homes in which the workers live, the conditions of undernourishment and poor clothing," Ibanez said.

UNIONS GROW

In recent years, he continued, the Confederation of Chilean Workers has succeeded in enrolling 300,000 of the nation's 350,000 industrial workers, and of securing certain favorable legislation for the unions. Despite the fact that under Chile's semi-fascist "Labor Code" — which the government has not yet got around to changing — industrial unionism is forbidden, the workers have managed to win wage increases from the big copper and nitrate interests. In all, a $3,000,000 increase over 11 months has been gained.

"But our country is essentially agricultural," Ibanez explained. "Most of the population is employed on big estates. Some 700,000 workers live on farms owned by only 500 families, and the conditions are feudal.

4c-A-DAY WAGES

"The workers on these estates have incredibly low wage levels. A majority of these 700,000 farmers and workers receive between 4c and 8c a day."

In the past, Senor Ibanez related, the industrial workers have had a difficult time in getting together with their brothers on the farms.

"Our aim," he said, "is to establish an industrial union like the CIO and bring the farm workers into the sphere of organized labor. We are engaged in a struggle to bring at least an elementary education to the thousands of people, who have been practically outside the realm of civilization."

MANY WORKERS KILLED

Salvador Ocanpo, like Ibanez, just 37 years old, and a veteran of the linotypers' union, described the reaction which had held Chilean labor in its clutches for many years.

From 1930 to 1936, he said, "15,000 members and 400 leaders of labor, were shot." Now, with the People's Front Government helping the cause of the workers, Chile is faced with Tory enemies both outside its boundaries and at home. He pleaded for support of the Chilean government by the democratic forces in the United States, and described the CIO as a force for progress throughout all Latin America.

In welcoming the guests, Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization, told of American workers' wish to "cooperate with the Latin American republics."

"Labor in the western hemisphere can be an example for the remainder of the world by cementing present peaceful relationships," Haywood declared. "We want closer collaboration with you and we stand ready to cooperate with you on all problems of national interest."

Senor Ibanez, his wife and Senor Ocanpo, were guests at the CIO southern conference the same day. Later they returned to New York preparatory to returning to their native country.

fensive the employers will take with improvement in business.

"There has been so much improvement of business that leaders of the National Association of Manufacturers are again ready to throw their crutches at the doctor who was able to heal their wounds.

"There is only one way to give everyone an opportunity to work —by increasing the purchasing power of the millions."

WELCOMED TO DETROIT

The convention, first CIO convention to be held here, was given an enthusiastic welcome by the powerful labor movement of Detroit.

President R. J. Thomas of the UAW-CIO promised that in their organizational drive in the retail stores of Detroit, they would have the full support of 200,000 auto workers.

Regional Director August Scholle opened the convention and assisted President Wolchok as chairman throughout the sessions.

FOR PEACE

"While we hope and pray for the triumph of forces of light and democracy in Europe, we cannot aid this victory by entering the bloody inferno," President Wolchok said. "I do not believe that America's entry into this war would achieve international democracy. We must work and pray that we neither today nor in the future shall be confronted with this ugliness."

BROPHY SPEAKS

John Brophy, director of local industrial unions, also stressed the need for America to stay out of war.

"We condemn the brutality of a Nazi Germany on the march and we condemn a Soviet Union turned imperialistic," he said. "We want peace for America and for the world."

HAYWOOD'S PLEA

CIO Organizational Director Allan S. Haywood made a plea for reaching the 10,000,000 goal set at the CIO convention.

Pointing to the various reactionary forces moving into action throughout the nation, he said, "We've got to tighten up our belts and fight for industrial unionism. If you get out and organize 6,000,000 more members, you won't have to beg for peace in the labor movement — you'll command peace."

Pres. Wolchok also reported that membership had grown greatly since the last convention and the union has locals in 37 states. Wage increases of nearly $2,000,000 in the department store field alone have been won in the last year, he said.

The President recommended intensified activity in the three main divisions of the union — department stores, wholesale and warehouse, and chain stores.

Labor Board 'Probers' Hear Anti-CIO Fables

obvious untruthfulness of the statement contained in the memorandum of Phillips.

"I wish also to protest the unfairness of your committee in permitting the public villification of my character and that of the United Mine Workers of America, particularly so when the only basis consists of the unsolicited use of my name on a piece of paper found in somebody's files. I am sending this telegram to be made a part of your committee record."

Stumbling block to Toland's attempted anti-CIO campaign, however, was Cong. Abe Murdock of Utah, longtime liberal and friend of labor who is a member of the investigating committee.

As Ozanic spun his fanciful tales about the United Mine Workers, Murdock interrupted with questions obviously annoying to the AFL stooge. Ozanic objected to the miners signing an industry-wide contract, and to the Labor Board's certifying multi-plant or multi-mine groups as collective bargaining units.

But, Murdock pointed out, Ozanic's own group has a contract with an Illinois operators' association, just as the UMW has on a larger scale.

OZANIC WILTS

Ozanic wilted further when Murdock recalled a resolution passed by nine AFL mine locals in Collinsville, Ill., last January, which defended the Wagner Act against amendments desired by "reactionary organizations." Ozanic alibied that he had not heard about that.

The Labor Reader:

National Health

By C. W. FOWLER

The health of the United States, despite cheerful speeches and Chamber of Commerce publicity, is not good. Needless sickness, disability and premature death are the lot of millions of American people. The workers and farmers suffer especially—to a degree that would startle the most optimistic, if it were fully known.

Most of the suffering is needless, brought on by economic and social conditions rather than by fate, as John A. Kingsbury, author of "Health in Handcuffs," points out. "We pay too heavy a price," he writes, "in loss of money, economic strength, vigor, intellectual force, social security and human happiness, for needless sickness and disability.

"In every community, whether in the city or on the farm, in the North or in the South, pain and suffering and premature death cry shame to our civilization. We can afford good health for everyone; we cannot afford not to have it. A health program for our democracy is a challenge to our statesmanship."

A MATTER OF ECONOMICS

This is not the fault of the science of medicine. Diseases that lay low our people are not incurable. The fault lies with the distribution of medical service, with the distribution of income needed to buy that service—with the fact that medical service is sold in America as motor cars and groceries are sold, on a strictly cash basis. No money, no automobile, and, according to author Kingsbury—no money, no health. For example:

Seventeen million people live in communities without hospital service of any kind, other millions can't afford those that exist, free clinics are utterly inadequate for those that live in communities equipped with hospitals. How does this happen? According to Kingsbury, it happens for a very basic and simple reason—these millions of people lack the money to buy medical service.

Forty million people live in families with an income of less than $800 per year. Half of them get sick each year, one-fifth seriously so. Of the seriously ill, Kingsbury says, close to half will get no medical attention whatever.

The kids suffer most. Of all U. S. children, six in 1,000 are crippled by diseases that could be cured or alleviated with proper care. One per cent have curable heart disease. One-third have bad eyesight, two-thirds have had bad teeth, five per cent are deaf—all curable, with proper care and adequate diet.

A PROGRAM FOR HEALTH

The United States cannot afford this huge wastage of human resources, as Kingsbury points out and every authority agrees. At a rough estimate, our neglect of the national health costs us more than $10,000,000,000 annually—almost as much as the Federal budget.

Yet little is done. We have no national health insurance. Medical service is still a cash commodity distributed on a scarcity basis. And the American Medical Assn., dominated by the most Tory wing of the profession, proposes to keep it so.

The AMA, Kingsbury declares, has functioned in this country to keep the advances of medical science away from the people. It has fought every attempt to spread medical benefits to the vast majority in the lower income groups. It opposed the Wagner National Health Bill, a small beginning at a program. It has fought every kind of group health scheme so far put forward—to the point where the U. S. Dept. of Justice has indicted it as a monopoly "in restraint of trade."

NECESSARY STEPS

The necessary program, as put forward by Kingsbury, would provide increased hospitals, maternal and child health services, health insurance, greater public health service, and a medical economics that would bring health to those most needing it and least able to pay. Over a period of years, it would cost $200,000,000—less than the price of three good battleships.

Such a program has been endorsed by the CIO at two conventions as a minimum. On its realization depends a beginning toward health for the American people—the workers and farmers who make up the nation and who today cannot buy the benefits that medical science has made available—at a price.

Say U. S. Maritime Body Sacrifices Seamen's Jobs

New York, Dec. 16 — U. S. Maritime Commission policy of allowing diversion of American tourist cruise business to foreign ships while American boats lie idle and seamen are on the beach was sharply criticized today by Joseph Curran, CIO Natl. Maritime Union president.

Two large U. S. ships are now lying idle in New York docks, Curran said, while two foreign ships are busy booking passengers for a West Indies cruise. When the NMU proposed to use U. S. ships tied up by the neutrality revision for such business, the Maritime Commission declared it was "impossible," Curran pointed out.

"Now, it appears," he said, "that it was impossible for American ships, manned by NMU seamen, but possible for foreign ships.

"If the Washington and the Manhattan are put back into service, between 1,100 and 1,200 seamen would be reemployed. Also some $300,000 in American money, which will be turned over to foreign companies under the present arrangement, would be kept in this country."

State of Indiana Backs Strikers In 'Death Mill' Struggle

EAST CHICAGO, Ind., Dec. 16.—State support for the grim "men against death" strike at the Harbison-Walker Refractories Co. plant came today as union leaders compiled evidence revealing managers of the plant as callous to the fatal menace of silicosis.

After meeting with officials of Local 12,120, District 50, United Mine Workers, and management representatives, State Labor Commissioner Thomas Hutson declared:

"I wish it to be understood that the dust issue is no longer an issue in these negotiations (for a contract). The State of Indiana shall insist that the working conditions in this plant shall be corrected.

ULTIMATUM

"It makes no difference what decision is reached or what compromises are made, the company will not be allowed to operate this plant until it is made safe for the men to work in.

"Furthermore the State will insist that accredited engineers shall be called in for a survey of the plant. On the basis of their survey a code shall be set up to immediately put into effect preventative measures, so that such a situation as here exists shall not again occur in Indiana."

35 DEATHS

The commissioner's support for the union demands followed submission by Rudy Hanson, District 50 organizer, of statistics showing:

1. 35 attested silicosis deaths in the plant in 12 years.
2. Evidence that the Harbison-Walker Co. evaded the state occupational disease law.
3. Illegal refusal by the company to pay compensation in 13 cases to widows of men who had died of silicosis or tuberculosis.

Every one of these widows was entitled to 300 weeks' compensation, Hanson said, and before the men died they were entitled to 500 weeks' compensation.

COMPANY STUBBORN

At the same time, Hanson sent copies of agreements and releases which the company had forced the men to sign when it was found they were "dusted"—ill with silicosis.

In negotiations with the union strike committee, while Huston and his assistant sat in, the company flatly refused the strikers' proposals for a 5c hourly wage increase and vacations with pay. Instead, it offered a scattering of small wage increases throughout the plant.

Negotiations broke off when the company turned down a compromise 2½c - wage raise suggested by the state labor commissioner, and so the strike continues into its sixth week.

Tell Labor Dept.'s Fight Against Diseases

In Philadelphia, not long ago, a worker in a printing establishment died of benzol poisoning.

In New York State's Labor Department, the experts in the Industrial Hygiene Division heard reports of the case; learned that it had been traced to a new fast-drying ink containing benzol, which is known for its poisonous effects. So they checked at once to see whether these new inks were being used in New York printing establishments. In three large plants, the same inks were in use. One man, from one of those plants, had already died of acute benzol poisoning.

MADE EXAMINATION

The Industrial Hygiene Division got busy. It has the habit and experience of working with both employers' and labor organizations in the industry. It made physical examinations of all the workers in the three plants. The examinations showed again the danger of the benzol-containing inks. The Division recommended discontinuing the use of these inks, and the employers agreed to do that.

At a union meeting, the Director of the Industrial Hygiene unit explained to the men the danger they were exposed to, and what was being done to fight it. One worker had died, but others who needed medical care or hospitalization got it, and soon they were back on their feet. None of them lost their jobs. Many lives were saved.

NEW BOOKLET

That was all in the day's routine for the doctors, chemists and engineers of the New York Department of Labor, whose work is described in "The Work of an Industrial Hygiene Division in a State Department of Labor," a new pamphlet issued by the Division of Labor Standards of the U. S. Department of Labor. Written in non-technical language, this pamphlet is available without charge from the Division of Labor Standards, Department of Labor, Washington.

The varied activities of the Industrial Hygiene Division include checking up on new industrial diseases, tracing them to their source; developing safe production methods to protect workers. The Industrial Hygiene Division assists committees of labor and industry representatives, who formulate safety codes for industrial operations in specific trades.

Its laboratories test air samples, or chemical and physical substances that workers are exposed to. It tests safety devices both in the laboratory and under actual working conditions. It sits in on workmen's compensation cases, furnishing the medical opinion that is not only impartial but expert in diagnosing the worker's condition and determining whether or not it resulted from exposure during employment.

Ohio CIO Demands Bricker Act In Crisis

Seek Legislative Session; Cities In Distress

CIO Demands

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Dec. 16 —Ohio CIO leaders today reiterated their demand that Republican Gov. John Bricker call a special session of the legislature to deal with the state's relief emergency.

Leaders of the Ohio Industrial Union Council, of which John Owens is president, announced plans to contact members of the legislature to explain labor's views about the relief crisis, and to enlist the support of clergymen in their anti-starvation campaign.

City officials said that while the present crisis had abated somewhat, more emergencies would occur if the governor does not retreat from his position that the municipalities have exhausted all methods of raising funds for the jobless.

Union and municipal officials say that the cities are unable to take any action because of the condition of their finances, and that further help must come from the state government.

Cities Hit

Toledo, Dec. 16. (FP)—In Cleveland 60,000 reliefers subsist on flour and apples. In Toledo, needy families are scavenging among the city refuse for food. Hundreds of communities large and small report financial distress.

Schools are closed. WPA projects are being pared for lack of matching funds. The rising business index has had thus far no tangible relation to the pressing problems of unemployment and starvation.

But Gov. John Bricker, Republican, replying to criticism, says: "Everything is all right in Ohio."

George B. Chandler, Chamber of Commerce executive, adds a piping contralto measure of encouragement: "Ohio is in excellent shape. It is a step toward turning back the responsibility for poor relief to the local districts where it belongs. That is local self-government at its best."

Toledo's city council is wondering how to raise money to stem a growing tide of evictions. Hundreds of needy families are without funds to meet rent payments. Before relief was stopped last September, the city was giving rent relief to 792 families. The need of rent relief is greater than ever at present, but no one knows where money to meet this emergency can be raised.

SCHOOLS AFFECTED

Grocers are suing the city to recover $560,000 for food advanced on relief orders issued in the past. The board of education, which closed the schools on Thanksgiving, is considering the possibility of a 32-week term next year, and of lopping off medical, kindergarten and other departments—once the boast of the Toledo school system.

In its progress towards pauperization, Toledo rehearses in its small way the experiences of the state at large, whose relief load stands at 100,000 cases as compared with 82,700 a year ago. WPA trimmed its payroll for the state from 267,900 persons a year ago to 137,200 at present, forcing added thousands on relief.

But Bricker continues his defiance of the demand by the cities for a special session of the legislature to study the situation and act. "Everything is all right in Ohio," is his happy watchword.

Marine Union Will Appeal Decision

New York, Dec. 16 — A new decision by the Labor Board on the Calmar case, by which the Board ruled that union men could be legally discharged for membership in the Natl. Maritime Union, will be appealed to the courts, the CIO seamens' union announced here.

Some of the men were fired for a sitdown strike in 1937, the NMU said, and the remainder for membership in the union, the employer taking the position that there was a justified "fear" of the union.

"The injection of the 'fear' principle into a case of this kind," NMU President Joseph Curran declared, "is a violation of a fundamental concept of Anglo-Saxon common law. It opens the way to all sorts of strange and uncanny 'fears' of trade-unionism by labor-hating employers. Certainly if an employer's fear of strikes is ground for firing employes, no union can exist.

Furniture Union Marks Birthday

New York, Dec. 16 — Congratulations from affiliated local unions all over the country were sent to the national office of the United Furniture Workers, CIO, this week on the occasion of the second birthday of the union.

Local 34, Jamestown, N. Y., pledged "continued support of the program of UFWA to bring better wages and conditions to the workers of our industry."

Philadelphia Local 37, commended the international union on "its completion of two years of energetic and fruitful work on behalf of the exploited workers in the furniture industry", and Local 45B, New York, voiced its appreciation of "the benefits of a vast international union" and gave as its motto, "the CIO slogan of ten million by '44".

From Columbiana, Ohio, came a telegram of salutations to President Morris Muster and all the officers of the UFWA, whose "leadership and success have led us in the right direction of a bigger and better union and greater understanding.

Form Steel Council

Sydney, Nova Scotia, Dec. 16 —A joint council of Steel Workers Organizing Committee lodges has been formed in the province's steel industry. The council was organized to "promote workmanship, education and organization among the workers."

Three lodges comprise the council which will act as spokesman for some 4,500 workers in Nova Scotia's steel industry.

Mine Union Leader Elected in Nova Scotia

HALIFAX, N. S., Dec. 16.—Direct political action by CIO workers in Nova Scotia has just sent Douglas McDonald to the provincial legislature in a decisive victory for labor at the polls.

McDonald is New Waterford Sub-District Board Member of the United Mine Workers of America.

The contest was the first in Nova Scotia since District 26 of the U.M.W. in convention at Truro in August, 1938, affiliated with the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation party.

The seat was formerly held by Hon. Michael Dwyer, minister of mines, who resigned to become president of the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, thereby necessitating a by-election.

Victory of the Labor-CCF candidate over two opponents drew from Federal CCF leader J. S. Woodsworth the statement that "McDonald's election undoubtedly will mean that the working people, who are in a great majority in that section of Cape Breton, will have a real voice in governing themselves."

Tory 'Farmers' Declare War On All Unions

STOCKTON, Calif., Dec. 16. — The Associated Farmers, big-business controlled vigilante outfit, has declared formal war on organized labor.

Announcing a determination to branch out from California into the national political arena, the annual convention of the outfit came forward with a program for outlawing, among other things, the five-day week, closed shop, hiring halls, secondary boycotts and the naming of hot cargoes.

In a flock of resolutions which ran the whole gaunt of reactionary emotions, Associated Farmers charged that the Labor Board is "nothing but a tool of the CIO"; accused liberal Gov. Olson of selling out to "subversive interests" because he is trying to help the migratory farm workers; and censured the state employment service for refusing tc act as a scab agency.

TIED TO BOSSES

New evidence of the close tie-up between the AF and the big anti-union industrial interests of West Coast cities came in the election of Hank Strobel as new president.

Strobel, who won his spurs by organizing unprecedented violence during the 1936 Salinas lettuce strike, declared:

"I would be derelict in my duty if I did not extend thanks to employer groups in metropolitan areas, who time and again have rendered valuable aid to our committees."

League Unit Opposes Tory For Bench

Barre, Vt., Dec. 16—Vigorous opposition to the suggested appointment of either James Leamy of Rutland, Matthew Leary or Joseph McNamara of Burlington to succeed Judge Harland B. Howe, slated for retirement from the U. S. District Court of Vermont, was expressed in a telegram sent to President Roosevelt by the Washington County unit of Labor's Non-Partisan League.

The League is backing John A. Gordon, who has consistently supported the cause of labor in Vermont. The telegram was signed by League Chairman John A. Lawson, who is also secretary-treasurer of the Quarry Workers International Union, CIO, and Secretary James F. Christie.

"Mr. Gordon has consistently supported the New Deal and the President," the telegram said. "He has fought for progressive legislation and supported the interests of the working people of Vermont."

New Legislative Program Urges Jobs, Peace, Civil, Rights Protection

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23—The CIO, through Pres. John L. Lewis, today pressed forward its legislative program for the coming session of Congress—a program aimed at keeping the nation out of foreign wars, while tackling the unemployment problem and other basic domestic needs.

Drawn up by the CIO legislative committee, which met in Washington last week for the purpose, the program is a clarion call to all progressive groups throughout the country.

Highlights of the program follow:

EUROPEAN WAR: "There can be no justification for the U. S. being dragged into the quarrels of foreign nations . . . Congress must not permit any policy . . . which may in any way lead toward involvement of the U. S. . . ."

RECOMMEND CONFERENCE

UNEMPLOYMENT: "There cannot be any permanent prosperity or industrial peace in this country as long as we have staring us in the face the misery and suffering of 9,500,000 unemployed people." Recommends national conference, immediate minimum of 3,000,000 federal aid jobs.

WORKERS' RIGHTS: Three changes in Wagner Act to strengthen it, criminal penalties and end to government contracts for violators, end to Labor Board tactics of splitting industrial unions. Passage of LaFollette-Thomas bill to outlaw labor spies, professional finks, strikebreakers.

WAGES AND HOURS: No amendments, since they are proposed by employers "using the guise of farmers to exclude" industrial workers.

BETTER SOCIAL SECURITY LAWS

SOCIAL SECURITY: Must be broadened to "provide protection for the American people against the inevitable hazards of modern industrial life" and to spread "excess national wealth and income."

HOUSING, HEALTH: One million new housing units per year, 300,000 built by Federal government. A national health and industrial hygiene program.

TAXATION: Basic changes in present tax policy, to take burden from backs of workers and consumers. "The national economy can never be healthy until a real and substantial adjustment is made in our tax structure."

Plan Maritime Drive On Great Lakes

BUFFALO, N. Y., Dec. 23.—National Maritime Union organizing forces will be concentrated in a Great Lakes organizing drive next season, according to Joseph Curran, NMU president, in his closing speech to the Great Lakes NMU conference just concluded here.

The union, Curran said, was in better shape than ever before, having weathered all the attacks of a combined employer-stool pigeon—government agency assault unequalled in labor history.

"The NMU is in deep water and sailing ahead weathering two years of the worst attacks any union ever faced," he said. "First the shipowners tried to break us from the inside. This failed when their disrupters were ousted. Then the Maritime Commission and the Bureau of Navigation tried to destroy us—and failed."

The AFL did its bit too, Curran declared, when, after wailing about CIO "dualism," top AFL leaders chartered Lundberg's splinter outfit from the wreckage of the old and discredited Intl. Seamens Union under the romantic name of Seafarers Intl. Union.

Who Backs 'Associated Farmers'?

(See Story Page 8)

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 23—Who supports the reactionary "Associated Farmers," which is now planning a drive to spread its anti-union organization throughout the country?

LaFollette Committee investigators, checking into the outfits finances, learned that contributions between 1934-39 amounted to $77,941.51.

Leading contributors among the "farmers" were the Southern Pacific and Santa Fe railroads, the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., the San Francisco Industrial Assn., Southern Californians, Inc., three big oil companies, four banks, the Canners League of California, the Dried Fruits Assns. and three large sugar companies.

Nation's Newsmen Mourn Death of Broun

Took Greatest Pride In Aid To Guild

(Special to The CIO NEWS)

NEW YORK, Dec. 23—Heywood Broun regarded the American Newspaper Guild as his one enduring work. His death, at the age of 51, came six years and three days after he was elected the first president of the Guild, at its constitutional meeting in Washington, on Dec. 15, 1933. The vote was 22 to 16.

There was a contest for the office then, but none at the six succeeding conventions. The election of President Broun by acclamation had become a matter of routine which left its imprint of harmony and good will on all delegates on the final day of the sessions.

Upon his death editorial writers commented on Broun the first, the man who was a brilliant sports writer, drama critic and essayist; and Broun the second, the fighting liberal dating from his columns on the Sacco-Vanzetti case. Heywood Broun himself would have eagerly pointed out to them Broun the third, the man they passed up. This was Broun the labor leader, the president of an international union and member of the executive board of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

COLUMN WAS MILEPOST

If his columns can be regarded as career mileposts, then one he wrote for the Aug. 7, 1933 World-Telegram marked the appearance of Broun the labor leader. In this he quoted at length from a letter, supposedly from an unemployed reporter, who wrote of newspapers boosting the NRA and themselves cheating NRA aims, and of newspapermen working for romance, a byline and pat on the back while their families starved.

The column concluded with this paragraph:

"But the fact that newspaper editors and owners are genial folk should hardly stand in the way of the organization of a newspaper writers' union. There should be one. Beginning at nine o'clock on the morning of October 1st, I am going to do the best I can to help in getting one up . . ."

Little more than a year later the ANG was engaged in its first major strike, against the Newark Ledger, and Broun was spending hours on the picket line, in the courts and on other fronts in that 19 weeks' fight.

PUBLISHERS SCOFFED

Publishers and editors who promoted the conception of Broun as a genial dilletante, once regarded his espousal of the Guild cause as a brief cycle in the life of a "crusader." Roy Howard, Broun's employer on the Scripps-Howard newspapers, warned a staff meeting at the World-Telegram in 1934 not to be "misled" into the Guild by Broun — he was a fly-by-night fellow lacking the ability to maintain interest in any one project! Broun, not present at the meeting, was told about the remark.

"Well," he said, "Roy will find out soon enough that this time I'm in for the duration."

The column in which Broun proposed the formation of a "newspaper writers' union" did not bring about Broun's dismissal, but it was the beginning of an activity which had much to do with the refusal of the Scripps-Howard organization to renew the contract which expired shortly before Broun's death.

LEFT SCRIPPS-HOWARD

Genially, Broun bade farewell to the World-Telegram in his column of Dec. 14. He went to the New York Post. His first column for that paper appeared the next day. This was his last. Death came on Dec. 18.

Only once did Broun give vent to his deep feeling over the part he had in creating the American Newspaper Guild. This was in a column he wrote for the New Republic in August, 1938, in answer to one of the periodical attacks his fellow columnist, Westbrook Pegler made upon him. At that time Broun said:

PROUD OF GUILD

"I was one of the founders of the American Newspaper Guild and it is the only important work I ever did in my life. I am proud of the fact that I have been five times unanimously elected as president.

"That doesn't mean that I have made great sacrifices for the Guild, I haven't. In the last couple of years I have loafed shamefully. But once upon a time I worked hard on Guild business. Self interest actuated me. The Guild has given me more than I ever could give the Guild. When the Guild came along I was just a fat slob. Now I'm not all slob.

"I came into the newspaper business with a brass check in my hand . . . The Guild is making it possible for all of us to lift up our hands and show that we are no longer palming the base metal of prostitution."

'CITY AT HALF-STAFF'

A visitor to New York several days after Broun's death remarked that the "whole city was at half staff."

Seldom have expressions of grief over the death of a man come from so wide a cross-section of American life. Both publisher Roy Howard and President Carl Randau of the New York Guild named the American Newspaper Guild as Broun's "monument." In his radio broadcast, H. V. Kaltenborn said that "no individual ever did more to help run-of-the-mill reporters and editors. No one ever needed a labor union more than they did. Heywood Broun created it."

Their sense of personal loss was expressed by President and Mrs. Roosevelt, by members of the cabinet, and by John L. Lewis. Guild units, Guild locals and their leaders and union leaders outside the Guild sent condolences to the Broun family at ANG headquarters.

Thousands of persons from all walks of life attended the funeral in St. Patrick's Cathedral on New York's Fifth Avenue. John Brophy represented the National CIO at the services.

Heywood Broun In Action

Pres. Lewis, Guild Praise His Work

Washington, Dec. 23—CIO Pres. John L. Lewis sent the following message to Mrs. Heywood Broun:

"With millions of others, I am shocked to learn of the passing of your distinguished husband.

"For long years I have known him both as a co-worker in the labor movement and as a warm personal friend. Every American has been the beneficiary of Heywood Broun's mind and pen in his constructive contributions in the field of modern journalism and advanced social thought.

"Countless men and women throughout our country will mourn with you in his passing and cherish his memory.

"JOHN L. LEWIS"

New York, Dec. 23 — The following statement was issued by the American Newspaper Guild, CIO, on the death of Pres. Heywood Broun:

"The deep sense of loss experienced by the American Newspaper Guild in the death of President Heywood Broun unquestionably is shared by all the working press of America. As founder of the Guild, he made the largest single contribution to their welfare. He considered organization of newspapermen and women a natural climax and enduring expression of his lifelong fight for liberalism in America.

"His genuine affection for everybody who worked for a living in the newspaper industry made him a real and personal friend to even those Guildsmen who never enjoyed the pleasure of meeting him.

NATURAL LEADER

"Endowed with a talent that overshadowed others and enriched with a background of experience that included exploitation of that talent before he achieved recognition, he became the natural leader of a movement designed to put an end to exploitation.

". . . Heywood Broun led the American Newspaper Guild on a progressive march. The test of the greatness of his leadership lay in his stimulation of leadership in others so that what he founded might endure.

"He had great meaning to the entire labor movement and both in and out of the Guild he was a forceful advocate of union organization. His death leaves a great void in the progressive life of America."

Lumbermen Re-Elect Officials

Seattle, Wash., Dec. 23 — All officers of the CIO Intl. Woodworkers of America have been re-elected to office, the union announced.

The trio of officials who were retained by the membership are Pres. Harold J. Pritchett, Vice-Pres. O. M. Orton and Sec.-Treas. Bertel J. McCarty.

Hearst Strikers Fight New Thuggery

CHICAGO, Dec. 23 — Striking Hearst newspapermen are pressing contempt of court proceedings against the millionaire publisher, charging that his goons have violated an injunction prohibiting the use of violence against the strikers.

Eighteen attacks upon strikers within the past two weeks brought this new move by the Chicago Newspaper Guild in the year-old struggled for job security on the Herald-American here.

The new outburst of Hearst terrorism included the attempted murder of a driver of the Guild's sound truck. A car full of gunmen curbed the Guild's machine and opened fire on it. A bullet struck the car door, just a half inch below the window glass.

Guildsmen are now offering rewards totalling $1,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the persons responsible for the violence.

The Hearst paper is still losing advertising, both compared with a year ago and with the other papers in Chicago.

Greek Fur Workers Call Walkout

New York, Dec. 23 — Workers in 20 fur shops of the United Greek Manufacturers Association have gone on strike to win union contracts, Greek Local 70 of the Furriers Joint Council announced this week. The Local is affiliated with the Intl. Fur & Leather Workers, CIO.

The strike began last month when four shops walked out November 17, followed before the month was out by 14 others. Breakdown of prolonged negotiations with the employers who refused to sign a contract with the Local precipitated the strike.

FOUGHT UNION

The union charges that the Association members broke the terms of the agreement settling the 1938 general strike, and tried, unsuccessfully, to get an injunction aginst Local 70 and the Joint Council.

"Members of the United Greek Manufacturers Association believed they could operate open shops right in the fur market in defiance of Local 70, the Joint Council and of the established union standards in the trade," a statement issued by the union declared.

Labor Spying Booms In Cleveland

By TED COX

Cleveland, Dec. 23 — Big shot Cleveland industrialists, bankers and newspaper editors have brought together their enormous financial resources and enlisted government representatives to organize a widespread spy system against Cleveland working people.

They have reorganized labor spying in the city. Private labor spy systems were almost completely outlawed following the exposures by the LaFollette Civil Liberties Committee, but today thousand of dollars are again being poured into a system whereby industrialists may spy on the ordinary citizen who work for a living.

In addition to the large scale financing of this spy plot, the suburban financial and industrial bosses acquired the services of both city and federal authorities.

FOMENT PLOT

Industrialists are paying 25c. per head on each employe to hire stoolpigeons to watch, spy on and try to frighten the workers.

Reports indicate that bosses and stools are fomenting "sabotage plots" to frame ordinary workers and justify the spy system in the eyes of the public.

The plot seems to be part of a new, streamlined plan to wreck wages, working conditions and industrial democracy as established by unions. The war situation-although the United States is not engaged in war and American people are determined to oppose war campaigns—is used as an excuse for this attack and workers and their organizations.

Police have made demands upon at least two high union officials for the names and addresses of all union leaders in Cleveland, giving rise to speculation that they may plan to raid homes if the anti-labor drive actually reaches the stage of public hysteria as it did in the days of the Palmer raids.

These facts and conclusions were listed by union leaders today as they continued their fight to defend the civil liberties of working people in Cleveland.

UNION DEMANDS

The fight of union leaders for preservation of civil liberties included:

Demands by A. E. Stevenson, secretary of the Cleveland Industrial Union Council, that Mayor Harold H. Burton dismiss Safety Director Eliot Ness for his participation in the secret, anti-labor action.

Preparation for the calling of a civil liberties conference.

Not until the CIO had exposed the plan did any government official or metropolitan daily newspaper admit that such a campaign was being conducted.

Construction Pact In W. Va.

Fairmont, W. Va., Dec. 23—The United Construction Workers Organizing Committee has signed its second big contract.

Bricklayers here won wage increases ranging from 11% to 17% in an agreement signed with the Hammond Fire Brick Co.

Other parts of the contract provide for the 8-hour day, time-and-a-half overtime, seniority and the check-off.

Improve Compensation Plans, Lewis Urges

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23. — Charging that unemployment compensation schemes in the various states are beset by "complications, restrictions and dangers now threatening to wreck" them, CIO Pres. Lewis today called upon Sec. of Labor Frances Perkins for a "thorough and impartial investigation of the whole problem."

The letter, following shortly after release of the CIO's legislative program—which demanded improvement and simplification of the unemployment compensation set-up — asserted that absence of federal compensation standards has resulted in confusion among the various states.

"The 48 state systems are unduly complicated; the amount and duration of benefits are inadequate; disqualification penalties are severe; and the restrictions on eligiblity and coverage deprive large numbers of workers of much needed protection," Lewis wrote to Miss Perkins.

TWO DANGERS

Two dangers threaten the systems, he continued, as a result of the fact that the money collected in unemployment compensation taxes is higher than the amount paid. First, consumer purchasing power is lowered, and secondly, "employer groups are trying to secure lower taxes and all kinds of tax rebate schemes."

In asking for the investigation, Lewis suggested that Miss Perkins, as head of the President's Committee on Economic Security, "call upon representatives of employers and organized labor to present their views while, at the same time, the Social Security Board and other experts provide the committee with necessary technical data.

"On the basis of such procedure," Lewis concluded, "it may well be possible to find a solution for the complications, restrictions and dangers now threatening to wreck the unemployment compensation system."

Provide Work for All, Rhode Island CIO Plea

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Dec. 23.—Protection of the civil rights of America's workers and plans for getting the country's nine million unemployed back to work were urged in resolutions passed at the second annual convention of the Rhode Island CIO Industrial Union Council held here in the Swedish Workingmen's hall. More than 100 delegates attended.

WIDMAN SPEAKS

Michael F. Widman, assistant national director of the organization for the CIO, suggested in his address to the delegates that pressure be brought upon Congress to take steps toward settling "America's No. 1 problem", unemployment.

Warning that the forces which opposed the passing of the Wagner Labor Act and the Wage-Hour Act are still at work, Widman said that these two laws have helped the general labor situation more than any others ever passed.

TELLS OF GAINS

Joseph Mayo, CIO director for Rhode Island, told of the great strides made by the CIO in the state since the last convention. "We believe that workers are going to recognize still more fully that CIO offers the modern type of industrial uuionism that is necessary to bargain collectively in the present industrial scheme of things."

The Rev. Vincent C. Dore of Providence College, who delivered the invocation and the opening address at the convention expressed the hope that every eligible worker in the nation "may be convinced that he should become a member of a union or congress whose purpose it is to work for social justice."

EXPLAINS BUILDING DRIVE

Gardner Wales of Washington, comptroller of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee, explained the new CIO drive in the construction industry. "One of the many myths about labor in this country is the impression that building trades workers are all organized and getting high wages," he said

RE-ELECT PRESIDENT

At a business meeting held earlier during the convention, Adelard Gingras was re-elected president of the Rhode Island CIO Council, and Anne Marsoli was re-elected secretary-treasurer.

Resolutions were passed by the convention condemning the Dies Committee; calling upon all U. S. representatives to do all in their power to keep America out of the war and asking for the establishment of a "Baby Wagner Act" for Rhode Island to protect workers not convered by the national act.

The convention also voted to ask for extension of the Food Stamp plan in this area, and went on record in favor of patronizing products bearing the union label.

Legislative Program In Leaflet

Face Problems of Day, CIO Asks Congress

(Full text of CIO Legislative Program on Page 6)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23—The main duty of Congress is "to formulate a constructive program which will meet the economic and social problems that confront us today" John L. Lewis, CIO president, declared in announcing the CIO legislative program for the coming regular session of Congress here.

The program is based on four main points: keeping America out of the European war, a solution of the unemployment problem, protection for civil liberties, preservation and extension of the right to organize and bargain collectively.

The program was drawn up by the CIO Legislative Committee, meeting in Washington. The committee is composed of Jon L. Lewis, chairman; Philip Murray, Sidney Hillman, Sherman H. Dalrymple, Emil Rieve, Reid Robinson, R. J. Thomas, James B. Carey and Lee Pressman, secretary.

NO RETREAT

"The people of this country," the program says, "whenever the occasion has presented itself, have strongly and pointedly demonstrated their desire to continue and extend the gains and benefits of the social legislation enacted during the past few years. There can be no retreat now, rather there must be a forward march to extend the social and economic program of the nation."

The people of Europe, and especially the workers, have seen their rights and their social gains destroyed by the convulsions of war —and U. S. involvement will bring "a complete blackout of all democratic American institutions" to this country, the program says. Congress "must not permit any policy to be adopted which may in any way lead toward the involvement of the U. S. in foreign wars, for peace must be preserved for the people of the United States," it continues.

No. 1 PROBLEM

Already the "time and energy of our government representatives during the past few months have been devoted almost exclusively to international affairs at the expense of the interests and needs of the American people," it points out, in demanding a resolute attack on a series of pressing domestic problems.

Chief of these, the program declares, is unemployment — still the nation's No. 1 unsolved question. An immediate conference of leaders of government, labor, agriculture and industry is the first step toward a solution, the CIO points out, and pending that a minimum of 3,000,000 public project jobs, plus funds to take care of all unemployed youth out of school, is needed.

"People cannot and must not be permitted to starve," the program says, in calling for government sponsored work at decent wages and for an end to degrading means tests and the slow starvation policy of work rotation.

WORKERS' RIGHTS

It urges amendments to the National Labor Relations Act to provide criminal penalties for violators such as are provided in the Fair Labor Standards Act and the Railway Labor Act, to prevent violators from securing government contracts, and to prevent the National Labor Relations Board from "carving up any industrial units established by the industrial unions of the CIO."

The CIO has consistently defended the Act from anti-labor industrialists and AFL leaders, the program points out, and the proposed changes will help "to

Aircraft Firm Signs With CIO

Long Island City, N. Y., Dec. 23 — (FP) — A new union shop contract providing 5c hourly wage increases has been signed between the United Automobile Workers and the Brewster Aeronautical Corp., covering about 1,000 workers.

Other provisions include readjustment of inequalities in the wage scale, paid vacations and arbitration machinery. The new hourly minimum scale for unskilled workers is 50c.

The UAW is carrying on its organizational campaign in the aircraft industry here with a drive to unionize the big Seversky plant, which employs about 8,000 workers.

Settle West Coast Wire Strike

San Francisco, Dec. 23—Settlement of the CIO American Communications Assn. strike at Western Union here, longest in the history of the telegraph industry, appeared certain as the strikers, out for close to four months, accepted U. S. Labor Secretary Perkins' proposals for a truce in the walkout.

Terms of the proposed settlement included re-employment of all strikers without discrimination by Western Union, immediate cessation of the strike, restoration of seniority and other job conditions, and a company pledge "to do nothing detrimental to the union" during the truce.

Union leaders here and in Washington described the acceptance of the Secretary's proposal's as a "major victory for the CIO and for the workers in the communications industry." Once again, they said, a giant monopoly in the industry had been forced to settle a dispute on terms favorable to the workers and to drop an anti-union campaign of more than 20 years' existence.

CIO's Legislative Program

"There can be no retreat now. Rather there must be a steady forward march to extend the social and economic program of the nation." This is the keynote of the legislative program recently announced by the CIO for the coming session of Congress.

The CIO repeats in emphatic and insistent terms the demand of labor that Congress adopt no policy which may in any way lead toward the involvement of the United States in foreign wars. It calls for the adoption of a constructive program to solve our own domestic problems.

The CIO program is a rallying cry to all progressives. The voice of arrogant reaction is heard on every hand, demanding surrender of recent gains in labor and social legislation. The weak-kneed may flinch before such threats. But progressive labor, which is the driving force of the whole liberal cause, will not hear of retreat. It calls for a determined advance.

The Wagner labor act, the social security act, the wage-hour act, public works programs and other similar legislation are steps in the right direction.

But they are still inadequate to meet the crying needs of the American people, in the face of continued mass unemployment and insecurity.

Unemployment still remains America's No. 1 problem, and an expanded public works and public housing program are urgently needed to put millions of Americans to socially useful work.

The Wagner act has not been fully enforced because it lacks penalties against violators and because law-breaking firms are still enjoying fat government contracts. It must be strengthened in these respects, and a halt must be put to the carving up of industrial unions.

The security act and other social legislation are still inadequate to provide real security to the aged and unemployed. They must be liberalized and expanded in scope.

The CIO demands that Congress devote its attention to meeting such burning needs of the American people at home, rather than to let its attention be distracted by foreign affairs.

Not only the members of the CIO but all public-spirited Americans will judge their representatives in Congress by the degree of support which they render to this constructive program.

Heywood Broun—Labor Leader

The death of Heywood Broun brings bitter personal sorrow to hosts of people who knew him as a great-hearted champion of the oppressed and an ardent crusader for economic justice and social progress.

Broun projected his personality into his writings to an unusual degree. So the millions who read what he wrote came to know him almost as well as his many personal friends. They knew him as a man who was generous to a fault, incapable of malice or pettiness, warm-hearted and impulsive, and ever-ready to battle for his beliefs.

But great as was Broun's contribution to American journalism, lovable as was his character and inspiring as was his humanitarianism, it is as a leader of labor that he will be chiefly enshrined in the memory of the membership of the CIO.

Wih all the literary achievements associated with his name, Broun himself was most proud of the great role he played in founding and leading the American Newspaper Guild.

As a labor leader, Broun was among the first to realize the significance of the CIO and he took the lead in aligning the Guild with this new progressive labor movement.

Broun disliked the term "white-collar worker" and used to kid about the state of his own collars disqualifying him for that appellation. But he disliked the term essentially because he saw so clearly the common interests of wage and salaried employes, and because he resented any language even that suggested division between them as common participants in the labor movement.

Broun's great contribution to labor was the part he played in organizing newspaper employes into a strong union; and in a wider sense, the part he played in developing the solidarity between "white-collar" and industrial workers which is so essential to a well-rounded and progressive labor movement.

The CIO deeply mourns the passing of this great writer, this great American and this pioneer labor leader. But it knows that through the Guild and through the whole CIO, his work for labor will long live after him.

Looking Ahead

Seeing The CIO

THE six blind men who felt different parts of the same elephant and gave six different versions as to what kind of creature it was, have many counterparts in the United States today.

The CIO has been a major factor in American life for four years now. Its program and its policies are matters of public record. Its activities have affected the day-to-day lives of millions of people, whose wages and conditions it has so greatly improved. Its solid achievements and constructive purposes are obvious to all who have eyes to see.

But it will be remembered that when the blind men stumbled on their elephant, one touched its trunk and said it was a snake; another grabbed its tail and was sure it was a rope; yet another bumped against the elephant's leg and declared it was a tree—and so on.

The blind men of the story, however, were not in a position to kid anyone but themselves as to nature of the elephant. But their modern counterparts in the U.S.A. today unfortunately are newspaper publishers, politicians, radio orators and other alleged authorities who have a near monopoly on the business of telling the public what is what.

These modern self-made blind men have been stumbling around the CIO for a long time now. Blinded by political prejudice or economic interest, they have picked on pieces of idle gossip, a half-truth here, an outright lie there, a false impression somewhere else. And from such "evidence" they have purveyed to the public a whole slew of the most wildly inaccurate and conflicting versions of what the CIO is and what it aims to do.

Look At The Facts

But anyone who wants to see the truth for himself, instead of relying on the crazy descriptions of the modern blind men, has only to look at the actual activities of the CIO unions in raising American living standards, and to study the public pronouncements of CIO's leaders and its conventions.

As an aid to such clearer vision, a reading of the recent CIO pamphlet, "Organize The Unorganized," is recommended. In this will be found a description of the achievements and aims of the CIO, as expressed in speeches of Pres. John L. Lewis and other outstanding leaders and in the reports and actions of the recent San Francisco convention.

A reading of the leaflet, "The CIO—An American Institution," is also recommended to anyone who wants the truth about the essentially American and democratic character of the progressive labor movement.

Labor's Political Aims

As for political aims of the CIO, the recently adopted legislative program of the organization will present a true picture which is in shining contrast to the pitiful pettiness of all the recent sniping against the CIO.

This program for economic betterment and expanding democracy is one which every public-spirited American can support. It calls upon Congress:

(1) To keep the United States out of war and to concentrate attention on "the interests and needs of the American people at home."

(2) To cope with America's No. 1 problem, unemployment, through adequate public works and careful planning by government, industrial, labor and agricultural leaders.

(3) To insure labor's democratic rights by strengthening the Wagner Act and legislating against oppressive labor practices.

(4) To defend the wage-hour law by defeating amendments which would restrict its application and destroy its benefits.

(5) To expand and liberalize the social security program to bring more real security to the aged and unemployed.

(6) To push public programs for health and industrial hygiene.

(7) To expand public housing programs and stimulate private residential construction.

(8) To adjust the burden of taxation, so that surplus and excess wealth may bear a fairer share, instead of labor and consumer groups having to carry the brunt, as at present.

None So Blind . . .

This legislative program, like all the other aims of the CIO, is moderate and practical in character; and constructive, democratic and socially progressive in purpose. It has the general welfare as much in mind as the particular economic interests of the labor group on whose behalf it is advanced.

But there are none so blind as those who won't see. And we should be over-optimistic to expect the tory "blind men," who seek to manufacture "public opinion" for private profit, to recognize the truth about the CIO which stares them in the face.

No great popular movement, however, has yet been killed by misrepresentation. And the CIO will continue to grow and flourish through the support of the millions who see things for themselves.

Face Problems of Day, CIO Asks Congress

really obtain protection for CIO members and for the still unorganized workers" by removing present weaknesses and preventing distortions of the Act by the Board.

Further protection of workers' rights is provided in a demand for passage of the LaFollette-Thomas Oppressive Labor Practices bill, based on LaFollette Committee findings and endorsed by Pres. Lewis at the last regular session of Congress.

At the same time the CIO opposed amendments to the Wages and Hours Act as proposed by employers "using the guise of farmers" to exclude from the Act workers subject to the most severe exploitation.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social security, the program says, must be based on "protection for the American people against the inevitable hazards of modern industrial life" and must increase consumer income by tapping "the excess wealth and income of the country." The present security act does not do this, and it must be "expanded, liberalized and simplified through Federal action."

This includes increases in unemployment compensation, in old age aid through the CIO program of $60 a month at 60 years of age, plus a national health program to provide medical care, disability benefits, and a concentrated attack on industrial health hazards.

HOUSING NEED

Housing needs, the program declares, are at a minimum of 1,000,000 units each year, of which government must provide at least 300,000 in order to stimulate private contractors to build the rest.

The final section of the program, dealing with taxation, points out that "The national economy can never be healthy until a real and substantial adjustment is made in our tax structure." Present taxes bear far too heavily on the workers and consumers, who provide 51.3 per cent of national revenue from already inadequate incomes, while the wealthy and the big corporations pay only 48 per cent.

The CIO tax program demands reductions in levies on lower income groups and sharp increases in the higher brackets, in assessments on estates, excess profits, and gifts.

U. S. to Set Up Army Kitchens In Ohio If Relief Fails, FDR Tells CIO State Head

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—Pres. John Owens of the Ohio Industrial Union Council, CIO, declared after a half-hour appointment with Pres. Roosevelt today that the Chief Executive had promised to set up army kitchens in the Buckeye State to prevent starvation among the jobless.

Owens said the President outlined federal policy as aimed at prevention of starvation anywhere in the country, and to make work for those who can work. State and local communities must take responsibility for unemployables through adequate home relief programs.

JOHN OWENS

Ohio CIO leader reported on the state's relief crisis to Pres. Roosevelt.

UNDER WPA

The army kitchens would be under the control of WPA, Owens quoted the President as saying.

In a statement issued after his visit to the White House, Owens said he reported to Pres. Roosevelt "on the horror of unemployment in Ohio."

"Cleveland and Toledo are the most spectacular examples of Gov. John W. Bricker's inhumanity," Owens declared.

MONKEYS DO BETTER

"But the need for relief is as great and the suffering as severe in southeastern Ohio counties, where the monthly grant is less than the maintenance provided for monkeys in Ohio's municipal zoos.

"The unemployed in Ohio find no nourishment in the caustic remarks of Gov. Bricker. But the tons of food shipped into our state by the federal government through the Surplus Commodities Corp. are keeping away actual starvation for a few days more.

UNSOLVED PROBLEM

"Despite Gov. Bricker's statements to the contrary, I told the President the relief problem in Ohio is not solved.

"Bricker has not learned that the rich cannot survive if the poor do not eat. Neither has he learned that government exists to enable men to live in orderly association with each other.

"It is the responsibility of the Ohio state government to provide relief for those who are unemployed through no fault of their own."

Crawford Signs Again

New York, Dec. 23 — A two year agreement covering the general office and credit department of Crawford Clothes, Inc., was announced today by Local 16, United Office & Professional Workers.

Four New Pamphlets Discuss Organizing, Jobs and War

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23—Four new CIO pamphlets have just come off the press, dealing with major programs of the CIO, with its achievements and policies as recorded at the second CIO convention, with issues of importance in our social and economic framework. Four more are in preparation.

Of the four just released, three—"Organize the Unorganized," "The CIO—an American Institution," and "The CIO and the War"—are based on speeches, reports and actions of the CIO convention and the fourth, "Shortage of Labor?" debunks current Chamber of Commerce claims that employers can't find workers for waiting jobs.

The four in preparation deal with the CIO legislative program for the coming session of Congress, (see text, page 5) with the nation's No. 1 problem, unemployment, with the CIO program of social security, and with workers' rights to free speech and free assembly.

"ORGANIZE"

"Organize the Unorganized," is an illustrated pamphlet dealing with the basic aim of the CIO, reaffirmed by the CIO convention and made the keynote of all main speeches and reports at that time. This basic slogan was given in the convention resolution which declared:

"The primary purpose of the CIO during the months and years immediately before us, as in the past, must be the advancement of the basic task for which the CIO was created and to which it is dedicated, the organizng of the unorganized millions of American workers on an industrial basis."

This primary purpose, reinforced by quotations from Pres. Lewis' report, from his keynote convention speech, from his acceptance speech, and from the concluding address, runs the entire pamphlet. Together with the record of achievement of the CIO, it is also the theme of quotations from Philip Murray, who tells of the achievements of the CIO in steel, of R. J. Thomas, head of the Automobile Workers, Van A. Bittner, chairman, Packinghouse Workers, Emil Rieve, president, Textile Workers and Reid Robinson, president, Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers.

NO WAR OR PART OF WAR

"Labor in America wants no war nor any part of war," John L. Lewis declared to the nation in his Labor Day broadcast last September, and the CIO convention, passing on this crucial world issue, reaffirmed his statement in resolutions and speeches reprinted in the second of the new series, "The CIO and the War."

"Labor has a major stake in this problem," Lewis said. "In war labor must perform most of the work and do most of the dying. Upon labor is always inflicted most of the agony and tragedy of war."

The pamphlet reprints five basic policy points from Lewis' report to the convention, listing them as emphatic opposition to U. S. involvement, no decrease in real wages or living standards during "war emergency," safeguards for labor's rights, including adequate labor voice on government agencies, and a warning that "preoccupation with foreign affairs must not be allowed to detract attention from unemployment and other pressing problems of internal economic insecurity."

DEBUNKING THE TORIES

"Shortage of Labor?" a leaflet, after debunking propoganda put out by enemies of relief and WPA, points out that no possible shortage exists or can exist while the nation has 9,500,000 able workers without jobs and reminds readers that relief jobs are still essential to keep starvation away from millions of American families.

The leaflet is in answer to a flood of employer inspired phony statistics put out to show that the government can forget all about the unemployed, since in theory they don't exist. Incidentally, it uses government sources to refute the wishful thinking of the reactionaries.

FROM AMERICAN SOIL

"The CIO — an American Institution," uses quotations from convention speeches by Lewis and Van A. Bittner to disprove—again—the old lie that the CIO is un-American. As Pres. Lewis said in his concluding speech at San Francisco, the CIO is:

". . . an American organization, and our people are interested in American problems . . . motivated by American principles, and they derive their inspiration from American soil and American institutions. . .

"Those who say to the contrary are falsifiers and defamers, and the truth lies not in them."

Plan Council In Carolinas; Meet Feb. 3

Greensboro, N. C., Dec. 23 — Delegates from North Carolina's CIO unions will get together at High Point on Feb. 3-4 to form a state industrial union council.

At a meeting of union representatives here, definite plans were made for formation of the council, E. L. Sandefur of Winston-Salem, CIO regional director announced.

Clerks Quit AFL, Join CIO

Los Angeles, Dec. 23 — Another AFL retail clerks local has joined the swing to the CIO United Retail & Wholesale Employes.

Disgust with the activities of J. W. Buzzell, czar of the AFL city body, and with C. E. Varner, international representative of the AFL retail clerks union was cited as reason for the change by Clothing & Haberdashery Salesmen's Union local officials.

More than 100 clothing salesmen working in 19 credit stores here are affected by the change.

Steel Union Gets Pact

Duluth, Minn., Dec. 23 — A contract signed with the Cooler-ator Company, manufacturers of ice boxes, is announced by Henry A. Burkhammer, district director of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee. The agreement which provides for pay increases and morning and afternoon rest periods, was negotiated by SWOC Lodge 1096.

A news item in last week's CIO NEWS, reported in error that Lodge 1096 was affiliated to the United Electrical Radio & Machine Workers. The union concerned is the Steel Workers Organizing Committee.

CIO's 1940 Legislative Program For Jobs, Security and Peace

This is the full text of the legislative program adopted by the CIO Legislative Committee at its meeting in Washington on Dec. 15, 1939. Members of the committee are Pres. John L. Lewis, Philip Murray, Sidney Hillman, R. J. Thomas, S. H. Dalrymple, Reid Robinson, Emil Rieve, James Carey and Lee Pressman, secretary.

Within a few weeks the Congress of the United States will convene in Washington for a regular session. It is of the utmost importance that this Congress formulate a constructive domestic program which will meet the economic and social problems which confront us today. The people of this country, whenever the occasion has presented itself, have strongly and pointedly demonstrated their desire to continue and extend the gains and benefits of the social legislation enacted during the past few years. There can be no retreat now, rather there must be a steady forward march to extend the social and economic program of the nation.

At the present time, the nations in Europe and Asia are convulsed by international warfare. Democratic institutions and civil liberties in those nations have been abolished. Labor in those countries has been compelled to carry the brunt of the wartime burdens; unions there are facing virtual extinction. Unfortunately, the time and energy of our own Government representatives during the past few months have been devoted almost exclusively to international affairs at the expense of the interests and needs of the American people at home.

JOBS—No. 1 PROBLEM

Today the American problem No. 1 is still the problem of the 9 to 10 million employable men and women who are without jobs in private industry. In spite of a most extensive acceleration of business activity during the past few months, the huge number of unemployed remains undiminished. These millions of unemployed men and women are ready subjects to the wiles of the demagogues who actually desire to undermine and destroy our democratic institutions.

The CIO urges for the serious consideration by the Federal Congress a legislative program based upon certain fundamental objectives, (1) the United States must keep out of any involvement in the foreign wars; (2) the attention of this country and the energies of our Government, industrial and labor leaders of this country, must be directed toward the immediate solving of the problem of unemployment; (3) the democratic rights and institutions of this country must be preserved and maintained; and (4) there must be continued assurance and protection of the rights of labor to organize and bargain collectively as the cornerstone for the preservation and extension of any economic and social program.

To this end the CIO urges the adoption of the following legislative program:

I – War

The United States must not become involved in the foreign wars.

There can be no justification for the United States being dragged into the quarrels of foreign nations. It has become clear that if the United States permits itself to become engaged in the wars of Europe and Asia there will be a complete blackout of all democratic American institutions. The people of this nation are united in their determination that we are not to have any part of the foreign conflicts.

Congress must not permit any policy to be adopted which may in any way lead toward the involvement of the United States in the foreign wars, for peace must be preserved for the people of the United States.

II – Unemployment

The problem of unemployment is with us today with the same intensity as a few years ago. During the past few months we have witnessed an amazing acceleration of industrial activity but today, in spite of that, there are at least 9½ million employable men and women who are still without jobs in private industry. At best not more than a million of these workers could be re-employed within the next year.

There cannot be any permanent prosperity or industrial peace in this nation as long as we have staring us in the face the misery and suffering of 9½ million unemployed people. The problem of unemployment must be still considered as our American problem No. 1.

URGE CONFERENCE

No group in this nation is in the position today of presenting any single formula for the solution of the ills arising out of unemployment. For this reason we recommend that the President of the United States immediately convene a conference of the responsible leaders from the Government, industry, labor and agriculture, who should be commandeered by the Government to work at this problem until some concrete plans have been formulated to solve America's problem No. 1.

Pending such conference and solution it is clear that a large portion of the unemployed must be employed on public works until they can be absorbed into private industry. The absolute minimum for a public works program right now is to furnish three million jobs. People cannot and must not be permitted to starve. Congress must appropriate sufficient funds to afford jobs for at least three million men and women. Persons on the work program should not be subject to the means test or to the rotation of work. The wages to be paid should be such that the American standards of living and the union wage structure will not be undermined.

NATION'S YOUTH PROBLEM

At least 4,000,000 of the unemployed are young men and women between the ages of 15 and 25. Their continued unemployment and inability to afford schooling constitutes a special unemployment problem. In their welfare and morale is involved the future of the nation. In addition to the establishment of a general program of public works there must be established a work program for such young men and women.

Such a program should be constituted of projects which contribute both to the needs of youth and to the public welfare. The program should be sufficient to employ all young people who are out of work and out of school. A substantial increase in the NYA appropriation for the next year is essential.

III – Wagner Act

The enactment of the National Labor Relations Act by Congress constituted one of the greatest achievements for organized labor. The powerful financial and industrial anti-labor leaders of the country have not slackened for a single moment since the enactment of this Act, in their attempt to repeal or emasculate its provisions. At the last session of Congress, leaders of the American Federation of Labor joined in this attempt. The CIO was successful in staving off this attack.

Unfortunately, two serious difficulties have arisen in the administration of the Act which have frustrated to some extent the efforts of organized labor to achieve the protection to which it is entitled under the Wagner Act. In the first place, the enforcement provisions of the Labor Act are not sufficiently severe to actually obtain enforcement from those corporations which are still determined to violate the rights of labor.

In the second place, the National Labor Relations Board, in an attempt to appease the reactionary interests, including the leaders of the American Federation of Labor, has issued decisions which have threatened the existence of the industrial unions of the CIO by carving out crafts in industrial plants organized by the CIO.

THREE AMENDMENTS

The CIO will endeavor to really obtain protection for its members and for the still unorganized workers by urging the following three amendments to the National Labor Relations Act:

1. A provision which will provide for criminal penalties to be imposed upon any employer found to have violated any of the provisions of the National Labor Relations Act. This will bring the National Labor Relations Act into line with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act and the Railway Labor Act, violation of which permits the imposition of criminal penalties.

2. A provision which will prevent the Government from awarding any Government contracts to any employer found to have violated the National Labor Relations Act. At the present time the most reactionary and vicious anti-labor corporations such as Bethlehem Steel, Douglas Aircraft, and Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, are the most frequent beneficiaries of Government contracts while they are actually violating the labor law of the land.

3. A provision which will prevent the National Labor Relations Board from carving up any industrial units established by the industrial unions of the CIO.

This amendment will actually protect the present basic policy of the Wagner Act which is to further collective bargaining through the equalization of the economic bargaining strength of labor with that already enjoyed by the employers. Such equality can only be accomplished through the establishment of large powerful industrial unions. This purpose is negated by decisions of the Board which attempt to carve out craft units within the industrial union organizations.

ANTI-SPY BILL

The LaFollette-Thomas Oppressive Labor Practices Act, which will definitely outlaw the use of industrial spies and the purchase of munitions by private corporations, must be enacted at this coming session of Congress. Labor is fully justified in demanding protection against these abominable corporate practices which have been so universally used by the anti-labor corporations. No reasonable argument has ever been offered by anyone against the enactment of this legislation.

IV – Wage-Hour Act

The Fair Labor Standards Act is threatened with amendments which are actually intended to destroy the legislation. The minimum wage established under the Act which will only reach the sum of 40c an hour seven years after the passage of the Act and the maximum hour provisions which will only be reduced to 40 hours per week after two years, cannot be fairly called arbitrary burdens upon industry.

The CIO calls upon Congress not to pass any amendments to this legislation at the present time. These amendments are sponsored by the large processors of agricultural commodities who are merely using the guise of farmers to exclude from the Act industrial workers who are subject to the most severe exploitation. On the contrary, larger appropriations for administrative expenses must be made by Congress in order to achieve real enforcement of the provisions of the Act.

Rather than exclude from the Act employes now covered, as the present amendments intend to do, Congress should, after the Act has had a chance to operate, extend the benefits of the legislation to the millions of workers who are still deprived of its protection.

V – Social Security

The CIO program for social security dealing with old age, unemployment compensation and health is based upon the fundamental premise that any sound social security system must both provide protection for the American people against the inevitable hazards of modern industrial life and increase the national consumer income by defraying the costs of these services out of the excess wealth and income of the country.

It is imperative that the social security program relating to old age and unemployment compensation be expanded, simplified and liberalized through federal action.

The CIO Old Age Pension Program calls for pension payments of $60 per month at the age of 60, and an additional allowance of $30 to aged wives. The necessity for this program rises out of the inadequacies of the present system. Despite the considerable publicity that has been given to the federal old age insurance plan, the best estimates indicate that during the next year benefits will probably average around $15 a month and that during the next five years will range between only $15 and $25 per month at the most. What is worse is that only a small percentage of our aged people will be entitled to even these sums.

In the year 1940 it is estimated that only $75,000,000 will be paid out to about 400,000 individuals, including widows, dependent children and aged workers 65 or over. There are whole groups of individuals including farm workers and farmers, domestic servants, and small storekeepers and professional people who get no protection at all. And large numbers of workers theoretically covered by the law will never be able to qualify.

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION

The absence of definitive federal standards has resulted in a condition of chaos among the state unemployment compensation laws, and a complicated system with narrow coverage which includes high eligibility conditions, severe disqualifying clauses, small benefits and interminable red tape. In addition, employer schemes of merit or experience rating for tax rebates threaten to wreck the entire system.

Further standards must be placed in the federal law as conditions with which the states must comply in order to get the federal subsidies for their administrative expenses. The federal standards must simplify and liberalize the benefits paid, reduce the eligibility conditions, eliminate penalizing disqualfications and extend the coverage of the law. The threat of tax rebate schemes through merit or experience rating for employers must be removed.

NLRB Probers Dish Up Dozen Duds

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

Washington, Dec. 23—The Smith Committee looking into National Labor Relations Board activities was in recess today until Jan. 5, while its corporation-lawyer general counsel, Edmund Toland, pawed through more of the Board's files in search of fodder for the nation's newspaper headlines.

Though Toland had arranged for two "sensations" daily — in time for afternoon and morning newspaper deadlines — the mass of evidence against the NLRB and its employes appeared today to have a cream puff consistency.

WANT AMENDMENTS

Equally obvious, however, was the fact that Chairman Howard Smith, lanky Virginian reactionary, and two of his colleagues on the committee, are already "satisfied" that the Wagner Act needs amendments. In a radio speech this week, Rep. Smith plumped for the 1936 program of the Natl. Association of Manufacturers and the Republican party — that workers should be free from coercion 'either from their employers or from any other source." During the 1936 campaign, it was pointed out that "any other source" would obviously be union organizers going about their business.

In the same speech, Smith indicated his fundamental hostility to the Wagner Act, claiming there is "widespread opinion, prevalent throughout the country, that the National Labor Relations Act, drafted, designed and adopted by Congress to free American labor, is being used to impose additional and heavier shackles upon the laboring man."

The committee, Smith announced, will hold hearings in Detroit some time next month.

MURDOCK ALERT

With Smith and his two Republican committee members and Toland in this mood of hostility to the Board and the Wagner Act, the hearings were prevented from becoming an out-an-out inquisition only through the activities of the committee's two New Deal members, Rep. Abe Murdock of Utah and Rep. Arthur Healey of Massachusetts.

Time and again Murdock brought Toland down to earth with his demands for a complete presentation of the issues involved, rather than the Coney Island mirror effects which the committee lawyer constantly seeks to produce.

5 CHARGES

Sifted out, the Toland's charges against the Board during the second half of the seven days of hearing, amounted to this:

1. That the independent union of NLRB employes is "company-dominated" — a point buttressed by no facts and quickly dropped.

2. That in the autumn of 1936, Board Member Edwin S. Smith had called to the attention of a Boston department store executive a union dispute with the Berkshire Knitting Mills. Smith denied he was aiding a boycott, explained that he hoped influence might be used to prevent a strike situation from developing.

3. That the NLRB had discharged James Miller, regional director in Cleveland, shortly after he attended a private banquet in New York as a guest of a corporation lawyer handling cases before the Board. Miller, now a "$150-a-day labor relations consultant" for Cleveland employers, admitted that his host had paid out the money for his transportation to New York, but claimed that he had later been reimbursed.

'SLEUTH': Rep. Howard Smith, head of the committee investigating the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

4. That Cincinnati regional director Phillip Phillips—a garrulous witness and, as the NLRB files seemed to indicate, an indefatigable if erroneous memorandum writer—believes the Wagner Act applies as much to Communists as to workers of any other political persuasion. That concept, contained in the Constitution, caused a flurry among the conservative committee members and sent the telegraph boys bustling off with more copy for the afternoon papers.

CONFERRED WITH SWOC

5. That Nathan Witt, NLRB secretary, conferred with Philip Murray, chairman of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, and Lee Pressman, SWOC general counsel, during the Little Steel strike of 1937, over methods of preparing for Labor Board cases against the struck firm.

Toland, veteran of many years practice before government agencies, held his tongue far up in the cheek as he dished up the story of the conference, a common procedure among all government administrative bodies.

Fuller Squashes Phony Tale About CIO 'Red Ties'

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23—Efforts of Edmund Toland, Smith Committee attorney, to play up a supposed CIO "obligation to Communists" were quickly squelched here by Paul W. Fuller, CIO regional director in Cincinnati.

Fuller's wire was read into the record of the Labor Board investigation proceedings shortly after Toland had read a private memorandum from Philip Phillips, NLRB regional director in the Ohio city, alleging such a tie-up.

Fuller replied:

"The Cincinnati regional office of the CIO is willing at all times to bear full responsibility for any of its own actions and statements. We cannot, however, take responsibility for the prolific and melodramatic telegrams and letters of the local director of the Labor Board.

"Mr. Phillips' statement that we informed him that we had an obligation to Communists, is in line with many imaginary and garrulous remarks made by that gentleman.

"They are his responsibility, not ours. Only he can understand and explain them. Categorically we deny them. His statement is perfectly absurd. Nothing of this sort ever occurred."

Hail Action By Lehman

Albany, N. Y., Dec. 23 — "The best Christmas present that state civil service employes could have received" was the way District Pres. Mary McGorky of the State, County & Municipal Employes described Gov. Herbert Lehman's executive order guaranteeing collective bargaining rights to state employes.

"The efficiency of the state service is greatly enhanced by the maintenance of a just and friendly relationship between employes and administrative heads of the state," Gov. Lehman said.

CIO's Legislative Program

SOCIAL SECURITY RESERVES

Both the federal old age insurance system and the unemployment compensation system at the present time are collecting more funds in taxes than are being paid out in benefits, thus piling up large reserves. As a result, there is a substantial withdrawal from consumer purchasing power.

Reactionary groups seek to use this excess reserve as an excuse for reducing taxes. The CIO demands that these reserves be used now to increase benefits and give the benefits to more people, in order to increase purchasing power and provide effective security to the American people.

VI – Health

The CIO national health program has four basic objectives:

1. The immediate construction of hospitals and clinics throughout the country subsidized through federal funds and under proper federal standards;

2. The expansion of the present public health services to take care of social diseases such as pneumonia, tuberculosis and syphillis;

3. The establishment of a system of medical care for the American people which would include medical care for all income groups, with free medical care to the low income groups, and cash benefits for temporary disability of workers, the funds to be derived from contributions from employers and from the government out of the general revenues.

The CIO is opposed to any scheme which would attempt to segregate the medical services available to the lower third of the population. A thoroughgoing scheme of medical care can more efficiently and more economically make adequate medical services available to the entire population including workers, farmers and professional people;

4. To carry out a needed program of industrial hygiene, the United States Department of Labor should be authorized to establish standards for the control and prevention of industrial diseases, requiring the elimination of industrial conditions which give rise to ill-health.

VII – Housing

The government should take steps at once to expand the construction of houses from the present low level of 450,000 per year to not less than 1,000,000 a year.

The U. S. Housing Authority programs should be enlarged from the present 50,000 homes a year to at least 300,000 a year which would involve the annual expenditure of approximately 30 million dollars. For this purpose Congress must adopt legislation far broader than that considered thus far, which provides for only 80,000 homes a year.

This program of government construction, designed for the lowest income groups, must continue to be the backbone of any national housing program. The lowest income groups are to be found not only in the cities, but in mill towns, mining towns, and in rural areas, and such changes should be made in the existing legislation as may be necessary to enable the program to reach these groups.

RESIDENTIAL BUILDING

Other steps should also be taken by the Government which will stimulate private residential construction to at least 700,000 dwellings a year against the present rate of less than 400,000. This is to be accomplished in part by the further lowering of private interest rates on construction loans and the extention of the repayment period for such loans through appropriate action by the Federal Housing Administration and the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

These lines of action are necessary in order to provide housing for the middle income group below that now cared for by private industry, and above that cared for by the U. S. Housing Authority. In this middle income group fall the majority of the people of the country, including large numbers of CIO members.

A combined program of this kind will not only alleviate the existing housing shortage, but will provide extensive employment in both the construction industry and the building materials industries. About 750,000 construction workers would be employed in residential construction as against an estimated present employment on the site of 350,000.

Some 1,250,000 workers would be employed in the materials industries, as against a present estimate of 525,000 with the full realization of the program of 1,000,000 homes a year. About 2,000,000 would thus be employed in residential construction and related industries, as against much less than half that number at present.

VIII – Taxation

One of the changes that is most essential to the stabilization of our economy is a drastic revision of the tax structure. With the recent payroll and wage taxes for social security and the numerous sales taxes levied by States the proportion of governmental revenue derived by direct taxes upon wage earners has increased tremendously.

Of all the federal revenue collected in 1929, 30.2% came from taxes bearing primarily upon consumption such as excise taxes, customs, tobacco and liquor taxes, and 69.8% came from other taxes such as those on corporate incomes, incomes above $5,000 per year, estates and gifts. By 1938 the percentage of taxes based primarily upon consumption was 51.3% and the other taxes constituted only 48.7% of the total tax income. In other words, it is not business, but rather labor and consumer groups who are bearing the brunt of our increased expenditures for social welfare and national defense.

The national economy can never be healthy until a real and substantial adjustment is made in our tax structure.

TWO PRINCIPLES

There should be clearly established the principle that taxation must serve two fundamental purposes; first, to provide revenue, and second, to readjust the flow of national income to provide increased purchasing power for the great mass of people. Our present structure falls far short of carrying out these principles.

We are therefore determined that (1) there must not be any reason of taxes for the low income groups; on the contrary, the present tax burden upon the consumer groups and wage earners must be substantially reduced; (2) a far greater proportion of total tax revenue must be derived by tapping the large concentrations of income and savings through higher taxes.

The CIO tax program accordingly calls for such taxes as an excess profits tax to reach the swelling profits of industry resulting from increased industrial activity and war contracts, elimination of tax exemption for government securities, increased inheritance and gift taxes, and increased rates and elimination of loopholes in taxes upon upper bracket income.

Bare Associated Farmers' Violence

LaFollette Group Exposes War On Unions

By MIRIAM ALLEN DE FORD

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 23—Europe's western front is "all quiet" compared to California's sunny valleys, scenes of bitter strikes during the last few years, Senate Civil Liberties Committee investigators were learning today as hearings on Associated Farmers' activities went into its second week.

From a variety of witnesses who paraded before the hearing spotlight came these expressions of the philosophy of Associated Farmers and their allied "law enforcement" officers throughout the farm areas:

"There is no such thing as peaceful picketing."

"We are trying to break the picket line here by getting teamsters in this town riled up . . ."

"I arrested something like 60 men myself and of all of them, I only had to hit two or three."

PROBE STRIKES

Three typical agricultural strikes have so far been investigated by the LaFollette committee, and all show the same pattern of Associated Farmers cooperation with country sheriffs to deprive the workers of their civil rights and break strikes by sheer force.

First of the three incidents probed was the Earl Fruit Co. strike in Marysville earlier this year. Worker witnesses described being run out of the county.

From the company superintendent, Philip Newcomb, came admission that he pulled a shotgun on the strikers "because the sheriff was picking up only the ringleaders and I wanted all the picketing stopped."

"Sure, I hit them, but if they resisted being arrested," chimed in Deputy Sheriff Wilcoxen of Yuba county.

DESCRIBES VIOLENCE

W. M. Marvin, member of the CIO cannery workers union, gave this version of Newcomb's conduct:

"Newcomb got out of his coupe and started loading an automatic shotgun full of shells. He came down the highway to the picket line with Wilcoxen right behind him with a blackjack."

Newcomb told the pickets to drop their placards, Marvin continued, and then "he stuck the shotgun in my stomach and told me to drop my sign or he would kill me.

"I did and then Wilcoxen came up behind me and hit me with a blackjack. I fell down and he said, 'get up or I will beat you to death'."

Other victims of the deputy sheriff's club, it turned out, were a 60-year old striker and a cripple.

ILLEGAL RAID

Chief of Police LaFortune finished the Marysville narrative with a confession that he raided local CIO headquarters without a warrant "on complaint by a citizen that they were feeding and encouraging pickets." The complainant turned out, was "one of my own peace officers."

Next strike taken up was that of apricot pickets in Brentwood in 1934. Sheriff Miller, a self-styled "banker in souls", appeared at the hearing armed with a long statement, some movies which he was not allowed to show and a suitcase from which he dramatically pulled a workingman's outfit which he wore to interview all fruit pickers — who had no way of knowing that he was a county official.

Miller's schemes included a plan under which no one can pick fruit in Contra Costa county without a permit — no permits are allowed to get into the hands of "agitators" — and the use of labor spies, one of whom eventually became a disruptive head of a cannery local.

'CITIZENS COMMITTEE

Third episode of violence studied by the Committee was the 1937 Stockton cannery workers strike.

A "citizens' committee," it was proved, was organized by Associated Farmers, armed by Sheriff Odell with guns, tear and knockout gas purchased form Lake Erie Chemical Co., and ordered to attack AFL cannery workers even after the vigilante bosses knew the strike had been called off.

Indiana Dairy Signs With CIO

South Bend, Ind., Dec. 23—The Reliance Dairy Co., largest in this city, has signed its first agreement with the CIO, James Robb, CIO regional director, announced today.

The contract, negotiated by C. E. Whitman, CIO field representative, provides for a wage increase, vacations with pay and sole bargaining rights. Other dairies will soon be organized, Whitman predicted.

Reports

W. W. ALEXANDER, Farm Security Administrator, whose annual report calls for extension of FSA's program to aid nation's migratory farm workers.

Salesmen Get Closed Shop Pact

NEW YORK, Dec. 23—In marked contrast with the bitterness which existed at the end of a nine-month strike in 1938, friendly relations marked the signing of a closed shop agreement by the Collier Advertising Corp. and Local 906-B, United Retail & Wholesale Employes, CIO.

The pact, covering 411 newstand agents and assistants on the city's two privately owned subway systems, provided a 6-hour cut in the work week, pay increases ranging up to $4 a week, and war seniority provisions.

Steel Union Threatens To Cancel Contract; Cites Anti-Labor Plot

VERONA, Pa., Dec. 23—The Steel Workers Organizing Committee today served notice on the Ingalls Iron Workers here that its contract with the company will be cancelled if an executive of the firm does not stop attacking the CIO affiliate.

The SWOC letter, signed by Clinton Golden, eastern regional director, said the union had discovered that Donald Hershey, company manager, was attempting "to form an organization of employers in Pittsburgh and vicinity for the purpose of combatting the progress of the CIO in particular and trade unions generally . . ."

Golden made it clear that the SWOC has no objection to employers organizing for legitimate purposes, but added:

"We do challenge their right to organize for purposes of combatting the legitimate aims and aspirations of the labor movement.

"We particularly object when an executive of a corporation which is a party to a collective bargaining contract with the SWOC takes the initiative in forming such an unlawful and anti-social organization."

PLANS FAILED

The meeting at which Hershey tried to launch his anti-labor outfit was held at the William Penn Hotel on December 13. Many of the companies with whom the SWOC has contracts disclaimed all knowledge of the purpose of the meeting until they attended, refused to take part in the plan to fight the union, and so notified the SWOC office.

Demand U.S. Speed Housing Drive

By CECIL OWEN

Washington, Dec. 23 — Organization of construction workers on an industrial union basis was speeded this week with formation of a new CIO program to rehouse 1,000,000 families a year.

Pres. John L. Lewis' announcement of legislative plans placed housing high on the agenda of items to be sought in Congress. Such a program would mean about 2,000,000 jobs a year for workers in construction and allied industries.

Reorganization of the industry through bringing of the workers into industrial unions is an integral part of the CIO program for housing. Only by such a program can homes at low cost be provided for the millions of CIO members in urban and rural areas. Special need is pointed out in mining and textile towns.

TWO MILLION JOBS

Of the 2,000,000 jobs yearly that this expanded program would provide, it is estimated that 750,000 would be on the site of residential construction, and 1,250,000 off-site in the industries that supply materials for construction. Nearly all these industries are organized by the CIO.

Praise for the industrial union program of the United Construction Workers Organizing Committee came this week to Chairman A. D. Lewis from a wide variety of sources in the construction industry itself.

Typical among favorable comments was the lead editorial in Engineering News Record, trade organ, which said:

"Now the establishment of a building industry union in the District of Columbia area and the attempt to organize on the same basis in New York City holds out a challenge to the established system. For clear perspective it should be kept in mind that industry or job organization is already practiced to some extent, as in compressed air work, and on some individual jobs where labor itself recognized that the craft differentiation was inefficient.

ATTACK CRAFT SYSTEM

"But a like conclusion applies to the organization set-up of many other construction jobs, where the craft system stands in the way of coordination and progress and is against the interests of the worker himself. Such conditions plainly favor the growth of an industry-union system."

Similar comments were made by other industry leaders in private correspondence with Chairman Lewis while the industry trade press generally showed keen interest in the plans of the UCWOC. All leading trade journals carried reports of UCWOC progress and the signing of the recent Washington contract.

A striking example of backward tactics of craft unions in the industry was brought to public attention in the nation's capitol when an AFL union plumber brought suit against his union to require it to let him work here. The plumber had come to Washington from the south and had been denied permission by the local union to go on a job here.

Describe Vigilantes' Terror
